Preface

WHEN the French Explorers first came to Peoria Lake they found a confederacy of kindred tribes of aborigines of a more peaceable and tractable disposition than the savages better known to modern history. For many years the missionaries preached to them in their respective villages and many of them embraced the Christian faith. Until recently English readers have been obliged to rely, for what they could learn of this early period, upon a few extracts from the writings of the earliest explorers. These dealt mainly with the voyages of discovery and the events immediately following, leaving more than half a century practically untouched. The more recent works of J. Gilmary Shea, Edward G. Mason and others, and the publication in the English language of the "Jesuit Relations," have thrown a flood of light upon this period of our early history and have confirmed what has heretofore rested mainly on tradition, that Peoria was at one time the center of extensive missionary operations, and that here, upon the banks of our beautiful lake, there once existed a city of three thousand souls partially enlightened by the truths of Christianity. Then came the incursions of hostile tribes by whom the peaceable inhabitants were driven south, where they laid the foundations of Kaskaskia, Cahokia and other towns famous in Illinois history.

During this early period an important political event took place in the detaching of the "Illinois Country" from New France, and in attaching it to the Province of Louisiana. Just where the division line ran, if there ever was one, seems to be an unsettled point, but we learn from the Renault grant, made in 1723, that Peoria was at that time regarded as being within the latter province. Thenceforth until its cession to Great Britain the history of this region is almost a total blank, a few traditions coming from the descendants of the early French inhabitants being the only information we yet have.

It is known that at the time of its cession to Great Britain, there was a French village of considerable importance located within the limits of the present city of Peoria, near its northeastern boundary. Well authenticated traditions say it was one of the most important trading posts in the Mississippi Valley. A few years ago certain documents which came into the hands of the Editor, led him into an inquiry respecting the truthfulness of these traditions. The result of this investigation, supplemented by those of more recent date, will be found in the body of the work. That the inhabitants were an industrious and peaceable class of people is shown by the number and extent of their farms, which dotted the prairie from their village to the Kickapoo bottom, the location of some of them having been ascertained with a reasonable degree of certainty. The charge brought against them that, at the outbreak of the war of 1812, they were disloyal to the Government, is not well sustained. Situated as they were, in the midst of hostile Indians, with no protection from the Territorial Government, they were obliged, for their own safety, to maintain towards them a peaceable attitude, which, having been mistaken for one of hostility to the government, finally led to the unjustifiable destruction of their village.

Concerning the occurrences which led up to, as well as those which followed that event and which resulted finally in the erection of Fort Clark, there formerly existed a great deal of misapprehension, which has been cleared away by the publication of Edwards' "Pioneer History of Illinois," and of the "Edwards Papers," which must be read in connection with each other to arrive at a full understanding of that important period. With the destruction of the village the French occupancy ceased, and with the erection of Fort Clark that of the Americans began. True it is that this fort had ceased to be occuplied for some time before the arrival of any permanent settlers, yet, by its occupancy, the government of the United States maintained its authority over this region during and until after the end of the war.

The modern history of Peoria begins on April 15, 1819, with the advent of a party of seven persons from Shoal Creek, Illinois, who founded a settlement at Fort Clark which became the nucleus of all other settlements in this region. To trace from this humble origin the growth and developments of Peoria County and its institutions until the grand results of the present have been attained, has been the grateful task of the Editor. With little attempt at embellishment by anecdote, reminiscence or elegance of style, it has been his endeavor to place his readers in close touch with the founders of our institutions by a plain setting forth of what they were doing from time to time in their several spheres of activity. The work will, therefore, be found to have taken the form of a simple compilation of historical events rather than that of a literary production.

In its preparation he has consulted the original records and files remaining in the public offices of Peoria County, so far as the same have been accessible, and it has been his good fortune to discover several important documents in the most improbable places. Hoping to make the work a reasonably reliable history of the county, he has spared no pains to verify important statements by reference to such original sources of information as were within his reach.

The book would, however, have been very incomplete without the generous contributions of the ladies and gentlemen who have furnished Township Histories and other special articles appearing under their respective names.

In the preparation of the history of the churches great assistance has been rendered by their pastors and other officers. Of the latter, special obligations are due to Mr. Ira E. Benton, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and to Mr. David McKinney, of the Presbyterian Church, for valuable data furnished by them relating to the early history of their respective denominations. The Editor also desires to acknowledge his obligations to Hon. James A. Rose, Secretary of State; Hon. James S. McCullough, State Auditor; Adjutant General Jasper N. Reece, and their deputies; to Mrs. Jessie Palmer Weber, Librarian of the State Historical Library, to Mr. Charles Evans, late Librarian of the Chicago Historical Library, to the city and county officers of Peoria, to Mr. James Smith, Chief of the Peoria Fire Department, and to the managers respectively of the Peoria Water Works Company, The General Electric Company, The Peoria Gas Light & Coke Company, and to the several railroads leading into the city, for valuable assistance rendered. But most of all is he indebted to the wealth of historical matter furnished by our own Public Library, accumulated through the indefatigable labors of Librarian Erastus S. Willcox, ably seconded by an efficient Board of Directors.

In the department of Biography, which has been mainly in charge of the publishers, valuable assistance has been rendered by Hon. John S. Stevens, for which they desire to express their sincere thanks. In this department the Editor has added a limited number of biographical sketches of leading men of the county, in its formative period, which seemed to him appropriate; others of equal merit would have been added had not the lack of material prevented.

In the preparation of the work for the press the publishers have been peculiarly fortunate in securing the assistance of Mr. Paul Selby, who, as co-editor with Newton Bateman, LL. D., has rendered valuable services to the people of the State in the production of the "Historical Encyclopedia of Illinois," which constitutes the first volume of the present work.

Trusting his efforts, imperfect though they may be, will be appreciated, and that the book will prove a valuable contribution to the history of the county, the Editor submits it to the generous consideration of its readers. If he has succeeded in a measure in giving Peoria County its true position among the counties of the State, he feels that he will have rendered but a slight return to its people for the generous kindness bestowed upon him through a long series of years' residence among them.

PEORIA COUNTY

CHAPTER I.

LAKE PIMITEOUI; DISCOVERY BY JOLIET AND MARQUETTE.

It was on the seventeenth day of May, A. D. 1673, that two young men, with five assistants, took their departure from Michilimackinac to explore the Mississippi River. Louis XIV was then upon the throne of France, Jean Baptiste Colbert, Marquis of Seignelay, was his Minister of Marine, and Frontinac was Governor of New France. Through the influence of this King and his great Minister, the Kingdom of France had risen to a pitch of prosperity and glory to which it had never before attained. Notwithstanding the great wars with other European nations in which he had for many years been engaged, "The Grand Monarch" was fired with an ambition to extend his dominions far into the interior of America. More than half a century before that time, and almost contemporaneously with the planting of the English Colonies on our Atlantic coast, the French had planted colonies of their own upon the St. Lawrence River, and, by the time of which we now write, had pushed their discoveries to the head of the great lakes and even far beyond. England was in possession of the Atlantic Coast and Spain of the countries bordering upon the Gulf of Mexico together with a considerable portion of those on the Pacific Ocean, or the South Sea as it was then sometimes called. It was the ambition of Louis to discover if possible, to the north of these countries, a ready access by water from his possessions in the east to the South Sea, whereby the people of France might have easy communication with the Indies, China and Japan.

In all their voyages of discovery the voyageurs were accompanied by the ministers of religion; for in those days there was such a complete union of church and state, and such a complete companionship of religious ceremonies with all the affairs of men, that no enterprise of any importance, either private or public, could be undertaken without the attendance of the priest to bless it. There was also an intense zeal prevailing among the clergy, not only of France but of all other nations who had possessions in America, to carry the Gospel to the Indians, and, if possible, to convert them to the Christian faith. Fired with this zeal many of the missionaries accompanied the voyageurs of discovery to their farthest limits, and there, in the most self-sacrificing spirit, took up their several abodes among the natives, and endeavored to impart to them a knowledge of the truths of their religion. Among the earliest of these was Claude Allouez, who had established a mission as far West as the Bay of Che-guoi-me-gon near where the City of Ashland is now situated, and another far up the Fox River of Wisconsin, at the place called the Portage, near where Fort Winnebago was afterward erected.

From these distant outposts of discovery and missionary enterprise, marvelous stories were continually floating back to the eastern settlements of a wonderfully rich country lying far beyond the lakes, and of a great river flowing southward, no one knew whither. No white man, so far as known, had yet visited it or could tell its story. The Indians, whose language the missionaries had learned, told of its wonders and of the great countries through which it flowed in its onward course to the sea, but their knowledge of geography was too limited for them to say with certainty whether it flowed into the Atlantic Ocean, through the British Colonies, or into the Gulf of Mexico or the Pacific Ocean. It had been learned from the Spanish discoveries that a large river emptied into the Gulf of Mexico and another into the Gulf of California, or the Red Sea (Mare Vermillie), as it was then called, and it was surmised that one of these might be the great river of which the missionaries had heard so much.

The ambition of the monarch was imparted to his loyal subjects in both the old and new worlds, and all France, as well as Canada or New France, was fired with zeal, not only to make the great discovery, but to extend the dominions of their King over the rich territories of which they had heard such glowing accounts. With the purpose in view of exploring the great river and discovering its outlet to the sea, Louis Joliet, then only twenty-eight years of age, the son of a common artizan, having already made a successful exploration of the copper mines of Lake Superior, was selected by Jean Talon, Intendant of Justice, Police and Finance of Canada, to command an expedition having for its object "To discover the South Sea by the Mascoutins' country, and the great river Mississippi." This selection having been confirmed by Frontinae, the Governor, Joliet left Quebec in the autumn of the year 1672 and arrived at Michilimackinac on the 8th day of December, of the same year. At that point he fell in with Father Jaques Marquette, a missionary of the Jesuit Order, who, although only thirty-six years of age, had already spent six years in these regions establishing missions among and preaching the Gospel to the Indians. He had instructions from the Superior of his Order, carried probably by Joliet himself, to join the latter in his expedition.

Joliet in his youth had been placed under the care of the Jesuits, with a view of his being educated for the ministry, but finding he had no taste for the priesthood, had betaken himself to the life of an adventurer. Marquette was highly educated, especially in those branches—language, philosophy, history and mathematics—which in those days made up the curriculum of the Universities. He was an excellent mathematician, and sufficiently acquainted with the use of instruments to determine with some degree of accuracy the latitude of such places as he visited.

Having made due preparations, these two men, the one fired with zeal for the glory of his King, the other equally fired with zeal for the glory of God in the salvation of souls, started out from point St. Ignatius, on the Straits of Michilimackinac, on the 17th of May, 1673. Their entire outfit consisted of "two birch-bark canoes, five men, some bags of corn meal, some dried beef and a blanket apiece." Besides their personal equipment they carried with them a quantity of beads, crosses and other articles of a religious character, and probably divers articles of trade to barter with the Indians whom they might encounter on the way.

From his long residence among them, and from his daily intercourse with the Indians of the Algonquin or Chippeway family, Marquette had become sufficiently well acquainted with the general structure of the language to be able to make himself understood with the different tribes of that great family, although differing somewhat from each other in their several dialects. He had heard of, and possibly had become somewhat acquainted with, a great tribe called the Illim (or Illinois) inhabiting a country far to the south of the great lake which had its outflow at the straits, and knew them to belong to the Algonquin family. If therefore he could reach these people, which he much desired, he would be at once prepared to preach to them in their own language. Coasting along the foot of the great lake (now Lake Michigan) to its western shore, they entered Green Bay (sometimes called Bay Fetid, and the Bay of the Puans), to which point other voyageurs and missionaries had preceded them. Continuing their way southward, they came to the mouth of the Fox River of Wisconsin, and pursuing its tortuous course finally arrived at the Portage on the 7th day of June. Here was the Ultima Thule of previous discovery and missionary enterprise, the farthest point to which the civilization of Europe had yet penetrated. It is barely possible that some enterprising trappers had pushed their trade beyond this point, but none had left any account of their discoveries, if any they had made. Having carried their canoes, their bags of corn meal, their dried beef, their blankets and other equipments across the portage, they arrived at the Wisconsin River. Here the two Indians, whom they had employed as guides from Green Bay, left them and returned to their homes, leaving the explorers to pursue their voyage whithersoever they might.

Embarking again in their two canoes, with their five attendants as oarsmen, Joliet and Marquette proceeded down the Wisconsin without incident worthy of note until the Seventeenth day of June, when they emerged upon the mighty current of the Mississippi, which, in honor of the Virgin of the Immaculate Conception, under whose special protection Marquette conceived himself to be, they named "The River Conception."

Continuing their journey, they proceeded to follow this great river, not knowing whither it might lead them, but trusting in God and in the Blessed Virgin for their safe return. At what point our voyageurs crossed over to the west side of the river we are not informed, but that they did cross over is evident from the narrative they have left us.

Proceeding on their voyage, they discovered nothing of importance until the 25th day of June, when, having arrived at a point a little south of a line drawn due west of Peoria, and near the mouth of the Des Moines River, they saw some fresh foot prints of men by the water's edge, and a beaten path leading through a beautiful prairie. This was at once recognized as an Indian trail, which would probably lead to their village. In an account of this voyage, subsequently written by Marquette, the incident is described as follows: "We stopped to examine it, and, concluding it was a path leading to some Indian village, we resolved to go and reconnoitre. We accordingly left our two canoes in charge of our people, cautioning them strictly to beware of surprises. Then M. Joliet and I undertook this rather hazardous discovery for two single men, who thus put themselves at the discretion of an unknown and barbarous people. We followed the little path in silence, and having advanced about two leagues we discovered a village on the banks of the river and two others on a hill half a league from the former."

Approaching the first of these villages, they made their presence known by the usual loud call, which was responded to at once by the chiefs. It was a delightful surprise to Marquette to find them to be of the Illini, whom he had so long desired to visit. It was equally a surprise to them to see a Frenchman, of whose nation they had often heard, but never seen, and who could speak to them in their own tongue. They were therefore welcomed by the chiefs in royal style, as royalty goes among the Indians; they were feared and feasted for several days, and when they took their departure were presented with the calumet as a passport of peace to other tribes whom they should encounter in their journey toward the south.

These Indians were doubtless of the sub-tribe called the Peorias, for Marquette afterward drew an accurate map of the regions he had visited and of the rivers he had traversed, on which map are located three villages on the River Des Moines, near its mouth, to which he gave the name "Pezarias."⁽¹⁾ This is probably the first time the word from which we derive our euphonious name "Peoria" was ever written.

Having resumed their journey, the voyageurs proceeded to follow the great river past the mouth of the Illinois to the mouth of the Missouri, which is described as being as large as that which they had been following. After this they continued their journey past the mouth of the Ohio and possibly as far south as the Arkansas. Having had some difficulty with the natives, whom they discovered to be armed with weapons of European manufacture, and fearing they were then in close proximity to their enemies, the Spaniards, and, having from their own observations as well as from information derived from the Indians, concluded that the great river, then called the River Conception, did not flow into the Pacific Ocean but into the Gulf of Mexico, they determined to retrace their course and to return to Michilimackinac.

Arriving again at the mouth of the Illinois, they there received information that that river afforded a much shorter and less difficult route to the great lakes than that by which they had descended. They therefore adopted it and found it to have an excellent channel, and to be almost without current, so that their ascent was easy and rapid. The narrative being very meager as to the charming beauties of the scenery along the Illinois, we must call to our aid the known topography of one portion of the country in describing their journey. Having reached the latitude of about forty-one degrees north, they passed a point where a high bluff on the easterly side of the river jutted down to the water's edge on their right, and where a small lakelet lay to their left. There they entered upon a beautiful curve in the river which changed their course directly toward the north. Then for a short distance on their right lay a marsh covered with a heavy growth of timber, and on their left another one covered with rushes, which the Indians gathered to make mats to cover their cabins. Through the latter flowed a small river, which was almost imperceptible among the tall grass and rushes. Proceeding a mile in this direction, the river, by another graceful curve, resumed its former course to the northeast; but now to their left appeared a narrow tongue of wooded land through which a small prairie could be perceived not far distant. Continuing to row another mile, a scene of enrapturing beauty suddenly broke upon their astonished vision. On their right the shore receded in a graceful curve to the southeast for a distance of half a mile, and then, turning northwardly for the distance of about a league, it inclosed a most beautiful lake, which filled the intervening space. On their left arose from the margin of the river a charming prairie, covered with waving grass and studded with the gorgeous flowers of the later summer months, the resort of wild fowl and animals in great numbers and variety. The whole space covered by lake and prairie was inclosed in a magnificent amphitheatre of hills rising to the height of two hundred feet and more on every side, from the face of which issued many springs of water, clear as crystal, which found their way in sparkling rivulets to the low lands beneath and thence to the river. A more charming scene seldom greets the eye of man. It was Pimiteoui (²)—"The Land of Great Plenty." It was Peoria.

(1.) The strange character here introduced is identical with that used in our almanacs to represent the sign Taurus. It was used by the later Greek writers to represent the diphthong Omikron Upsilon and was thence imported into the Roman Alphabet to represent our diphthong ou. It was so used by the missionaries. When standing at the beginning of a word it took the place of the letter w. Hence we have such words as Wabache—Ouabache Wabache, and Wisconsin Omisconsin Wisconsin. It has given modern copyists great perplexity, resulting in a great variety of spellings. Thus we have Peouara, Peouarona, Peourea, Peoureas, Pewaris,—each standing for the tribe of Indians afterward known as the Peorias.

But the attention of the voyageurs was directed chiefly to an Indian village which stood upon the westerly shore of the lake. This if inhabited would afford them one more opportunity to preach the Gospel to the heathen. Thither they betook themselves, and remained with the natives three days, and so deep was the impression the preaching of Marquette made upon them that at their departure they brought to him a dying child to be baptized. This circumstance was so gratifying to him that in writing of it in his narrative he says:

"Had all the voyage caused but the salvation of a single soul I should deem all my fatigue well repaid. And this I have reason to think, for when returning I passed by the Indians of Peerea, I was three days announcing the faith in all their cabins, after which, as we were embarking, they brought me upon the water's edge a dying child which I baptized a little before it expired, by an admirable Providence for the salvation of that innocent soul."

It is impossible with our limited information to accurately locate this village at which Marquette preached, and where he baptized the dying child. But from evidence which appears almost incontrovertible it appears the Peoria Indians had a permanent village within the present limits of the city of Peoria, from which circumstance we can infer with much certainty that Marquette on this occasion preached the Gospel for the first time, and for the first time administered the rite of baptism at and within the limits of the present city of Peoria. It is also quite certain that these were the first white men who set foot upon its soil.

It would be a gratification to have from the pen of Marquette himself a picture of the scene as it presented itself to their astonished vision upon entering Lake Peoria. But he appears to have been exceedingly utilitarian in his views and not much given to the making of pen pictures, or to drawing upon the fancy of his readers. After making the voyage through the entire length of the river all he had to say of it was this:

"We had seen nothing like this river for the fertility of the land, its prairies, woods, wild cattle, stags, deer, wild cats, bustards, swans, ducks, parrots and even beaver. Its many little lakes and rivers on which we sailed are broad, deep and gentle for sixty-five leagues. During the spring and part of the summer the only portage is half a league."

Yet notwithstanding their silence as to the charms of nature which their eyes had seen and their ears had heard during their long journey, we may imagine the little flotilla gliding down the Wisconsin, the air richly laden with the fragrance of the budding pines, hickories and oaks, the birds singing in their branches and the spring flowers blooming on the river banks. Floating down the great Father of Waters, they must have wondered at its lofty embankments,

2.) This word in the Indian tongue signifies a region of thrifty animals rather than a particular spot. It has its equivalent in the Hebrew term signifying "a land of milk and honey," a land rich in pastures for the flocks, and abounding in blossoms for the bees.

H. G. Anderson

its walls of rocks, its majestic current and its swiftly rolling rapids. And as they ascended the Illinois River, pushing their canoes here and there amongst the water lilies and their stately brothers, the lotuses, we may imagine them making an occasional halt, climbing to the summit of the adjacent hills, viewing the broad plains then gorgeous with all the varieties of the helianthus, the aster, the solidago and other flowers of brilliant hue, and covered with a luxuriant growth of prairie grass with waves chasing each other before the wind like ranks of soldiers marching to the battle. But it is difficult to imagine that in the wildest flights of fancy they could have conceived of the productiveness of these same prairies at the close of this nineteenth century, brought about by the fostering care of man.

Having completed their visit to the Indians at Peoria, the exploring party continued to ascend the river until they reached a point near the present city of Utica, where they found the capital or principal village of the Illini, of which Marquette writes as follows:

"We found there an Illinois town called Cascaschia, composed of seventy-four cabins. They received us well and compelled me to promise to return and instruct them. One of the chiefs of this tribe with his young men escorted us to the Illinois Lake (Lake Michigan), whence at last we returned in the close of September to the Bay Fetid (Green Bay), whence we had set out in the beginning of June."

This was the last of Joliet and Marquette at Peoria. Joliet returned to the east and in a mishap which befel him in the St. Lawrence River lost his journal, his instruments and all his papers. For this reason history must rely almost wholly upon the narrative subsequently written by Marquette, from which the foregoing extracts are taken.

True to his promise Marquette endeavored to return to the Indians at "Cascaschia." Being in feeble health on his return, he was not able to make good his promise at once, but having received from his superior an appointment as missionary to the Illinois, he, on October 25, 1674, set out for that country. But the condition of his health would not permit him to proceed farther than a point some distance from Chicago, where there was a portage. There he remained until the month of March, 1675, when, resuming his journey, he reached "Cascaschia" on the 8th day of April.

After remaining there barely long enough to establish the mission, he became convinced that his days were about numbered, and, wishing to end his career at his beloved old mission at St. Ignace, he took his departure for that place by way of the eastern shore of Lake Michigan, but died on the way.

Although not so early on the mission field as Allouez and others, and although he was only second to Joliet in this memorable expedition, yet for his distinguished services as a pioneer missionary and explorer, and probably because he was the chief chronicler of the discoveries, his name has become more distinguished than that of either of them and his statue has been awarded a place in the nation's capitol.

After the demise of Marquette the Illinois Indians were for a short period left destitute of a missionary. But Father Claude Jean Allouez, having received an appointment to the Mission of the Immaculate Conception at "Cascaschia," arrived at that place on the 27th day of April, 1677. As an emblem of the doctrines taught by him he erected a cross twenty-five feet in height, and it is said preached the Gospel to eight tribes accustomed to assemble at that place. With the exception of some brief periods of absence he remained there until the latter part of the year 1679, when, hearing of the approach of the expedition of La Salle, who was supposed to be unfriendly to his religious order, he retired to other missions then in charge of the Jesuits. The mission of the Immaculate Conception established by Marquette and continued by Allouez seems to have embraced the entire territory inhabited by the Illini confederacy, extending from near Lake Michigan on the north to near the mouth of the Illinois River on the south, and from that river to the Mississippi and even beyond the same on the west. The Peorias seem to have occupied the central portion about Lake Peoria and south and west of the same to the Mississippi. It therefore happened that, when Marquette arrived at Peoria Lake, he found there the same tribe, or sub-tribe, he had met with at the River Des Moines on his trip southward.

It was the custom of the Indians in the winter time to vacate their villages at the north and to go on hunting expeditions to the south, stopping at the villages located on the river as they passed to and fro. Before leaving they would deposit corn and other provisions in caches, or under-ground vaults or receptacles, to serve for food and seed upon their return. These deposits were held inviolably sacred, and it was considered a most heinous offense to disturb them.

Adopting the habits of the natives among whom they dwelt, it was the custom of the missionaries to accompany their people in these annual hunts, and inasmuch as the "Cascaschias" usually came as far south as Peoria it is reasonable to suppose that Father Allouez was the second to preach the Gospel at this place.

CHAPTER II.

PEORIA FROM 1680 TO 1682. LASALLE AND TONTI: HENNEPIN, MEMBRE AND RIBOURDI: FORT CREVE COEUR.

The next white men to visit Peoria, of whom we have any account, was a party headed by the celebrated Robert Cavalier Sieur de La Salle. It is said by one of our early historians that, on their return from the voyage of discovery, Marquette and Joliet made out such a glowing report that it set all Canada on fire and swept over France like a tornado. The French caught the mania and became almost crazy to see and settle the west. This rage for western enterprise reached La Salle, and bound him in its folds during the remainder of his life.

After surmounting many obstacles he finally succeeded in fitting out an expedition in the year 1679. Having before that time received repeated favors from the crown, amongst which was a title of nobility, he next obtained a license to carry on western explorations for five years; to build and hold forts and to enjoy a limited monopoly of trade in the skins of the buffalo.

To accomplish his ends he constructed a vessel on the River Niagara of forty-five tons burthen, which he named "The Griffon." Embarking on Lake Erie August 7, 1679, he proceeded by way of Detroit, through Lakes St. Clair and Huron to the Mission of St. Ignace at the Straits of Michilimackinac. Thence he proceeded to Green Bay, where he loaded his vessel with furs, intending thereby to provide the means of paying his debts, many of which he had contracted at and about Fort Frontenac. Having started her on her way with instructions to bring back materials for the construction of a barque on the Illinois River, he put his expedition en route for the country of the Illini by row-boats on Lake Michigan. But The Griffon, as was afterwards learned, instead of reporting at St. Ignace on its way eastward, went to the bottom of Lake Michigan with all its crew and cargo, which was the cause of great perplexity to the discoverer.

Dividing his forces and sending one party up the eastern side of Lake Michigan, under Tonti, an Italian soldier with one arm, whom he had brought with him from France, La Salle in person conducted the other party along the west shore and around the southern end of the lake to the mouth of the St. Joseph's River, where he had appointed a rendezvous with Tonti. After waiting there for a considerable time his forces were all collected and he built a fort at the mouth of the St. Joseph's River, which was named Fort Miami. His party now consisted of himself, Henry de Tonti, as his lieutenant and historian, thirty mechanics and marines, and three Recollet Monks, namely: Father Gabriel Ribourdi, the Superior, known as Father Gabriel; Father Zenobius Membre, known as Father Zenoble, Zenobe or Membre; and Father Louis Hennepin, commonly called Hennepin, but sometimes Father Louis.

At this point it will be noticed that the missionaries of the Roman Catholic church were generally members of different orders or societies, having their origin in Europe, which cut a very important figure in the history of the times. One of these orders was called the Recollets, a branch of the Franciscan order of Monks, very austere in their manners, and observing very strictly their vows of poverty. In the earlier days of the French occupation of Canada, these Recollets seem to have had charge of all the missions established for the spread of the Gospel. But after some time they were placed principally in charge of the priests of the order of Jesus, whom we call Jesuits.

1679. Thence ascending the St. Joseph's River, with great difficulty and with much loss of time, to a point near the Kankakee River supposed to be about where South Bend in the state of Indiana is now located, they came to a portage where boats, baggage and other effects had to be transported by hand to the Kankakee, and having entered that stream they proceeded with eight boats or canoes down the same to a point some distance below its confluence with the Des Plaines. There they found a large Indian village, which afterward proved to be "Cascaschia," the metropolis of the five tribes composing the confederacy of the Illinois Indians.

Here La Salle stopped long enough to acquaint himself with the condition of affairs, and finding the Indians had all gone down the Illinois River on their annual hunt, he proceeded to relieve the almost famished condition of his party by appropriating a quantity of Indian corn found in their caches. Proceeding thus on his journey and about the 31 day of January, 1680, he arrived at Lake Pimiteoui, where the Indians then were. Having satisfied the Indians that his mission was a peaceful one, he was for a time received into their friendship, but within a few days a missionary from other tribes, hostile to the French, arrived and endeavored to incite the Illinois Indians into a hostile frame of mind toward La Salle and his party.

Deeming it a matter of prudent precaution, La Salle determined to build a fort, which he proceeded to do on the southeasterly bank of the river or lake.

As this was the first structure erected by the white man on the soil of Illinois, it is important that the actors in the scene be permitted to tell their own story.

On the return of Father Hennepin to France, two years later, he prepared a history of the exploration, which was published in the year 1683 under the title of "A Description of Louisiana," from which the following passages are taken. (1) Of the great town of the Illinois, he says:

"This Illinois village is situated at forty degrees of latitude in a somewhat marshy plain, and on the right bank of a river as broad as the Seine before Paris, which is divided by very beautiful islands. It contains four hundred and sixty cabins, made like long arbors and covered with double mats of flat flags, so well sewed that they are never penetrated by wind, snow or rain. Each cabin has four or five fires, and each fire has one or two families, who all live together in a good understanding.

"As we had foreseen, we found the village empty, all the Indians having gone to pass the winter hunting in various places according to their custom. Their absence, nevertheless, put us in a great embarrassment; provisions failed us and we durst not take the Indian corn which the Illinois hide in trenches under the ground to preserve it, and use on their return from the hunt for planting and subsistence till harvest. This stock is extremely precious in their eyes, and you could not give them greater offense than by touching it in their absence. Nevertheless, there was no possibility of our risking a further descent without food, and as the fire that had been set to the prairies had driven off all the animals, the Sieur de La Salle resolved to take twenty bushels (2) of Indian corn, hoping that he would be able to appease the Illinois by some means.

"The same day we re-embarked with this new supply, and for four days we descended the same river, which runs south by west.

"On the first day of the year 1679 (1680), (3) discovering one of our deserters, of whom I have heretofore spoken, and that he had returned to us only to seduce our men, who, moreover, were disposed to abandon us, through the fear they had of suffering hunger during the winter, I made an exhortation after the mass, wishing a Happy New Year to the Sieur de La Salle and all our party, and after the most touching words, I begged all our malcontents to arm themselves with patience, representing to them that God would provide for all our wants, and that if we lived in concert he would raise up means to enable us to subsist. Father Gabriel, Father Zenobius and I embraced them with the most affectionate sentiments, encouraging them to continue so important a discovery.

(3.) The change of the first day of the year from March 25th to January 1st, which had been made not many years before and which was not adopted simultaneously by all nations, gave rise to the necessity of giving the double date to occurrences happening between January 1st and March 25th, just as the Russians still do. This may account for Hennepin's mistake in the year above noted.

(1.) Previous histories of Peoria have quoted from a later work attributed to Hennepin, published in the English language in 1698, a copy of which is in our public library. It has been found, however, to be so full of interpolations, additions and false statements as to greatly impair its reliability, if not its authenticity. The statements here quoted are, however, so fully corroborated by other writers, and so fully indorsed in the subsequent edition as to leave but little doubt of their reliability. It will be noticed particularly that it does not aim to give the exact location of Ft. Cteve Coeur.

"Toward the end of the fourth day, while crossing a little lake formed by the river, we observed smoke⁽¹⁾ which showed us that the Indians were cabined near there. In fact, on the fifth, about nine o'clock in the morning, we saw on both sides of the river a number of parrakeets and about eighty cabins full of Indians, who did not perceive our canoes until we had doubled a point, behind which the Illinois were camped within half gun shot. We were in eight canoes, abreast, all our men arms in hand, and allowing ourselves to go with the current of the river.

"We first gave the cry according to the custom of these nations, as though to ask whether they wished peace or war, because it was very important to show resolution at the outset. At first the old men, the women and children took flight across the woods by which the river is bordered, the warriors ran to arms, but with so much confusion that before they recovered themselves our canoes had touched land. The Sieur de La Salle was first to leap ashore.

"The Indians might have been routed in the disorder they were in, but as this was not our design we halted in order to give the Illinois time to regain confidence. One of their chiefs who was on the other side of the river and who had observed that we had refrained from firing on seven or eight Indians whom we might easily have killed began a harangue to stop the young men who were preparing to discharge arrows across the river. Those who were encamped on the side where we had landed, and who had taken flight at first, having understood the situation, sent two of the chief men among them to present the calumet from the top of a hill; soon after those who were on the other side did the same thing and then we gave them to understand that we accepted the peace, and at the same time I proceeded in haste with Father Zenobius in the direction of the Indians who had taken flight, taking their children by the hand, who were all trembling with fear; we manifested much affection for them, entering with the old men and the mothers into the cabins, taking compassion on these souls, which are going to destruction, being deprived of the Word of God and lacking missionaries. The joy of both was as great as their fear had been violent; that of some having been such that it was two days before they returned from the places to which they had gone to hide."

Then, after giving a full account of his reception by the Indians and of the adverse influence which one Monso, an emissary of a hostile tribe, had upon them in stirring up their enmity, and the effect which their apparent hostility had upon the men of La Salle and his endeavor to persuade them to loyalty, the writer proceeds as follows: "These reasons and some others of that kind which I made them, persuaded them, and brought all to work with a good grace in building a fort which was called Creve Coeur, situated four days' journey from the great village of the Illinois descending towards the river Colbert (as they had named the Mississippi in honor of the great minister of Louis XIV.—ED).

"A great thaw having set in on the 15th of January, and rendered the river free below the villege, the Sieur de La Salle begged me to accompany him, and we proceeded with one of our canoes to the place which we were going to select to work at this little fort. It was a little mound about two hundred paces distant from the bank of the river, which in the season of the rains extends to the foot of it; two broad, deep ravines protected two other sides and a part of the fourth, which we completely entrenched by a ditch which united the two ravines. Their exterior slope which served as a counter-scarp was fortified; we made chemin de fosse and cut this eminence down steep on all sides, and the earth was supported as much as was necessary with strong pieces of timber, with thick planks, and for fear of any surprise we planted a stockade around, the timbers of which were twenty-five feet long and a foot thick. The summit of the mound was left in its natural figure, which formed an irregular square, and we contented ourselves with putting on the edge a good parapet of earth capable of covering all our force, whose barracks were placed in two of the angles of this fort, in order that they might be always ready in case of attack. Father Gabriel, Zenobie and I lodged in a cabin with boards, which we adjusted with the help of our workmen and in which we retired, after work, all our people for evening and morning prayer, and where, being unable any longer to say mass, the wine which we had made from the large grapes of the country having just failed us, we contented ourselves with singing Vespers on holidays and Sundays, and preaching after morning prayers.

"The forge was set up along the curtain which faced the wood. The Sieur de La Salle posted himself in the middle with Sieur de Tonty and wood was cut down to make charcoal for the blacksmith.

"While they were engaged at this work we were thinking constantly only of our exploration, and we saw that the building of a bark would be very difficult on account of the desertion of the pit-sawyers. It occurred to us one day to tell our people that, if there was a man of good will among them who was willing to try and make sheathing planks, there was hopes of succeeding, with a little more labor and time, and that at the worst we should after all only spoil a few. Immediately two of our men offered to work at it. The trial was made and they succeeded pretty well, although they had never before undertaken a similar piece of work. We began a bark of forty-two feet keel and only twelve broad. We pushed on the work with so much care that notwithstanding the building of Fort Creve Coeur the sheathing was sawed, all the wood of the bark ready and curved in the first of the month of March.

"It is to be remarked that in the country of the Isinois the winter is not more severe than in Provence, but that of the year 1679 the snow lasted more than twenty days, which was an extraordinary surprise to the Indians, who had not yet experienced so severe a winter, so that Sieur de La Salle and I saw ourselves exposed to new hardships, which will perhaps appear incredible to those who have no experience in great voyages and new discoveries.

"Fort Creve Coeur was almost completed; all of the wood had been prepared to complete the bark, but we had neither rigging nor sails, nor iron enough; we heard no tidings of the bark which we had left on Lake Dauphin nor of the men who had been sent to learn what had become of her. Meanwhile the Sieur de La Salle saw that summer was approaching and that if he waited uselessly some months more our enterprise would be retarded a year, and perhaps two or three, because being so far from Canada he could not put his affairs in order or cause the things he needed to be forwarded.

"In this extremity we both adopted a resolution, as extraordinary as it was difficult to carry out; I to go with two men into unknown countries, where one is at every moment in a great danger for his life, and he to proceed on foot to Fort Frontinac itself, a distance of more than five hundred leagues. We were then at the close of winter which had been, as we have said, as severe in America as in France, the ground was still covered with snow, which was neither melted nor able to bear a man on snow shoes. It was necessary to load ourselves with the usual equipage on these occasions, that is to say, a blanket, a kettle, an axe, a gun, powder and lead, dressed skins to make Indian shoes, which often last only a day, those which are worn in France being no use in these western countries. Besides this he must resolve to push through bushes, to walk in marshes and melting snow, sometimes waiste high, and that for whole days sometimes even with nothing to eat, because he and three others who accompanied him could not carry provisions, being compelled to depend for all their subsistence on what they might shoot, and expect to drink only the water they might find on the way. To conclude, he was exposed every day and especially night to be surprised by four or five nations which made war on each other, with this difference, that these nations where he was to pass all know the French, and that those where I was going had never seen Europeans. Nevertheless all these difficulties did not astonish him any more than they did me. Our only trouble was to find among our force some men robust enough to go with us, and to prevent the others, already greatly fluctuating, from all deserting us after our departure."

The following account of La Salle's discoveries, attributed to Tonti, was sent in in the year 1693. After describing the journey and the collecting of the forces at the mouth of the St. Joseph River it proceeds as follows:

"I went back in my little canoe and as soon as I arrived we ascended twenty-five leagues as far as the portage, where the men whom I had left behind joined us. We made the portage which extends about two leagues and came to the source of the Illinois River. We embarked there and ascending (descending) the river for one hundred leagues arrived at a village of the savages. They were absent hunting, and as we had no provisions we opened some caches of Indian corn.

"During this journey some of our Frenchmen were so fatigued that they determined to leave us, but the night they intended to go was so cold that their plan was broken up. We continued our route in order to join the savages, and found them thirty leagues above (below) the village. When they saw us they thought we were Iroquois and put themselves on the defensive and made their women run into the woods. But when they recognized us the women were called back with their children, and the calumet was danced to M. de La Salle and me in order to mark their desire to live in peace with us. We gave them some merchandise for the corn which we had taken in their village. This was on the 3d of January, 1679-80.

"As it was necessary to fortify ourselves during the winter we made a fort, which was called Creve Cœur. Part of our people deserted, and they had even put poison into our kettle. M. de La Salle was poisoned, but he was saved by some antidote a friend had given to him in France. The desertion of these men gave us less annoyance than the effect which it had on the minds of the savages. The enemies of M. de La Salle had spread a report among the Illinois that we were friends of the Iroquois, who are their greatest enemies. The effect this produced will be seen hereafter.

"M. de La Salle commenced building a boat to descend the river. He sent a Father Recollet with the Sieur Deau to discover the nations of the Sioux, four hundred leagues from the Illinois on the Mississippi River southwards, a river that runs not less than eight hundred leagues to the sea without rapids. He determined to go himself by land to Fort Frontinac, because he had heard nothing of the boat which he had sent to Niagara. He gave me the command of this place and left us on the 2d of March with five men. On his road he met with two men whom he had sent in the autumn to Michilimackinac to obtain news of his boat. They assured him that it had not come down, and he, therefore, determined to continue his journey. The two men were sent to me with orders to go to the old village to visit a high rock and to build a strong fort upon it. Whilst I was proceeding thither all my men deserted and took away everything that was most valuable. They left me with two Recollets and three men newly arrived from France, stripped of everything and at the mercy of savages. All that I could do was to send an authentic account of the affair to M. de La Salle. He laid wait for them on Lake Frontinac, took some of them and killed others, after which he returned to the Illinois. As for his boat, it was never heard of."

Father Zenobius Membre also wrote an account of the events transpiring between the time of the departure of La Salle from Fort Creve Cœur until the month of June following, from which the following extract is taken:

"Father Louis (Hennepin) having set out on the 29th of February, 1680, Sieur de La Salle left the Sieur de Tonti as commander of Fort Creve Cœur, with ammunition and provisions and peltries to pay the workmen as agreed, and merchandse to trade with and buy provisions as we needed them. And having lastly given orders as to what was to be done in his absence, set out with four Frenchmen and an Indian on the 2d day of March, 1680. He arrived on the 11th at the great Indian village where I then was and thence, after twenty-four hours' stay, he continued his route on foot to Fort Frontinac. From our arrival at Fort Creve Cœur on the 14th of January last, Father Gabriel, our superior, Father Louis (Hennepin) and myself had raised a cabin in which we had established some little regularity, exercising our function as missionaries to the French of our party and the Illinois Indians who came in crowds, as by the end of February I already knew a part of their language, because I spent the whole of the day in the Indian camp, which was a half a league off. Our Father Superior appointed me to follow when they were about to return to their village (Cascaschia). A chief named Oumahouha had adopted me as his son in the Indian fashion, and M. de La Salle had made him presents to take care of me." * * * "The greater part of this tribe, and especially the Illinois, with whom I have had intercourse, make their cabins of double mats of flat rushes sewed together."

In the same narrative Father Membre, after enumerating the more northern tribes of Indians with whom he had intercourse, speaks of the great village of "Cascaschia" as follows:

"The village of the Illinois, Cascaschia, was situated west of the bottom of Lake Dauphin (Michigan), a little southeast at about forty-one degrees north." * * * "The only great Illinois village being composed of seven or eight thousand souls, Father Gabriel and I had just a sufficient field for the exercise of our zeal, besides the few Frenchmen who soon after came there."

From these accounts it appears that, after leaving the great village, the party continued to descend the river for four days; that on the first day of January, 1680, the Fathers said mass and exhorted the men to maintain loyalty to their leader; that on the fourth day, while crossing Lake Peoria, they observed smoke, which indicated the presence of the Indians; that on the morning of the fifth day they discovered on both sides of the river a number of pirogues (canoes) and about eighty cabins full of Indians; that La Salle's party were in eight canoes abreast, and that being hidden by a point of land they were not discovered by the Indians until they had approached within a very short distance of them; that the old men, the women and children fled to the woods, while the warriors took to their arms; that one of their chiefs who was on the other side of the river, observing the peaceful attitude of the strangers, began a harrange to stop the young men who were preparing to discharge their arrows across the river; that those who were encamped on the side where the landing had been made, observing the situation, presented the calumet from the top of a hill, in which action they were soon followed by those on the opposite shore, all of which resulted in a cordial welcome by the Indians.

It was soon discovered that they were the Caseaschias from the great village on the river, four days' journey above, who had come as far south as Peoria on their annual hunt. Nothing is said of the Peoria, but the village, doubtless the one which Marquette had visited, is mentioned. The Peorias had in fact gone on a hunt farther to the south or west.

The seeds of dissension having in the meantime been sown by Monso, it was deemed prudent to erect a fort within half a league of this camp or village if it may be so called.

If this camp could be definitely located, it would go far in determining the location of Fort Creve Coeur, which has heretofore been and probably will continue to be a disputed point. Strong reasons exist for its location opposite the northern portion of the city of Peoria, where it is claimed the remains of the fort have been discovered, while it is claimed that equally strong reasons exist for its location on the bluff near Wesley City.

The plans outlined by Hennepin were carried out. Hennepin with one Michael Accault (called by Tonti, Deau, and by others, Aco) as commander, and one Anthony Anguel, surnamed Picard du Gay, made his celebrated journey to the mouth of the Illinois River and thence to the head waters of the Mississippi. La Salle, after having endured incredible hardships on the way, arrived at Fort Frontinac on the 6th of May, following. Having met with two men whom he had sent to inquire of the fate of The Griffon, he sent word by them to Tonti, whom he had left in command at Fort Creve Coeur, to proceed to the great village of Kaskaskia and to erect a fort on a high rock in its vicinity. In Tonti's absence the men he had left at the fort deserted, taking with them everything they could. Tonti, having received orders to abandon the fort and to erect another at the Rock, sent men to Creve Coeur and brought away everything that could be used in the erection of the new fort, but the fort itself was not destroyed. In consequence of the desertion of his men he was unable to proceed with the erection of the new one at that time, having with him only three Frenchmen and the two monks, Membre and Ribourdi, after sending two to carry word to La Salle of the deplorable situation of affairs. In the autumn of that year La Salle organized another expedition and set out on his return to the Illinois. But, just before his arrival, the great village had been attacked by the Iroquois and destroyed with great slaughter of the inhabitants. Tonti had been compelled to flee and, just on the eve of his departure, the aged monk Gabriel Ribourdi had been treacherously murdered by a Kickapoo Indian. Tonti went by the Des Plaines, while La Salle approached by the Kankakee, by which mishap they failed to meet. Tonti proceeded north, and, after encountering incredible hardships, finally reached Mackinac.

When La Salle reached the great village of Kaskaskia he was horrified to witness the destruction wrought by the Iroquois and the evidences of their barbarity to the inhabitants. Hoping that Tonti might still be alive, and that he had gone with the fleeing Illinois, he took boat and in an incredibly short time reached the mouth of the Illinois River, but without any success. Arriving at Fort Creve Coeur on the 3d day of December, he found his unfinished barque much in the same condition he had left it, except that the Iroquois had drawn a few nails from its mouldings. Had the tools taken by Tonti to the new location been available, it could have been finished in a month. On a broken plank, however, he discovered in the handwriting of one of his men the words, "Nous sommes tous sauvages ce 15 A ——— 1680." "We are all savages." He supposed the date to have been August, but afterward it was discovered to have been April, a date prior to Tonti's departure. Arriving at the mouth of the river and finding no trace of Tonti, he nailed a letter addressed to him to a tree and returned. Having spent the winter about the St. Joseph's River in making fruitless inquiries concerning Tonti, La Salle again visited the site of the great village in the spring of 1681, and, having received tidings that Tonti had gone north, he proceeded to Mackinac, where the two wanderers, each having supposed the other to be dead, greeted one another "as if returned from the spirit land."

La Salle then returned to Fort Frontinac and organized his famous expedition which finally reached the mouth of the Mississippi. Reaching Lake Pimiteoui they found Fort Creve Coeur in a good state, and, La Salle leaving orders there, the expedition proceeded on its way. On their return they found the fort nearly destroyed, also the unfinished vessel, and a few blackened timbers only remained. Leaving eight Frenchmen here, La Salle proceeded on his journey to Fort Miami at the mouth of the St. Joseph's River.

Again, on December 30, 1682, he is found at Fort Creve Coeur, this time to withdraw all his men to the new location, Fort St. Louis on Starved Rock. This was the last time La Salle's eyes rested upon the fort, and little if anything is learned of it afterward. It is barely possible that after the burning of Fort Creve Coeur, La Salle's men may have erected another in its vicinity.

Of the events occurring after La Salle's departure from Fort Creve Coeur for Fort Frontinac, in March, 1680, the accounts appear somewhat conflicting. But within the last half century many documents have come to light which have cleared up some supposed discrepancies. In a recent publication entitled "Chapters from Illinois History," by Edward G. Mason, now deceased, a very exhaustive attempt has been made to reconcile former narratives and to connect the events related by different writers into a chronological account. His narrative has been followed here.

CHAPTER III.

THE MISSIONARIES. PHILIP FRANCIS RENAULT.

It would add interest to this narrative if it could be stated with certainty that the village mentioned by Fathers Marquette and Membre, located on Lake Peoria, had had a continuous existence from that early period until the same was found to be occupied by the French at the middle of the eighteenth century. By the intermingling of the French with the Indians and by their intermarriages the Indian villages gradually lost their distinctive character as such and became more French than Indian. It is more than probable that this was the case at Peoria.

In the year 1699 a company of missionary priests consisting of Fathers Montigny, St. Cosme, Davion and De la Source, with Tonti at their head, made a trip from Michilimackinac, where they had met Father Gravier, formerly of "Cascaschia," to the lower Mississippi to establish missions there. Coasting along the western shore of Lake Michigan, they arrived about October 21st at a point not far from the site of the present City of Chicago. There was then a Jesuit mission at that place located probably a little south of the present city. St. Cosme, in an account of this trip which he afterward wrote, says: after having landed some distance from the place on account of the storm, "We went by land, Mr. De Montigny, Davion and myself, to the house of the Rev. Jesuit Fathers, our people staying with the baggage. We found there Rev. Father Pinet and Rev. Father Buinateau, who had recently come in from the Illinois and were slightly sick. * * * Their house is built on the banks of a small lake, having the lake on one side and a fine large prairie on the other. The Indian village is of over one hundred and fifty cabins, and one league on the river, there is another village almost as large. They are both of the Miamis. Rev. Father Pinet makes it his ordinary residence excepting in the winter, when the Indians all go hunting and which he goes and spends at the Illinois. We saw no Indians there. They had already started for their hunt."

On the 24th of October, these voyagers commenced making preparations for their journey, and, on account of the lowness of the water in the river, concluded to take only what supplies were absolutely necessary for the voyage, leaving the remainder in charge of a Brother Alexander. On the 29th they started from Chicago and put up for the night about two leagues off in a little river which is then lost in the prairie.

Continuing his narrative, St. Cosme says: "The next day we began the portage which is about three leagues long when the water is low, and only about a quarter of a league in the spring, for you embark on a little lake that empties into a branch of the river of the Illinois, and when the waters are low you have to make a portage in that branch. We made half our portage that day, and we should have made some further progress, when we perceived that a little boy whom we had received from Mr. De Muys, having started on alone, although he had been told to wait, had got lost without any one paying attention to it, all hands being engaged. We were obliged to stop and look for him. All set out. We fired guns, but could not find him. It was a very unfortunate mishap. We were pressed by the season, and the waters being low, we saw well that being obliged to carry our effects and our canoes, it would take us a great while to reach the Illinois. This made us part company. Mr. De Montigny, De Tonte, and Davion continued the portage next day, and I with four other men returned to look for the little boy, and on my way back I met Fathers Pinet and Buinateau, who were going with two Frenchmen and one Indian to the Illinois. We looked for him again all that day without being able to find him. As the next day was the feast of All Saints this obliged me to pass the next day in Chikagou with our People. After having heard mass and performed their devotions early we spent all that day, too, in looking for that little boy without being able to get the least trace. It was very difficult to find him in the tall grass, for the whole country is prairie, you see only some clumps of woods. As the grass was high, we durst not set fire to it for fear of burning him. Mr. De Montigny had told me not to stay over a day because the cold was becoming severe. This obliged me to start after getting Brother Alexander to look for him and to take some of the French who were in Chikagou."

He then goes on to give a minute description of his passage of the portage from that river to the Monjolly. (Near Joliet.) Continuing the narrator says:

"On the 11th, after making the little portage, we came to the River Tealike (Kankakee) which is the real river of the Illinois, that which we had descended being only a branch. * * * After having had to carry our baggage for three days and put it all together in the canoe, the river being low and full of rocks, we arrived on the 15th of November at the place called the Old Fort. It is a rock which is on the bank of the river about one hundred feet high, where M. De La Salle built a fort which he abandoned. The Indians having gone to stay about twenty-five leagues lower down, we sailed a league below, where we found two Indian cabins. We were consoled to see one perfectly good Christian woman.

"From Chikagou to the fort they reckoned thirty leagues. [From Chicago to Peoria the distance is 160 miles.—Ed.]. Here navigation begins which continues uninterrupted to the Fort Permaevvi, where the Indians are now. We arrived there on the 19th of November (four days from the old fort). We found Rev. Father Pinet there, who not being loaded when they started from Chikagou had arrived here six or seven days before us. We also saw there Rev. Father Marays (Marest), a Jesuit. All the Rev. Fathers gave us all possible welcome. Their only regret was to see us start so soon on account of the frosts. We there took a Frenchman, who had spent three years at the Arkansas, and who knows the language a little.

"This Illinois mission seems to me the finest that the Jesuit Fathers have up here. [The writer being a Recollet.—Ed.], for without counting all the children who are baptized there are many grown persons who have abandoned all their superstitions and live as perfectly good Christians, frequenting their sacraments and are married in the church. We had not the consolation of seeing all these good Christians, for they were all dispersed going down the banks of the river to hunt. We saw there only some Indian women married to Frenchmen, who edified us by their modesty and by their assiduity in going several times a day to the chapel to pray. We sang high mass there with deacon and sub-deacon, on the day of the presentation of the Blessed Virgin, and after commending our voyage to her and placing ourselves under her protection, we started from the Illinois.

On the 22d of November we had to break the ice for two or three arpens to get out of the Lake of (Pimiteoui). (1) We were four canoes, Mr. De Tonte's, our two and another (of five), young voyagers who chose to accompany us, partly on account of Mr. De Tonte, who is generally loved by all the voyagers, and partly also to see the country. Rev. Fathers Buiniteau and Pinet (who were Jesuits—Ed.), also joined us for a part of the way, wishing to go and spend the whole winter with the Indians."

Bearing in mind that no Indian had been found at "The Rock," or at the old village of "Cascachia," we are led to conclude that what St. Cosme says about the mission and the Indians was based upon his observations at the village on Lake Peoria, where he first found them.

It is possible that when speaking of the prosperity of this Illinois mission, the narrator had in view the entire extent of the mission from Chicago, where Pinet's summer residence was, to this village, where he had his winter residence, and that his reference was not wholly to that portion of the mission located at Peoria. But it seems that when speaking of the Indians whom he saw, of their going to chapel, of the singing of high mass, of the starting from the Illinois, of the breaking of ice to get out of the lake, and of the persons being baptized in the church, he had reference to what he had observed at Peoria. The voyageurs continued their journey until they reached the Mississippi River on the 5th of December, after having made about eight (correctly eighty) leagues from the fort of Pimiteoui. If this conclusion is well founded it follows that as early as the beginning of the eighteenth century there was a permanent village on Lake Peoria, having a chapel and supplied with the ordinances of the church. The exact location of this village does not yet appear, but as we proceed the evidence accumulates that it was not only on Lake Peoria, but that it was near the northern limits of the present city of that name.

One year later the Rev. Jaques Gravier, a Jesuit and successor of Allouez, made a trip down the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers to the Gulf. In a letter addressed to Father De Lamberville from the fort of the Mississippi near the Gulf of Mexico, dated February 16, 1701, he says: "On my return from Michilimackinac, I received your letter, which you did the honor to write by the Mississippi addressed to Father Aveneau, who sent it to me at Chikagou, whence I set out on the 8th of September, 1700, to come here. I arrived too late at the Illinois du Detroit [a word signifying a strait or narrows.—Ed.], of which Father Marest has charge, to prevent the transmigration of the village of the Kaskaschias, which was too precipitously made, on vague news of the establishment on the Mississippi. I do not believe that the Kaskaschias would thus have separated from the Peouroua (Pezarza) and their Illinois du Detroit had I arrived sooner. At all events, I came soon enough to unite minds a little and to prevent insult which the Peouroua and the Mouingouena were bent on throwing to the Kaskaschias and French as they embarked. I spoke to all the chiefs in full council, and as they continue to preserve some respect and good will for me, we separated very peaceably. But I augur no good from this separation, which I have always hindered, seeing but too clearly the evil results. God grant that the road from Chikagou to the strait (du Detroit) be not closed, and the whole Illinois mission suffer greatly. I avow to you, Rev. Father, that it rends my heart to see my old flock thus divided and dispersed, and I shall never see it after leaving it, without having some new cause of affliction. The Peouroua, whom I left without a missionary (since Father Marest has followed the Kaskaschias) have promised me that they would preserve the church and that they would await my return from the Mississippi, where I told them I went only to assure myself of the truth of all that was said about it. This gave them great pleasure. They promised me that they would leave their village only when I should direct, or the great chief down the river wished them to transport it. I much doubt whether they will keep their word."

"After having marched four days with the Kaskaschias, I went ahead with Father Marest, whom I left sick at Tamarouha, where Father Pinet discharges peaceably all the functions of the missionary, and Mr. Berger, (a secular priest.—Ed.), who gets along well with us, has care only of the French, and this is a great relief for Father Pinet."

This is a very important statement, showing as it does the exact time, manner and cause of the migration of the "Kaskaschias" and their French allies from the old village near "The Rock" to the new location on the Mississippi, afterward the famous Kaskaskia. Gravier met them on their way at the place called Detroit, which had imparted its name to some of the Indians residing thereabouts and which applies well to the "Narrows," above Peoria. Marest had had charge of that portion, but had gone with the Kaskaskias. There was a village at that point in which was a church or chapel which they promised Gravier to preserve and to desert their village only when he or the great chief down the river should direct. Gravier continued his journey south, marching four days with the Kaskaskias, and then going ahead with Marest, whom he left sick at Tamarouha, where Pinet then ministered and where one Berger, a secular priest, had care of the French.

On April 20, 1699, soon after the visit of the St. Cosme party to Lake Peoria, Father Marest wrote a letter to another of the same order in which he describes the village as being one-half league in length, with a chapel at each end, one of which had been recently erected to accommodate the increasing number of converts. This was the year before the separation of the Kaskaskias from the Peorias.

In the summer of 1705 Gravier was again among the Illinois, where he was attacked by an Indian who shot five arrows at him, one of which left its point imbedded in the tendons of his elbow, which afterward resulted in his death, but not until after a visit to Paris and his return to America. Father Mermet, in a letter dated March 2, 1706, gives a minute account of this transaction. Concerning the condition of the affairs of the Illinois, he says: "It is good from this village (Kaskaskia) except that they threaten to leave us at the first word. It is bad as regards both spiritual and temporal matters among the Illinois of Detroit—otherwise the Peorias—where Father Gravier nearly lost his life on two occasions, and he is not yet out of danger." After suffering for three months at that place, but having learned the Indians were hostile to his leaving, Gravier planned a secret departure at night, but, when about to embark, he was greatly surprised to learn that his house was surrounded by about 200 Indians, who had taken down a portion of his palisade in order to get in. But through the interposition of a friendly chief he was permitted to proceed, and after arriving at Kaskaskia was sent to Mobile, whence he sailed for France.

The Mission House, surrounded by a palisade, may possibly be all that is meant by the word fort in these early narratives.

On November 9, 1712, Father Marest wrote to Father German, another Jesuit, a long account of the missions among the Illinois, in the course of which he says: "I worked with these missionaries (Pinet and Buinetau) and, after their deaths, I alone remained charged with all the labors of the mission until the arrival of Father Mermet. Previously I was in the large village of the Peorias, where Father Gravier, who had returned there for the second time, received a wound which caused his death."

Having planned a journey to Mackinac, in which it would be necessary to go by way of the village of the Peorias, Marest on Friday of Easter week, 1711, set out on foot from Kaskaskia, stopping one night at Cahokia. After several days' travel, during which he endured intense suffering in his feet, he reached the Illinois river, twenty-five leagues below the village of the Peorias. There he dispatched one of his Indians to inform the Frenchman at the village of his sad plight, and after two days was met by them and taken into their canoes.

Up to this time we have heard of no Frenchmen residing at Peoria, and it is a question whether these were such.

In the beginning of October, of the year 1721, Father Charlevoix made a voyage down the Illinois River and found a village on the west bank of Lake Peoria, which he terms a second village of the Illinois, the first having been found at The Rock, but his estimate of distances and the course of streams is so very unreliable as to render its exact location impossible. His description of the surrounding scenery, however, corresponds quite well with that at the Old French Village of Peoria. The most important statements made by him are that the village was called Pimiteoui, the same name the lake had borne from the time of La Salle; that the Peorias were then at war with neighboring tribes, and that he found there four French Canadians apparently living with the Indians. If there had been more he would have certainly mentioned them, for he was sorely in need of their assistance. There the chief of the village invited him to a conference at a house where one of the missionaries had lodged some years before, and where probably they used to hold council. This account was written on the spot, at Pimiteoui. Nothing is said about a church or a fort or the number or character of the inhabitants.

It is a matter of history that during the next year, 1722, the Peorias, being harrassed on all sides by their enemies, took their departure from the Illinois country and followed the Kaskaskias. We therefore hear nothing further of the mission at Peoria.

There is another item of evidence, however, coming from an entirely different source, which goes to show the existence of a village at Peoria as early as 1723. The French having established a government in Louisiana, to which province the Illinois country had been attached, M. de Boishabrant had been appointed First Lieutenant of the King in the province of Louisiana and commandant of Illinois, who, with M. de Laloir des Ursins, Principal Director of the Company of the Indies, constituted the council. Philip Francis Renault, Director General of the mines of the Company, who had formerly been a banker in Paris, reached Fort Chartres in 1719, bringing with him 250 miners and soldiers and a large number of slaves from San Domingo to operate the mines. Renault obtained several grants from the company, among which was one located at or near Peoria. The grant is couched in the following language:

"Year one thousand seven hundred and twenty-three, June 14th, granted M. Renault in freehold (en franc aleu), in order to make his establishment upon the mines:

"A league and a half of ground in front upon the little Marameig and in the River Marameig at the place of the first fork which leads to the cabins called the cabanage de Renaudiere, with a depth of six leagues, the river making the middle point of the compass and the small stream being perpendicular as far as the place where the Sieur Renault has his furnaces, and thence straight to the place called the great mine.

"One league in front at Pimiteau on the River Illinois facing the East and adjoining to the lake bearing the name of the village, and on the other side to the banks opposite the village for a half league above it with a depth of five leagues, the point of the compass following the Illinois River down the same upon one side and ascending by the River of Arcary (d'Arcsey, elsewhere called des Arcoury.—Ed.), which forms the middle through the rest of the depth.”

This grant goes to show that at that time, June 14, 1723, there was a village located on Lake Pimiteau, or Lake Peoria, the precise location of which is not definitely stated. The heirs of Renault have, from time to time, set up a claim to the land so granted at Lake Peoria, and it is possible they have not yet wholly abandoned the same. Their last claim is that it embraces a tract lying on both sides of the Kickapoo Creek at its mouth, extending up the river, as far as the wagon road bridge at Bridge Street, and following the creek as its middle line for a distance of five leagues, or fifteen miles, by one league, or three miles, in width. The description, however, is of such an uncertain nature it does not seem possible to locate it with any degree of accuracy.

From that date until the year 1765, the history of Peoria is a blank, but the fact of there being a prosperous village at Peoria, which had grown up within the space of forty years, affords sufficient evidence that within that period, and probably very soon after the Renault grant, the French Village had taken the place of that which had theretofore been mostly made up of Indians.

CHAPTER IV.

OLD PEORIAS FORT AND VILLAGE.

It is a well-established fact that at the time of the cession of the Illinois country by France to Great Britain (1763) there was a French village situated on the west bank of Lake Peoria about one and one-half miles above its outlet. The site of this village as fixed by tradition and by the relics there found, as well as by the government surveys, was in the vicinity of the foot of Caroline Street, and extended probably to and for some distance up the ravine coming from Springdale Cemetery familiarly known as Birket's Hollow. It contained a fort, and the place was known afterward as the "Old Peorias Fort and Village."

At what time or by whom this "Old Fort" was erected does not clearly appear. Governor Reynolds, in his "Pioneer History of Illinois," says that it was the same as that erected by La Salle, and that "the site at Creve Coeur has been uniformly recognized by the old French inhabitants as the 'Old Fort' ever since that day down to the present time." This statement cannot, however, be accepted as undoubtedly correct, for not only do Hennepin's maps locate Fort Creve Coeur on the easterly side of the river, but the location of "Old Peoria" does not correspond in other respects with that of Creve Coeur as given by other contemporaries of La Salle.

It is true that La Salle located Fort Creve Coeur a half league from the Indian Village or camp, and if the fort had from his time subsequently been occupied, it would have been quite natural for a French village to have grown up in its immediate vicinity. Whether, therefore, the landing of La Salle, where he found the Indian village, was at the Narrows (called by the French "au Detroit") or at the foot of the lake (called by them Au Pied or Opa), the location of the Old Fort or Village corresponds in distance with that given of Fort Creve Coeur from the same place, one-half a league. It is more probable, however, that this fort was erected by the French subsequently to the destruction of Fort Creve Coeur.

Governor Reynolds further says: "The Traders—their voyageurs, and others in their employment, occupied this post, more or less, ever since its first establishment. As it has been said, the Indian trade of that section of the country was better than at any other point. This made it to the interest of the traders to occupy the place.

"Peoria never, in ancient times, was as large a village as either Kaskaskia or Cahokia, but it is more ancient than either of them. La Salle, when he first saw the country, was charmed with the beauty of the place and established a fort there. He also knew the resources of the country arising from the Indian trade, which was another, and perhaps a greater, inducement to erect his grand depot here for the Indian trade than for any other consideration.

"In the first settlement of the country, the missionaries settled at this post, and had their flocks of the young natives around them. Peoria can boast of a higher antiquity than any other town in Illinois, and about the same date with St. Josephs, Green Bay, Mackinaw and Detroit.

"The French cultivated some ground, more or less, at Peoria, for more than one hundred years past. They cultivated at the old village, to some extent, and at the new one since the year 1778, when it was commenced by Maillet. It will be seen by the report of the United States officers, sustained by positive proof, that one Antoine St. Francois had a family in Peoria in the year 1765, and cultivated a field of corn adjacent to the village.

"Other inhabitants also resided there at the same time and long before. It is true, most of the citizens were Indian traders and those living on the trade; but this trade required support by men and provisions which were both furnished, to some extent, by the settlers of Peoria."

Mr. E. G. Mason, in "Chapters from Illinois History," relates that Fort Creve Coeur was almost wholly destroyed while La Salle was absent on his expedition to the Mississippi in 1682. On his return he left there eight Frenchmen. In December of the same year he returned and directed Tonti's command to break camp and to follow him to the new location (Fort St. Louis). It appears, therefore, that Tonti had a command here during the latter part of 1682. Did they rebuild the fort or did they erect a new one? One Baron La Honton ascended the river in 1689, and in 1703 published an account of his trip, accompanied with a map on which Fort Creve Coeur (where he says he met Tonti) is located on the west side of the river. Mr. Mason discredits the account for two reasons, first, Fort Creve Coeur was on the east side of the river, secondly, Tonti is shown to have been elsewhere at the time. But, as already seen, St. Cosme's party in 1700 found a fort here, which they called Permaevvi. Tonti was with them and they remained there several days. May this not have been the fort erected by Tonti himself under authority from La Salle, and the same of which Governor Reynolds speaks?

The importance of Peoria as a military or trading post is further proved by a certain provision in the famous treaty of Greenville. Although the Indians had co-operated with the British forces during the Revolutionary war, they did not cease hostilities with the treaty of peace of 1783, but continued their warfare for a period of eleven years thereafter. They were then disastrously defeated by General Anthony Wayne, in the battle of Maumee. This defeat was followed by a great peace conference held at Greenville from the 16th day of June until the 10th day of August, 1795, which resulted in a treaty of peace whereby the boundaries between the Indians and the United States were fixed by a line running through the State of Ohio. Within the territory reserved by the Indians there were sixteen posts or pieces of land ceded to the United States, among which were the following: The post at Detroit and certain lands attached thereto; the post of Michilimackinac with all the land on the island and certain others on the main land, together with the Island de Bois Blanc; one piece of land six miles square at the mouth of the Chicago River, emptying into the southwest end of Lake Michigan, where a fort formerly stood; one piece twelve miles square at or near the mouth of the Illinois River, and one piece six miles square at old Peorias fort and village, near the south end of the Illinois Lake, on the said Illinois River. And it was further provided that the said Indian tribes would allow to the people of the United States a free passage by land and water, as one or the other should be found convenient, through their country along the chain of posts thereinbefore mentioned, that is to say, from the commencement thereof, etc. * * * Again, from the mouth of Chicago River to the commencement of the portage, between that river and the Illinois and down the Illinois River to the Mississippi. The purpose of the said grant of said chain of posts is expressed to be a desire on the part of the Indians to provide for the accommodation of the people of the United States, and for that convenient intercourse which should be beneficial to both parties.

The "Old Peorias Fort and Village" are here officially recognized as the land mark of the township of land surrounding the same, ceded to the United States as one of a chain of trading posts extending from Detroit by way of Michilimackinac and Chicago to the mouth of the Illinois River.

Peoria, although a small village, had its part in the stirring times of the Revolutionary war. It must be remembered that from the time of the treaty of Paris (1763) until the year 1803 the country west of the Mississippi now included within the state of Missouri was a Spanish possession called Louisiana. It therefore happened that when Spain and England were at war with each other the Mississippi River formed the boundary between the hostile countries.

Two expeditions from Cahokia to St. Joseph, now in the state of Michigan, in both of which that place fell into the hands of the attacking party, are mentioned as having taken place in the years 1777 and 1778, in the latter of which Jean Baptiste Maillet, with a company of adventurers, is said to have taken a prominent part. The latest account of this expedition is that of E. G. Mason, in "Chapters of Illinois History," where he says that "In the summer of 1778 one Paulette Meillet, a Canadian Frenchman, residing near the site of Peoria, of which he was the founder, resolved to undertake the task of obtaining satisfaction. He led a force of 300 French and Indians from his place of residence, probably by the Illinois and Kankakee Rivers, to St. Joseph," etc. This account follows that of Governor

R. H. Avery

Reynolds. But the founder of the (new) village was Jean Baptiste Maillet, and not Paulette; the head of the expedition was named in the Western Annals (App. 697) Paulette Maize, and it was organized at Cahokia and not at Peoria. It is there stated that some of the members of the most ancient and respectable families in Cahokia were in this expedition. The first expedition having set out from Cahokia, where its leader, Tom Brady, lived, it would seem the second (if there was one) was but a sequel to it. It is there shown that the whole story as related by Governor Reynolds had been derived from one Boismenué, a native of Cahokia, which he had received from his father and other citizens of Cahokia. In this narrative nothing is said about Paulette Maillet, of Peoria.

The date of these alleged expeditions as well as Maillet's participation therein is seriously questioned by others. It is certain, however, that in the year 1780 an expedition of that character did take place from Cahokia and St. Louis, which is claimed by some to have been the true date of the latter of those already mentioned. There is nothing but an uncertain tradition that Maillet had any part in it, but it is very certain that he was about that time the commander of a company of militia at Peoria. It is not even certain that this expedition came by way of Peoria.

It will be borne in mind that prior to its conquest by General George Rogers Clarke, the country of the Illinois was in possession of the British, and that the inhabitants of the French villages were favorable to that nation rather than to the Americans. It was not until they had been informed that France had taken sides with America that they consented to take the oath of allegiance to Virginia. The militia of the newly acquired territory was not organized until after the advent of the Commandant John Todd in 1779. It cannot therefore be supposed that Maillet had a company of militia under his command prior to that time.

It is related by Edward G. Mason that "Clark's force was not sufficient to guard the whole of the conquered territory and hence a large part of the Illinois region was still open to raids from the enemy. Major De Peyster was the British Commandant at Mackinac. Under his orders an invading expedition was sent in the summer of 1779 to attack the trading post of Le Pe, which was situated within the present limits of Peoria, Illinois. It had been an important fur-trading station under the French régime and it was still maintained by traders of that race who were friendly to the Americans and rejoiced in Clark's conquest. They had built a stockade which De Peyster feared might be of advantage to the Virginia troops in case they moved further northward, and therefore wished to destroy. The commander of the expedition was Charles Gautier Verville, a Canadian in the British service, who was employed during the Revolution in recruiting Indian allies for the British in the Northwest. His soldiers were almost entirely Indians from various tribes. He undoubtedly came from Mackinac along the west coast of Lake Michigan, and by the lovely little Chicago River and the portage to the Des Plaines River, and thence down the Illinois. Many times this route had been followed by parties of Indians and the Frenchmen in the early days of the Northwest, but this is the first time it appears in Revolutionary history. De Verville's approach was so stealthy and so sudden that the startled French traders had no time to prepare a defense, and their stockade was taken and burned. But fear of retribution from Clark and his "long-knives" led De Verville to beat a hasty retreat, and he apparently returned as he came by the site of Chicago across which trooped these native allies of Great Britain in their war paint adorned with the spoils of Le Pe."

This is the only place yet seen where this expedition is mentioned and the only place where Peoria is called Le Pe, although frequently called Opa. It will be observed that the French were friendly to the Americans and that they had built a stockade there which Verville destroyed. If as related by Matson and Patrick Kennedy the "Old Fort" had been destroyed as early as 1773, this must have been the one erected at the new village, and it must have been erected at the very beginning of its settlement. This renders the statement of Hypolite Maillet (infra) plausible that he had been born in a fort at the new village, and accounts for its non-existence at the time the village was afterward destroyed by Captain Craig.

About that time the authorities in command adopted the questionable policy of withdrawing all their forces from the Illinois country and of concentrating them at Fort Jefferson, near the confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers on the south side of the latter. In consequence of this action the villages were left without adequate protection. It was probably owing to that circumstance that the village of Peoria was in 1781 entirely deserted for a time, but its inhabitants not long afterward returned to their former homes.

The loyalty of the French inhabitants to the government of the United States has sometimes been questioned, but this charge has not been sustained. While occupying a post on the extreme frontier, where any act of hostility to the Indians would have resulted in almost certain death, it became them to maintain toward the latter a peaceable attitude, which they could do without compromising their character as loyal citizens.

When the French sovereignty yielded to that of Great Britain, those of them who remained and took the oath of allegiance to Great Britain became the subjects of that realm, and when the sovereignty of Great Britain was superseded by that of Virginia, those who remained became citizens of that State and afterward of the United States. The New Village of Peoria had scarcely obtained a foothold at the foot of the Lake when these exciting events took place, but we shall see that those of the new village maintained their loyalty so long as the village had an existence.

The village having been burned and all its inhabitants carried away captive in the year 1812, the means of acquiring accurate information as to its population and the extent of its trade are very meager. It is conceded on every hand, except by those interested in belittling its importance, that it had quite a large population, that they carried on an extensive trade and had a large quantity of land in cultivation, not only adjoining the village but as far distant as the Kickapoo bottoms.

In the year 1882 there was published an historical work entitled "The Pioneers of Illinois," by N. Matson, of Princeton, Illinois, who in his preface claims to have visited the descendants of the early French pioneers, then living in the American Bottom, and to have heard their stories of past events which had come down through the third and fourth generations. He states many of the incidents narrated had been obtained from persons who had figured in them, and that every statement not well authenticated had been excluded. From this work the following extracts are made, showing at least what tradition says in regard to the village and its inhabitants:

"According to the statement of Antoine Des Champs, Thomas Forsyth, and others, who had long been residents of Peoria previous to its destruction in 1812, we infer that the town contained a large population. It formed a connecting link between the settlements on the Mississippi and Canada, and being situated in the midst of an Indian country caused it to be a fine place for the fur trade. The town was built along the beach of the lake, and to each house was attached an outlet for a garden, which extended back on the prairie. The houses were all constructed of wood, one story high, with porches on two sides, and located in a garden surrounded with fruit and flowers. Some of the dwellings were built of hewed timbers set upright, and the space between the posts filled in with stones and mortar, while others were built of hewed logs notched together after the style of a pioneer's cabin. The floors were laid with puncheons, and the chimney built with sticks and mud."

"When Colonel Clark took possession of Illinois in 1778 he sent three soldiers, accompanied by two Frenchmen, in a canoe to Peoria to notify the people that they were no longer under British rule, but citizens of the United States. Among these soldiers was a man named Nicholas Smith, a resident of Bourbon county, Kentucky, and whose son, Joseph Smith [Dad Joe—Ed.], was among the first American settlers of Peoria. Through this channel we have an account of Peoria as it appeared a century ago, and it agrees well with other traditional accounts."

"Mr. Smith said Peoria, at the time of his visit, was a large town, built along the beach of the lake, with narrow, unpaved streets, and houses constructed of wood. Back of the town were gardens, stockyards, barns, etc., and among these was a wine-press, with a large cellar or underground vault for storing wine. There was a church with a large wooden cross raised above the roof, and with gilt lettering over the door. There was an unoccupied fort on the bank of the lake, and close by it a wind-mill for grinding grain. The town contained six stores, or places of trade, all of which were well filled with goods for the Indian market. The inhabitants consisted of French, half-breeds and Indians, not one of whom could understand or speak English." [This was one year before Verville's attack upon the village and the destruction of the fort.—Ed.]

"Among the inhabitants of Peoria were merchants or traders who made annual trips to Canada in canoes, carrying thither pelts and furs and loaded back with goods for the Indian market. They were blacksmiths, wagonmakers, carpenters, shoemakers, etc., and most of the implements used in farming were of home manufacture. Although isolated from the civilized world, and surrounded by savages, their standard of morality was high; theft, robbery or murder were seldom heard of. They were a gay, happy people, having many social parties, wine suppers, balls and public festivals. They lived in harmony with the Indians, who were their neighbors and friends, adopting in part their customs, and in trade with them accumulated most of their wealth."

"The dress of both men and women was very plain, made of coarse material, and the style of their wardrobe was partly European and partly Indian. The men seldom wore a hat, cap or coat, their heads being covered with a cotton handkerchief, folded on the crown like a night-cap or an Arabian turban. Instead of a coat they wore a loose blanket garment called capote, with a cap of the same material hanging down at the back of the neck, which could be drawn over the head as a protection from rain or cold. The women wore loose dresses, made mostly of coarse material their heads covered with a hood or blanket, and their long hair hanging down their back like an Indian squaw. But these women were noted for sprightliness in conversation, with grace and elegance of manners, and notwithstanding the plainness of their dress many of them were not lacking in personal charm."

If the passages just quoted apply to Peoria at the time it was visited by Nicholas Smith, immediately after the conquest by General Clark, they describe "Old Peoria" and not the new, for the new village at that time had no existence. They, however, accord well with other established facts.

Joseph Smith (otherwise called Dad Joe) was one of the first county commissioners of Peoria County and resided in what is now Tazewell County. His father, Nicholas Smith, is said to have been a Kentuckian, but it must be observed that in those days Kentuckians were not very numerous. Probably he became a Kentuckian afterward. He became a large dealer in lands granted by the government to those who had been heads of families or had improvements on lands prior to 1785.

The description of the manners and customs of the people is very similar to what we read of them in other accounts of the inhabitants of the lower villages, and may have had the same origin, but, inasmuch as they were all of the same stock of people, their habits were in every respect similar and a description of the habits of the people of one village would apply equally well to all. It is more than probable they had a church or chapel, however rude or primitive it might have been, for that was a usual accompaniment of all French villages, and as wine was the common beverage of the people and wild grapes were abundant there would be nothing strange in their having a wine-press. We find little reference to wind-mills in the early days in Illinois, and the reference to one here might possibly be a mistake for the horse-mill which is known to have had an existence near the "Old Fort."

The same author relates that after the abandonment of the "Old Village" by the French it was occupied for many years by the Indians, until the houses rotted down, but the remains of the old chapel could be seen for many years after the dwellings had disappeared. He also relates that a fort was built at the new village, consisting of two block-houses surrounded by earthworks and palisades, with an open gateway toward the south next to the river, but it was only intended as a place of retreat in case of trouble with the Indians. For some unexplained reason he attributes the building of the new village to Robert instead of Jean B. Maillet, the real founder, and says that this fort at the new village was never occupied, except a short time by Robert Maillet, who used one of the block-houses for a dwelling and the other for the sale of goods. Hypolite Maillet, the son of Jean Baptiste Maillet, about the year 1820, when called as a witness to prove up the claim of Thomas Forsyth to two certain lots in Peoria, which had formerly been owned by his father, testified that he had always understood that he was born in a stockade situated on one of said lots. As he was then forty-two years of age the date of his birth must have been about the same year as that of the founding of the new village. As it is shown that his father also lived at and cultivated land near the old fort, it is barely possible that his birthplace may have been at the latter. No mention is made of a fort at the new village at the time of its destruction by Captain Craig.

The same author says the stockades of the "Old Fort" had been burned down as early as August, 1770, when one Pat. Kennedy with a company of adventures from Kaskaskia visited the place, but the block-houses were then standing.

There is in the State Historical Library a volume entitled "Mr. Patrick Kennedy's Journal of an expedition undertaken by himself and several Couriers de Bois in the year 1773, from Kaskaskia Village in the Illinois country to the Head Waters of the Illinois River," in which under date of August 7 occurs this entry: "The morning being very foggy and the river overgrown with weeds along its sides, we could make but little way. About twelve o'clock we got to the 'Old Peorias Fort' and village on the western shore of the river and at the southern end of a lake called Illinois Lake, which is nineteen miles and a half in length and three miles in breadth.

It has no rocks, shoals or perceivable current. We found the stockades of this Peorias Fort destroyed by fire, but the houses standing. The summit on which the fort stood commands a fine prospect of the country to the eastward and up the lake to the point where the river comes in at the north end." He then gives a description of the topographical features of the place, in which he makes the strange statement that on the eastern side of the lake about the middle of it the chain of rocks that extends from the back of the Kaskaskia to Cahokia Piasa, the mouth of the Illinois River terminates. Such wild statements as this occurring throughout the book greatly impair its historical value. But there seems to be no good reason to doubt his statement of the condition in which he found the "Old Fort Peorias."

The weight of probability seems to be that the "Old Fort" had been partially destroyed as early as 1773; that soon thereafter in anticipation of a change of location of the village a new fort had been erected at the foot of the lake; that the old village was gradually abandoned, leaving the buildings to be occupied by the Indians until they rotted down; that Jean Baptiste Maillet took up his residence at the new fort, within the precincts of which his son Hypolite was born in the year 1778 or 1779; that it was soon afterward attacked by Verville and destroyed; that about 1781 the village was deserted by its inhabitants, who did not return until peace had been declared; that they rebuilt their village, all the inhabitants of the "Old Village" having come there to live, but that they never rebuilt their fort, it being their best policy to maintain friendly relations with the Indians, and the rebuilding of the fort might have been construed into an act of hostility toward them. It is a difficult task to undertake to reconcile these apparently conflicting accounts, but the foregoing seems to be a reasonable deduction from the different narratives.

CHAPTER V.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—EXPEDITION OF CAPTAIN LEVERING—VISIT TO GOMO—CONFERENCE WITH CHIEFS AT PEORIA—1811.

Governor Edwards had not long been in office, as Governor of the Illinois Territory, before the ominous clouds of an Indian war began to loom up in the distance. Benjamin Howard was the Governor of the territory of Upper Louisiana, later Missouri.

On the night of the 19th of June, 1810, a most daring murder had been committed by some Indians within the Territory of Louisiana near Portage de Sioux, which led to a great deal of trouble. The Indians, having stolen some horses in that vicinity, were pursued by a party of white men, who, failing to capture them the first day, bivouacked for the night. About two o'clock in the morning, while quietly sleeping around their camp-fire, they were fired upon by the Indians and four of their number, namely, C. Gooch, Abraham Patten, W. T. Cole and Sarshall Brown, were instantly killed. Two others escaped to the settlements and reported the massacre. The proof being clear that the murder had been committed by the Pottawatamies of Illinois, a requisition was made by Governor Howard upon Governor Edwards to deliver them up to the authorities of Louisiana for punishment. The demand specifically named, as one of the murderers, an Indian named Cat Fish, who, it was alleged, resided within the Illinois Territory, and the same was accompanied by a note from Colonel William Clark, United States agent for Indian affairs in Louisiana, a brother of General George Rogers Clark, and afterward governor of the territory. In that note Colonel Clark said that Gomo, a Pottawatamie chief residing near Peoria, in a council with him at St. Louis had said that two of his nation, named O-ki-chie-go-mis and Ne-skad-na-mis, had belonged to the party of murderers; that they were attached to a band of Pottawatamies who were under the influence of the prophet, and resided on the Wabash.

Tecumseh, the great chief of the Shawnees, was then at the height of his power, and this Indian, called the Prophet, was his brother. At that time he was roaming the country, visiting tribe after tribe in his endeavors to incite a general Indian uprising against the whites.

In the summer of 1811 great alarm began to prevail among the settlers and many on the frontiers began to quit their farms and to seek safety in the more populous settlements. Governor Edwards reported to the War Department at Washington the serious aspect of affairs together with an account of the depredations being committed by the Indians, such as the killing of one young man named Cox, the taking prisoner of his sister, and her recapture by excited citizens, the stealing of horses and the plundering of the people of other property.

On June 30th of that year he reported having received circumstantial accounts of certain horses that were said to have been stolen by a party of Pottawatamie Indians settled near Peoria, under the chief named Main Pock, or Man Shot. These, he says, are the same Indians who committed the depredations which he had reported the preceding summer. He also reported that he had ordered out a few militia to make discoveries and to resist the stragglers. He had also dispatched a spy and was taking every means in his power to ascertain what Indians they were who committed the outrages on the Cox family and property. (1)

Instead of inciting the settlers to assume a hostile attitude toward the Indians, it seems to have been the policy of both Governor Edwards and Governor Howard to cultivate the most friendly relations with as many of the Indian tribes as possible. A small force of militia who occupied a block-house or small fort near the mouth of the Illinois River, having imprudently fired upon a company of Saes, accompanied by a Frenchman, this circumstance called forth a protest from Governor Howard to Governor Edwards, because the Saes were then on friendly terms with the whites in his territory. An explanation from the officer in charge, William Whitesides, seems to have settled the matter, but the incident shows how careful the authorities were not to provoke the Indians into hostilities.

On the 24th of July, 1811, Captain Samuel Levering was commissioned by Governor Edwards to proceed to the tribes on the Illinois River to demand of them the authors of the murder of the Cole party, as well as of the thefts of property. To accomplish this purpose he, on the 25th of July, 1811, dispatched a boat to Peoria under command of Levering with a crew consisting of Captain Herbert, Henry Swearingen, N. Rector, a Frenchman who passed for an interpreter, but who was in reality a spy, a Pottawatamie named Wish-ha and eight oarsmen named Pierre St. John, Pierre Laparache, Joseph Trottier, Francis Pencenneau, Louis Bavanò, Thomas Hall (alias Woods), Pierre Voedre and Joseph Grammason, each of whom was armed with a gun. Stopping at Portage de Sioux, they learned of the incident of the firing upon the party of Saes in the river. Nothing of importance however, occurred until they arrived at Peoria on the 3d day of August, when they met Mr. Thomas Forsyth, the Indian agent, who informed Captain Levering that he had delivered to Gomo a letter from Governor Clark in relation to the murderers, and that Gomo had replied as though he was disposed to surrender the offenders, but that his will was ineffectual against the majority.

On the next day Jaques Mette, also a resident of Peoria, informed Captain Levering that one of the Indians who had committed a murder at Shoal creek was a Pottawatamie, who at that time was at a village on Yellow creek about ninety miles from Peoria, that another was at Patourt or White Pigeon (now in the state of Michigan) about twelve miles on the road from St. Joseph to Detroit, and that one of the party that murdered Cox was twelve or fifteen miles further on toward Detroit. From this statement it will be seen that the Indians were no less adroit in hiding criminals in the wilderness than some of the same profession are in hiding them in the great cities at the present day. From Peoria they sent a Mr. Fournier, whose name here appears for the first time, to Gomo's village to apprise him of the arrival of Captain Levering with a letter to him from Governor Edwards. Gomo had already learned of Captain Levering's arrival, from an Indian who had gone in advance of Fournier, and had informed Gomo that the party consisted of fifty men. On account of their supposed large number Gomo, notwithstanding Fournier's representations to the contrary, refused to come to meet Captain Levering without an escort of fourteen of his own warriors.

On the morning of August 5th a United States flag was seen at Gomo's lodge, a quarter of a mile above Peoria on the lake, he having arrived during the night. On receiving a message he came to the quarters of Captain Levering, who delivered to him the letter from Governor Edwards. He replied that he would immediately return to his village and on the following morning would prepare his young men and send them to call the chiefs to a council, giving at the same time the names of the following Pottawatamie chiefs: Nang-ke-sapt or Fire Medals, at Elkhart, near Fort Wayne; Topennyboy, on the River St. Joseph; Mo-quan-go, on the Qui-qui-que (Kankakee) River; Wi-ne-mauge, or Cat Fish, on the Wabash River. He said that Marpoek (Main Poek) and his principal chiefs had gone to Detroit and probably would not return until the fall. The chiefs of the towns on Fox River resided at Milwaukee; Little Chief, on River Au Sable or Sand River; Maseno, or Gomo, about seven leagues above Peoria; and Black Bird, chief of the Ottawas, on the River Au Sable. Gomo declared his willingness to do all in his power to render justice and to satisfy the Americans.

After parleying amongst themselves for some time as to the proper method of pursuing their mission, the party of Levering came to no definite conclusion. On the next day they proceeded up the river and arrived at an Indian village about seven leagues from Peoria. Here their oarsmen refused longer to work, saying they were not hired to work at night—it being then about dark. Captain Levering then engaged two Indians to take him and Mr. Fournier in a canoe about four miles higher up the river to a creek (doubtless the Senachewine), from which place they were conducted, through a moist and thick-etty bottom, to Gomo's village, where they arrived about eleven o'clock at night, and disturbed the great chief and the other Indians in their stumbers. The village may have occupied the same site as that of Senachewine, located on the north bank of the Senachewine not far from where the Peoria and Bureau Valley Railroad crosses it. The visitors were invited into the lodge—a bark building twenty-five by fifty feet inside, tenanted about thirty persons. There were scaffolds, from six to seven feet long, six feet wide and five feet high extending all around the building, on which the Indians sat and slept—stretching themselves from the siding to the center. Captain Levering and Mr. Fournier were invited to mount those next to the ones occupied by Gomo and his family. Although it was so very late, yet Gomo's wife hastened to bring in a dish of green corn for their supper, and while they were eating Gomo smoked his pipe. The men generally left their sleeping places, squatted around two fires in the center of the building, and out of respect to the strangers all engaged in "the solemnity of profound smoking."

On the next day, accompanied by Gomo and another chief, they returned to Peoria, where the two chiefs, Gomo and Levering had a long conference, Levering adroitly managing to prolong the interview in order to give more time for the other chiefs to arrive. During the delay which followed, Captain Levering delivered two commissions—one to Thomas Forsyth as justice of the peace for the town of Peoria, and the other to John Baptiste Depond, as captain of militia for the same place—both of whom took the oath of office.

At length, on the 15th of August, the chiefs began to arrive. Mielie Pah-ka-en-na, chief of the Kickapoos, on that day called upon Captain Levering and expressed much friendship. On the same day Gomo, Little Chief and others also called. Little Chief said that he had come to hear the words of his father (Governor Edwards) and he hoped that they would be all told to them as they were written. Forsyth, who was to be the interpreter, took offense at this remark, and replied with much warmth that if they apprehended any deficiency they must get another interpreter.

Little Chief was a talkative fellow and somewhat inclined to sarcasm, and withal quite jealous of the forms of etiquette due to his exalted station. Seeing no provisions made by the Government of the United States for the entertainment of the chiefs, he said to Captain Levering that if the representatives of his nation had come to his (Little Chief's) village he would have furnished them with a cabin and plenty to eat, and as he had come to hear the words of his father he wished to know where he should lodge. Captain Levering replied that the white men were aggrieved and had sent him to talk with the Indians; that he was a sojourner and a stranger among them, but as he had invited them to Peoria he would furnish them a house, although being in a strange place and unprovided he could not give them the kind and quality of provisions equal to his wishes. The result was that Little Chief committed a deliberate insult to the American flag (one of which had been given him by Captain Heald at Chicago, to carry with him to St. Louis) by hanging it on the fence with the Union down. Captain Levering thereupon addressed a letter to the chief, complaining of this insult to his government and telling them that they must turn their flag and have it placed properly, or he would immediately leave without delivering "our father's great talk." The next morning the flag was seen "Union up."

On the 16th of August, being informed that the Indians were on their way to the room where the council was to be held, Captain Levering invited the inhabitants of Peoria to attend. Then in company with Mr. Forsyth, Mr. Rector, Mr. Swearingen and Captain Herbert he repaired to the council, which he opened with the following address:

"Brothers, Chiefs, Warriors—The weather is cloudy. In the region south and west of this you will see none moving—all having drawn toward their cabins in apprehension of a storm. But our father who presides over the tribes between the Mississippi and the Wabash, being a good man, has sent me to invite you under his shelter to smoke a pipe in profound meditation—having our ears open to the voice of the Great Spirit, and our hearts disposed to obey his dictates—to see whether all may not subside, be calm, fair and cheerful. But first let us smoke a pipe and then attend to the talk of our father."

The conference then proceeded with all the deliberation and dignity which has recently characterized the proceedings of the meetings of the peace commission at Paris. Captain Levering first presented Governor Edwards' letter addressed "To the Chief and Warriors of the tribes of Pottawatamies residing on the Illinois River and its waters in the Territory of Illinois." This remarkable document consisted of eighteen distinct paragraphs, each one commencing with the words, "My Children," and was signed "Your Affectionate Father, Ninian Edwards."

On account of its great length very short extracts from this letter must serve to give an idea of the whole. It commences as follows:

"My Children, you are now met together, by my desire, on a very important occasion. You are now to be asked to do an act of justice. Should you refuse, it may once more involve the red and white brethren in all the horrors of a bloody war. On the other hand, if you should perform what justice itself calls for, it will brighten the chain of friendship, which has for a long time united the red people with their white brethren of the United States."

He then tells them that our Great Father, the President, had faithfully kept all treaties with them; that he had endeavored to make his red and white children live as one great family, loving and obliging one another, and had always forbidden his white children to do any harm to their red brethren.

He then tells them of a number of depredations upon the property of the white settlers and the murders they had committed, for which he demands satisfaction; and concludes as follows: "My children, the blood of those innocent men who have been wounded and murdered cries aloud to the Great Spirit for vengeance. The hearts of their relations and brethren bleed with sorrow. The fire of revenge flames in their hearts and they thirst for blood." * * * * *

"My Children, now open your ears to hear my words, and let them sink deep into your hearts. If you wish for peace with us you must do us justice. If you disapprove those murders and other outrages that have been committed, you must deliver up the offenders, for if you harbor among you such deadly enemies to us you cannot be our friends, and you ought not to expect our friendship." * * * * *

"My Children, your Great Father, the President of the United States, has nothing to fear from wars, but he wishes to be at peace with you because he loves you and wishes to make you happy. You ought to try to merit his kindness and avoid his resentment." * * * * *

"My Children, let justice be done; let all cause of quarrel be removed and let us live like brothers."

After the reading of this letter the council adjourned until the following day, at which time Gomo made his reply on behalf of the Pottawatomies. We have not been informed whether this was an extempore effort on his part or whether it had previously been reduced to writing by some interpreter or amanuensis. We have it, however, in good English, and it is a no less remarkable document than the letter of the governor.

After a very appropriate exordium he proceeds as follows:

"You see the color of our skin. The Great Spirit, when he made and disposed of man, placed the red skins in this land, and those who wear hats on the other side of the big waters. When the Great Spirit placed us on this ground we knew of nothing but what was furnished to us by nature; we made use of stone axes, stone knives and earthen vessels, and clothed ourselves from the skins of the beasts of the forest. Yet we were contented. When the French first made large canoes they crossed the wide waters to this country, and on first seeing the red people they were rejoiced. They told us that we must consider ourselves as children of the French, and they would be our Father; the country was a good one, and they would exchange goods for skins. Formerly we all lived in one large village. In that village was only one chief, but since our intercourse with the whites, there are almost as many chiefs as we have young men." * * * * *

"If we are fools the whites are the cause of it. From the commencement of their wars (French and English) they used many persuasions with the Indians; they made them presents of merchandise in order to get them to join and assist in their battles—since which time there have always been fools among us, and the whites are blamable for it."

When the old chief had become thoroughly warmed up by a long recital of the grievances suffered by the Indians he continued as follows:

"Now listen to me well in what I have to say to you. The red skins have delivered up their offenders. Some time ago one of our young men was drunk at St. Louis and was killed by an American. At another time some persons stole a horse near Cahokia; the citizens of the village followed the trail, met an innocent Kickapoo and killed him. Last fall, on the other side, and not far from Fort Wayne, a Wyandotte Indian set fire to a prairie; a settler came out and inquired of him how he came to set it on fire; the Indian answered that he was hunting; the settler struck the Indian and continued to beat him till they were parted, when another settler shot the Indian. This summer a Chippeway Indian at Detroit was looking at a gun; it went off accidentally and shot an American. The Chippeway was demanded, delivered up and executed. Is this the way that General Wayne exhibits his charity to the red skins? Whenever an instance of this kind happens it is usual for the red skins to regard it as an accident."

Then, after reciting other grievances, he continues:

"Whenever the United States make the Indians presents they afterward say that we must give them such a tract of land, and after a good many presents they then ask a larger piece. That is the way we have been served. This is the way of extending to us charity.

"Formerly, when the French were here, they made us large presents; so have the English, but the Americans, in giving their presents, have always asked a piece of land in return. Such has been the treatment of the Americans.

"If the whites had kept on the other side of the waters these accidents could not have happened; we could not have crossed the wide waters to have killed them there, but they have come here and turned the Indians into confusion. If an Indian goes into their village, like a dog he is hunted and threatened with death."

After some further remarks in explanation of how some of the alleged outrages may have been committed by the young men who were dissatisfied with the situation, but were unknown to the chiefs, he concluded his long address, whereupon the council adjourned until the following day.

Before the company had dispersed, however, Gomo, in a laughing way, said, "We have had long talks; will not a little whisky enable us to sleep?" His request was gratified, and they all went to their lodgings.

It was now the third day of the council and Little Chief was to speak for his people. Much of what he had to say was in the same strain as the speech of Gomo. A few extracts must suffice to characterize the whole. He began as follows:

"Listen to me, my friends, if you wish to know the ideas and sentiments of the chiefs and warriors here present to-day. Give the same attention to my words that I did to those of yesterday. At the conclusion of the American and Indian wars the Americans asked us to remain at peace and in quietness. I and my warriors have always observed the advice." * * * *

"At the peace of Greenville it was agreed on both sides to deliver up all the prisoners; I myself ran from town to town gathering all, and General Wayne said, 'Now all is completed, and hereafter we will see which of us (red or white) will first take up the tomahawk. It shall now be buried.' But from your talk of yesterday you threatened to make war against us; to cut off our women and children. You astonish us with your talk. When you do us harm, nothing is done; but when we do anything, you immediately tie us up by the neck." * * * * *

"You see the situation of the Pottawatamies, Chippeways and Ottawas to-day. The Shawnee Prophet, the man who talks with the Father of Light, blames us for not listening to him. You do the same. We are like a bird in the bush, beset, and not knowing which way to fly for safety—whether to the right or to the left. If our young men behave ill to-day, you may blame the Shawnee Prophet for it." * * * * *

"Behold the Shawnee Prophet, that man who talks with the Great Spirit and teaches the Indians to pray and look to God. But as for us we do not believe him. We wish to chase our deer and live in peace with the American." * * *

"Observe, my friends, since our peace with the Americans we have been and still are a poor people. We have not even a piece of ribbon to tie our speech. I have finished."

This was the last speech ever made by Little Chief in a council with the whites, for in a few months thereafter he died and was succeeded by a chief named Pepper.

After the conclusion of the address of Little Chief, Captain Levering addressed a few words to the chiefs, saying that as they had spoken upon many subjects he wished to have time to look over them and also to put his words on paper, that he might show them to his father (the Good at Kaskaskia.)

After offering each other the hand of friendship they separated until the next day. Then Captain Levering made another long address, in which he endeavored to disabuse the minds of the chiefs both with regard to the treaty of Greenville and the alleged injustice of the whites to the Indians.

At its conclusion Little Chief said, "My friend, I request you now to take the names of the chiefs and warriors, that you may show to your father in Kaskaskia how ready we have been to attend to his words."

On August 18th the Sac chief, Little Sturgeon, called on Captain Levering, who explained to him the circumstance and cause of Captain Whitesides having fired on some of his nation on the Mississippi river. The council then re-assembled and after Captain Levering had given his advice Gomo said, "We have listened with patient attention, and I hope that the Great Master of Light was noticing it. When the Master of Light made man he endowed those who wore hats with every gift, art and knowledge. The red skins, as you see, live in lodges and on the wilds of nature."

The council then adjourned sine die. Gomo delivered up two of the stolen horses, Little Chief agreed to deliver two more to Captain Heald at Chicago, and Gomo said that he would endeavor to have them all returned as soon as they could be found. They also gave information of the whereabouts of the murderers of the Cole party, but they were never delivered up. Thus barren of results came to an end the great council at Peoria.

CHAPTER VI.

THE WAR OF 1812—EXPEDITION OF GOVERNOR EDWARDS —DESTRUCTION OF BLACK PARTRIDGE'S VIL- LAGE—BURNING OF PEORIA.

The country had by this time become thoroughly aroused by the evidences of an impending Indian war. Inasmuch as Peoria was the chosen rendezvous of the hostile tribes, and, from their exposed position its inhabitants were obliged to maintain an apparently friendly attitude toward the Indians, the village came in for its full share of public opprobrium. In the latter part of the summer of 1811 the citizens of St. Clair County held a public meeting, at which they adopted an address to the Governor in which, after setting forth in bitter terms the depredations committed upon them by the Indians, they recommended as a precautionary measure the erection of a fort or block-house near the mouth of the Missouri or the Illinois River and another at the seditious village of Peoria (commonly called Opa), the great nursery of hostile Indians and traitorous British Indian traders. This address was forwarded by Governor Edwards to the War Department under date of October 11, 1811. On the 7th of November of the same year the battle of Tippecanoe was fought, at which the Indians were defeated by the forces under General William Henry Harrison. Governor Edwards, well understanding the Indian character, truly predicted that, in retaliation for their defeat, they would divide themselves up into hostile marauding bands to prey upon the property of the whites.

On the 25th of January, 1812, the Governor reported to the Secretary of War that he had invited Gomo and other chiefs to a conference and had sent a messenger to him for that purpose. At the same time he recommended the breaking up of the Indian settlements by volunteer expeditions of mounted riflemen. He then says: "Without this or a garrison at Peoria, or some other measure of offense, a great number of our inhabitants will, without doubt, be forced to abandon their settlements. Peoria is the great highway through which all the Illinois Indians and all those about Lake Michigan make their incursions into this country, and the latter Indians derive great encouragement from the asylum which the villages on the Illinois affords them."

Being thoroughly convinced of the hostile attitude of the Indians and of the great necessity for the adoption of vigorous measures of defense, Governor Edwards became very importunate in his demands upon the government for the assistance he deemed necessary, but failed to receive the encouragement hoped for.

On the 10th of February, 1812, he addressed a letter to Governor Howard, of Missouri, setting forth his grievances in the following language: "I have portrayed in the strongest colors the dangers of the negative state we are in (being neither at war nor peace). I have pressed the necessity of an expedition against the bands of Illinois, who still retain among them the murderers and refuse to deliver them up, or make any satisfaction for their depredations, and I have advised that there should be a strong garrison at Peoria; I have stated the universal terror that pervades and is desolating the territory; I have solicited the aid of two regular companies of backwoods riflemen, with a view to put them in two stations on the frontiers, from which parties as spies in all directions shall be constantly detached, always taking care to leave enough to defend the station; in fact I have said so much on the subject of danger and the necessities of preparation that I derive great consolation from being fortified by your opinions, for I was growing afraid that my representations might be attributed to timidity, seeing that the papers in all directions held a contrary language."

The year 1812 opened with such a threatening attitude on the part of the Indians that both Governor Edwards and Governor Howard determined to order out a force of rangers sufficient to protect the frontiers. On March 23d the latter reported to the War Department that he had received communications from Chicago, Peoria and Fort Madison, which left no rational doubt of the decidedly hostile views of the major part of the Indians between the lakes and the Mississippi River. Early in the spring of the same year Thomas Forsyth had descended the Illinois River to St Louis to consult with Governor Howard, and had also gone to Kaskaskia to see Governor Edwards. He had laid open to them the whole condition of Indian affairs in relation to the approaching war, which seemed inevitable, so that they might make due preparations for that event. Prior to that time he had sent a confidential Frenchman, named Antoine Le Pance, to St. Louis to communicate to the officer in command at that place information of a meditated attack upon it by the Sacs and Fox Indians, and thereby in a great measure prevented that calamity.

After one failure Governor Edwards succeeded in having a conference in person with the chiefs of the various tribes at Cahokia in the month of April, but without any better results than at that of Peoria.

The importance at this time attached by Governor Edwards to Peoria as a strategic point, as well as his estimate of the character and services of Thomas Forsyth, may be gleaned from the following letter written by him to the Secretary of War under date of May 16, 1812: "Mr. Forsyth, of Peoria, left my house yesterday. He thinks the murderers will be delivered up. He is a very intelligent, gentlemanly man, has a perfect knowledge of the Indians, and would make a first rate agent, but he positively refuses to take $700 per annum and one ration per day for his services as sub-agent, which I understand was what General Clark was authorized to offer him. Finding him decided on this point and determined to go to Detroit on his private business, I offered to pay him an increase of $200 per annum and two rations per day out of my private funds (providing the government would not increase his salary), if he would stay—believing, as I do, that Peoria is now the most important point to collect information of every kind calculated for our success, and to facilitate our intercourse with and command a control over the Indians. I am not bound for the above mentioned increase of salary any longer than I can hear from you on the subject, but I should be very happy if you would take the trouble of making some inquiries of General Clark, whom you will shortly see. He is personally acquainted with Mr. Forsyth, and knows the importance of the point at which the services are required.

"I believe Peoria to be the most eligible point at or near the frontier of the United States, that could be occupied. It is more central to a great number of the Indians, and it is not so remote from our settlements but that they would derive nearly as much security from troops there as if they were nearer—thus combining the usual advantages of troops at such places with the positive protection of our frontiers, which is never the case where garrisons are fixed too far in the interior of the Indian country."

The controversies between the United States and Great Britain had now reached a crisis, with which the Indians seem to have been even more fully acquainted than the people of Illinois. British emissaries were among them endeavoring by every possible means to excite them to hostility against the Americans, in which endeavors they were eminently successful.

On the 19th of June, 1812, war was declared to exist between the two nations. It required some time, probably three or four weeks, for the news of this event to reach Governor Edwards. In the meantime he was collecting information from all possible quarters and reporting the same to the Secretary of War. He claimed that his information in regard to the movements of the Indians was so definite that he knew not only of their contemplated raid upon the white settlements, but that he was also apprised of the very day when the movement was to take place. This information he had doubtless obtained from Thomas Forsyth, Antoine Le Clair and other confidential agents residing at Peoria or elsewhere among the Indians. On June 23d he reported seven hundred Indians at Peoria, who with their boats and canoes could transport themselves to Kaskaskia, the then capital, in four or five days. On August 4th he reports: "It is now well understood at Peoria that the Indians are for war, and are only waiting for directions from the British. They contemplate an attack upon four different points at the same time: one party (and a very strong one, too) is to attack the settlements on the Mississippi, another party (those east of Lake Michigan) to join General Hull's army, another to attack Chicago and another to attack the Indiana Territory. Those near Peoria are constantly killing and eating the cattle of that village."

Eugene F. Baldwin

During the summer Governor Edwards, with what troops he had at his disposal, established a cordon of defense across the state which was constantly patrolled by mounted riflemen or rangers, but Peoria was too far north to receive any benefit from this measure of defense, and its people, for their own safety, were obliged to maintain as peaceful an attitude toward the Indians as was possible.

The war in the northwest was now raging in all its fury. On July 17th Fort Mackinac had fallen. On August 4th the Ohio volunteers were defeated at Brownstown; on the 15th of the same month the terrible massacre took place at Chicago, and on the next day General Hull surrendered Detroit to General Brock, of the British army.

The news of these disasters coming thick and fast upon the people of the territories, it became apparent that the most vigorous measures of defense must be adopted. In regard to these there was some difference of opinion between Governor Edwards, of Illinois, and Governor Harrison, of Indiana. On August 26th the former reported that he could not agree with Governor Harrison with regard to the establishment of a chain of forts. "I would recommend a different one. I would march an army to Peoria and there establish a fort, thence to the Wisconsin and establish another and thus co-operate with the Michigan army, whose operations will tend to check the British from going among the Indians, while ours would effectually prevent the Indians from going to them."

On September 6th he wrote from Camp Russell that he was at the head of a considerable detachment of militia he had ordered out for the defense of the territory; that in consequence of an order from Governor Harrison, Colonel Russell, with Captain Broderats' company of rangers, start the same day to Vincennes and "thus leave us without the aid of a single man, who has not been raised in this territory, while there seems to be a large force concentrated there."

He therefore concluded to organize an expedition on his own responsibility with what forces he could command in the territory, to march to the head of Lake Peoria and there attack the Indians. Having been unexpectedly joined by Colonel Russell with about fifty men, who, together with his own constituted a force of four hundred and sixty, he marched up Cahokia creek, crossed the Sangamon some distance east of Springfield, left Elkhart Grove to the left and marched in a direct line northward across the prairies to the head of Peoria Lake; there he destroyed the village of Black Partridge and returned to Camp Russell, having been absent just thirteen days from the date of his departure on the eighteenth day of October. This expedition proved to be one of very great importance to Peoria, for within a very few days after the exploit of the Governor at the head of the lake, the village was sacked and partially burned and its inhabitants carried away captive by one Captain Thomas Craig, who was in command of a company of soldiers. Craig had been dispatched up the river to co-operate with the forces under the Governor and to carry provisions and the necessary tools for the building of a fort at Peoria.

Governor Edwards had no occasion to send a force against the French inhabitants of Peoria, whom he knew to be friendly; his expedition was wholly against the Indians, and Craig's depredations upon the whites were wholly without authority from him. As the commonly received reports of this transaction are very misleading and do great injustice to the Governor, the following official documents are given entire.

Upon his arrival at Camp Russell Captain Craig addressed the following note to the Governor under date of November 16th, two weeks after the return of the land expedition:

Camp Russell, Nov. 16, 1812.

Dear Sir:—This comes to inform you that I have arrived last evening from Peoria, and am at a loss to know what to do, as I have a number of the inhabitants of that place as prisoners with me, and a considerable quantity of property of different Sioux chiefs. I wish very much to see you or hear from you as soon as possible. I am, dear sir,

Your most obdt.,

THOMAS E. CRAIG.

Under date of November 18th the Governor made a report to the Secretary of War, wherein, after detailing his operations during the summer, he gives the following account of his expedition to Lake Peoria:

"When I found that the Indians had retired from our frontier I began to prepare for an expedition against them, being fully convinced that I could so regulate it as to surprise them in their villages at the head of Peoria Lake. At this time I counted on no assistance or forces whatever, beyond what I had raised in the territory, but after every preparation was made, and the day of our departure fixed on, I received a letter from Colonel Russell proposing to me an expedition somewhat similar, and promising to come on before the day I had appointed for marching. He accordingly arrived, with a part of two companies of rangers, consisting of fifty privates and their officers, and tendered me his services, which I gladly accepted by appointing him second in command—well knowing and duly appreciating his great experience in Indian warfare and his merits as a military officer.

“Through him I also learnt that General Hopkins was to march to Peoria with at least two thousand mounted volunteers, and would arrive at that place about the time I expected to be at the head of Peoria Lake.

“In consequence of this latter information, as an addition to my original plan, I sent one company of volunteers, with two boats, to Peoria—one of them being well fortified and the other carrying as much provisions as I could collect, and the necessary tools to enable General Hopkins to build a fort at that place, provided he chose to do so; or, otherwise, to build it myself under cover of his army whilst it was marching, as he proposed it should do, up the Illinois River.

“On the 18th of October, having made arrangements for the defense of the frontier in my absence, and leaving a force which, under existing circumstances, I deemed adequate to that object, I commenced my march with about four hundred mounted volunteers. On our way we burnt two Kickapoo villages, on the Saline fork of Sangamon River—till which time I had permitted it to be understood that I intended to march to Peoria and cross the Illinois at that place. But as my plan was entirely a different one I then thought it advisable to call a council of officers and unfold to them my real views and intentions, in which, they all concurring, we marched with uncommon rapidity to a large village at the head of Peoria Lake, inhabited by Kickapoos and Miamias.” The Governor then at length gives a detailed account of the destruction of the village.

“The pursuit and fight over, we returned to the village, which, with a great quantity of provisions and other valuable Indian property, we burnt and otherwise destroyed. We brought off with us about eighty head of horses and four prisoners, having killed, according to the Indian accounts frequently given, between twenty-four and thirty Indians, without the loss of a single man, and having only one wounded, which, in my opinion, was entirely owing to the charge that was made upon the enemy, as they were run so hard that when they attempted to form they were out of breath and could not shoot with sufficient accuracy.

“Not meeting or hearing from Hopkins, and knowing that my force was too weak and our horses too much fatigued to attempt anything further, I detached a party the next day to Peoria to leave directions for the captain who commanded the boats to return as speedily as possible. This party burnt another village that had been lately built within a half-mile of Peoria by the Miamias, and we all returned to my headquarters at Camp Russell after a tour of thirteen days only.

“The boats did not return until the 15th inst., which has delayed this communication to this time.”

It is said that upon receipt of Craig's letter of November 16th, the Governor ordered the release of the prisoners, which was done at Savage's Ferry, opposite the mouth of the Missouri River, when Craig arrived at that place. Craig proceeded to Shawneetown, from which point he had started, where, under date of December 10th, he made his formal report, in which he endeavors to explain his reasons for the destruction of the village. It will be observed, however, that Craig does not claim to have arrived at Peoria until November 5th, at which time Governor Edwards was at Camp Russell, fully one hundred and fifty miles away, having heard nothing from Craig since his departure on the 18th of October.

The report which follows is characteristic of the brutality of the entire transaction. It shows that in the absence of the people Craig sacked the town and afterward burned it and took the inhabitants prisoners.

Shawneetown, Ill. Ter., Dec. 10, 1812.

Governor Edwards:

Sir:—No chance sooner has offered for the conveyance of a letter to you. Since my return home I felt anxious to communicate the charges I have against Thomas Forsyth & Company of the citizens of Peoria. Forsyth, from every appearance, was chief commander. Sir, agreeable to your orders, I went to Peoria with my company on board the boats placed under my command. I landed at Peoria on the 5th day of November and left that place on the 9th. On my way, not far below Peoria, I met two canoes loaded mostly with squaws and children, accompanied by five men. They were brought to the boats. They said they were running from the Indians on their way to Partushdism. I kept one of the men on board my boat the balance past. This was a Frenchman, called Polete; he said the Indians had told him what our men had done, etc., and that they had seen Benet and Nail with you, and on that account had got mad with the French.

After fixing out my sentinels at Peoria at a proper distance I marched my company through the village, where I found the doors of the houses open and all the property left appeared like entire loss to the owners. I hourly expected you or General Hopkins' army at that place. I thought the property they had left might be taken as a prize. I thought no men more deserving than my own; all the property that could be found was put on board the boats. We made use of some pork and ate the fowls; the pork I paid for. On the evening of the same day I landed there I was anchored in the river or lake opposite; at dark I saw a canoe with six men about one mile below me; they appeared to be in great haste. I thought them to be Indians, as they appeared to shun us. I sent some men and had them brought to the boats. They were the company of Forsyth. I unarmed them and took them on board the boats. They told me that Forsyth had sent them on to see what we were doing. At the same time he might have come himself or written to me by them. This is the first I had ever heard of his coming. He was then a little distance below Peoria. The next morning his men wanted to meet him. I released four and kept two. The evening after, Forsyth came with about twenty-five men and all the squaws and children we had met. After going through the proper ceremony was permitted to pass. From the recommendation I had got of Mr. Forsyth I was glad to see him. They took up their dwelling in town, I suspect, as usual.

I asked Forsyth if he would anchor in the lake with me that night. He said not. I asked him if he was not afraid of the Indians. He said they were all gone, and he apprehended no danger, and I believe none of the citizens, from their actions. The sentinels on board my boats could hear and see them passing through town with candles, and hear canoes crossing the river all night for several nights. We would land in the morning to cook, and see fresh horse-tracks in town. There is no doubt but they were Indians. Forsyth and myself were in company every day. On the third day Forsyth made application for the property we had got in town. He said it belonged to him and the citizens. I, without hesitation, landed the boats and let them take all they claimed, except some of my own cooking tools and the peltry and property that came of Lecroix (Le Croix) and Besing's house, as I was told they were in Canada, trading with the British. This property I hold as a prize for the use of the company—tho' subject to your orders. Forsyth and myself lived in this way, I thought perfectly friendly, for six or seven days. I am convinced the French knew of your return, and did tell him, but not me. They were in council every day, and did detain Governor Howard's express against his will after my letting him have rations to bring him down. I asked Mr. Forsyth when he expected you at that place. He said he was convinced that you were about ninety miles above Peoria, at a place called Flat Island, and would be there in the course of six or seven days. About midnight of the 6th of November the wind blew so hard in the lake that we were forced to drop the boats about one-quarter of a mile below Peoria. We there cast anchor; the wind still continued to blow with such force that it broke our cable and drifted the armed boat on shore. It was at that time very dark, and our anchor lost. I thought myself secure, as it was impossible for the Indians to discover us before daylight, except they were in town at the time we passed. Betwixt the break of day and daylight I opened the cabin door and was talking with the sentinel on the stern deck; we had spoke but a few words before we were fired on, by, I think, ten or more guns, not more than thirty yards from the boat. The men were instantly fixed for battle, but were more disappointed, as they made their escape immediately. We only heard them yelp after the fire. So soon as it was clear daylight I had the boats landed about the center of the village, and sent to know what had become of the citizens. They said they had heard nor seen nothing. I then sent to the place from which we were fired on. There were tracks plenty leading from that place to the village. This was what I expected. I instantly had them all taken prisoners, except Howard's express. They were all in Forsyth's house with their guns. Their guns appeared to be just fired; the most of them were empty. I gave them time to collect their property, which was done immediately. Forsyth said his cattle would be lost. I told him to take four of his men and hunt his cattle; that I would wait two days longer, and that he might drive them through the way he said he wanted to take them. He said it was too late, his cattle were gone, etc. Howard's express came on board my boat and told me that seven of the citizens went out, they said to hunt beef, that morning we were fired on. They started about the break of day and returned by daylight. He said perhaps there were more, for they never would let him know what they were going to do, and would talk together in his absence. He said he wanted to come with the six men in the canoe, but Forsyth would not let him. We staid two days after they were taken prisoners. I made them furnish their own rations all the time I kept them. I burnt down about half the town of Peoria, and should have burnt the whole and destroyed the stock, but still expected Hopkins' army to pass that place. There was a keg of powder buried in Lecroix's house. While burning down, I found four American muskets in their possession and one keg of musket-balls, and one musket in Forsyth's house under the floor, and some brass musket-moulds. On our way down the river they were all unarmed; I gave them permission to camp on shore while I anchored in the river. They always preferred the Indian side for their camping-ground. Forsyth appeared sulky and obstinate; in fact, every part of his conduct gave rise to the strongest suspicion of his not being a friend, and, in short, I am well convinced that the citizens done nothing but what he was knowing, too; he claimed property after refusing to take it at Peoria. He got all his property, and, I am afraid, more. He and the rest of the dam'd rascals may think themselves well off that they were not scalped. I find it impossible for me to describe his conduct in a proper manner. I have been very unwell since my return home. I can scarcely sit up to write you, but mending.

I have the honor to be, sir, your humble servant,
THOS. E. CRAIG.
His Excellency, Ninian Edwards, Governor and Commander-in-chief, etc., of Illinois Territory, Elvirade."

For some reason probably not yet fully known the forces under General Hopkins did not, as was expected, form a junction with those under Governor Edwards and Colonel Russell.

One of the companies under Governor Edwards was that of Samuel Judy, composed of spies or scouts, in which were enrolled two future governors of the state of Illinois, John Reynolds and Thomas Carlin. Governor Reynolds has left an account of the affair which deals in personal reminiscences and striking incidents of the campaign rather than in its general scope and results, all of which would add interest to this narrative if space would permit.

In an historical view of Peoria published by S. De Wit Drown in 1851, at a time when a spirited contest was being waged by the heirs of the French settlers for the recovery of their ancient possessions, there appears a petition to congress dated at St. Louis, December 20, 1813, for a redress of the grievances committed by Captain Craig at Peoria and signed by thirteen known inhabitants of Peoria at the time of its destruction. Mr. Drown claims to have received the same from the attorneys representing said heirs. Among the signers are Thomas Forsyth, Hypolite Maillet, Antoine Le Clair, Antoine Bourbonne, Antoine La Pance. This document after setting forth the exposed situation of the inhabitants, the depredations committed upon them and the threats of the Indians to massacre them, their services to the government in imparting information of the movements and intentions of the Indians, for which they had been so severely upbraided by them, together with their loyalty in remaining at Peoria against all these adverse circumstances for the very purpose of aiding and assisting the government, goes on to state the facts relating to the destruction of the village, as follows: "We still wishing to hold our ground at Peoria, knowing full well the assistance we could render to our country in giving information of the Indians at all times, but at a time when there were only a few men in Peoria village (the others having come down to this country on business) the Kickapoos and Piankeshaw Indians robbed our houses of all the arms and ammunition that were to be found, as also all kinds of wearing apparel, and while the few people who were so left at Peoria had fled from the enraged Indians, two boats under Captain Craig, of Shawneetown, arrived at Peoria and emptied our houses and out-houses of every kind of property that was portable, and put them on board the boats. When we returned to Peoria we asked Captain Craig for our property; some was returned and the remainder detained and never returned to us. The Indians having fired on Captain Craig's boats, we were all made prisoners and disarmed by him amounting to forty-two men, women and children. We asked permission to kill some cattlè and hogs for our winter provisions which Captain Craig refused, and he and his men killed the hogs for their own use, besides burning four houses and four barns, two of the barns containing wheat. We were brought down prisoners to Savage's Ferry [which is opposite the mouth of the Missouri River.—Ed.], in Illinois Territory, where an order from Governor Edwards liberated us, with the loss of a great deal of property, as we were obliged to leave at Peoria all our cattle amounting to upwards of two hundred head, besides hogs, etc., and a large quantity of corn, it being too late in the season for us to return to Peoria. The cattle, corn, etc., fell into the hands of the Indians, who destroyed all the cattle, etc., besides burning all our houses and out-houses."

After urging other reasons for redress the petitioners say: "We have been liberated, but in the meantime we have been stripped of our ordinary means of subsistence and are now thrown upon the world without the common necessities of life and many are now living on the generosity of other people."

The circumstances under which this petition was penned would seem to suggest that the petitioners would have put forth their strongest grounds of complaint; yet they are very tame in comparison with an account of the same transactions appearing in the works of Mr. N. Matson. There are, however, many circumstances well authenticated which go far to corroborate Mr. Matson's statements in the main.

It cannot at this day be denied that the destruction of Peoria was a wanton outrage committed on his own responsibility by Captain Thomas E. Craig, while in command of a company of volunteers in the service of the Territorial government. Thus ended the occupancy by the French of Peoria or Le Ville de Maillet. It is said by some that a portion of the inhabitants afterward returned and took up their residence at that place, and some French names appearing in the early history of Peoria County would lead to that conclusion. But it was never again occupied by them as a distinct community, and with the destruction of the village the last remnant of French occupancy came to an end.

Since the foregoing was written the following report of Colonel Russell to General Gibson, acting governor of Indiana Territory, has been discovered in a copy of The Reporter, published at Washington, Pennsylvania, November 12, 1812, copied by it from the Pittsburgh Gazette, and exhibited to the editor of the Peoria Transcript, January 2, 1873, by J. B. Cleaver, of Olena, Henderson County, Illinois. It will be observed that it is dated on the same day the expedition reached Camp Russell and several days before Captain Craig reached Peoria.

CAMP RUSSELL, 31st Oct. 1812.

I have the pleasure to inform you that after leaving Vincennes with parts of three companies of the United States Rangers, I arrived at this place where I joined Governor Edwards, from whence, with a force of only 360 privates, we set on foot an expedition. We penetrated very far into the Indian country with the expectation of co-operating with General Hopkins, at Peoria, on the Illinois. In this we were greatly disappointed, and could not hear from him in that quarter, it being further than any army had as yet gone. We stole a march upon a principal Kickapoo town, situated about twenty miles up the Illinois River above Peoria and immediately at the head of Peoria Lake. This was a well-built town. Between the town and the river was a dismal swamp, into which the Indians immediately flew for shelter. Our men pursued them for three miles through the swamp up to their waists in mud and water, and killed many of them in it, and while crossing the Illinois River. The Governor states to me that upwards of twenty Indians were found dead. Our men pursued them to the opposite bank of the river, and took their canoes, in which were a number of dead Indians. There was an immense quantity of plunder found in this town, together with a great deal of corn, all of which was destroyed. I believe that not less than eighty horses fell into our hands belonging to the enemy, and several white persons' scalps were found amongst the Indian plunder. I had the immediate command of the battalion, but the chief command was lodged with Governor Reynolds.

In this expedition we were fortunate, as we had but four men wounded, none dangerously. [Governor Reynolds says one was mortally wounded and died from his wound.—Ed.] The most severe was through the thigh, without injuring the bone. The tour we performed from this camp and returned in fourteen days.

I am now engaged in promoting an expedition this fall into the same neighborhood, and have for that purpose addressed a letter to Governor Howard. We could easily go on to Fort Mason, on the Mississippi River, and not be suspected, then suddenly make a dash across to the Illinois River when we should, without doubt, catch them by surprise. To this letter, however, I have as yet received no answer.

I have the honor to be with great respect,
Your obedient servant,

W. RUSSELL.

Col. 7th U. S. Regiment and District Commandant.

This report corroborates in its main features the account given by Governor Edwards, but throws no new light upon the destruction of either the Black Partridges' village or of Le Ville de Maillet. It will be observed, however, it outlines the plan of the expedition conducted by General Howard the year following. As Governor Edwards was not at the head of that expedition, this circumstance may give a clue to one reason why the compiler of his Pioneer History stops with the expedition of 1812, and does not resume the narrative until the year 1826. When he became Governor of the State, Governor Reynolds, who, as a youth, was attached to Captain Judy's company of scouts, left an account of what he saw, which does not differ in material respects from the others, but it has been so garbled as to make it appear that the whole battle consisted of the killing of an Indian, the firing of several shots at a squaw without hitting her, and the wounding of one of Judy's men, from which wound he afterward died.

The expedition reflected no great credit upon those engaged in it, but neither Governor Edwards nor Colonel Russell can be charged with the drunken barbarity committed at Peoria by Captain Craig.

CHAPTER VII.

OLD PEORIA AND ITS INHABITANTS.

No immediate action was taken by Congress to grant relief to the inhabitants of Peoria who had been despoiled of their property by Captain Craig, but on May 15, 1820, an act was passed requiring every person or his or her legal representative who claimed a lot or lots in the village of Peoria to deliver, on or before the first day of October ensuing, to the Register of the Land Office of the district of Edwardsville, a notice in writing of his or her claim, and thereupon it should be the duty of said Register to make a report of all such claims with the substance of the evidence, and also his opinion and such remarks respecting the claims as he might think proper to make. In compliance with the terms of this act seventy claims were filed within the time limited, and Edward Coles, afterwards Governor of the State, who was the Register of the Land Office at Edwardsville, made his report to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated November 10, 1820, in which he says: "The inhabitants of Peoria consisted generally of Indian traders, hunters and voyageurs, and had formed a link of connection between the French residing on the waters of the Great Lakes and the Mississippi River. From that happy faculty of adapting themselves to their situation and associates, for which the French are so remarkable, the inhabitants of Peoria lived generally in harmony with their savage neighbors. It would seem, however, that about the year 1781 they were induced to abandon the village from apprehension of Indian hostilities; but soon after the peace of 1783 they again returned and continued to reside there until the autumn of 1812, when they were forcibly removed from it and the place destroyed by Captain Craig, of the Illinois militia, on the ground, as it is said, that he and his company of militia were fired on in the night, while at anchor in their boats before the village, by the Indians, with whom the inhabitants were suspected by Craig to be too intimate and friendly." This statement forms the basis of almost everything that has heretofore been written concerning the character of the inhabitants of Peoria, and while the same is true in many respects, it does not contain the whole truth concerning them as it is now known. The terms "Indian traders," "hunters" and "voyageurs" are somewhat liable to be misunderstood. An "Indian trader" was one whose business consisted largely in carrying on the business of a merchant in goods suitable for the trade with the Indians. Many of them were men of character and wealth, and such will be found to be the case with some of those residing at Peoria. The business of hunting for fur-bearing animals was one of the important industries of the country, and those who engaged therein were not to be despised any more than are the farmers of the present day. The voyageur was he who carried on the business of navigating the rivers in transporting the products of the country to the market, and in bringing back goods for the merchants.

It is the universal testimony of historians that, in the latter half of the eighteenth century, Peoria was one of the leading marts of commerce in the Mississippi Valley, and while its inhabitants were not strictly an agricultural people, yet they had sufficient land in cultivation to not only supply their own needs of the product of the farm, but to ship a surplus to other markets.

They were not a French colony in the same sense that Kaskaskia, Cahokia and Prairie du Rocher were, deriving their titles from grants made by lawful authority, but, as stated by Edward Coles, "the only title they had to their lands was derived from possession, and the only value attached to it grew out of the improvements placed upon it."

But, conceding that they had no title by grant "from the authority of any government," and that their only title was derived from possession, yet the fact that they had such possession and had made such improvements, was made the basis of important donations of land long before the destruction of the village.

In accordance with the stipulations contained in the deed of cession by the state of Virginia to the United States, and in part compensation for the hardships imposed upon the inhabitants of Illinois by the events of the war which followed the conquest of the Territory by General George Rogers Clark, the congress of the Confederacy, on the 29th of August, 1788, passed a resolution providing for the confirmation in their possessions and titles of the French and Canadian inhabitants and other settlers about Kaskaskia and Vincennes, who, on or before 1783, had professed themselves citizens of the United States, or any of them; and also donating a tract of four hundred acres of land to each head of a family of the same description of settlers. This resolution required the then Governor of the Territory (St. Clair) to make lists of the persons entitled to lands and to have them surveyed.

An act of Congress of March 3, 1791, enlarged the provisions of said resolution by providing that four hundred acres of land be given to each of those persons who in the year 1783 were heads of families at Vincennes or in the Illinois Country, and who since then had removed from one place to another within the district, and also to such as had removed out of the limits of the territory specified, upon condition of their returning and occupying said lands within five years.

It further provided, that when lands had been actually improved and cultivated within the limits before mentioned, under presumably valid grants of the same by any commandant or court claiming authority to make such grants, the Governor was empowered to confirm the same to such persons, their heirs or assigns, or such parts thereof as he might deem reasonable, not exceeding four hundred acres to any one person; also, "that the Governor be authorized to make a grant of land not exceeding one hundred acres to each person who hath not obtained any grant of land from the United States, and who on the first day of August, 1790, was enrolled in the militia at Vincennes or the Illinois Country, and has done militia duty."

These provisions having proved insufficient for the purposes intended, Congress passed an act on March 26, 1804, establishing Land Offices at Vincennes and Kaskaskia. Under this act Michael Jones was appointed Register at Kaskaskia and Elijah Backus, Receiver, who were authorized to act as Commissioners, with full power to receive proof of and to adjudicate all claims coming under the former acts. This commission, under various modifications and changes, continued to act until the year 1815, making in the meantime several reports, and closing up their business by a report of that year.

In order to facilitate their work they classified the claims as follows: (1) ancient grants; (2) donations to heads of families; (3) donations on account of improvements; and (4) donations to militia men.

It does not appear that any of the inhabitants of Peoria claimed any lands under ancient grants from either the French or the English government. They did, however, claim lands under each one of the other classes, and the proof being sufficient their claims were recommended for confirmation.

The proof fails to show the location of these donations, but that they consisted of actual locations and not of floating claims sufficiently appears from other available evidence.

Bearing in mind that the new village was not commenced until the year 1778, and that the place was entirely abandoned from 1781 until the peace of 1783, it will be readily perceived that proof of residence and improvements at Peoria prior to the latter date must have reference to "Old Peoria" or "The Old Fort" rather than to "Le Ville de Maillet." It may also be inferred that the claims were laid upon the lands which had been improved and enough surrounding them to fill out the number of acres donated. This we know to have been the case with Jean Baptiste Maillet, who laid his two claims, amounting to eight hundred acres in the aggregate, upon the land immediately adjoining the new village, he having been a resident at that place and having improved his land there located before the abandonment of the place in 1781. Unless, therefore, it appears otherwise in the proof, it may be safely inferred that the claimants had respectively resided at "Old Peoria."

The claims of the following named persons, under one or more of the classes mentioned, were recommended for confirmation.

Pierre Troge, in the right of his wife Charlotte, who was the daughter and heir-at-law of Antoine St. Francois, was reported as entitled to four hundred acres on account of improvements and cultivation, and four hundred on account of St. Francois, the ancestor having been the head of a family at Peoria in 1783. It was proved by Louis Pilette, an ancient inhabitant of Cahokia, that St. Francois was the head of a family at Peoria and that he cultivated the land, having a small field in which he sowed corn in the year 1765; and that he remained there several years thereafter; also that Pierre Troge married his daughter. This little item of evidence lets the light in upon the life of "Old Peoria" at the time when the sovereignty of the country was transferred from France to Great Britain. The fact that St. Francois remained after that period raises the presumption, at least, that he became a British subject; and the fact of his heir having been granted land by the government of the United States affords almost conclusive evidence that he had become a citizen of Virginia or of the United States at or after the time of the Revolution. Of his wife's name or parentage we have no information. Nor do we know anything of Pierre Troge, except that he married the daughter. The name of Louis Pilette is closely and inseparably connected with the history of Peoria. It also appears from the report of Edward Coles that this same Charlotte Troge, nee St. Francois, laid claim to a lot containing two arpens, situated two miles above Fort Clark, near "Old Fort Peoria." We therefore discover in this one instance the names of five persons who lived at "Old Peoria," namely, Antoine St. Francois and his wife, his daughter Charlotte, her husband Pierre Troge, and Louis Pilette.

That Louis Pilette was a good and loyal citizen is shown by the fact that he received a donation of one hundred acres of land from the government upon Governor Harrison's confirmation, on account of military services.

The claims of a large majority of the inhabitants had been sold before being proved, principally to Nicholas Jarrott, Isaac Darneille, William Russell and William Arundel, in whose names the proofs were made. These purchasers will be disregarded and the names of the original claimants given as the donees.

To Louis Bihore there was confirmed four hundred acres on account of improvements and four hundred acres on account of his having been the head of a family at Peoria in 1783. That Bihore was a very early inhabitant of Peoria is shown by the fact of his having been a witness on behalf of some of the oldest claims.

To Jean Baptiste Shoenberger, alias St. Jean, were confirmed four hundred acres on account of improvements near the "Old Fort" of Peoria. No other claim having been made on his behalf, it is to be presumed he was neither the head of a family nor a militia man within the terms of the law.

To Louis Chattereau were confirmed one hundred acres as a militia man, four hundred as head of a family at Peoria in 1783, and four hundred on account of cultivating about forty acres of land and improving the same by building a house, a horse-mill, etc., thereon.

To Pierre Verbois, alias Blondereau, were confirmed at Peoria one hundred acres as a militia man. No other information attainable.

To Pierre Lavassieur (dit Chamberlain) were confirmed one hundred acres as a militia man. This man was also a claimant before Edward Coles for a lot containing two arpens in the "Old Village" and of another lot containing twelve arpens near the same.

To John B. Chevy were confirmed four hundred acres on account of improvements, and four hundred acres as head of a family. It was proved by Louis Laperche, Louis Boisman and Louis Bihore that Chevy was an inhabitant of Peoria, that he was the head of a family and cultivated ground, planting it in corn, as early as the year 1779.

To Jean B. Jourdain, who lived at Peoria, were confirmed four hundred acres on account of improvements made upon and the cultivation of a farm on Mellet's River (probably the Kickapoo), where he had a house and planted corn as early as 1783.

To Jean B. Amlin, who lived at Peoria from 1770 to 1799, were confirmed four hundred acres on account of improvements by cultivating land and planting it in corn, also four hundred acres as head of a family in 1783, and one hundred as a militia man.

To Francois Arcoit were confirmed four hundred acres on account of improvements and four hundred acres as the head of a family at Peoria in 1783. It was proved by Baptiste Pelitier, Pierre Verbois and Jean B. Parent that Arcoit was the head of a family at Peoria in 1783; that he made improvements near the village; that he had a house and cultivated ground by planting corn in 1782, but had to leave on account of the Indians.

To Louis Brunette were confirmed four hundred acres as head of a family at Peoria in 1783, which was proved by Jaque Ducharme and Francois Valett; also that he continued to reside there for some time thereafter.

To Jean B. Parent were confirmed four hundred acres as head of a family and four hundred on account of his improvements. It was proved by Jean B. Point-stable (Point de Saible), Jaque Ducharme, Louis Bilore and Pierre Valois that before and after the year 1783 Parent was the head of a family at Peoria, that he had a house built and cultivated land near the "Old Fort" in the year 1780, and that he had a farm and raised crops.

To Antoine Grandbois were confirmed one hundred acres as a militia man, which had been confirmed by Governor St. Clair. The location of this grant is not given, but it is known that Grandbois was a resident of Peoria.

To Francis Babo (Babeau) were confirmed at Peoria, one hundred acres as a militia man.

To Augustine Roque were confirmed four hundred acres on account of improvements made near Peoria, and four hundred acres as the head of a family at Peoria in 1783.

To Francois Bouche (Boucher) were confirmed four hundred acres on account of improvements about one league from Peoria (Old Fort), four hundred acres as head of a family at Peoria in 1783, and one hundred acres as a militia man.

To Etienne Bernard were confirmed four hundred acres as the head of a family at Peoria in 1783, and on account of improvements four hundred acres near the River Coteneau (Kickapoo), within three miles of Peoria.

To William Arundel were confirmed on account of improvements three hundred acres near Peoria, he having already had a military bounty under the fourth class, also as head of a family at Peoria in 1783 three hundred acres, he having received a militia right confirmed by the Governor.

William Arundel was a native of Ireland, where he had received a liberal education. Emigrating to America, he first settled in Canada, where he became a merchant. Entering the Indian trade, he came to Peoria, at what date is not known, but that it was prior to 1783 appears from the fact that he was residing here with his family at that time. He afterward removed to Cahokia, where he became the first merchant of the place, and at the organization of the territory was appointed Recorder of the county of St. Clair, he having previously been appointed to the office of County Clerk of the same county at the time of the organization of the Indiana Territory. "He was an orderly, moral and correct man," and was appointed secretary of the first lodge of Free and Accepted Masons in the State, which was constituted at Kaskaskia June 3, 1806. Besides his other pursuits, he also dealt largely in lands. He died at Kaskaskia in 1816, at a very great age.

Another man of note living at Peoria at that time was Jean Baptiste Point de Saible (elsewhere called Pointstable), to whom were confirmed four hundred acres as the head of a family at Peoria in 1783, and four hundred acres on account of improvements. A claim was also made by one claiming to be his assignee for one hundred acres due him as a militia man, but for want of proof it was rejected. It was proved by Jaque Ducharme, Louis Brunette and Francois Vailete that Pointstable, as they called him, was the head of a family at Peoria in the year 1783 and before and after that time; that he had a house built and cultivated land between the "Old Fort" and the new settlement in 1780.

This man, although a negro, became noted as the first white settler in Chicago—the Indians designating all persons as "white" who did not belong to their own race. Hence the facetious saying that "the first white man in Chicago was a nigger." Much has been written about him, and in the more recent histories of Chicago he is made a hero, the date of his arrival there being placed at a period anterior to his residence at Peoria. On the other hand, Matson tries to show him to have been a runaway slave from Kentucky, from which state he worked his way to Chicago, but the date of his departure from Kentucky is placed in the year 1790, seven years after he is shown to have become a resident of Peoria. In her charming work entitled "Waubun," Mrs. John H. Kinzie gives the following account, which seems to be the most reliable we have of this celebrated negro:

"Jean Baptiste Point-au-Sable, a native of San Domingo, about the year 1796 found his way to this remote region and commenced life among the Indians. There is usually a strong affection between these two races (negro and Indian), and Jean Baptiste imposed upon his new friends by making them believe that he had been a great chief among the whites. Perhaps he was disgusted by not being elected for a similar dignity by the Pottawatomies, for he quitted this vicinity and finally terminated his days at Peoria, under the roof of his friend Glamorgan, another San Domingo negro, who had obtained large Spanish grants in St. Louis and its environs, and who at one time was in the enjoyment of an extended landed estate."

It is said the real name of this singular character is not known, but that he acquired his title of Point de Saible, Point au Sable or Pointstable from the location of his hut on the point of sand at the mouth of the Chicago River. If that be so, it follows that he must have been at Chicago before the time of his having been a resident at Peoria, for he was known by that name here.

There is in the library of the Historical Society of Chicago a typewritten copy of a manuscript journal of Hugh Heyward to the Illinois Country in 1790 (the gift of C. M. Benton, of Detroit). Having arrived at the Chicago River May 10, he says, "Slept at Point Sable's with the canoes and began to hull corn and bake bread, arranged everything for the next morning, left the canots (canoes) at Point Sable's and took his porogue, bought of him 41 lbs. flour and baked in bread for 25 & 29 lbs. pork at 2-8, the whole amounting 5 pounds 10s. & paid him with 13 yds. 4-4 cotton." On the 11th of May he passed the portage to the Des Plaines on his way south. This locates Point au Sable at Chicago six years earlier than the author of Waubun and seven later than his residence is shown to have been at Peoria. Glamorgan's name does not appear connected with any land claims at Peoria, but the name Clamorgan does appear in connection with certain claims at St. Louis. Point de Saible appears to have been a most singular character. A native of the Spanish Dominion, he is at one time represented to have been in the interests of the French at Chicago; again, receiving protection from the English and Indian invaders by reason of his having a British commission; then seeking the chieftaincy of the Pottawatomies; and finally, in all probability, going back to the Spanish territory to die.

Charles Ladeau was made the subject of a special report and recommended for a donation of one hundred acres as a militia man. It was proved that he had been enrolled in Captain Maillet's company at Peoria on or before the year 1790, and had continued to serve as a good militia man in the village of Peoria. It is not certain that this man was an inhabitant of "Old Peoria," but inasmuch as Maillet's company was in the service as early as 1780, the inference would be that he belonged there.

It will appear from the said report of Edward Coles that, in addition to those already named, the following persons were proved to have resided and claimed lots and lands in "Old Peoria," and must have been very early inhabitants, namely, Gabriel Cerre (or St. Cyr), Thomas Lusby, Joseph Boucher (Bouche), the extent of whose possessions will appear from said report.

The name of Felix La Pance, Jaques Buche, a priest, Captain M. de Ford and others are mentioned by Matson as residents of the "Old Village," but their names do not appear as claimants of land. It was only those who came within one of the classes provided for in the acts of Congress whose names so appear, and it is not certain that any considerable portion of such made their claims.

CHAPTER VIII.

FRENCH INHABITANTS OF OLD PEORIA AND LE VILLE DE MAILLET.

Something more is known of the inhabitants of Le Ville de Maillet than of those of the "Old Fort" or "Old Peoria." It is said by one writer that after the abandonment of the place in 1781 the inhabitants returned, and that by the time of the peace of 1783 it had not only regained its former prosperity, but had far exceeded it. The better opinion, however, seems to be that they did not return until after the treaty.

It has already been seen that Jean Baptiste Maillet had at first resided at the "Old Village," and that about the year 1778 he had taken up his residence at the foot of the lake, where he founded the village called "La Ville de Maillet."

If he had the right to locate his claim at the place where his improvements had been made, we should look for Maillet to have located his claim at his new village. This we find to have been done.

It so happens that the two original deeds by which William Russell, afterward Colonel William Russell (already mentioned in connection with the Edwards expedition), became the successor of Jean Baptiste Maillet are still in existence and throw much light upon this subject. The first is a deed from said Maillet to Isaac Darneille, who was the second lawyer to emigrate to the state of Illinois, and was then a resident of Peoria. The characters of the parties to this deed impart to it the greatest interest.

That Maillet was a leader among his people cannot be doubted, and that during the Revolutionary war he had them enrolled as a company of militia is also well established. It is more than probable that he resided in the fort in the new village at the time of the birth of his son Hypolite, and that he there occupied, including the fort, two blocks of ground each three hundred feet square, afterward occupied by Thomas Forsyth, together with sundry lands in the vicinity of the village. He at last lost his life in an affray with one Senegal in the latter part of the year 1801. (1)

As Darneille was the first of Peoria's lawyers, a part of Governor Reynolds' sketch of his career is here given.

"In the year 1794 the celebrated Isaac Darneille arrived in Cahokia and remained in the west for several years. He was the second professed lawyer that emigrated to Illinois, John Rice Jones being the first. He was a classic scholar, and was, in his person, genteel and agreeable; he possessed the easy and graceful manners of a polished gentleman. He was large and portly, and made it a sine qua non to be extremely neat in his dress and attentive to his personal appearance. He studied all the arts and mysteries of gallantry, and thereby made a very deep and rather lasting impression on his female friends. Darneille studied the ladies more than he studied his profession of the law. He was benevolent and kind to all mankind, and particularly to the ladies.

"While Darneille retained his youthful vigor, this life passed off very well; but when old age crept on him his former pursuits were abandoned, from necessity, and he remained an old man, without sincere friends or means of support.

"He taught school in the western part of Kentucky, where he died, rather humble and neglected, in 1830, aged sixty years.

"If Darneille had abandoned this one failing, the excess of gallantry, he would have enjoyed the character of one of the most honorable and respectable gentlemen in Illinois."

These two singular characters became parties to the deed mentioned, the one as grantor, the other as grantee. The deed is dated July 6, 1801, and thereby Jean Baptiste Maillet, of the village of Peoria, upon the Illinois River, in the Indiana Territory, for the consideration of $200, currency of the United States, grants to one Isaac Darneille, of the same place, all that tract or parcel of land lying and being upon the Illinois River adjoining the said village of Peoria, containing 800 acres, being a donation of 400 acres as a head of a family in the year 1783, and an improvement right of 400 acres which the said Jean Baptiste Maillet "holds under an act of Congress bearing date the 3d day of March, 1791, and bounded as follows, to-wit: Beginning at a stone below the gate of the said Isaac Darneille in his lot in said village, and running thence southwest to the corner of the stable of the said Maillet; thence west, and from the said stone north and west so as to include the said quantity of four hundred acres of a donation right and four hundred acres as an improvement right, in all the quantity of eight hundred acres of land." It is drawn with the technical accuracy of our old-style deeds, having all the essential elements of a conveyance—the names of the grantor and grantee, the consideration, the words of the grant, the description of the property, together with the privileges and appurtenance, the habendam and tenendam, with full covenants of warranty. It is signed "Maillet" without any given name, and is sealed with a wafer covered with a rectangular piece of paper. Affidavits in proof of its execution were made before Antoine Des Champs and Raphael Belongier, two Justices of the Peace of Indiana Territory, on the 17th day of May, 1802.

From this deed we learn certain facts which nowhere else appear: that at the time Darneille, the grantee, lived in Peoria, he had an enclosed lot which had a gate, which lot was situated to the northeast of that of Maillet, and that there were then at Peoria (whether resident or not does not appear) two Justices of the Peace named Louis Laboissier and Antoine Des Champs. We do not, however, find either of these justices to have been claimants of land before said commissioners or before Edward Coles in 1820. It appears elsewhere that Des Champs was a prominent man in the community and trusted by the Governor. A few years later he became manager of the American Fur Company's interests on the Illinois River.

On the 5th day of October, 1807, we find Darneille at St. Louis, in the Territory of Louisiana, making a deed to William Russell, of the same place, for a number of his purchases, which is the second of the above mentioned deeds, and it is remarkable for the elegance of its penmanship, which is evidently that of Darneille himself. By this deed he conveys to Russell the following tracts of land, all in the Indiana Territory:

1. A certain tract or parcel of land on the western shore of the Illinois River, on the River Cartineaux, about one league below the town of Peorias, containing fourteen hundred acres of land and specially bounded as follows, to-wit: Beginning on the bank of the Illinois River at an elm tree and a stone, thence running due west seven hundred poles to a stake and a stone, thence south three hundred and twenty poles to a stake and a stone, crossing the River Cartineaux, thence due east seven hundred poles to a stake and stone near the bank of the Illinois River, and thence running with the meander of the Illinois River to the beginning for quantity.

[It is said above that no claims under the first class had been proved at Peoria. Late research in the office of the State Auditor, where the land office papers now are, has revealed the original application of William Russell for confirmation of the first five of these tracts, the first or 1,400-acre tract having been purchased by Darneille from Maillet, who claimed the same by right of British government as having cultivated thereon from 1766 to 1801, the same having been confirmed to him. A marginal note, however, says that government had no power to make the grant. So it must have been rejected.]

2. The aforesaid tract in Peoria, which had been conveyed by Jean Baptiste Maillet, by the deed already described, except about six hundred feet square sold to Jean Marie Coursol. This completed Russell's title to the two claims of Maillet, above mentioned.

3. Another tract, being a donation and improvement right of eight hundred acres purchased by contract of Baptiste Pelletier August 26, 1802. Land not described.

4. A donation right of four hundred acres purchased of Pierre Verbois, alias Blondereaux, by contract dated August 21, 1802. Land not described (but Blondereaux lived at Peoria and had a militia right confirmed to him.—Ed.)

5. A donation and improvement right of eight hundred acres purchased of Francis Bouche, attorney for Louis Chatteraux (who also lived at Peoria and had two four-hundred-acre claims confirmed to him. This claim was near the "Old Fort."—Ed.)

6. A tract of three arpens in front by forty arpens deep situate in the common field near the town of Peorias, purchased by Francis Willette, assignee of Pierre La Vassuer [called Chamberlain, who had a militia right confirmed to him.—Ed.], containing one hundred and twenty arpens of land. [This is the only mention of a common field anywhere found at Peoria.—Ed.]

7. One lot of land and a house at the "Old Peorias Fort," and a tract of land near said "Peorias Old Fort," quantity unknown, purchased of Jean Baptiste Point Sable, assignee of Jean Baptiste Maillet, by deed dated March 13, 1773. [Here we have Pointstable at Peoria in 1773.—Ed.]

8. Another house and lot in the town of Peorias, and a quantity of land near the same bought of Theresa Mallette, widow Cattenoir, assignee of Francis Babeaux, by contract dated October 11, 1798. [Francis Babeaux had a militia right confirmed to him.—Ed.]

9. A militia right of one hundred acres bought of Louis Petit, alias Lalumiere.

The other six tracts mentioned in the deed were not located at Peoria.

By these deeds we are able to locate the two claims of Maillet at the new village, also a tract of land with a house sold by him to Point-de-Saible near the "Old Fort;" also a tract of fourteen hundred acres at the mouth of the Kickapoo (River Carteneaux), the original claimant of which is not named. We also learn that Baptiste Pelletier, Theresa Mailliet, widow of Cattenoir, assignee of Francis Babeaux, not before mentioned as claimants, also had claims at Peoria. From the journal of Hugh Heyward before mentioned, it appears that after passing through the upper lake (of Peoria) he arrived at "the Petite Etroit," a narrow between this and another lake of a league—on the west of this small lake is settled one of the name of Chattereron (Chattelrean)—at the village of the Peorias at the south side of this small lake are seven French settlements among the Indians [probably on Farm Creek.—Ed.], Augstin Fecto, J. Bt. Amelin (Lapierre a Smith), Captain Mye (probably Maillet), Dineau and Miney and Parrent and Ouillet (probably Willette) (Engages) and Diffon. There appears from the old maps a Pottawatamie village at or near the mouth of Farm creek, and it is possible that some of the claimants of land may have resided among them.

It has been hinted that the reason why these claimants were so willing to sell their claims was a report set on foot by the speculators that if they remained in the United States they would be compelled to abjure their religion, and on that account many of them sold out and left the country. Although the claims were reported for confirmation, yet it does not appear that the titles were ever perfected by the issuing of patents. It is thought probably other lands in lieu thereof situated in another part of the state were granted to the claimants. It is not deemed necessary to pursue that inquiry as the present purpose is to ascertain the names and standing of the earliest settlers of Peoria.

In the investigation made by Edward Coles under the act of Congress of 1820, respecting the claims to lots in Peoria, it was made his duty to report the substance of the evidence upon which the claims were based, which was not required of the commissioners under the former act. In pursuance of this requirement he made a report not only embodying the substance of the evidence, but also tabulating the claims, giving the names of the claimants, the quantity claimed, the date of the improvement and the date of abandonment. The table will be found in American State Papers. Lands. Vol. III, pp. 421-2, published by Duff Green, 1834. Its length denies its insertion here.

But neither the table nor the map which accompanies it gives the full extent nor the location of the farms under cultivation by the inhabitants. The following were proved, but did not come within the act of Congress, which applied only to village lots and out-lots, namely:

Thomas Forsyth, a field of 20 arpens two miles south from Peoria at the River Gatinan (now Kickapoo), also a field of 20 arpens on Little Prairie [location not known.—Ed.]

Angelica Willette, a field of 15 or 20 arpens three-fourths of a mile northwest of Peoria. This woman became the wife of Bartholomew Fortier, who had a long continued litigation respecting a lot lying between the Chamber of Commerce building and the river.

Pierre Lavassieur dit Chamberlain, a field of 7 arpens one-half mile southwest of Peoria, adjoining Antoine La Pance.

Simon Roi in right of his wife, the late widow of Charles Ladoux, six arpens in rear of lot 30 claimed by him.

Simon Roi, Antoine Roi and Francis Racine jointly, 30 arpens on east bank of River Gatinan adjoining Antoine Cicare.

Francis Racine, Sr., a field of 20 arpens adjoining the village and between fields of Simon Roi and Antoine Bourbonne.

Felix Fontaine, a field of 9 arpens one-half mile southwest of the village between Antoine La Pance and Francis Racine, also an out-lot of $2\frac{1}{2}$ arpens one-fourth of a mile west of the village.

Hypolite Maillet in the right of his wife, Josette Demonchelle, late widow of Louis Boucher, one lot of 4 arpens one-half mile west of the village.

Hypolite Maillet, an out-lot of 6 arpens in rear of lots 49 and 50 claimed by him, bounded north by Charles La Bolle, and south by Jean Baptiste Defond. Also an out-lot of 15 arpens one and one-half miles north of the village, bounded north by out-lot of Mailliet, west by bluff, south and east by prairie. Also a field of 15 arpens two miles below the village on the eastern bank of the River Gatinan, and bounded south by the field of Francis Montplaiser.

Heirs of Charles La Belle, a field of 10 arpens in the rear of lot No. 60 claimed by them. [LaBelle had two daughters, one married to James T. Sargeant; the other to Samuel Hart, who will be remembered as for many years a pilot on the Illinois River.—Ed.]

Antoine Bourborne, a field of 4 or 5 arpens near Peoria and adjoining Francis Racine on the north.

During the early part of the year 1812, as shown by the reports of Governor Edwards to the War Department, the Indians had committed divers depredations upon the people, by stealing their cattle and farm products, yet after the burning of two of their barns, which contained a large amount of wheat, by Captain Craig, and after his lurching some of their hogs, they were compelled to leave behind them at least two hundred cattle, a large quantity of corn and many hogs. The proof shows that nearly every village lot claimed, (thirty-seven in all) had been occupied by a dwelling or out-building connected with a dwelling, and that, while some had, on account of Indian depredations or other causes, been abandoned before the arrival of Capt. Craig, yet nearly if not quite thirty continued to be occupied until that time.

The noted French Claim suits had reference to the village lots and out-lots, not to the farm lands.

Prominent among the inhabitants of Le Ville de Maillet was Antoine Le Clair, who afterwards went to Davenport in the State of Iowa and took a prominent part in the founding of that city. The town of Le Clair was also named in his honor.

Michael La Croix was also a prominent citizen of whom Governor Reynolds has given a sketch.

But the most noted citizen of Peoria was Thomas Forsyth, already frequently alluded to, of whom much has already been said and of whose life and character Governor Reynolds has written at some length.

CHAPTER IX.

PEORIA IN 1813—EXPEDITION OF GENERAL BENJAMIN HOWARD—BUILDING OF FORT CLARK—ITS DESTRUCTION.

The year 1813 opened with no abatement but rather an increase of the virulence of the Indian hostilities. It is said that even Black Partridge, who had taken such a conspicuous part in befriending the white settlers at Chicago, had become hostile. Tradition says that it was after that event, while he was absent endeavoring to rescue Lieut. Helm from his captors, that Gov. Edwards attacked and destroyed his village. Returning and finding his village devastated and his kinsman slaughtered he at once vowed revenge, joined himself with the other hostile Indians, and with about three hundred of them left for the settlements in the southern part of the State, where they made various attacks upon the whites. In the months of February and March several murders had been committed and the attitude of the savages had become peculiarly threatening.

It was then decided that a more formidable force should be organized than any which had yet been marched against them. This was accomplished through the joint operations of the militia of Missouri and Illinois Territories, in connection with a few regulars.

Benjamin Howard had been appointed Governor of Louisiana Territory April 17, 1810, and it was during his incumbency that the name was changed to that of the Territory of Missouri. Going to Washington in the spring of the year 1813, he returned with a commission as Brigadier General in the United States army, but continued to act as Governor until the expiration of his commission a few weeks later. He was succeeded as Governor by Gen. William Clark, brother of Gen. George Rogers Clark, who continued to hold the office until Missouri was admitted into the union in 1820.

Upon retiring from the office of Governor,

General Howard organized a force consisting of Missouri and Illinois militia, and a small detachment from the regular army under command of Col. Nichols, to march into the country of the hostile Indians. The regulars ascended the Illinois River in boats and arrived at Peoria some days in advance of the volunteers, who were mounted and came across the country. Of this expedition up to the time of its reaching Peoria Gov. Reynolds gives the following account:

"Another campaign was decided upon in the northern section of Illinois, and the Illinois troops, to the number of three or four hundred, left Camp Russell, about the first of August, 1813. I was sergeant in Capt. Wm. B. Whitesides' company of United States Rangers, and marched in this campaign. At Fort Mason the Missouri troops all swam over the river and joined us. The army was reorganized at this station. General Howard in command. Colonels McNair, of St. Louis, and Stephenson, of Randolph, Illinois, were the two Colonels commanding. William B. Whiteside, Nathan Boone, of Missouri, John Moredock, and others were made Majors. Col. Desha, of the United States army, was in command. Col. Clempson was the inspector. The whole force amounted to not more than eight hundred men. The army marched up the Mississippi bottom to a point above Quincy, thence across the country and struck the Illinois River forty-odd miles below Peoria. The army reached Peoria on a calm, pleasant evening, and the beauty of the situation was admired by the whole army. The lake, and the scenery around, made a pleasing impression of its grandeur and beauty even on the stern, rugged soldiers of the army."

In that expedition was George Davenport, then a non-commissioned officer in Captain Owens' company of the regular army, who became a colonel and whose name afterwards became famous as having been murdered at his home on Rock Island. From him Mr. Matson derived the following account of the transactions at Peoria.

"On arriving at Peoria Lake, the soldiers (the regulars.—Ed.) commenced building a block house for storing the baggage as well as a protection against an attack from the enemy. A well having been dug near the block house to supply it with water, it became necessary to have a sweep to draw it; consequently Mr. Davenport, with two companions, went into the woods to get a grapevine for that purpose. Having found one suitable, Davenport climbed the tree to cut it off, and while doing so he discovered a large body of Indians skulking in the timber, going in the direction of the block house. On seeing this war party Davenport and his companions gave an alarm, and, in all haste, fled toward the block house, but finding Indians in that direction turned their course for the gunboats, which were moored in the lake. With all speed the fugitives ran for the boats, closely followed by the Indians, who fired at them many shots, while yelling like demons. The soldiers on the gunboats, thinking only of their own safety, pushed them off from the shore, but fortunately one of them grounded on a sand bar, which was the means of saving the life of Davenport and his companions. The fugitives ran into the water waist deep, pushed the grounded boat off, and jumped on board of it, while the Indians fired on them, many of the rifle balls whizzing by their heads and lodging in the sides of the vessel. The boats went off some distance from the shore, nevertheless the Indians continued to fire on them, but without effect. A cannon on one of the boats was brought to bear on the savages, but in the excitement of the moment its muzzle was raised above the port hole, and the ball tore off a portion of the side of the vessel. The Indians also attacked the block house, which was in an unfinished condition, but met with a warm reception from those within. The cannons on the boats having been brought to bear on the Indians, they fled from the thick timber where they had taken shelter, and the fight ended."

In the year 1850, while Drown's "Historical View of Peoria" was in preparation, Mr. John T. Lindsay, then a prominent lawyer of Peoria, and still living at Lake Forest, Illinois, received a letter written at his request by John S. Brick-ley, Esq., Potosi, Missouri, who was one of the Missouri volunteers, from which the following extracts are made:

"In the summer of 1813, there was a requisition made for a regiment of mounted riflemen—volunteers to go into the then northern part of Illinois, against the Indians said to be organized by and under the command of one Dickson, a British officer who had long been a trader with and had great influence over them. The frontier settlements had been greatly annoyed by constant inroads and depredations of those Indians for more than a year before; so in consequence of the above mentioned requisition, about the first of August, the Missouri regiment of volunteers of 400 or 500 men, rendezvoused and was organized at St. Louis; * * * we marched from there and crossed the Missouri river near Bellefontaine, a fort south of the Missouri not far from the junction of the Missouri and Mississippi, thence up and along the Mississippi on the west side for 75 or 80 miles, then crossed the river and joined a regiment of Illinois volunteer mounted riflemen, consisting of about 400 men, under the command of Colonel Stephenson—the two regiments now number about 900 men—that from Missouri was commanded by Colonel McNair, subsequently Governor of Missouri, and the whole commanded by General Howard.

"Upon arriving at the west bank of the Mississippi, there was no other means of ferrying the regiment over, men, horses and baggage, but two platforms made of slender boards laid crosswise on two canoes. To have crossed or transported 500 men and horses with their baggage, although the latter consisted of a few pounds of flour and pickled pork, all the soldiers had in those times, would have required some days at least; therefore to expedite the march it was resolved by about 300 men to ride, or swim the Mississippi on horse-back, they placing their provisions (no blankets or tents, for they had none) on the platform—more than 300 did actually swim the river on their horses, myself among the number, which occupied about three hours, without the least accident, except one horse was drowned by becoming entangled in some vines in descending the high bank of the river. The consequence of this expedition was, the whole regiment crossed the same day, and on the next joined the Illinoisans from Camp Russell.

"It so happened, that instead of the boats and volunteers arriving at the same time, and taking the village by surprise, the boats got there on Sunday, the 29th of August, and the mounted men not until the Wednesday following, when no enemy was to be seen. But on the arrival of the boats with the regulars about 150 or 200 Indian warriors then in their town attacked them with great resolution, and not until after an hour's hard fight, and using several pieces of small cannon, could the boats effect a landing at Peoria.

"When the mounted riflemen arrived at Peoria they found the village consisting of a great number of huts, all deserted a few days before, and two or three frame houses, one 30 or 40 feet long (said to have been built by the French), although they did not appear to have been inclosed or covered. The Indians in their flight had left nothing but some dried pumpkins, corn and beans, which were found in some of the houses, but much more was found wrapped up in skins and hid in the ground, all of which was seized and used by those who found them. Every house in the village was demolished the same day we entered * * * * and used for fuel during the stay of the army at that place." (1)

The writer in the course of his interesting letter described how the soldiers, after swimming the Mississippi River, which they did in Adam's costume, encountered a patch of nettles which rendered it, to say the least, uncomfortable for both horses and men; also the fleet of gunboats consisting of ten or twelve barges, mantled, or covered with thin boards which served well for protection from the elements but very poorly against Indian bullets; how a young man who had, unnoticed by a sentinel, passed beyond the guard line for water, was, on his return, shot to death by mistake; how the army the next day marched to Gomo's town and encamped there one night and then returned and assisted in the erection of Fort Clark. He then gives this vivid description of the impression made upon the army by its first sight of Peoria Lake and its surroundings.

"As the army approached Peoria from the northwest and got a first view of its situation from the high-land prairies, two or three miles from the lake, looking easterly and southerly, beheld the smooth prairie gradually descending to the town, the lake stretching miles far to the northeast, the gunboats lying quietly at anchor upon the water, the towering forest across the water, and the lovely prairies bounded only by the horizon, there was an involuntary halt—the men all gazed in silence for a moment, and then of a sudden, as if moved by one impulse, expressed universal admiration of the beauty and grandeur of the prospect spread out before them. At this time there was no road to Peoria except the Indian trail, not a forest tree amiss, not a house within one hundred miles (except the town before described), no plough had ever broken the turf that covered the rich soil beneath. The lake was covered with wild geese, ducks and other water fowls; game such as deer, bear, elk, and turkeys everywhere in the thick woods and adjacent prairies. Bees and honey were found in almost every hollow tree, and, notwithstanding express orders to the contrary, the men would and did, on the march, frequently stop and cut down the trees and get large quantities of the most delicious honey. While employed in building the fort, many of the men were well supplied with venison, fowls, honey and sometimes with fish caught in the lake." This description fully justifies the Indian name of the place, "Pimiteoni—The Land of Plenty."

The writer describes the erection of Fort Clark as follows:

"For want of suitable timber and materials within several miles of the place, on the west side of the lake, on account of the country back from the river being prairie, it became necessary to obtain all timber from a fine forest on the east side of the Illinois River at the lower end of the lake and raft it over. The men commenced felling the trees, the most of which were white oak, and for the palisades cut them about eighteen feet long and each log not less than fifteen or eighteen inches in diameter—the timbers for the block-houses at the corners of the enclosure were much longer; the area (area) inclosed for the fort contained, according to my recollection, two or three acres. While a portion of the men were cutting, others were employed in hauling and rafting the logs over to the opposite side of the lake, and from there to the site for the building; having no carriages of any description, all the materials were drawn by men on trucks, by means of large ropes, a distance of from one to two miles. Thus was Fort Clark erected where Peoria now stands, in less than two months, by the Missouri and Illinois volunteers of mounted riflemen, in September and October in the year 1813, at a distance of more than one hundred miles from any white settlement, and with no other means than above described."

This picture of the building of Fort Clark is completed by George Davenport in his account given to Mr. Matson before alluded to, as follows:

"Preparations having been made to build a fort on the site of the old French town for the purpose of holding possession of the country, timbers were cut on the opposite side of the lake and floated across to build block store-houses, and enclose them with palisades. On a high piece of ground near the bank of the lake a fort was built, consisting of stockades made of two rows of split timbers, and the space between them filled with dirt. A ditch surrounded the fort, and at two corners were bastions for mounting cannon. Inside of the stockades was a large block-house, two stories high, and on three sides of it were port-holes, so the inmates could fire on the enemy in case of an attack. Besides this block-house were store-houses, and quarters for officers and soldiers.

"When the fort was completed and cannons mounted on its ramparts, with flags waving on each bastion, General Howard ordered all the soldiers on duty, forming in double file, fronting the gateway. A speech was made by the commanding officer, drums beat, soldiers cheered, the cannons fired a salute, and with much enthusiasm the fort was dedicated and named "Fort Clark" in honor of General George Rogers Clark, the hero of Kaskaskia and Vincennes." (1)

Governor Reynolds varies the scene somewhat, but substantially agrees with the foregoing statements. He says: "The army marched to the upper end of the lake and returned the next day. The troops camped on the south side of the lake for three or four weeks. It was here that the logs were cut for Fort Clark. With a proper truck wagon, and ropes with cross pieces of wood tied at the proper intervals, eight men can draw as many logs as four horses. * * * The logs were thrown into the water and the regulars, under Captain Phillips, rafted them over the lake, and made Fort Clark of them. The army returned to Camp Russell, in safety, late in November."

Research has failed to reveal any more particular description of Fort Clark than that above given. It is reasonable to suppose it differed but little from other forts erected about that time. Only one block-house is spoken of at Fort Clark, but there were also within the enclosure quarters for officers and men. Mr. Ballance, in his History of Peoria, gives its dimensions and construction as follows:

"This fort was about one hundred feet square, with a ditch along each side. It did not stand with a side to the lake, but with a corner towards it. The corner farthest from the lake was on the upper side of Water street, near the intersection of the upper line of Water and Liberty streets. From there the west line ran diagonally across the intersection of Water and Liberty streets nearly to the corner of the transportation warehouse, at the lower corner of Liberty and Water streets. At this corner was what I suppose military men would call a bastion, that is, there was a projecting corner made in the same manner as the side walls, and so constructed, as I imagine, as to accommodate a small cannon to command the ditches. And the same had, no doubt, been at the opposite corner, but when I came to the country in November, 1831, there was no vestige of it remaining. In fact, at that time there was but little to show that there had ever been a fortification there, except some burnt posts along the west side, and a square of some ten or twelve feet at the south corner with a ditch nearly filled up on two sides of it, and on the west side of the square."

Observing, however, that Water street is one hundred feet wide at the point indicated, and that the location of the magazine which must have been within the fort was very close to the base of the smoke-stack of the Electric Light Plant, some distance below Water street, the conclusion is forced upon us that his estimate of its dimensions is erroneous. If the fort was of a square form and contained one acre, one side of it would measure 208.7 feet, which would correspond more nearly with the points given by Mr. Ballance than does his own estimates.

Other relics of the fort have been found, among which, as already stated, is the foundation of the magazine recently discovered near the base of the stack of the Electric Light Plant at the foot of Liberty street.

It is not known how long the fort was occupied by United States troops, nor who was in command. It is often said that it was evacuated soon after the close of the war, which event occurred at the beginning of the year 1815, but there is some evidence of its having been occupied until the year 1817 or 1818. Among those holding the first opinion is Mr. Matson, who

(1) It has been stated that the fort was named "Fort Clark" in honor of William Clark, then Governor of Missouri Territory, but the best authorities say it was so named in honor of Gen. George Rogers Clark.

says: "The gate of the fort having been left open, it became a lair for deer and a roost for wild turkeys. In the fall of 1816 a party of hunters from St. Clair County came to Fort Clark and found about twenty deer in the fort and the floors of the block-house covered with manure. The hunters cleaned out this building and occupied it as a residence during a stay of ten days while hunting deer and collecting honey in the river timber. Fort Clark stood unmolested until the fall of 1818, when it was burned by the Indians."

The following incidents and quotations from the autobiography of Gurdon S. Hubbard, of Chicago, throw much light upon the destruction of Fort Clark.

Mr. Hubbard entered into the employment of the American Fur Company about the year 1818, and was assigned to duty on the Illinois River, that department or brigade being under the direction of Antoine Deschamps. Deschamps had been educated at Quebec for a Roman Catholic priest, but refusing to be ordained engaged himself to Mr. Sara, a fur trader, at St. Louis, and had devoted many years of his life to the Indian trade on the Ohio and Illinois Rivers. When the American Fur Company was organized he was engaged by them, and placed in charge of the Illinois brigade or outfit. It was his custom to make a trip every fall to St. Louis with one boat to purchase supplies of tobacco and other necessaries for distribution among the various traders on the Illinois River. This is the same Antoine Deschamps who held the office of Justice of the Peace at Peoria as early as 1802, as before mentioned.

"On the 18th of September, 1818, the Illinois brigade, led by Deschamps, started for the Illinois River. Some of the boats were crowded with the families of the traders, the oldest of whom was Mr. Bieson, a large, portly, gray-headed man, who was then about sixty years of age, and for more than forty years had been an Indian trader on the Ohio, Mississippi and Illinois Rivers. His wife was a pure-blooded Pottawatamie Indian, enormous in size, so fleshy she could scarcely walk. Their two daughters were married and lived at Cahokia, a small French town opposite St. Louis. Mr. Bieson had a house and some property at Opa, now Peoria, and had been, with all the inhabitants of that place, driven off by the United States troops in the command of General Howard in 1814 (1813), and a fort was there erected, which was called Fort Clark. The town of Opa and Fort Clark were situated at the foot of Lake Peoria on the Illinois River, where now stands the flourishing city of Peoria."

Among the others who had their families with them were Messrs. Beebeau [Babo or Babeau. —Ed.], of Opa, and Lefrombois, Bleu and St. Clair, all of whom had Indian wives. And in fact there were but three or four single men in the party.

Having arrived at the mouth of Bureau River, they located their first trading house and placed the same in charge of Mr. Beebeau, who for many years had been a trader in that region. Hubbard was assigned to that post and was to have charge of the accounts, as neither Beebeau nor any of his men could read or write. Beebeau had kept his accounts with the Indians by a system of hieroglyphics. Mr. Hubbard then proceeds as follows:

"I was permitted by Mr. Deschamps to accompany him to St. Louis, whither he went with one boat to purchase supplies of tobacco and some other needed articles from the French people at Cahokia. Beebeau received his invoices of goods and detail of men and we proceeded onward.

"Our next post was located three miles below Lake Peoria, and about sixty miles from Bureau, and was placed in charge of old Mr. Beason, a venerable man who had long been a trader on this river and was well and favorably known by the Indians. This we called Opa Post. (This was afterward called "The Trading Post," where Wesley City now is.)

"As we rounded the point of the lake above Peoria we discovered that Old Fort Clark was on fire, and, upon reaching it, we found Indians to the number of about two hundred engaged in a war dance. They were hideously painted and had scalps on their spears and sashes which they had taken from Americans during the war with Great Britain from 1812 to 1815."

Mr. Hubbard then relates an encounter which took place between himself and a young Indian, which came near resulting in the death of one of them. He then says, "This incident left such an impression on my mind that no doubts exist with me as to the time of the burning of Fort Clark."

Only a portion, however, of the buildings could have been consumed at that time, for in the following year when the first company of white settlers came to the place it is said they, too, found what they supposed to be the fort on fire. With this incident the history of the fort comes to an end, but the name still clung to the place for years afterward.

CHAPTER X.

FIRST AMERICAN SETTLERS.

Having completed their business in St. Louis, De-Champs and his party, including Gurdon S. Hubbard, started on their return about the 20th of November, and, after stopping at Opa Post, reached the station at Bureau between the 10th and 15th of December. In March, 1819, they started for Mackinac, which point they reached about the middle of May.

While they were making this journey, having left Beeson in charge of the station at Wesley City (then Opa), the first permanent settlement was made at Fort Clark (now Peoria). Early in the spring of that year a party consisting of Abner Eads, Seth Fulton and Josiah Fulton, Virginians by birth, Joseph Hersey, a New Yorker, S. Dougherty, J. Davis and T. Russell, Kentuckians, but all then living at Shoal Creek, now in Clinton County, Illinois, left that place to found a settlement at Manvaise Terre, Prairie, near the present site of Naples, on the Illinois River. Not finding that locality satisfactory, and having heard favorable reports of the country around Fort Clark, they determined to proceed to that place. With the boat in which they had ascended the river they ferried their two horses over to the west side, where Eads and Hersey mounted them and started for their destination, arriving at Fort Clark on April 15, 1819. The remainder of the party proceeded by boat, bringing with them all their effects. After waiting two days at the fort, a deserter from Fort Dearborn came floating by in his canoe whom Eads hailed, and, joining him as a passenger, started out to see what had become of the rest of the party. When in the vicinity of La March Creek they were met by the others, all enjoying good health and spirits, and, joining them, they all proceeded to Fort Clark, where they were welcomed by Hersey, who had remained alone in charge of the horses. The circumstances of their arrival are thus related by Josiah Fulton:

"We found the walls of two small log cabins, which we supposed to have been built by the soldiers of the garrison stationed there, and at once set to work to cover them over and finish them up for dwelling places. While we were employed at this work we made out to be comfortable in the shelter of our tents and boats. The cabins stood on what is now Water street, and almost directly in front of the Germania Hall building. These cabins were the first American dwelling places at what is now the city of Peoria.

"There were also rails enough, which the soldiers had made, to inclose fifteen acres of ground. The ground was broken up and planted to corn and potatoes from which a pretty good crop was gathered in the fall. The north line of that first field ran west from the river and not far from Fulton street.

"About the first of June, Eads, Fulton and Dougherty returned to Shoal creek with their two horses to move Eads' family, consisting of his wife and three children, to their new home. After settling up his affairs in that neighborhood Eads loaded his household effects, wife and children on a two-horse wagon and headed across the country in the direction of the beginning of Peoria—the new settlement at Fort Clark. They reached and crossed the Illinois River at the present site of Wesley City, where there was a trading post, and where Indians and Indian canoes [and possibly Louis Beeson.—Ed.] were nearly always to be found. Some of the canoes were secured, the household goods were unloaded from the wagon, and with the family transferred to the canoes and carried over to the west side of the river. The wagon was then taken to pieces and carried over in the same manner. The horses and cattle were made to swim across."

"Mrs. Eads was the first American woman to see the site of Peoria"

On or about the 10th of June of the same year Captain Jude Warner arrived from St. Louis with a keel-boat loaded with salt and provisions, and a seine for fishing in the lake. This company consisted of Isaac De Boise, James Goff, William Blanchard, David W. Barnes, Charles Sargent and Theodore Sargent. They spent the season in catching and salting fish in bulk. Their arrival swelled the number of men at Fort Clark to fourteen, and says Mr. Fulton: "We were about as happy a little circle as has ever lived in Peoria. We were isolated, completely shut out from the rest of mankind, it is true. We heard but little from the outside (inside?) world, and the outside world heard but little from us. But little was known at that time about the Fort Clark country. There were no roads, nor steam-boats, nor mail routes, nor communications of any kind, so that in point of fact we were as much a community by ourselves as if our cabins had been built on an island in the middle of the sea. Our post office was St. Louis, and we never got our mail, those of us who got any, only when we went there for supplies, and then our letters cost us twenty-five cents, and we couldn't muster that much money every day.

"Mrs. Eads was duly installed as house-keeper, and the rest of the company, except Hersey, who didn't remain long, boarded with her. It was a pretty hard winter on us, but we managed to get through. Bread-stuff gave out and we had to fall back on hominy-blocks and hominy. It was a coarse kind of food we got this way, but it was a good deal better than none, and served to keep hunger away. Hominy-blocks went out of use long ago, and there are thousands of people in Peoria County that never saw one, but they were a blessing to hundreds of the pioneers of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, and in fact to the first settlers of the entire country, and were the means of keeping many of the pioneers and their little ones from starving to death."

Of the first seven men who came to Fort Clark the two Fultons went across the river and selected a claim on what is now called Farm Creek, and commenced to make a farm. In 1834 they sold that claim and removed to Peoria County, where Josiah lived a respected citizen during the remainder of his life. Seth Fulton was seized with the lead-mine excitement and removed to Galena and afterward to Henry County.

Abner Eads bought the northwest quarter of Section 17, 8 N., 8 E., in which the old Peoria Cemetery, now Lincoln Park, is situated. He afterward bought a quarter on Kickapoo Creek, on which valuable coal mines were subsequently developed. He, too, after rendering valuable services to the public, both civil and military, was seized with the lead mine fever, and about the year 1833 removed to Galena, where he was for two terms elected to the Legislature and served during the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Assemblies. In 1854 he went to California and commenced to make a farm, then starting back for his family he was seized with the Chagres fever and died on the way and was buried in St. Louis. (1)

Dougherty was a wild, reckless, daring Kentuckian, and did not long remain in the country. Hersey, the New York Dutchman as he was called, went into the southern part of the state, where he got into trouble, but having gotten his matters "fixed up" disappeared. He is reported to have been a man of some means, and years afterward diligent search was made for him or his heirs, but so far as known without success.

Davis first settled on Farm Creek, and after remaining there a while removed to Sangamon County and thence to Texas, where he died.

Russell did not remain here long, but took to the river and was last heard of at St. Louis.

Of this first company Josiah Fulton is the only one who remained at Peoria during the remainder of his life.

Of the party who came with Captain Warner, William Blanchard became a resident of what is now Woodford County, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred only a few years since. Jacob Wilson, one of the first to be commissioned as Justice of the Peace, on the 22d day of March, 1825, performed the first marriage ceremony celebrated in the new county, which was that of William Blanchard with Betsey Donohoe. Barnes and the two Sargents went to what is now Fulton County, where they became prominent citizens.

Among the most noted of these early settlers was John Hamlin, whose life is so intimately connected with the history of Peoria that no extended sketch is here needed. Having arrived in the state, he made his home for some time with Hon. James Latham at Elkhart Grove, then in Madison County. Judge Latham was the first Probate Judge for Sangamon County after its organization, but afterward removed to Peoria County. In 1821, in company with several other gentlemen, probably Judge Latham being of the number, Mr. Hamlin visited Fort Clark and found on his arrival here two log cabins, one of which was occupied by the family of Abner Eads; the other was a double log house, occupied by two families—one by the name of Bogardus and the other by the name of Montgomery. This was in the early part of May, 1821. In March, 1822, he had his effects removed to Fort Clark by an ox-team. In 1823 one William S. Hamilton had a contract to supply Fort Howard, at Green Bay, with beef-cattle, and Mr. Hamlin, on account of his efficiency and knowledge of the Indian character, was chosen to accompany the expedition. After divers vicissitudes and romantic experiences they arrived at their destination on the second day of July, 1823, having accomplished the journey in thirty days.

On his way back Mr. Hamlin, who was a Justice of the Peace of Fulton County, performed his first marriage ceremony, at Fort Dearborn, in the marriage of Dr. Alexander Wolcott, the bride being a Miss Kinzie, daughter of John Kinzie, the first permanent settler of Chicago. This was the first marriage ceremony ever performed in what is now the great city of Chicago. (See biographical sketch of John Hamlin infra.)

Gurdon S. Hubbard, afterward superintendent of the Illinois Brigade of the American Fur Company, spent the winter of 1821-2 on the Illinois River. Reaching Bureau Station, he found Mr. Beebean still in charge, though much enfeebled on account of age. This expedition was also under the leadership of Des Champs. Hubbard then says: "After resting a few days and selecting the goods and men to be left at that post (Bureau) we proceeded on our way, making our next halt at Fort Clark, where we found several families located, among whom were Mr. Fulton, the first pioneer settler at that point, who still resides in that county, and a Mr. Bogardus, a brother of General Bogardus, of New York, a highly intelligent gentleman, and his estimable wife. Two miles below, at a point now known as Wesley City, was Mr. Beeson's post, and there we remained about one week, during which time I went almost daily to the fort."

Mr. Hubbard then relates the circumstance of an aged squaw having been attacked and devoured by wolves at the Kickapoo Creek, opposite Beeson's post.

From 1821 to 1825 many new settlers came into the territory afterwards embraced in Peoria County, some of those at Peoria being William Eads, brother of Abner Eads, Judge James Latham and the Moffatt family, consisting of the father, Joseph A. Moffatt, three sons, Alva, Aquilla B. and Franklin, and two daughters; also Isaac Funk, William Holland, Elijah and Norman Hyde, Dr. Augustus Langworthy, George Sharp, Isaac Waters, John Dixon and others.

In the year 1825 an assessment was made for the then new County of Peoria by John L. Bogardus, which shows well the distribution of the population and wealth it then contained. At Peoria the following persons were assessed in the amounts mentioned with their names: Archibald Allen, $150; Noah Beauchamp, Sr., $200; Noah Beauchamp, $200; John Barker, $400; John L. Bogardus, $500; Joseph Bryant, $300; Cornelius Brown, $150; John Dixon, $350; William Eads, $350; Abner Eads, $800; Samuel Fulton, $300; Isaac Funk, $200; Jesse Harrison, $50; John Hamlin, $400; William Holland, $800; E. & N. Hyde, $700; Jacob M. Hunter, $50; Charles Love, $150; Augustus Langworthy, $200; J. Latham, $300; Philip Latham, $100; Daniel Like, $50; Alva Moffatt, $60; Aquilla Moffatt, $40; Jesse McLaree, $25; Henry Neely, $150; Martin Porter, $100; Amherst C. Ransom, $100; George Sharp, $600; Joseph Van Scoik, $50; Isaac Waters, $100.—30 in all.

At Chicago the following assessments were made: John B. Beaubien, $1,000; Jonas Clyborne, $625; John K. Clark, $250; John Crafts, $5,000; (1) Jerry Clermont, $100; Louis Canra, $50; John Kinzie, $500; Joseph Laframboise, $50; C. Laframboise, $100; David McKee, $100; Peter Piche, $100; Alexander Wolcott, $572; Antoine Wilmsotte, $400.—13 in all.

At the Trading House (Wesley City) Antoine Alseome, $50; Francis Bourbonne, $200; Louis Beabor, $700; Francis Bourbonne, Jr., $100.—4 in all.

At Mickinaw Point (near which is the village of Dillon) Allen S. Dougherty, $100; Walter Dillon, $250; Nathan Dillon, $400; Absalom Dillon, $200; Thomas Dillon, $300; Jesse Dillon, $727; John Dillon, $93; William Davis, $200; Hugh Montgomery, $200; Alexander McNaughton, $150; Eli Redmon, $35; Henry Redmon, $35; Peter Scott, $50.—13 in all.

At Ten Mile Creek, William Blanchard, $150; Elza Bethard, $275; Reuben Bratton, $135; Thomas Banks, $50; Hiram M. Curry, $225; Major Donahue, $200; Seth Fulton, $100; David Mather, $200; John & William Phillips, $400; John Stephenson, $40; Edmund Weed, $174; Jacob Wilson, $300.—12 in all.

(1) John Crafts represented the American Fur Company and this assessment doubtless represented its property.

At Farm Creek, Andrew Barker, $100; Austin Crocker, $200; Thomas Canlin, $300; Stephen French, $200; James Fulton, $12.50; Josiah Fulton, $150; Elisha Fish, $200; Jacob Funk, $500; Joshua Harlin, $150; George Ish, $250; Joseph Smith, $550.—11 in all.

At La Salle Prairie, Elias P. Avery, $200; Stephen Carroll, $150; Gilbert Field, $150; John Griffin, $50; George Harlan, $150; Lewis Hallock, $50; John Ridgeway, $100; Hugh Walker, $50.—8 in all.

At Illinois Prairie (Tazewell County), George Cline, $70; John Cline, $204; Nathan Cromwell, $300; Jessie Egman, $100; Levi Ellis, $25; William Clark, $250; Levi Gilbert, $25; James Latta, $200; Levi McCormick, $50; Joseph Ogee, $200; Isaac Perkins, $400; John Sommers, $300; Ephraim Stout, Sr., & Jr., $500; Jonathan Tharp, $100; Ezekiel Turner, $150; Seth Wilson, $200; Samuel Woodrow, $150; Hugh Woodrow, $250.—18 in all.

At Fox River, Robert Baresford, $50; Fred Countraman, $50; Aaron Hawley, $200; Pierce Hawley, $300; John L. Ramsey, $200; Jesse Walker, $50.—6 in all.

At Little Detroit, Thomas N. Brierly, $160; Abner N. Cooper, $120; Peter Du Mont, $50; George N. Love, $350.—4 in all.

At Prince's Grove (Princeville), John Patterson, $20; Daniel Prince, $200.—2 in all.

From the foregoing it will be seen that of the one hundred and twenty taxable inhabitants of Peoria County and attached territory, one-fourth were assessed at Peoria, one-seventh at Illinois Prairie, one-ninth each at Chicago and Mackinaw Point, one-tenth at Ten Mile Creek, one-eleventh at Farm Creek, one-fifteenth at La Salle Prairie, six at Fox River, four each at The trading house and Little Detroit and two at Prince's Grove. Those at Peoria, La Salle Prairie, Little Detroit and Prince's Grove, forty-four in all, constituted the taxable population of what is now Peoria County.

Their settlements were principally along the streams where wood could be readily procured for fuel and for the building of their houses. The habits of these early settlers, which from the force of circumstances were necessarily simple, are thus described by Governor Reynolds:

"They were rough in personal appearance and unrefined, yet kind, social and generous. They were hunters and stock growers, and confined to their agricultural operations chiefly to corn and a small amount of wheat. They were brave, prompt and decided in war, yet liberal and magnanimous to a subdued foe. They showed great energy, and a just spirit of enterprise, in removing from five to fifteen hundred miles into a wilderness country, and pioneering out the way for the future prosperity of their descendants. They were hospitable, generous and ready to share with their neighbors, or newly arrived strangers, their last loaf.

"They were guided by Providence, preserved amidst dangers, sickness and savage assaults, and thus became the pioneers of civilization, the founders of a free government and the extension of pure Christianity. They turned the wilderness into a fruitful field, and prepared the country to sustain a more dense population, and to increase in wealth and prosperity.

"Their habits and manners were plain, simple and unostentatious. Their dwellings were log cabins, of the rudest and most simple structure. Their furniture and utensils and dress were the most simple and economical possible, for such only could be obtained.

"For clothing, dressed deer skins were extensively used for hunting shirts, pants, leggins and mawkawsins, and the red skin of the prairie wolf, or fox, was a substitute for the hat or cap. Strips of buffalo hide were used for ropes and traces, and the dressed skins of the buffalo, bear and elk furnished the principal covering of their beds at night. Wooden vessels, either dug out or coopered, and called "Noggens," were in common use for bowls, out of which each member of the family ate mush and milk for supper. A gourd formed the drinking cup.

"Every hunter (and all men were hunters) carried his knife in his girdle, while not unfrequently the rest of the family had but one or two between them. If a family chanced to have a few pewter dishes and spoons, knives and forks, tin-cups and platters, it was in advance of the neighbors.

"Corn was beaten for bread in the mortar, ground on a grater or in a hand mill."

Such men and women as these laid the foundation for the future prosperity of Peoria County.

CHAPTER XI.

FORMATION AND TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION OF PEORIA COUNTY.

As already seen, General Arthur St. Clair, first Governor of the Northwestern Territory, did not reach Kaskaskia until March, 1790, nearly two years after his arrival in the Territory. He then by proclamation established a county and named it for himself, with the following boundaries. "Beginning at the mouth of the Little Michilimackinac [Mackinaw River in Tazewell County.—Ed.], thence southerly in a direct line to the mouth of the little river above Fort Massac on the Ohio River, thence with the said river to its junction with the Mississippi, thence up the Mississippi to the mouth of the Illinois River, and so up the Illinois River to the place of beginning," comprising about one-fourth of the state as it was subsequently bounded. (1)

It appears that Peoria was left outside of the bounds of this county, but it made little difference whether it was in or out, for the government attempted to be established was of little force even to those residing within the new county. In October, 1795, a new county was formed in the southern part of the State called Randolph, the county seat of which was Kaskaskia, and the county seat of St. Clair County which now embraced the balance of the old county of St. Clair was at Cahokia; so Peoria still remained outside of the bounds of an organized government, unless it may possibly have been embraced within the bounds of Knox County one of the four which had been formed within the Northwestern Territory.

The Northwestern Territory was divided in the year 1800, and the Territory of Indiana, which included Illinois, was at that time established and organized with William Henry Harrison as Governor. That portion of the Territory covering the present State of Illinois was then divided into two counties, Randolph and St. Clair. Randolph County was bounded as follows: "Beginning on the Ohio River at a place called the Great Cave below the Saline Creek, thence by a direct North line until it intersects an East and West line running from the Mississippi River through the center of Sink Hole Spring, thence along the said line to the Mississippi River, thence down the Mississippi to the Ohio and up the same to the place of beginning."

The County of St. Clair was bounded as follows: "On the South by the before named East and West line from the Mississippi through the Sink Hole Spring to the intersection of said line running from Great Cave aforesaid, thence from the said point of intersection by a direct line to the mouth of the Great Hennoumie (Calumet River) flowing into the southern point of Lake Michigan, thence by a direct Northeast line to the division line between the Indiana and Northwestern Territories, thence along the said line to the territorial boundary of the United States, thence along the said boundary to the intersection thereof with the Mississippi River and down the Mississippi to the place of beginning."

This is the first time the territory now embraced within the county of Peoria came under an efficient civil government. As we have already seen, Antoine Des Champs and Louis Laboisiere were Justices of the Peace, exercising the functions of their offices at Peoria in the year 1802, under appointment from the then Governor of Indiana Territory, William H. Harrison. The county officers were: John Hays, Sheriff; William Arundel, Clerk; and John Hays, Recorder.

On a proposition to advance the Territory of Indiana to the second grade in 1804, which gave rise to an animated controversy, only 400 votes were polled in the entire Territory. Randolph

(1) Moses' Address to State Bar Association, 1895 p. 209.

County polled sixty-one with a majority of nineteen in favor, and St. Clair eighty-one with a majority of thirty-seven against the proposition, but it was carried by a majority of 138, given by the other counties.

On the third day of February, 1809, the Territory of Indiana was divided and the new Territory of Illinois was organized. The counties of Randolph and St. Clair were continued with boundaries as follows: The county of Randolph shall include all that part of the Illinois Territory lying south of the line dividing the counties of Randolph and St. Clair as it existed under the government of the Indiana Territory on the last day of February, 1809, and the county of St. Clair shall include all that part of the Territory which lies north of said line.

For the county of St. Clair the following officers were appointed: John Hays, Sheriff, in which office he was continued nine years; William Arundel, formerly of Peoria, Recorder; John Hay, Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas; otherwise county clerk, which position he honorably filled until his death in 1845; Enoch Moore, Coroner, and John Messinger, Surveyor.

Ninian Edwards, who had been appointed Governor did not arrive in the territory until the month of June, but Nathaniel Pope, who had been appointed Secretary, proceeded to make the necessary appointments which were afterwards confirmed.

Among the Justices of the Peace appointed by Secretary Pope for the county of St. Clair were: Antoine Des Champs, who still resided at Peoria, and Nicholas Boilvin. Antoine Des Champs, was the same who had held the same office while the county of Peoria was within the Indiana Territory. Nicholas Boilvin resided at Prairie Du Chien, now in the State of Wisconsin, and held the appointment of Indian Agent for the government. He was the father of Nicholas Boilvin and William C. Boilvin formerly prominent business men of Peoria.

In 1812 Madison County was carved out of St. Clair County with the following boundaries: "Beginning on the Mississippi and running with the second township line above Cahokia east until it strikes the dividing line between the Illinois and Indiana Territories, thence with the said dividing line to the line of Upper Canada, thence with said line to the Mississippi and thence down the Mississippi to the beginning."

Peoria was then embraced within the limits of Madison County and so continued until the year 1821, when it was set off into the newly created county of Pike. During that period many conveyances of land were made, especially in the Military Tract, which were recorded at the recorder's office of Madison County at Edwardsville. The records of all conveyances touching lands in Peoria County have been transcribed and now form a part of the records of our recorder's office.

In the meantime the State of Illinois had been admitted into the Union with its present boundaries, thus severing from Madison County all that portion of territory now embraced within the State of Wisconsin and part of Minnesota.

Pike County was organized by act of January 31, 1821, entitled "An Act to form a new county in the Bounty Lands," the boundaries of which were as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of the Illinois River and running thence up the middle of said river to the fork of the same, thence up the south fork (Kankakee) of said river until it strikes the State line of Indiana, thence north with said line to the north boundary of this State, thence west with said line to the west boundary of this State thence with said line to the place of beginning."

For two years thereafter Peoria County was embraced within the bounds of Pike County, and its records of conveyances were kept there and have since been transcribed. During the period that Peoria was under the jurisdiction of Pike County the following named persons held the office of Judges of the Probate Court, namely, Abram Beck, commissioned February 12, 1821, but resigned and was succeeded June 11, 1821, by Nicholas Hanson, who also resigned and was succeeded February 15, 1823, by William Ross, the same day that Hugh R. Coulter received his commission to the same office in the newly created county of Fulton. At an election held April 2, 1821, Leonard Ross, John Shaw and William Ward were elected County Commissioners, Bigelow C. Fenton, Sheriff, and Daniel Whipple, Coroner, and at an election held August 5, 1822, James M. Seely, David Dulton and Ossian M. Ross were elected County Commissioners, Leonard Ross, Sheriff, and Daniel Whipple, Coroner. These all continued in office until after the formation of Fulton County. During the same period the following named persons were appointed and commissioned as Justices of the Peace of Pike County, namely, February 3, 1821, Abner Eads, John Shaw, Daniel Whipple, William Ross, Henry Tupper, Leonard Ross, William Ward; on May 26, 1821, Ebenezer Smith, Stephen Dewey; on August 29, 1821, John Bolter; on November 29, 1821, Ossian M. Ross; on January 2, 1822, Charles B. Rouse; on May 22, 1822, Amos Barcroft.

At the same session of the Legislature, the county of Sangamon was formed with the following boundaries: "Beginning at the northeast corner of township 12, north on the Third Principal Meridian, thence north with said meridian line to the Illinois River [near the present city of Peru.—Ed.] thence down the middle of said river to the mouth of Balance or Negro Creek, thence up said creek to its head, thence through the middle of the prairie which divides the waters of Sangamon and the Mauvaise Terre to the northwest corner of township 12 north, range 7 west of the Third Principal Meridian, thence east along the boundary of township 1 to the place of beginning." A portion of this territory was afterwards attached to Peoria County for county purposes.

By an act of January 28, 1823, the county of Fulton was formed with the following boundaries: Beginning at the point where the Fourth Principal Meridian intersects the Illinois River, thence up the middle of said river to where the line between ranges five and six east strikes the said river, thence north with said line between ranges five and six to the township line between townships 9 and 10 north, thence west with said line to the Fourth Principal Meridian, thence south with said line to the place of beginning." These boundaries embraced Trivoli and Elmwood townships and part of Knox County. And it was further enacted that all the rest and residue of the attached part of the County of Pike east of the Fourth Principal Meridian should be attached to and be a part of the said county of Fulton until otherwise disposed of by the General Assembly. It will be observed that Fulton County did not acquire jurisdiction west of the Fourth Principal Meridian.

On the second Monday of April, of the same year, an election was held for the election of a Sheriff, Coroner and three County Commissioners. As already stated Hugh R. Coulter was on the 15th day of February, 1823, commissioned as Judge of the Probate Court. He continued to fill that office until after the formation of Peoria County. At the election held April 14, 1823, (the second Monday) Joseph Moffatt, David W. Barnes and Thomas R. Covell were elected County Commissioners, Abner Eads, Sheriff, and William Clark, Coroner. At an election held August 2, 1824, James Gardner, James Barnes and David W. Barnes were elected County Commissioners, Ossian M. Ross, Sheriff, and Joseph Moffatt, Coroner. These all continued in office until after the organization of Peoria County. During the same period the following named persons were appointed and commissioned as Justices of the Peace of Fulton County, namely, January 30, 1823, John Hamlin, Samuel Fulton, Stephen Chase, Hugh R. Coulter, Ossian M. Ross. June 17, 1823, Amlhurst C. Hanson, William Eads; December 2, 1823, John Kinzie. (Chicago).

A comparison of these lists of officers with the lists of early settlers will demonstrate that the residents of Peoria and vicinity had a fair representation in the public affairs of both Pike and Fulton Counties.

At the first election in Fulton County Abner Eads, of Peoria, was elected Sheriff under the following amusing circumstances. The election was to be held at the house of Ossian M. Ross, the father of the late Lewis W. Ross, and General Leonard F. Ross, near the present site of Lewistown, which afterwards became the county seat. The few voters at Fort Clark and vicinity must either go there to vote or not vote at all. They had a candidate for Sheriff, Abner Eads, and were especially interested in that election. They mustered in full force, laid in a full supply of commissary stores, went down the Illinois River to the mouth of Spoon River, near Havana, then up Spoon River to the nearest point to the place of election, two canoes being sufficient to accommodate them. They went equipped as the custom of the times demanded. When the votes were counted it was found that Eads had one majority over Ossian Ross, the other candidate.

Ross contested the election on the ground that some of those who had voted for Eads were not residents of the county, that they lived on the east side of the river and consequently were not entitled to vote in Fulton County; and on the further ground that Eads could not write, and was therefore incompetent to discharge the duties of the office. To obviate this difficulty, it is said, Eads took lessons in penmanship from Jesse Wood, who was a preacher and also a teacher, and in about four weeks advanced far enough to write his name. But this charge must be a slander, for it has just been seen that before that time he had been appointed and commissioned by the Governor as one of the Justices of the Peace of Pike County.

Judge Reynolds, a brother of John Reynolds, afterwards Governor of the State, was Presiding Judge and ordered depositions to be taken as evidence in the case, and the log cabin office of John Hamlin, Justice of the Peace at Fort Clark, was selected as the place where they should be taken. His associate, H. R. Coulter, sat with him. Great excitement prevailed. The contest was not sustained and Eads was declared elected Sheriff, and served his term.

By an act of the Legislature of January 13, 1825, Schuyler, Adams, Hancock, Warren, Henry, Putnam and Knox Counties were formed. The boundaries of Knox County were as follows: "Beginning at a point where the township line between townships 8 and 9 north intersects the meridian line, thence east to the range line between sections 4 and 5 east, thence up said line to the northeast corner of township 12 north, 4 east, thence west to the meridian line, thence to the place of beginning." These boundaries include all of the present county of Knox, with the exception of the northern tier of townships.

The boundaries of Putnam County were as follows: "Beginning at the point where the township line between 11 and 12 north touches the Illinois River [the northeastern corner of the present county of Peoria.—Ed.], thence up the said river to the south fork, thence up the same (Kankakee) to the Indiana line, thence up said line to the northeast corner of the State, thence west on the north boundary of the State to range line between townships 4 and 5 east, thence south on said range line to the line between townships 11 and 12 north, thence to the place of beginning." These boundaries include all that part of the State north of Peoria County and east of its west line if extended to the northern boundaries of the State, and lying west and north of the Illinois and Kankakee Rivers.

Henry County began at the northwest corner of Knox County, where the township line between townships 12 and 13 north intersect the meridian line, thence east to the line between ranges 4 and 5 east (the present westerly boundary of Stark County), thence north to the north boundary of the State, thence west on said State boundary to the said meridian line, thence down said meridian line to the place of beginning. All that part of the State lying west of Henry County thus described and north of Warren County was organized as Mercer County. By the same act all that tract of country north of Schuyler and Hancock Counties was attached to Schuyler County for county purposes until otherwise ordered, that embraced in Knox and Henry Counties still remaining attached to Fulton County.

On the same day with the passage of the foregoing act, Peoria County was created under the provisions of an act entitled "An Act to form a new county out of the country in the vicinity of Fort Clark," which provides as follows:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the people of the State of Illinois, represented in the General Assembly, That all that tract of country within the following boundaries, to-wit: Beginning where the line between towns 11 and 12 north intersects the Illinois River; thence west with said line to the line between ranges 4 and 5 east; thence south with said line to the line between towns 7 and 8; thence east to the line between ranges 5 and 6; thence south to the middle of the main channel of the Illinois River; thence up said middle of the main channel to the place of beginning, shall constitute a county to be called Peoria.

Section 2 provided "That all that tract of country north of town 20, and west of the Third Principal Meridian, formerly part of Sangamon County, be, and is hereby attached to said county of Peoria, for county purposes. Provided, however, The citizens of the attached part of said county are not to be taxed for the erection of public buildings, or for the purchase of the quarter-section hereinafter mentioned."

"Section 3. Be it further enacted, That the county seat of said county of Peoria shall be established on the northeast quarter of section 9, town 8 north, range 8 east, and that the County Commissioners of said county are hereby authorized to purchase said quarter-section of land of the United States as provided for by the law of Congress."

"Section 4. Be it further enacted, That on the first day of March next (1825), an election shall be held at the house of William Eads, at which time there shall be elected one Sheriff, one Coroner and three County Commissioners for said county, which election shall, in all respects, be conducted agreeably to the provisions of the law now in force regulating elections. Provided, That the qualified voters present may select from among their number three competent electors to act as judges of said election, who shall appoint two qualified voters to act as clerks."

"Section 5. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Clerk of Sangamon County to give public notice in said Peoria County and the attached part, at least ten days previous to the election to be held on the first Monday in March next; and in case there should be no Clerk, then the Sheriff of said county shall give notice, as aforesaid, of the time and place of holding the election."

Section 6 provided, That the county of Peoria should receive two hundred dollars out of the public treasury, as full compensation for their proportion of non-resident land tax, in the same way as the county of Pike might or could do under the act entitled An Act amending an act entitled an act providing for the valuation of lands and other property, and laying a tax thereon, approved February 15, 1821.

Section 7 provided, That the said county of Peoria and the attached part of said county mentioned in section 2 [the portion detached from Sangamon.—Ed.] should vote with the county of Sangamon for Representative and Senator to the General Assembly.

Section 8 declared, That all that tract of country north of said Peoria County, and of the Illinois and Kankakee Rivers, be, and the same is hereby attached to said county, for all county purposes." This did not include any of the newly formed counties of Knox, Henry, Warren or Mercer.

From this enactment it would appear (somewhat contrary to the general belief) that the present county of Cook, with its great metropolis, had never come within the jurisdiction of Peoria County, because Putnam County included the same territory, and was created on the same day by another act of the General Assembly. But, it must be observed that the policy of the State then seemed to be to first lay off the territory into counties, or parts of counties, and to attach them for the time being to some organized county, for county purposes, until the regular organization should take place. So it appears that the counties of Warren and Mercer, which had formerly been attached to Pike, were for a time attached to Schuyler for county purposes, while Knox and Henry still remained attached to Fulton. That which became attached to Peoria County was that part of Sangamon north of town 20 and west of the Third Principal Meridian, and all the territory north and west of the Illinois and Kankakee Rivers, and east of the line which divides ranges 4 and 5 east of the Fourth Principal Meridian. By an act of the Legislature of 1820 the counties of Warren and Mercer were attached to Peoria County, while Knox and Henry never came under its jurisdiction. These circumstances afford the reason why, in laying out roads, the commissioners of Peoria County never presumed to go further east than the Third Principal Meridian, nor west the entire distance to the Mississippi, but only to the Third Principal Meridian in the direction of an objective point to the east, or as far as their jurisdiction extended toward the lead mines or some point on the Mississippi. So it was that, although what is now the great city of Chicago was embraced within the territory set off to Putnam County, for six years it remained attached to Peoria County for county purposes, and all its county affairs were administered in Peoria. So also all that territory north of Hancock and west of the Fourth Principal Meridian was for a time attached to Peoria County, although the counties of Knox and Henry lay between. That portion of Sangamon County which was detached therefrom and attached to Peoria County embraced the three northern tiers of townships in Mason County, the northern tier of Logan County, the western tier of McLean County, all of Tazewell County, about two-thirds of Woodford County, about one-half of Marshall County, and all of the present county of Putnam except one township.

Immediately upon the passage of the act incorporating the county its citizens proceeded to organize it by the election of officers. Although the law under which the organization took place required the first election to be held on the first day of March, 1825, at the house of William Eads, yet because a subsequent section required the notice of election to be given for the first Monday in March, the said election did not take place until the 7th day of March, 1825, at which time Samuel Fulton was chosen for the office of Sheriff; William Phillips, Coroner; and William Holland, Nathan Dillon and Joseph Smith, County Commissioners.

The County Commissioners' Court was organized on the next day, when Norman Hyde was appointed clerk of said body. The act creating the county was approved on the 13th day of January, 1825, and, between that day and the 18th day of the same month, the same Norman Hyde had been chosen by both branches of the Legislature as Judge of the Probate Court of Peoria County, so that at the time of his election as Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court he was entitled to a commission from Governor Edward Coles for the office of Judge.

The following named persons were appointed and commissioned as Justices of the Peace for Peoria County at the date of its organization, January 12, 1825, namely: Thomas Camlin, George Ash, John Phillips, Stephen French, Nathan Dillon, Isaac Perkins, Jacob Wilson, Joseph Moffat, Austin Crocker, John Kinzie.

The officers provided by the law having been duly qualified, jurisdiction over the affairs of the county became vested in them, and from that time they have been duly administered by their legal successors.

CHAPTER XII.

STRUGGLE FOR THE COUNTY SEAT.

Aside from the importance of the question of making Illinois a slave State, that which most concerned Peoria County from a political standpoint was that, at the election of 1824, Edward Coles had been elected Governor of the State, Daniel P. Cook, a son-in-law of Governor Edwards, had been re-elected to Congress (there being then only one Representative from the State), and the General Assembly then elected was to elect two United States Senators, which election resulted in the choice of John McLean and Elias Kent Kane. The Presidential election of 1824 had resulted in no choice by the electors, and the election was thrown into the House of Representatives, where Mr. Cook cast the vote of Illinois in favor of the successful candidate, Mr. John Quincy Adams. From that time antagonisms began to grow up among the leading men of the country, which finally culminated in the formation of the Whig and Democratic parties.

Congress had passed an act providing that new counties might locate their county seats upon public lands subject to pre-emption and purchase, upon the same terms that private parties might enter them. The act of the General Assembly creating the county of Peoria had located the County Seat upon government land, and it became one of the first duties of the Commissioners to secure the title. But in so doing they met with unexpected objections from the officials of the Land Office for three reasons; first, the quarter section, being a fractional one, was not subject to entry; second, the existence of the French claims; third, James Latham had set up a counter claim under a pretended private entry. This contest continued for a period of nine years, and its successful issue reflects the highest credit upon the successive boards of County Commissioners and other citizens of Peoria who lent them their assistance.

The history of this important contest is best told by the actors in the following original documents.

The Board of County Commissioners, at a special term held on the 16th day of April, 1825, ordered that Nathan Dillon, Esq., one of the members of the said board, be authorized to make application to the Register of the Land Office at Springfield for the right of pre-emption of said quarter section for the purpose of establishing the County Seat of Peoria County thereon, according to said act of Congress.

In pursuance of this order application was made to the Land Office at Springfield for leave to enter the said quarter section, which said application was refused, because it was not subject to entry under the law. A memorial was thereupon addressed to the President of the United States relative to the matter, signed by the Commissioners and other citizens, which was referred by the President to the Land Office, and, on the 23d day of November, 1825, the Register and Receiver at Springfield were instructed by the Commissioner as follows:

"Gent. A memorial from the Comrs. for the county of Peoria and other citizens thereof stating that application had been made to your office to enter the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sect. 9, 8 N. 8 E. for the Seat of Justice for said County, and that entry had been refused because said quarter section was a fractional one, was addressed to the President & lately referred to this office by him, with instructions to admit the entry if the objection stated is the only one to its admission. If there are others you will report the facts in relation to the case to this office.

"I am, etc.,

"GEO. GRAHAM."

We are not informed that Daniel P. Cook had used his influence with the President in behalf of the citizens of Peoria, but we know the President had good reason for favoring any of Mr. Cook's constituents.

On the 6th day of March, 1826, it was ordered by the County Commissioners' Court that the Clerk transmit to the President of the United States the thanks of the court for his prompt compliance with the prayer of their petition for leave to enter the fractional quarter section of land on which to locate their County Seat, and also that he be directed to inform the President that his kind interference in their behalf had not produced the desired result. Two days thereafter the court made the following entry:

"Ordered that John Dixon be and he is hereby authorized in behalf of this court to make application officially to the Register and Receiver of the Land Office at Springfield for a written statement of the obstacles and objections (if any exist) which prevent the entry by the Commissioners of said County of the North East fractional quarter of Sec. 9 of Township 8 North Range 8 East of the fourth principal meridian, on which the Seat of Justice for Peoria County is located, pursuant to an act of Congress, by Statute of this State. And as it is anticipated that some objections may arise on account of the exact quantity of land in said fractional quarter not being accurately known, he, the said John Dixon, is further authorized after procuring from the Land Officers aforesaid a statement of all the said objections, etc., to proceed to St. Louis and apply to the Surveyor General for a plat of the survey of the above mentioned quarter Section, and if no plat can be furnished without a re-survey, to contract with the Surveyor General for that purpose, at the expense of this county, for a speedy completion of said survey, and request a plat thereof to be immediately made out, properly authenticated and forwarded to the said Register and Receiver.

"And the said John Dixon is further authorized, if no objections are made, to enter the said fraction in behalf of and for said county of Peoria."

This order was made just one year after the said board had been organized. It fully demonstrated that they fully understood the business in hand, as well as a determination to push it to a successful issue.

At a special term held on the 2d day of May, 1826, all the members being present, it was "Ordered that John Dixon be and he is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the county of Peoria one hundred and eighty-four dollars 62½ cents by him to be paid to the Receiver of the Land Office at Springfield, in payment of the N. E. fractional qr. Sec. No. 9 Town 8 North Range 8 East of the fourth principal (meridian), and that he be authorized to issue orders on the Treasurer to such persons as shall loan the said county the above money, at any interest not exceeding 25 per cent. per annum until paid."

It is said that when all else was about to fail the citizens, either at this time or at some other, made up a "pony purse" to help the Commissioners to make the entry.

Prior to the passage of the act incorporating the county of Peoria, Judge James Latham had come into the occupancy of a house on said quarter section, which circumstance led to a great deal of trouble in the permanent location of the County Seat. On the 12th day of July, 1826, said County Commissioners' Court made the following order with reference thereto:

"Ordered that Isaac Perkins, William Woodson and Henry Thomas be summoned by the Sheriff to be and appear at the next regular term of this court, on the first day of said term, to assess the damage, if any incurred, by James Latham in consequence of being deprived of his claim to the land on which the County Seat of Peoria County is located, the improvement of which was purchased previous to the location of said County Seat." Nothing, however, resulted from this movement, but, Latham having shortly afterward died, his heirs prosecuted their claim in the Circuit Court.

On the same day it was ordered "that the Treasurer pay John Dixon $34.85 for going to St. Louis by order of the Court, and for postage and clerk hire up to that date, and going to Springfield to enter the land for the County Seat." From this it appears that John Dixon had performed the duties assigned him by the previous orders.

On the 5th day of December, following, the Commissioners then being Nathan Dillon, William Holland and John Hamlin (an election having taken place the preceding August), the following order was made:

"That William S. Hamilton be authorized to act as counsel on behalf of this court for the purpose of obtaining the title to the land on which the County Seat of Peoria County is located, with full power for said purpose, except that of commencing suit at law. Also that the Clerk of this court inform said Hamilton that compensation will be allowed only in event of their obtaining said title." This William S. Hamilton was a son of the distinguished Alexander

Robert M. Goal

Hamilton, and his name repeatedly appears in connection with the history of Peoria.

On the 6th day of January, 1827, the Commissioner of the Land Office at Washington addressed the following letter to Colonel William McKee, Surveyor General at St. Louis, Mo.:

"Sir:—The act of Congress passed on the 3d of March, 1823, confirming certain claims to lots in the village of Peoria, in the State of Illinois [the French claims.—Ed.], declares that it shall be 'the duty of the Surveyor of Public Lands of the U. S. for that District to cause a survey to be made of the several lots, and to designate on a plat thereof, the lot confirmed and set apart to each claimant, and forward the same to the Secy. of the Treasury.' As the plat above required to be made has not been received, and a Mr. James Latham, having entered the N. E. fr. $\frac{1}{4}$ 9, 8 N. 8 E. of the 4th P. M. under a 'Vincennes pre-emption,' I will thank you to inform me if the survey of the village has been made, and if it has, to furnish me with a copy of the survey, exhibiting the connection between it & the adjacent public surveys. I am, etc.,

"GEO. GRAHAM.

"P. S.—It is presumed that the Reqr. at Edwardsville who acted as Commr. for the settlement of these claims furnished Gen. Rector with a copy of his report on the subject; if he did you can obtain a copy from the Reqr. Office at that place."

The nature of the Latham claim, here called a Vincennes pre-emption, is not fully understood, nor is it deemed important to inquire into it.

The matter then rested for some time until after the election of August 4, 1828, when the County Commissioners' Court, consisting of the following persons, George Sharp, Isaac Egman and Francis Thomas, addressed to the Hon. Elias Kent Kane and John McLean, Senators, and Joseph Duncan, who had succeeded Daniel P. Cook as Representative in Congress from the State of Illinois, a memorial setting forth in minute detail the whole situation, with their reasons in support of the claim of the county, and asking them to use their influence with the President to induce him to allow the entry to be made in the name of the county, or, in case that could not be done, that they endeavor to have a special act of Congress passed to afford the desired relief. In the same memorial they also called attention to the great need of a Land Office in the Military Tract.

On the 28th of January, 1830, George E. Graham, Commissioner of the Land Office, addressed to Senator Kane the following letter:

"Sir:—I return the letter of Messrs. Hyde & Stillman enclosed in your letter of the 26th inst.

"Upon examination it appears that in 1825 the Commissioners for the county of Peoria made application to the Land Officers at Springfield to enter the N. E. frac. $\frac{1}{4}$ of S. 9 T. 8 R. 8 E. under the provisions of the act of 26th of May, 1824, granting pre-emption to certain counties for their Seats of Justice (Land Laws, page 869) which, being refused by these officers on the ground of the tract being a fractional quarter section, they memorialized the President on the subject, and, under his instructions at that time, had they entered and paid for the land, there would have been no difficulty in the case, but they having failed to make such a payment, that tract was entered in November, 1826, by James Latham under a pre-emption certificate, granted by the Register at Vincennes under the 2d section of the act of the 11th of May, 1820 (Land Laws p. 778), and payment in full made to the Receiver and regularly entered in the returns of those officers to this office. The letter of the Register to this office that covered this entry by Latham also enclosed a protest against it by William S. Hamilton as attorney of the County Commissioners.

"In consequence of the belief entertained at this office that that fractional Section included the lots which had been confirmed to certain individuals at Peoria by the act of the 3d of March, 1823 [the French claims.—Ed.], and that therefore it could not be legally granted to either the County Commissioners or Mr. Latham, the Register was informed in January, 1827, that this office, not being in possession of a survey of those confirmed lots, could not decide upon the rights of the respective parties until it was ascertained that there was no interference between those lots and that quarter section. A survey has not yet been forwarded to this office of the confirmed Peoria Claims, and until one is received the Case will have to be suspended."

On the next day Senator Kane addressed to Stephen Stillman, of Peoria, the following letter:

"Dear sir:—I have delayed to answer you until I could hear in answer to the application of your County Commissioners something satisfactory. I have waited, however, only to be informed of the embarrassments which surround the subject. I send all the papers received from the Comr. of Gen. Land Office, which gives as full a view of the matter as can be obtained.

Present me respectfully to the Commissioners with the assurance that it will at all times give me pleasure to attend to their requests whether made in an official or individual character.

"With great respect, your obt. sl.,

"E. K. KANE.

S. STILLMAN, ESQ."

On the 3d of March, 1830, the County Commissioners' Court made the following order:

"Ordered that Stephen Stillman be and he is hereby appointed a Special Agent on the part of the county of Peoria for the purpose of obtaining for the use of the county the right of soil to the North East fractional quarter of Section No. 9, in Town Eight North and Range Eight East—with full power to act for the county in the Name & in behalf of County Commissioners, and that he be particularly instructed & required to use his utmost exertions and all necessary means to procure if possible the title to said quarter Section, as it is considered of the utmost importance that it should be obtained immediately.

"The Commissioners on the part of the county do hereby agree to accept any part of said quarter Section (be the same more or less) that may remain after deducting that which is appropriated by the law of Congress for Peoria Claims, in lieu of a full quarter allowed by law to each new county.

"The County Commissioners recommend that a special act of Congress be passed, granting to the county of Peoria the remaining part of the fractional quarter section after deducting the Peoria Claims, as aforesaid, let there be more or less."

On the 5th day of February, 1831, Elijah Hayward, Commissioner of the Land Office, addressed the following letter to Senator Kane:

"Sir:—In reply to your inquiry respecting the entry of the village of Peoria, I beg leave to refer you to the letters to you from this office of the 28th of January & 5th of May, 1830, and to state that as the Commissioners of the county of Peoria did not enter the fractional quarter, at the time they might have done so, under the instructions to the Land Officers, and as there now exist conflicting claims under different laws, to the same land, no entry of it by the County Commissioners will be authorized without special legislative provisions on the subject. With great respect, Sir."

On the 7th day of March, following, the County Commissioners' Court, which then consisted of John Hamlin, George Sharp and Stephen French, made the following order:

"Ordered that Abner Eads be and he is hereby authorized to make a tender of money to the Register & Receiver of the Land Office at Springfield, sufficient to purchase, at the rate of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, the fractional quarter section on which the County Seat is now located, being the N. E. of S. 9, T. 8 N. R. 8 E. in behalf and in the name of the County Commissioners of Peoria County, for the use of said county, and obtain from said Land Office a certificate of entry that a patent may be speedily obtained if possible. Said Eads is authorized to assure the Register & Receiver of the Land Office, that the Com. of Peoria County for said county are willing to accept that part of the fractional quarter section before named which may remain after deducting whatever portion may be set apart by the act of Congress granting Peoria Claims to the Old French settlers as surveyed by Wm. L. Hamilton in 1823. And said Eads is hereby authorized to call on the Treasurer for all specie or U. S. paper said Treasurer may have on hand and borrow the balance or a sufficient sum to purchase said fractional qr. Section."

On the 14th day of March, 1831, there was addressed to the Register of the Land Office at Springfield a communication supposed to be from William S. Hamilton, but by whom it was signed does not appear. It forms one of the links in the chain of the history of this remarkable contest. It contains a full recital of all the facts accompanied with arguments in support of the claim of the county, but because of its great length it is omitted.

On the 3d day of July, 1832, the following orders were made:

"Ordered that John Coyle & Aquilla Wren, two of the members of this Court, receive two hundred dollars from the County Treasurer for the purpose of making a tender of the same in the Land Office in payment for the fraction of land upon which the Town of Peoria is located."

"Ordered that the Treasurer furnish the said foregoing Coyle & Wren with twenty-five dollars to bear their expenses on the foregoing order."

It seems that in the meantime action had been taken by Congress in the line of that indicated in the memorial of the County Commissioners to the Senators and Representatives in Congress, and that the Land Office at Quincy had been established.

At the September term, 1832, Aquilla Wren, John Coyle and Edwin S. Jones being the County Commissioners, it was ordered that the Treasurer pay Aquilla Wren nine dollars and John Coyle four dollars and fifty cents as compensation for their journey to Quincy tendering money for the said land. On the day following the following order was made:

"Ordered that John Coyle, one of the members of this Court, receive of the County Treasurer two hundred and twenty dollars and repair with the same to the Land Office at Quincy, to make payment for the fraction of land upon which the County Seat is located. If the necessary papers or returns have not been furnished by the Surveyor General in that case the said Coyle is directed to go to the Surveyor General's Office in order to procure the papers that may be wanted; he is also directed to keep a bill of his expenses."

On the second day of March, 1833, Congress acted upon the matter and passed an act authorizing the entry to be made.

On the 24th day of June, 1833, John M. Moore, acting Commissioner of the Land Office, addressed the following letter to Isaac Waters, Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court:

"Sir:—Your letter of the 5th ulto., has been received and I enclose herewith for your information a copy of a letter of this date to the Land Officers at Springfield, Ills., in relation to the entry of the fractional quarter Section in which Peoria is situated, under the provisions of the act of Congress of the 2nd of March last."

And on the same day the same officer addressed the following letter to the Register and Receiver of the Land Office at Springfield:

"Gentlemen:—Under the provisions of the act of Congress of the 2nd of March last 'to authorize the County Comrs. of the County of Peoria in the State of Illinois to enter a fractional quarter section of land for a Seat of Justice and for other purposes,' you will permit those Commissioners to enter & pay for the fractional quarter Section mentioned in said act.

"The receipts, monthly returns and the certificate of purchase must all designate the entry as being made under this act, and the Certf. of Purchase must conform to the proviso of the 1st Section of the act by declaring that 'the said purchase shall not be so construed as to interfere with the claim or claims of any other person or persons to the said fractional quarter section,' and at the time of making the entry the Commissioners should deposit with you for transmission a duly executed instrument of writing stating that in making such entry they expressly exclude therefrom any lands or lot, within the limits of the fractional quarter Section, belonging to or lawfully claimed by another person or persons."

Here ended the contest between the county of Peoria and the government of the United States with reference to the location of the County Seat of Peoria County. A patent in due form of law was afterward issued for the land so entered, and it became and ever since has continued to be the County Seat of Peoria County.

But the county had not yet settled its controversy with the heirs of Judge Latham. On the 28th day of May, 1834, there was commenced in the Circuit Court of Peoria County an action of ejectment, which upon the records bears the modest title of John Doe vs. Richard Roe, both of whom were purely fictitious persons, but the action was brought according to the law and established forms of actions of ejectment then in vogue, and the perusal of the record would be interesting to any lawyer of the present day.

The suit was brought nominally to recover two lots in the town of Peoria as laid off by the County Commissioners, but really to settle the title to the whole quarter section of land.

At the October term, 1834, Mr. Hamlin filed his plea of "not guilty" and thereupon the parties agreed to waive a jury and to let the Court decide it upon an agreed state of facts, which was then signed by counsel for both parties and filed as a part of the record. And the Court, after considering the same, rendered a judgment for the defendant and that he recover of the plaintiff his costs about his suit in that behalf expended and the said plaintiff in mercy, etc.

An appeal was then prayed to the Supreme Court, which was allowed.

On the 25th day of November, 1834, the County Commissioners' Court ordered that Lewis Bigelow be authorized to take any measures he might deem expedient to hasten the procuring of the patent from the United States for the fraction upon which the town of Peoria is located. This he did and was allowed compensation therefor.

On the 17th day of November, 1834, Mr. Hamlin, who was then in Springfield, addressed to the County Commissioners of Peoria County the following important letter:

"Gentlemen:—I have this day been able to effect a compromise with the Lathams in the suit to recover our town. They have withdrawn their entry at the Land Office, given up their certificate of entry, and taken their money; and also withdrawn the suit now pending. I have given them my notes for seven hundred dollars as you will perceive by the receipts herewith enclosed. $500 is to be paid to them in six mos. and the other two hundred in twelve.—You will perceive the arrangement is much less than what I was limited at.

"As I have made myself responsible for the payment of the money, I wish the Court to pass orders in my favor for that amount and payable at the time these notes are due to enable me to meet the payment of the same. Say one order for $500 to be paid on the 17th of May, 1835, and one of $200 to be paid on the 17th of Nov., 1835; I was not able to get them to relinquish up the bond they held for the two lots. Richard & Philip Latham, who I saw would not take any responsibility on their part on account of the other heirs; if it should be thought expedient to give them anything for their claim to those two lots it can be done yet, but the grand obstacle in the way of improvement is now settled and people can now make investments with perfect safety; I saw all the papers at the Land Office cancelled and given up. If Mr. Waters has not yet made out a transcript of the docket he need not do it."

This letter was accompanied by the following document signed by Stephen T. Logan, attorney for the Latham heirs:

"John Hamlin has this day executed to Richard Latham for the use of the heirs of James Latham his note for five hundred dollars payable in six months, also for one hundred dollars payable in twelve months, also at the request of said Lathams his note to S. T. Logan for one hundred dollars payable in twelve months, in all amounting to seven hundred dollars, on a compromise of a suit brought by said Latham Heirs against said Hamlin & as a compromise by which Lathams are to withdraw in the Land Office at Springfield their entry on the fractional quarter Section on which the Town of Peoria Stands."

On the 5th day of December, 1834, the County Commissioners' Court of Peoria County entered the following orders:

"Ordered that the Treasurer pay John Hamlin five hundred dollars on the 17th day of May, 1835, as compensation for a note for the said amount due at the said 17th May to the heirs of Judge Latham as a compromise of a law suit, etc."

"Ordered that the Treasurer pay John Hamlin two hundred dollars on the 17th day of November A. D. 1835, as compensation for a note given him to the heirs of Judge Latham completing the payment of the compromise on the law suit, etc."

"The $700 of the two last orders is the price of the compromise with the said heirs of Judge Latham relinquishing their claim and withdrawing their entry at the Land Office for Peoria Town fraction."

This ended the long controversy for the County Seat of Peoria County. The County Commissioners to whom the people of Peoria County are indebted for this splendid success, with their respective terms of service, are as follows:

CHAPTER XIII.

GOVERNMENT OF THE COUNTY BY THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

During the period of this struggle for the County Seat the County Commissioners were not dilatory in setting all departments of county affairs upon firm foundations. On the next day after their election (March 8, 1825), the Commissioners so elected, namely: Nathan Dillon, of Mackinaw Point; Joseph Smith, of Farm Creek; and William Holland, of Peoria, met at the house of Joseph Ogee, (1) situated below the ferry landing, took the necessary oaths of office, and then and there proceeded to transact the business of the county. Their first order was to appoint Norman Hyde as Clerk, although he then had in his possession or, at least, was entitled to a commission as Judge of the Probate Court. They then appointed Aaron Hawley as County Treasurer and named the County Seat "PEORIA."

The powers of the County Commissioners' Court were of a varied character, mostly ministerial. The body was, however, denominated a court, and its proceedings were conducted in many respects as a court, being opened by proclamation, and its records being kept in the same manner as those of a court of record. They had power to raise revenue for county purposes by levying taxes upon taxable property, to license and to exact license fees from the keepers of dram-shops, taverns, ferries, toll-bridges and retailers of merchandise; to lay out roads, to build bridges, to erect county buildings, to fix the boundaries of election precincts and to appoint judges of the same; to establish the boundaries of road districts, to appoint supervisors over the same, and to appoint trustees of school lands of the several townships.

They then levied its first county tax of one-half of one per cent. upon the taxable property of the county.

At their next session an important duty devolving upon the Commissioners was the selection of twenty-four discreet and reputable persons to serve as Grand Jurors at the approaching term of the Circuit Court, to be held in the month of June following, and the following named persons were ordered to be summoned by the Sheriff, namely: William Eads, Abner Eads, Alva Moffatt, Elijah Hyde, Noah Beacham, Sr. (Beauchamp?), William Wright, John Ridgeman, Robert Berrisford (Beresford?), Josiah Fulton, Thomas Camblin, John Phillips, George Ish, David Matthews, Jacob Wilson, Elisha Fish, Isaac Perkins, Nathaniel Cromwell, Walter Dillon, William Davis, Alexander McNaughton, George Sharp, Austin Crocker, Augustus Langworthy, Allen Dougherty.

A comparison of this list with that of the taxable inhabitants given on a former page, will show that this intended Grand Jury was to be drawn from a territory extending from Fox River to the Mackinaw.

At this session the following named persons were appointed to the office of Constable, namely: Reuben Bratton (of Ten Mile), Absalom Dillon (of Mackinaw Point), Daniel Like (of Peoria), and George Harlan, of La Salle Prairie.

The following named persons were also selected as petit jurors: Stephen French, Joseph Ogee, Abner Cooper, George Love, Joseph O'Brien, Elias P. Avery, Thomas Dillon, Jesse Dillon, Seth Wilson, John Klein, George Klein, Stephen Carle and James Walker, to which list the following were added at the ensuing June session, namely: Horace Crocker, Noah Beacham, Jr. (Beauchamp?), Aquila Moffatt, Henry Neely, William Smith, Charles Love, John Sharp, William Barker, John Cooper, David Hukey and Philip Latham.

Norman Hyde having entered upon his duties as Judge of the Probate Court, resigned his office as Clerk and John Dixon was appointed in his stead. The former was allowed $12.50 for services rendered and for stationery furnished during his incumbency. Rivers Cormack was appointed to take the census, but, he having declined the appointment, John L. Bogardus was at a subsequent session appointed in his stead.

The court had power to appoint Constables, but could only recommend to the Governor suitable persons for appointment as Justices of the Peace. The first four Justices, Stephen French, Jacob Wilson, John Phillips and Nathan Dillon, were appointed immediately after the passage of the act creating the county, and, during that year, three others were added, upon the recommendation of the court, namely: John Dixon, of Peoria; John Kinzie, of Chicago; and John L. Bogardus, of Peoria.

At the July session Hiram M. Curry, Frederick A. Countryman and Elijah Hyde were appointed Constables, and at the September term Archibald Clyborne was appointed to the same office at Chicago. The court continued to make recommendations for appointment as Justices and to appoint Constables during the succeeding year, but the Legislature of 1827, having made both of these offices elective, the court was thereafter relieved of the duty of either appointment or recommendation.

At the December term the financial condition of the county was exhibited in the account of Samuel Fulton, Sheriff, which is as follows:

Dr.	To amount of taxes as returned by Assessor, including twenty dollars received from Clerk for tavern license	$339 15
Cr.	By amount of bad debts..	$ 29 90
	By County orders and percentage on same.....	105 04
	By State paper.....	46 50
	By State paper, including interest thereon.....	21 60
	By $33.45 in specie, being equal in State paper (1).....	66 90
	By State paper.....	10 21—$280 15

At this term the county was divided into three election precincts. "The Chicago Precinct" to contain all that part of the county east of the mouth of the La Page River where it empties its waters into the Aux Plain; the elections to be held at the Agency House or "Cobweb Hall," and Abner (Alexander?) Wolcott, John Kinzie and J. B. Baubcin to be Judges at all general and special elections.

"Peoria Precinct" to contain all that tract of country north and west of the Illinois River and [east of the river.—Ed.] north of township twenty-four and west of the Third Principal Meridian, the elections to be held at the Clerk's office and Stephen French, Abner Eads and John Phillips to be Judges.

"Mackinaw Precinct" to contain the residue of the county, the elections to be held at the house of Jesse Dillon, and Isaac Perkins, William Eads and Thomas Dillon to be Judges. The Mackinaw precinct was the smallest, territorially, of the three, doubtless for the reason it had a greater population.

At the March term, 1826, another election precinct was created called the "Fox River Precinct," containing all that district of country north of Senachwine Creek, and the River Despage, the elections to be held at the house of Jesse Walker, near the junction of the Illinois and Fox Rivers, Aaron Hawley, Henry Allen and James Walker to be the Judges.

At the June session, 1826, another precinct was added, known as the "Fever River Precinct," out of the counties of Warren and Mercer [embracing the territory west of the Fourth Principal Meridian and north of Hancock County to the State line of Wisconsin.—Ed.] and the attached parts thereof, the elections to be held at the house of Dr. Garland.

Augustus Langworthy, John Hamlin and Archibald Allen were appointed first "fence viewers" and Stephen French and Isaac Perkins first "overseers of the poor."

At the September session (1826) among other allowances of a similar character appear the following: To John Kinzie, John B. Beaubien and B. Caldwell, Judges, and Archibald Clyborne, Clerk, each $1, and to John K. Clark $16, for returning polls of the election held at Chicago in the preceding month of August, and to John Kinzie $1.50 for a ballot box for the same. This was the first election ever held in Chicago.

It will be borne in mind that the general elections for the State were then held in the month of August, while the election for President of the United States was, as now, held in the month of November. Regular changes in the membership of the County Commissioners' Court will therefore be noted at the September session, and it now appears that John Hamlin had taken the place of Joseph Smith.

Reference to the returns of the election show the following vote for County Commissioners: William Holland, 105; Nathan Dillon, 106; John Hamlin, 172; Stephen French, 101; Rivers Cormack, 81; Hiram M. Curry, 46; Gideon Hawley, 18;—the entire vote in the county (no returns having been received from Fox River Precinct) being 309, the highest vote for any office being 351 for Governor and 351 for State Senator.

At the December session the Sheriff made his second financial statement, as follows:

At a special meeting held in March, 1827, a tax of one-half of one per cent. was levied and George Sharp was appointed County Treasurer on a bond of $2,000, but by an order made at the April session it appears that John Birket was appointed to that office, but declined and Norman Hyde was appointed in his place.

At the June session a new election precinct was created called LaSalle Precinct, embracing all territory north of the south line of Township ten north, and south and west of Sand River, elections to be held at the house of Elias P. Avery, thus making Chicago Precinct to embrace all the territory north and east of Sand River, and Peoria Precinct to embrace all of Peoria County proper, south of the north line of Township nine north.

Simeon Crozier was appointed County Treasurer on a bond of $2,000.

At the June session, 1827, two new members of the Court, George Sharp and Henry Thomas, appeared and took their seats. What the occasion was for this change at an irregular time does not appear, but these two continued to serve in that capacity during the remainder of that year and all of the succeeding one.

At the October session it was ordered that State paper be paid to the treasurer at 75 cents on the dollar.

At the September session, 1828, Isaac Egman appeared as a new member, the court then consisting of George Sharp and Isaac Egman. Francis Thomas, Commissioner-elect, did not qualify until the December session. Orin Hamlin was the newly elected Sheriff. John Hamlin was appointed Treasurer and his bond fixed at $1,000. An election precinct called "Henderson Precinct" was established, embracing the same territory as the former one, Mercer and Warren Counties.

On May 2, 1829, John Hamlin declined the office of Treasurer and Henry B. Stillman was appointed under a bond of $1,000. After two failures to procure seals for the courts, Stillman finally succeeded in furnishing the county with three seals, one for the Circuit Court, one for the County Commissioners' Court and one for the Probate Court, for which at the September session, 1829, he was allowed $5.00 each. No mention is made in the record as to the style of mounting of these seals, if they had any, which is not at all probable if the story be true that is told of Isaac Waters, for some time Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court, of whom it is said he carried the seal in his vest pocket, and on one occasion by mistake offered it to the postmaster in payment for postage. (1)

At the March term, 1830, Isaac Waters was appointed Assessor, Comty Treasurer and Taker of Census, his bond to be in the sum of $1,000. At the same time John Dixon resigned the office of Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court and Stephen Stillman was appointed his successor.

At the June session Fox River Precinct was reorganized with the following boundaries: Commencing at the northeast boundary of the Military Land [near Bureau Junction.—Ed.] and including the country north and west of the Des Plain River as far north as the north line of Township thirty-four north, extending west as far as the east line of Jo Daviess County.

At the September session George Sharp, John Hamlin and Stephen French qualified as Commissioners in pursuance of an election held in the preceding month of August. Augustus Langworthy was allowed one dollar for the use of his horse to carry the abstract of votes to Fulton County, and Elisha Fulton was allowed $5 for carrying the same.

At the December session the Clerk was ordered to transmit to the Sheriff of Warren County the tax books of said county at the request of the County Commissioners' Court, in writing under date of September 30, 1830, and that the said Commissioners be requested to send the amount due Peoria County for assessing the property, $10, by mail as soon as convenient.

It would appear from this order that Warren County had but lately assumed the dignity of a fully organized county and had cut itself loose from the protectorate of Peoria.

Pierce Hawley was allowed $5 for making returns of election from Fox River Precinct.

At the April session, 1831, Resolved Cleveland appeared and took his seat as a member of the court in the place of George Sharp, whose place had become vacant by his death; and Isaac Waters was appointed Treasurer.

Cook County, Putnam County, Tazewell County, Warren County and all other counties over which Peoria County had exercised jurisdiction had become fully organized, and the Chicago, Fox River and Henderson Precincts, about this time, drop out of sight. The judges of election were thereafter appointed for those precincts only which were embraced within the county of Peoria proper, those existing in 1831 being Peoria, La Marsh and LaSalle Precincts.

At the December session John Coyle took his seat as a member of the court as successor of John Hamlin, who had resigned; a special election having been held to fill the vacancy, and at the March session, 1832, Aquilla Wren took his seat as successor of Stephen French, also resigned.

At the September session, 1832, John Coyle, Edward J. Jones and Aquila Wren appeared as members of the court in pursuance of the August election. Isaac Waters was allowed $1.50 for a record book for the court, and $7.00 for attending at Hennepin to canvass the votes for Senator and Representative. Jesse Walker was allowed $16.00 for bringing the election returns from Chicago in 1830.

At the March session, 1833, Seth Fulton was allowed $1.00 for the use of a room in which the Presidential election had been held. Orin Hamlin, Alvah and Aquila Moffatt were granted leave to erect a mill-dam on the southwest quarter Section thirteen, Township eight north, seven east. This was on the Kickapoo Creek, at the point where the Middle Road crosses the same, long known as the Monroe mill. Stephen Stillman was allowed $5.00 for the use of a room five days for that session.

The attention of the court now seems to have been largely occupied with the laying out of roads, licensing and regulating ferries and dram-shops, and in making preparations for the erection of county buildings, all of which will receive proper notice elsewhere. But it appears that Asahel Hale was appointed Treasurer in 1833, and again in 1834 and 1835, his bond under the last two appointments being $10,000. At the time of his reappointment, in March, 1835, he reported $5,560.37 as having passed through his hands, the largest amount by far the Treasurer had ever handled. The reason for this will appear from the fact that the county was then realizing considerable sums of money from the sale of town lots, which had been greatly delayed by reason of the contest described in the preceding chapter. This money was being expended in the purchase of material and in employing labor for the erection of the county buildings.

At the April session, 1835, the faithful services, which for years had been performed by Isaac Waters in behalf of the county, in various capacities, came to an end, and by an order of the court he was, on account of age, infirmity and imbecility of mind, removed from the office of Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court and the Sheriff was instructed to call upon him for the books, papers and other effects of his office. William Mitchell was appointed Clerk in his stead, to serve until the next term of the court, at which time he received the permanent appointment.

1) The old seal of the Circuit Court appears to have been a flat piece of metal like a coin; a piece of paper would be laid on the face of it and rubbed with lead to give the impression of the inscription, and this would be fastened to the official document by means of a large wafer.

Isaac Waters had also filled the office of Clerk of the Circuit Court from 1830. His incompetency having been brought to the notice of Governor Thomas Ford, then Circuit Judge of the District, that official by letter dated at Waterloo, July 13, 1835, notified Hon. Lewis Bigelow of his intention to appoint him Clerk of the Circuit Court at its next term, in the place of the said Isaac Waters, provided such appointment should prove acceptable to the people, and by the same communication he appointed Bigelow as Clerk pro tempore until the convening of the court, with authority to receive from Waters its records and seal. In pursuance of that appointment Lewis Bigelow took the oath of office on the 4th day of August, 1835, and acted in that capacity until the next term, when he received the regular appointment.

At the September session, 1834, John Coyle, Orin Hamlin and Andrew Thorpe constituted the court in pursuance of the election in August preceding. They continued in office until after the election August 1, 1836, when William J. Phelps, Aquila Wren and Samuel T. McKean were elected. These continued in office until August, 1838, when they were succeeded by Clark D. Powell, Smith Frye and Moses Harlan. The terms of office now became three years, one to be elected each year. This arrangement continued until the adoption of the constitution of 1848. During that period the following named persons were elected at the dates specified, to-wit: August, 1830, Clark D. Powell; January 10, 1840, William Hale, to fill the place of Moses Harlan, elected to the Legislature; August, 1840, Nathaniel Chapin; August 1, 1841, Smith Frye; August, 1842, Thomas P. Smith and Clementius Ewalt, one to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Smith Frye, elected Sheriff; August, 1843, William Dawson; August, 1844, Clementius Ewalt; August 4, 1845, Thomas P. Smith; August 3, 1846, Thomas Mooney; August 2, 1847, James L. Riggs; August 7, 1848, Joseph Ladd.

The great influx of population from 1835 onward created a necessity for a larger number of election districts. Accordingly at the June term, 1839, of the County Commissioners' Court the county was laid off into thirteen precincts, as follows:

No. 1 to consist of fractional Township 11 N. 9 E. (now Chillicothe) known as Senachewine Precinct, the election to be held at the house of William Dunlap in Chillicothe.

No. 2, Northampton, to consist of Township 11 N. 8 E. (now Hallock), the elections to be held at the house of Reuben B. Hamlin.

No. 3, Prince's Grove, to consist of Townships 11 N. 6 E. and 11 N. 7 E. (now Princeville and Akron), the elections to be held at the school-house at Prince's Grove.

No. 4, Rochester, to consist of Township 11 N. 5 E. (now Millbrook), the elections to be held at the school-house in Rochester.

No. 5, Charleston, to consist of Township 10 N. 5 E. and E. $\frac{1}{2}$ (properly W. $\frac{1}{2}$) of Township 10 N. 6 E. (that is to say all of Brinfield and the west half of Jubilee), the elections to be held at the house of Daniel Belcher in Charleston (now Brimfield).

No. 6, La Grange, to consist of Sections No. 1 to 24 in each of the Townships No. 9 N. 6 E. and 9 N. 7 E., the east half of Township 10 N. 6 E. and all of Township 10 N. 7 E. (that is to say, the north two-thirds of Townships Rosefield and Kickapoo, the east half of Jubilee, and all of Radnor), the elections to be held at the house of Lewis Coolidge.

No. 7, La Salle, to consist of Townships 10 N. 8 E. and 10 N. 9 E. (all of Medina and Rome), the elections to be held at the house of Jefferson Taliafero.

No. 8, Peoria, to consist of Sections 1 to 4, 9 to 12, 13 to 16, 21 to 24, 25 to 28, 33 to 36 in Township 8 N. 7 E.; Sections 25 to 28 and 32 to 36 in Townships 9 N. 7 E., and all of fractional Township 8 N. 8 E. and 9 N. 8 E. (that is to say, the east two-thirds of Limestone and eight Sections adjoining the same in the southeast corner of Kickapoo, and all of Peoria and Richwoods), the elections to be held at the Court House.

No. 9, Middle, to consist of Township 8 N. 6 E.; Sections 25 to 36 in Township 9 N. 6 E.; Sections 5 to 8, 17 to 20, 29 to 32 in Township 8 N. 7 E., and Sections 29 to 32 in Township 9 N. 7 E. (that is to say, all of Logan, the south one-third of Rosafeld, the west one-third of Limestone and four Sections in the southwest corner of Kickapoo), the elections to be held at the house of Thomas P. Smith [at Smithville.—Ed.].

No. 10, Harkness, to consist of Township

9 N. 5 E. (Elmwood), the elections to be held at the house of John Ewalt.

No. 11. Copperas, to consist of Township 8 N. 5 E. (Trivoli), the elections to be held at the house of Joseph Berry.

No. 12. LaMarsh, to consist of Township 7 N. 6 E. and 6 N. 6 E. (Timber), the elections to be held at the house of William Dufield.

No. 13. Lafayette, to consist of Township 7 N. 7 E. (Hollis), the elections to be held at the house of Francis Johnson.

At the March term, 1840, Township 10 N. 7 E. (Radnor) was constituted an election precinct to be called Penton, the elections to be held at the house of Alva Dunlap.

At the same term township 9 N. 8 E. (Richwoods) was constituted an election precinct by the name of Jackson, the elections to be held at the house of John Clifton.

At the September term, 1841, the name of LaMarsh Precinct was changed to Lancaster Precinct.

At the March term, 1842, Sections 31 and 32 in Township 11 N. 9 E. all of fractional 10 N. 9 E.; Sections 1, 2, 11 and 12, 13, 14, 23, 24, 25, 26 and 35 in Township 10 N. 8 E. (that is to say, the south tier of Chillicothe, all of Rome and one-third of Medina) were formed into a precinct called Rome, but at the June term, 1842, Sections 31 and 32, township 11 N. 9 E. were taken from Rome and re-attached to Senachewine.

At the June term, 1843, Sections 25 to 36 in Township 9 N. 7 E. and sections 1 to 17, 20 to 30 and 34 to 36 in township 8 N. 7 E. (that is to say, the south one-third of Kickapoo and all of Limestone, with the exception of five Sections in the southwest corner) were constituted a precinct to be known as the Limestone Precinct, the elections to be held at the house of James Jones.

This was the condition of the county when S. De Witt Drown published his map of the same in 1844. (See Peoria Directory 1844, p. 31.) Subsequently at the June term, 1847, Section 32, 8 N. 7 E., was taken from the Middle and added to the Limestone Precinct.

At the June term, 1848, the Rome and LaSalle Precincts were vacated and a new precinct called La Salle was constituted out of the following territory: Sections 1, 2, 3, E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of 4, E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of 9, all of 10 to 15, the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of 16, E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of 21, all of 22 to 27, E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of 28, E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of 33, all of 34 and 35, in Township 10 N. 8 E. and all of fractional Township 10 N. 9 E. (that is to say, all of Medina east of a line running through the center of Sections 4, 9, 16, 21, 28 and 33, and all of Rome), the elections to be held at the house of Thomas Mooney, subsequently in obedience to a vote of the people at the August election, changed to the house of Thomas B. Reed.

It does not clearly appear into what precinct the remainder of Township 10 N. 8 E. fell in consequence of this order, but it can make but little difference, inasmuch as two years later the Township organization was adopted, and a re-districting of the county took place, substantially as it exists at the present time. The County Commissioners' Court went out of existence with the adoption of the new constitution and for a short period the affairs of the county were administered by the County Court, consisting of the County Judge and two associates. At the adoption of the Township organization the government of the county was entirely changed.

A terrible epidemic of cholera having broken out in the summer of 1849, the Commissioners on July 11th granted the use of the three upper rooms in the Court House to the Board of Health of Peoria for a hospital for cholera patients of the city and county, also such beds and bedding as might be needed at the poor-house, the county to be at the expense of furnishing the sick with all necessary medical and hospital stores and provisions, as well as the expense of some one to take charge of the same as nurse. The rooms so set apart were used for the purpose indicated so long as the necessity existed.

A special term was held on September 3rd, at which, among other orders a contract was let to Alva Moffatt for coal to be furnished to the Court House and Jail for one year at five cents per bushel. Another special term was held from the 4th to the 6th of September, at which it was ordered that William Compher be authorized to procure the sum of $300 to be sent to Pittsburg for the purpose of paying for iron for the roof of the Jail. Then follow eight orders for the payment of bills rendered including three days service for the Commissioners, the Sheriff and Clerk at that term. This would indicate that all orders made at that term had been entered, but the record is not signed by the commissioners, nor is there any order of adjournment.

These were the last orders entered by William Mitchell as Clerk. Before the next meeting of the Commissioners, which occurred in less than three weeks thereafter, he was in his grave.

On the 15th of October, ensuing, it was ordered that the vacancy resulting from the death of William Mitchell on the 13th of the same month be filled by the appointment of Ralph Hamlin as Clerk pro tempore.

It might be inferred from this entry that Mitchell had died of cholera at Peoria. The fact was that he was stricken with that dread disease while in Chicago, and had partially recovered. He was brought home and suffered a relapse from the effects of which he died, much mourned by the entire community. He had been a faithful officer, had kept his records in elegant style, and to his methodical ways the people of the county are indebted for much information collated in this work. He was cut down in the prime of life and in the full vigor of manhood, having laid down his pen in the midst of an unfinished record never to be completed.

The County Commissioners' Court held its last session on the 23d day of November, 1849, at which time as a testimonial of their appreciation of the faithful services of their late clerk, they ordered that certain notes held by the County against William Mitchell be cancelled in consideration of the many extra official services rendered by him.

The record of the County Commissioners' Court closes with the following order, "Ordered that Court adjourn until Court in Course." But the time for its reassembling never came, for the County Court was soon thereafter organized and took up the business where the Commissioners had left it.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE PROBATE COURT.

By an act of the Legislature of February 10, 1821, Probate Courts for the settlement of estates of deceased persons were first established. Their organization and jurisdiction were very similar to those of the probate courts of the present day, although many changes have since intervened. They were courts of record without any clerk, the Judge acting as clerk of the court, as well as sole Justice. The Judge was to be elected by the General Assembly and was to hold office during good behavior. In the act of the Legislature establishing Peoria County, a similar provision was made for the election at that session of a Probate Judge for Peoria County. Accordingly between the 13th day of January, the date of said act, and the 18th day of the same month the Legislature in joint session elected Norman Hyde to that office. On the 18th day of January his commission as Judge was issued by Edward Coles, then Governor of the State, but he did not qualify until the 4th day of June next thereafter, at which time the oath of office was administered to him by John Dixon, Clerk of the Circuit Court.

On the 6th day of June, 1825, two days after his taking the oath of office, Judge Hyde opened court pursuant to the statute, but there being no business it was adjourned until the next term. On July 18th, August 1st, August 15th, September 5th and September 19th similar orders were made. On the 30th day of September, 1825 the first estate of a deceased person was entered in court. On that day John Barker made proof of the death of Joseph O'Brien and took out letters of administration upon his estate under bond of $800, with John L. Bogardus and Daniel Like as sureties.

Court then adjourned from term to term without any further business until the 5th day of December of the same year, when the first will was probated. This was the will of Isaac Rems-den, Jr., made in Newton Township, Muskegon County, Ohio, dated May 13, 1825, the witnesses thereto being Gilbert Crandall, who signed by his mark, and Thomas Bell. Upon presenting the same for probate it appeared that Thomas Bell had absconded, whereupon Jacob Crooks was sworn as to the signature of the testator and Lauret Remsden, as to the signature of the testator and to that of Thomas Bell, also to the fact that the will had been found among the papers of the testator after his death. Pelhemus Remsden testified to the signature of the testator, and also to that of Bell, the absconding witness. This being the best proof that could be obtained, it was ordered that letters testatem issue to Crooks, the Judge attaching his private seal because no public seal had been provided.

The court then continued to meet and adjourn without business until April 11, 1826, at which time Isaac Perkins proved the death of Elza Bethard, without heirs or next of kin, whereupon letters of administration were issued to him as public administrator. But at the next October term Handy Bethard appeared in court and proved himself to be the heir at law of Elza Bethard, deceased, whereupon the administration to Perkins was revoked and Handy Bethard was appointed administrator in his place.

On the 24th of April, 1826, an entry appears which brings the early history of Chicago into close touch with that of Peoria. Alexander Wolcott, Jr., appeared and made proof of the death of John Crafts, of Chicago, who had been prominently connected with the American Fur Company, he having received authority from Crafts' heirs in Massachusetts, there being no heirs in this State. Letters testamentary were therefore issued to Wolcott on a bond of $3,000, with John Kinzie and James Latham as sureties. On the 20th day of November next thereafter he appeared and presented the appraisement bill and sale bill of the estate of said John Crafts, which, being authenticated to the satisfaction of the court, was ordered to be recorded, the appraisers being John Kinzie and Billy Caldwell (a noted half-breed of Chicago).

On the same day came Jacob Crooks, administrator of the estate of Isaac Remsden, and presented the appraisement made by Alexander McNaughton, John Griffith and Hugh Montgomery, sworn to before Nathan Dillon, Justice of the Peace. As Nathan Dillon resided near the Mackinaw, in what is now Tazewell County, we may infer that Isaac Remsden had located in that neighborhood before his death.

On December 10th came John Barker and presented the appraisement of the estate of Joseph O'Brien, sworn to before Stephen French, as Justice of the Peace.

On the 11th of December came Mary Latham and made proof of the death of the Hon. James Latham, late of the town of Peoria, and letters of administration were granted to said Mary Latham and Richard Latham, her son, under bond of $2,000, with Benjamin Briggs, Grant Blackwell and John Hamlin sureties.

On the 18th of January, 1827, Sampson Bethard made proof of the death of Handy Bethard, his brother, and took out letters of administration upon his estate.

On April 16, 1827, John Barker closed up the estate of Joseph O'Brien, showing a balance for distribution among the next of kin of $416,317.4. This was the first estate closed up in Peoria County.

On April 19, 1827, Richard Latham presented the appraisement of the property of James Latham made by Peter G. Cowerdin, Charles Tinley and Grant Blackwell, sworn to before James Tinley, a Justice of the Peace of Sangamon County, and an additional appraisement by John Hamlin, John Barker and Henry Neely, sworn to before John L. Bogardus, of Peoria, showing a balance, after deducting some expenses, of $968.21.

On the 8th day of January, 1828, Richard Latham presented the sale bill of James Latham's property at Elkhart Grove, in Sangamon County, for $722.46, out of which the widow retained $301.75 on her award.

On April 18, 1828, Alexander Wolcott closed up the estate of John Crafts, in which, among other things, he charged himself with $2,500, received from the American Fur Company in New York for Crafts' share of profits on Chicago outfit for 1825-26, according to the award of Thomas Adis Emmett, Esq., arbitrator in the case; and, after taking credit, among other things, for an account of The American Fur Company against the estate for $784, one to John Kinzie for $87.58, and one to Gurdon S. Hubbard for $22, it left a balance for the heirs of $1,454.25.

On the same day Alexander Wolcott made proof of the death of John Kinzie, of Chicago, and took out letters of administration upon his estate under bond of $3,000, with John B. Beaubien and James Kinzie as sureties.

On the 19th day of May, 1828, Alexander Wolcott filed an appraisement bill of the property of John Kinzie, deceased, made at Chicago on the 22d day of April by Alexander Doyle and J. B. Beaubien, sworn to before R. A. Kinzie, clerk, amounting to $895.40, also a sale bill in the same estate dated April 28th, certified by R. A. Kinzie, clerk, amounting to $254.87¹/₂.

On the 4th day of December, 1828, Josiah Fulton made proof of the death of his brother, Samuel Fulton, late Sheriff of Peoria County, and took out letters of administration upon his estate, under bond of $1,000. On January 19th he filed his appraisement bill taken by H. B. Stillman and Norman Hyde, sworn to before John Dixon, a Justice of the Peace.

On the 14th day of October, 1829, it was ordered that Alexander Wolcott, administrator of the estate of John Kinzie, give the notice required by law of the settlement of said estate. On the 17th day of December, 1830, came John Bt. Beaubien and proved the death of Francis La Framboise, of Chicago, and obtained letters of administration under a bond of $3,000, with David Hunter and John Hamlin as sureties. And on the same day came David Hunter and proved the death of Alexander Wolcott, administrator of the estate of John Kinzie and obtained letters of administration upon the estate of John Kinzie under a bond of $3,000, with John Bt. Beaubien and John Hamlin as securities.

On the 27th day of January, 1831, Francis Sharp proved the death of his father, George Sharp, one of the County Commissioners of Peoria County, and administration was granted to him and the widow, Elizabeth Sharp, under a bond of $4,000, with John Hamlin and Alexander Caldwell as sureties.

On the 20th day of May, 1831, the inventory and sale bill of the estate of George Sharp was filed, showing a personal estate amounting to $524,06¹/₄. On the same day David Hunter, administrator of the estate of John Kinzie, filed his report as follows:

“Monies received—

Mr. Hamlin	$ 10.00
R. A. Kinzie	185.00
Mrs. Wolcott	486.25
L. N. Bailie, rent	50.00
Total	$ 740.25

“There is due from the American Fur Company $2,190.12, with interest at 5 per cent. per annum from May 12, 1828. This debt is good.” These amounts were charged to David Hunter, and this is the last entry that appears concerning the estate of John Kinzie.

David Hunter was an officer in the army, and for a time was in command at Fort Dearborn. Years afterward he became somewhat distinguished as a major-general in the United States Army.

On the 6th day of February, 1832, Norman Hyde held court for the last time. There being no business to transact, court adjourned sine die. This was the last entry made by Norman Hyde as Judge. His death occurred soon afterward. The foregoing entries relating mostly to the estates of prominent persons serve well to illustrate the simplicity of life in a new country.

On the 10th day of November, 1832 Andrew M. Hunt was commissioned by Governor John Reynolds as Judge of the Probate Court to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Norman Hyde, to hold until the end of the next session of the General Assembly. On the 15th day of November Judge Hunt took his seat for the first time as Judge of the Probate Court, and on the 21st day of November John Hamlin and Simon Reed presented the last will and testament of Norman Hyde, in which John Hamlin, Simon Reed and Andrew M. Hunt were named as executors; only the first two were qualified, the third having become the successor of Norman Hyde as Judge of the Probate Court.

The witnesses to the will were William A. Stewart, Asahel Hale and Henry B. Stillman. The bond required of the executors was $1,000, upon which Aaron Reed became security.

By an act of the Legislature of March 4, 1837, the office of Probate Judge was abolished, the act to take effect at the next election, to be held on the first Monday in August. At that time one additional Justice of the Peace, to be styled, by order of eminence, Probate Justice of the Peace, was to be elected as other justices and to keep his office at the County Seat. He was to have the same jurisdiction as other justices, in addition to which he was to have ministerial powers in probate business and jurisdiction when executors or administrators were parties to the suit to the amount of $1,000, also the same judicial powers as those of the Probate Judge, but he was to report his acts to the Circuit Court for approval. Accordingly the career of Andrew M. Hunt as Probate Judge closed with July, 1837, and George B. Parker was elected at the August election of that year as the first Probate Justice of the Peace. He was succeeded at the election of 1839 by Dr. Edward Dickinson, who continued to hold office until after the election of August, 1843, when William H. Fessenden was elected as his successor. He continued to hold until after the August election, 1847, when Thomas Bryant was elected to the same office, and continued to hold until November 29, 1849, when the office ceased to exist by virtue of the provisions of the new constitution.

CHAPTER XV.

EARLY CIRCUIT COURTS.

Prior to the organization of Peoria County the Judges of the Supreme Court had held the Circuit Courts, but, with the session of the Legislature which convened in December, 1824, the judiciary was re-organized, the State being divided into five judicial circuits, and five circuit judgeships being created for these circuits. The first circuit was composed of the counties of Sangamon, Pike, Fulton, Morgan, Green and Montgomery. These new judges were elected by the General Assembly and their commissions were dated on the 19th day of January, 1825. John York Sawyer was assigned to the first circuit to which Peoria County, upon its organization was attached.

The first term of the Circuit Court commenced on the 14th day of November, A. D. 1825, with John York Sawyer, Judge; John Dixon, Clerk; Samuel Fulton, Sheriff, and James Turney, Attorney General.

Judge Sawyer was a man of immense proportions physically, and must have made quite an imposing appearance in the little room in which the court was held. He was a terror to evil doers and was very severe upon criminals convicted in his court. It is related of him that while holding court on one occasion a party was convicted before him of petit larceny, the penalty for which was public whipping on the bare back with stripes well laid on not exceeding forty. The attorney for the defendant had made a motion for a new trial, and, while absent collecting his books to argue the case, Judge Sawyer ordered the convicted party to be taken out and punished according to law by being tied to a tree near the Court House and publicly whipped, he himself, from his seat on the bench, counting the stripes as they were laid on. Upon the re-appearance of the defendant's attorney the Judge informed him that he could have a new trial if he wished, but at this juncture the defendant himself interposed and said he had had trials enough.

At the April Term, 1825, of the Board of County Commissioners they had ordered the summoning of Grand and Petit jurors for the term of be held on the second Monday in June, which was the time provided by law, but it seems that no court was held then and the first term was held as before mentioned in the month of November. At that term there seem to have been only sixteen of the twenty-four Grand jurors in attendance, viz.: John Hamlin, Stephen French, Thomas Dillon, Henry Thomas, George Harian, Isaac Waters, Augustus Langworthy, George Sharp, Seth Wilson, John Klein, George Klein, Isaac Perkins, John Phillips and Major Donaho. There were but few cases on the docket for trial. The Grand jurors returned five indictments two of which were for affrays, two for assault and battery and one for murder.

John Dixon was appointed by the Judge as Clerk of the Circuit Court, he at the same time holding the office of Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court.

This term of court was somewhat stormy. The trial of Nomaque, the Indian indicted for murder, brought to Peoria nearly all the inhabitants of this region, and it is said that ardent spirits flowed with a freedom not at all conducive to the faithful administration of justice. Nomaque had killed a Frenchman by the name of Pierre Landre. Joseph Ogee and Jaques Mette, whose names have already appeared in our history, were sworn as interpreters. William S. Hamilton appeared as counsel for the defendant, and it was found very difficult to obtain a jury, but, finally the following named persons were impannelled: Austin Crocker, Allen S. Daugherty, Alexander McNaughton, Nathan Dillon, Henry Neely, William Woodrow, Peter Dumont, Aaron Reed, Abram Galentine, Josiah Fulton, Cornelius Doty, David Matthews. The Indian was convicted and sentenced to be hanged. Hamilton carried the case to the Supreme Court and obtained a reversal of the judgment, but Nomaque was held as a prisoner until another Grand Jury should pass upon the case.

The other four indictments found at this term of the court were for personal violence, one against Joseph Ogee and Jacob Frank for an affray, one against Levi Ellis and Lyman Leonard for an affray; one against Abner Cooper for assault and battery, and one against John Griffin for assault and battery. We may imagine the cause of Abner Cooper's getting into difficulty from the fact that he and his wife had two cases on the civil docket at the same time for the slander of the wife, one against Edmond Weed, and the other against Sallie Weed. Both of these cases, however, were thrown out of court upon demurrer to the declarations, and it is likely that the whole trouble grew out of some family difficulty. For the defendants A. W. Cavarly appeared as attorney, who it is said was the same attorney whose absence from the court room had given Judge Sawyer an opportunity to have his client publicly whipped as before stated. William S. Hamilton had two fines assessed against him for contempt of court.

Writs of scire facias were issued against Lewis Besom, Pierre Chevillere, Frances Borbon, nie Siegnior, Francis Borbon, nie Junior, and Antoine Borbon. These were probably witnesses in the Nomaque case, and their names indicate that the French population had not entirely disappeared from the neighborhood of Peoria.

The court continued in session four days. No further courts were held until the October term, 1826, when John York Sawyer again appeared upon the bench with John Dixon as Clerk, and Samuel Fulton as Sheriff. At this term there were the usual number of small cases, such as appeals from Justices of the Peace, slander suits, etc. The most important business of that term, however, was the second indictment of Nomaque. One of the Grand jurors gives the following vivid description, in Drown's Directory for 1844, of what occurred at that time. "In the year 1826, I lived three miles from Mackinaw River, on the Peoria and Springfield road, in what is now Tazewell County, but then attached to Peoria, and being that year twenty-one years old, I was summoned upon the Grand Jury. There were not then enough adults in Peoria County proper to form the Grand and Petit juries, hence they were summoned from the attached portion. All the Grand Jury but two were from the east side of the Illinois River, chiefly my acquaintances and neighbors. We took our provisions and bedding, the latter being a blanket or quilt for each. It was the practice also in those days to take along a flagon of liquor, and this was not omitted on the occasion spoken of. In truth, so faithfully was the flagon put under requisition, that but two of our number were sober when we appeared in court and received our charge. Judge Sawyer was then the presiding officer; James Turney the prosecuting attorney; and Messrs. Cavarly, Pugh, Bogardus and Turney, the entire bar.

"There were about eight bills of indictment found by the Grand Jury—one of which was against an Indian named Nomaque for murder. He had been tried the fall before; but obtaining a new trial, he was indicted again this term. There being no secure jail, the Sheriff (Samuel Fulton) kept him under guard in the house of Mr. Allen. At night about a dozen drunken Indians met to rescue him, and attempted to enter the door for that purpose. Allen sprang out of a back window, and seizing a clapboard, rushed to the front of the house and laid about him with great fury. He felled four of the Indians to the ground before they could recover from their consternation, when the others retreated. Allen pursuing the hindmost, continued his blows, the retreating fellow crying out 'Schtup, white man! for God's sake schtup!' Felling him also, the five laid till morning, when they were able to crawl off. Nomaque afterwards made his escape—joined Black Hawk in the war of '32—was wounded in Stillman's defeat, and afterwards found nearly dead by some Peorians, who humanely shot him through to put an end to his sufferings.

"The court house was a log building on the bank of the river, in which the jurors slept at night on their blankets on the floor. There was a tavern kept by Mr. Bogardus, but it was not large enough to furnish sleeping accommodations for them. The grand jury room was a lumber cabin in which Bogardus kept saddles and other cattle fixings."

At the next session of the Legislature the judiciary was again re-organized by abolishing the office of Circuit Judge and assigning the Judges of the Supreme Court to do circuit duty. The first circuit was then composed of the counties of Peoria, Fulton, Schuyler, Adams, Pike, Calhoun, Green, Morgan and Sangamon, and to this circuit Judge Samuel D. Lockwood was assigned. Judge Lockwood is said to have been one of the most scholarly and polished gentlemen that ever occupied the position on the Supreme bench of the State of Illinois. It is said by a recent historian that "he stands out conspicuously as the beau ideal of a judge. His appearance on the bench was the very personification of dignity, learning and judicial acumen." He presided over the Circuit Court of Peoria County from May term 1827, to the October term 1828.

At the first term held by him in Peoria, Samuel Fulton, Sheriff, was indicated for misconduct in office in allowing the Indian Nomaque to escape from his custody, but no sooner had the indictment been returned than it was nolle prosequi, for the reason that no capias had issued requiring the Sheriff to take him into his custody.

At the session of the Legislature held in 1829, another change was made in the judiciary of the State. A circuit was established consisting of all the territory west and north of the Illinois and Kankakee Rivers, embracing that portion of territory which had formerly been attached to the county of Pike.

Richard M. Young was, by the Legislature, elected Judge of this circuit and was commissioned on the 23d day of January, 1829. He made his first appearance at Peoria at the June term, 1829, and held our court continuously until the October term 1834. Judge Young holds a conspicuous position in the history of the State of Illinois. He was first elected Judge of the third circuit, but, on the formation of the fifth circuit, which has just been described he removed to the City of Quincy where he resided during the time he was upon the bench. He was elected United States Senator in the year 1836, and served the full term of six years from the 4th day of March, 1837, to the 4th day of March 1843. He was elected to the Supreme Court in 1843, and held that office until 1847, when he was appointed Commissioner of the Land Office at Washington. In 1850, he became Clerk of the National House of Representatives. In his later years, however, his intellect became impaired and gradually failed until it became necessary to send him to an asylum where he died.

On the 8th day of June, 1830, Stephen Stillman was appointed Clerk of the Circuit Court in place of John Dixon, resigned.

The first person to declare his intention to be naturalized was George Kingston, aged thirty-five, born in the town of Bandy, County of Cork, Ireland, November 15, 1795, emigrated to America the middle of September, 1818, landed at Baltimore, November 18, 1818, an inhabitant of Tazewell County.

On the 11th day of May, 1832, Samuel Conner, a resident of Peoria County, aged seventy-five made application for the benefit of the United States pension laws. He enlisted for the war in March, 1779, in company "E" commanded by Captain Gregg in Broadhead's regiment in the line of the State of Pennsylvania in the Continental Establishment and served therein until the close of the Revolutionary War. His reason for not making earlier application for his pension was, "That he had hoped and believed he could finish the short remainder of his days on earth without applying for the charitable aid of the country he had served."

On the 30th day of April, 1835, William Mitchell, a subject of William IV, King of Great Britain, was naturalized on the testimony of Charles Ballance. He afterwards served as an efficient officer of the county in the capacity of Clerk of the County Commissioner's Court.

Recurring again to the changes made in the judiciary, it will be noticed that in 1835, the State was again divided into circuits, and five Judges, in addition to the one already in office, were chosen by the Legislature. These new Judges were Stephen T. Logan, Sidney Breese, Henry Eddy, Thomas Ford and Justin Harlan, of whom Thomas Ford was chosen for the sixth district,—that in which Peoria County was situated,—Judge Young still continuing as Judge of the fifth or Quincy District. But for some reason not known Judge Breese presided at the Spring term of our Circuit Court. This was probably the only time that distinguished jurist held court in Peoria.

We have already become somewhat acquainted with Stephen T. Logan, who appeared as counsel for the Latham heirs in their contest with the county of Peoria respecting the quarter section of land, upon which the County Seat had been located. Within a few months after the termination of that memorable contest he was elevated to the bench and presided over our Circuit Court at the September term, 1835. He resigned his office in 1837, on account of the inadequacy of salary, and being chosen again to the same office in the year 1839, declined to accept. He never afterwards occupied a position upon the bench, but it is conceded by all that he became one of the ablest lawyers of the State, in which profession he was for three years associated with Abraham Lincoln. He also filled many positions of public trust, the duties of which he performed with marked ability.

Thomas Ford, who afterwards became Governor of the State, presided at the May and November terms, 1836, of our court, but in March, 1837, he also resigned and was succeeded by the noted Dan Stone as Judge of the Sixth Circuit. Judge Stone presided from the May term, 1837, until the May term, 1838. During his incumbency there arose a great political excitement over a decision he had made with respect to the right of aliens to vote at the general elections. The case was carried to the Supreme Court, but before it had reached a final decision the Eighth and Ninth Judicial Circuits had been formed by act of the Legislature, and Thomas Ford, on the 25th day of February, 1839, had been again chosen and commissioned as Judge of the Ninth. As an outcome of the excitement growing out of the decision of Judge Stone, above referred to, the judiciary of the State was re-organized by an act of February 10, 1841, which repealed all former laws authorizing the election of Circuit Judges, or establishing the Circuit Courts, thus again legislating out of office all the Circuit Judges then in the State. The act then provided that there should be appointed, by joint ballot of both branches of the General Assembly, at that session, five additional Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, who, in connection with the Chief Justice and the three Associate Justices then in office, should constitute the Supreme Court of the State. The State was then again divided into nine Circuits, and the Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices were required to perform duties in these circuits. Thomas Ford was elected as one of the five new Justices of the Supreme Court, was commissioned February 15, 1841, but resigned August 1, 1842, to accept the office of Governor of the State, to which office he was soon afterward elected. While holding the office of Circuit and Supreme Judge successively, he again presided over our Circuit Court from April, 1839, until the April term, 1842.

At the September term, 1838, Judge Stone seems to have exchanged with Jesse B. Thomas of the First District, who presided at that term.

Judge Richard M. Young again held the Circuit Court as one of the Supreme Judges at the May term, 1843. John Dean Caton, another of the Supreme Judges, presided over the Circuit Court at the October term, 1842, and again from the October term, 1843, to the October term, 1848. Judge Caton was a Judge of the Supreme Court for twenty-one years, having been first appointed by Governor Carlin in the year 1842, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Governor Ford, and then by Governor Ford in the year 1843, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Judge John M. Robinson, and upon the reorganization of the judiciary under the new Constitution, was elected from the Northern Grand Division. After serving for the period of twenty-one years in all, he resigned in 1864.

After the adoption of the Constitution in 1848, T. Lyle Dickey, Judge of the Ninth Circuit, presided at the May and October terms, 1849, and William Kellogg, Judge of the Tenth Circuit to which Peoria belonged, from the March term, 1850, to November, 1852.

William Kellogg was commissioned as Judge of the Tenth Circuit February 12, 1850, and continued to fill that office until November, 1852, when he resigned and was succeeded by Hezekiah M. Wead. Judge Wead did not hold court in Peoria as Judge of the Tenth Circuit, for the reason that, before the time for the next term after his election had arrived, the Sixteenth Circuit, composed of Peoria and Stark Counties, had been formed, and Onslow Peters had been elected Judge thereof. Judge Wead did, however, hold our court at the fall term 1863, to finish up the business in which Judge Peters had been engaged as counsel. Judge Kellogg was elected to Congress in 1856, and again in 1858 and 1860. His career after leaving the bench belongs more particularly to the political history of this county.

From the foregoing it will be seen that Peoria County, in its early days, was favored, by the presence in her Circuit Court, as presiding Justices thereof, of some of the most distinguished jurists of the State and Nation. (For biographical sketches see Vol. I.)

CHAPTER XVI.

EARLY ROADS, FERRIES AND BRIDGES.

When Fort Clark was first erected it is said there was not a white man's dwelling within one hundred miles of it. There was, therefore, no considerable population except the Indians, and they had no need for anything but the trail. Yet, doubtless, Fort Clark, for some years, was the abode of a considerable body of soldiers, whose necessities must have been supplied from the settlements farther south. For this purpose, especially during the season when navigation was closed, a road or roads must have been necessary. Little evidence of such a road has been found, yet as appears from the public surveys of Tazewell County, made in the year 1823, there is a road marked "Road to Fort Clark" on the township line between Groveland and Fond du Lac, just at the head of the ravine known as "Cole Hollow," through which runs a small creek called "Cole Creek." As this was the original course of the road from Peoria to Springfield, it is fair to presume that, before either Peoria or Springfield had any existence, there was a road leading through this hollow from Fort Clark to the lower settlements. If so, it was the first road leading to or from the present site of Peoria.

It has also been seen that the first American settlers who came to Fort Clark did not remain long in its immediate vicinity, but many of them, being farmers, had distributed themselves along the several creeks flowing into the Illinois River, some of them on the Mackinaw, some on Farm Creek, some on Ten Mile Creek and some on the Illinois Prairie, on the easterly side of the river, while, at the same time, settlements were forming at several points in Fulton County and farther west. The people of these settlements would naturally seek the means of communication with each other, especially with Fort Clark (or Peoria), as their center of trade. One or more ferries would, therefore, soon become necessary. It is not known at what particular date or by whom the first ferry at Peoria was started, but when Ossian Ross came to the mouth of Spoon River in 1821, he ascertained there was a ferry at Beardstown and one at Peoria, which were ninety miles apart, with no ferry between, and certainly none above Peoria. He therefore established a third one at the present city of Havana, which, for many years, yielded him an annual income of $2,000.

The map attached to a work entitled "A History of Illinois, to accompany an Historical Map of the State by Rufus Blanchard," published at Chicago, 1883, shows a trail or trace called the "Fort Clark and Wabash Trace," running in a straight line from Fort Clark to Terre Haute, crossing the river just below the mouth of the lake, in regard to which the author says: "It was a well travelled road from the settlements of southern Ohio and Indiana to Fort Clark in an early day." This may have been the same road shown on the public survey above mentioned. It also shows a trail called "Kellogg's Trail from Peoria to Galena, 1825," on substantially the same route as that upon which the Galena State Road was afterwards laid out by way of Princeton, in regard to which he says: "This trail shows the first overland route from Peoria to Galena. It was made by Mr. Kellogg, an old pioneer settler, in 1825, and subsequently became a well known route."

The map also shows a mail route from Peoria, by way of Lewistown, to Rushville, and diverging thence to Quincy, Pittsfield, Jacksonville, crossing the river at Beardstown; this road is dated 1822.

These trails and roads all ante-date any road laid out by the authorities of Peoria County.

John L. Bogardus, a lawyer and land-trader, a man of enterprise and ability, was among the earliest settlers, he having reached Peoria probably as early as 1819 or 1820. As early as 1824

he had obtained concurrent licenses from the County Commissioners' Courts of Fulton and Sangamon Counties, to keep a ferry across the Illinois River at the outlet of Lake Peoria. The spot where this ferry was located has become historic, as it occupied the place where the wagon-road bridge is now located, at the foot of Bridge street in the city of Peoria. Doubtless at that point the first ferry was established within the present limits of Peoria County. The County Commissioners of Peoria County, recognizing the necessity of such a ferry, as well as the validity of these licenses, at their June session, 1825, ordered them spread upon their own records.

James Eads, son of William Eads, says his uncle, Abner Eads, established the first ferry at Peoria.

Communication having in this manner been established between the settlements on both sides of the river, if no public roads had before then led to the spot, they would soon have been attracted thither by the ready means afforded for crossing. At that time Farm Creek had its outlet just above the present location of the wagon road bridge, and, as the water in the river, as well as in the creek, would often become bank full or even higher, the ferry-boat would follow the channel of the creek to the high water mark in the river. This was the most eligible location to be found anywhere near the incipient village, and was reached from all directions on the opposite side.

At the same June session, 1825, Samuel Fulton, Alexander McLaughlin and Norman Hyde were appointed viewers to locate a road leading from the ferry landing opposite the village of Peoria, to the "Old Crossing" on Sugar Creek [a tributary of the Sangamon River—Ed.], near Robert Musick's. This was as far south as their jurisdiction extended. Sangamon County had, doubtless, also laid out a road to meet the Peoria road at the "Old Crossing" near Robert Musick's, where a year later a bridge is found to have had an existence. As this road pointed directly towards the south, it is reasonable to suppose the "Old Crossing" to have been the place where the old Fort Clark road, above mentioned, had crossed the same creek. Two years later the same road was, by act of the Legislature (of February 12, 1827), made a state road, which became the stage road between the two cities. This was the first road laid out by the authorities of Peoria County. Four points on its line are mentioned in the Act of 1827: Springfield, Musick's on Salt Creek [of which Sugar Creek is a branch—Ed.], Thomas Dillon's on the Mackinaw Creek, and Peoria.

On January 23, 1826, the Legislature ordered a state road to be laid out from the county seat of Peoria County to the county seat of Vermilion County (Danville), and thence to the State line. Abner Eads, Samuel Fulton and Dan W. Beckwith, a surveyor, were appointed viewers to locate the same, who performed their duties and made their report as required by the act, and at the session of the Legislature of 1831, an act was passed granting them their pay, together with one Orlin Gilbert and one James Barnes, chain carriers, and William Rowan, blazer.

At the same session of the County Commissioner's Court, viewers were appointed to locate a road leading from Peoria to the southern boundary of the county (the place not designated), and others to view a road leading from Peoria to its northern boundary. At the December session ensuing these two sets of viewers made their reports, which were approved, and the two roads ordered to be opened a sufficient width for the passage of teams. At this term viewers were appointed to view a road from Peoria, passing the Trading Post (Wesley City) and the house of Isaac Perkins [who lived on Illinois Prairie—Ed.], to intersect the Springfield road at or near Prairie Creek.

At the same session a license was granted to William Clark to keep a ferry at Mackinaw Bluffs, [at or near the present city of Pekin, once called "Town Site"—Ed.]

At the June session, 1826, the County Commissioners began to turn their attention to a great highway in the direction of Chicago. John Barker, George Harland and Samuel Fulton were at that term appointed viewers to locate a road from the ferry at Peoria, by the nearest and best way, to the Third Principal Meridian [the eastern limit of their jurisdiction—Ed.], and in a direction to strike the big salt spring opposite the mouth of Fox River [South Ottawa—Ed.] At each end of this line a ferry was licensed—one to Isaac Waters, John Phillips and David Matthews from a place called Matthew's Landing (now the Narrows) to the opposite shore; the other to Jesse Walker, the noted Methodist missionary, to keep a ferry at the mouth of Fox River, to the "big spring." In each of these licenses there was a provision that no ferry should be established within one mile of the same until the lands in the vicinity should be sold. This was inserted, not with a view to the creation of a monopoly, but for the public good, for, by so doing, the proprietor would be the better enabled to give good service to the public, than if the limited amount of travel should be divided between rival ferries.

It must be observed, too, that the County Commissioners' Court had no authority to lay out a road south of the river further east than the Third Principal Meridian, which was the eastern boundary of the county; so that, unless there had been a road laid out by the adjoining county from the "big spring" to meet that laid out by Peoria County, there must have been a link missing from eighteen to twenty miles in length. But Peoria County had jurisdiction on the north side of the river, and so could grant a license to Jesse Walker, who resided on the north side, to keep a ferry at that place, just as licenses had been granted by both Fulton and Sangamon Counties to John L. Bogardus for the same purpose. From this fact the inference is almost irresistible that such a road then had an existence.

At the September term of the same year the Commissioners so appointed made their report and the road was established. This was the first road leading from Peoria in the direction of Chicago. It was not then a state road, but by an act of the Legislature of January 12, 1833, Lewis Bigelow, of Peoria, John M. Gay, of Putnam, James B. Campbell, of La Salle, and James Walker, of Cook County, were appointed to locate a road from Peoria to the mouth of Fox River, and thence to Chicago. This road must have followed substantially the same route as that laid out by the Commissioners of Peoria County. It went by way of Hanover (Metamora), Magnolia and Union Grove, to Ottawa, thence to Chicago.

Peoria had thus secured three important state roads—one to Springfield and the south, one to the east by way of Danville, which soon became the great highway of emigration, and one to Chicago, by which it was put into communication with the great lakes and, through them, with the cities of the East.

The lead mines in the northwestern part of the State were now attracting much attention, and adventurers were migrating thither in great numbers. It became a matter of importance, therefore, to establish communication with that section. Accordingly the County Commissioners, at their September term, 1826, had appointed Isaac Waters, Norman Hyde and John Ray as viewers to locate a road to the lead mines. Again at their March term, 1828, they resolved that a road should be laid out towards the lead mines so far as their jurisdiction extended. It is not material for our present purpose to ascertain just how far their efforts in that direction were successful, for by an act of the Legislature of January 18, 1833, it is declared that the road leading from Peoria to Galena be declared a state road. This was the famous Galena road, a portion of which goes by that name until the present day. It commenced at the public square and followed substantially the line of Adams street to the city limits, thence by the present river road to a point near Mossville, thence on a line almost directly north through Northampton, Windsor (Tiskilwa) on Bureau Creek, Princeton, Dixon's Ferry, thence northwesterly to the west line of Stephenson County, where it intersected the Chicago and Galena road, which it followed to Galena. Three years prior to its being made a state road, John Dixon, who had for some years been Clerk of the Circuit Court of Peoria County, had taken a government contract to carry the mails every two weeks from Peoria to Galena. To facilitate the work Joseph Ogee, the half-breed heretofore mentioned, was sent, or went of his own accord, to establish a ferry across Rock River at the present site of the city of Dixon, which was, for a short time, operated by him; but his management not proving satisfactory to Dixon, the latter bought him out and removed with his family to that place. The ferry was ever afterward called Dixon's Ferry, and it was in this way, and by two Peorians, the city of Dixon was started and received its name. The viewers were Joseph B. Meredith, of Peoria County, John D. Winter and Joseph Smith, of Jo Daviess County, and Charles Boyd, of Putnam County. Meredith drew from the treasury of Peoria County $50.00 for his services as Surveyor.

No other state roads seem to have been established in Peoria County for some years afterward. In the meantime, however, the County Commissioners were not in any degree negligent of the public interests in this respect. The influx of population was so rapid that roads in every direction, and ferries or bridges over the principal streams became an absolute necessity. And whilst the Commissioners had their hands full in settling the disputes about the county seat, and in making preparations for the erection of county buildings, the subject of public roads was also receiving all due attention.

The Legislature of 1827 passed an act to the effect that no one should keep a ferry and charge toll without first procuring a license from the County Commissioner's Court, which tribunal was vested with power to grant such licenses, to fix the rates of toll to be charged, to fix the rates of license fees or tax upon the franchise to be paid by the proprietors, and to hear complaints against the keepers for non-compliance with the law.

By the same act the keepers were required to keep good boats and equipments, to attend their ferries from daylight until dark, and, upon call, give passage at any hour of the night (for which latter service they might charge double rates), and should give free passage to all public messengers and expresses and to jurymen attending court.

This law, wise in its provisions as it was, laid the foundation for many spirited contests between the proprietors of rival ferries and applicants for ferry-licenses. In those days a franchise to keep a ferry was regarded as a possession of great value. We, therefore, find great rivalries springing up between present and would-be ferry-men.

But where streams were capable of being bridged, a ferry could be dispensed with. So it happened that, as early as the month of March, 1827, the County Commissioner's Court commenced preparing for the bridging of the Kickapoo. On the 14th of that month a recital is made in their proceedings to the effect that the Court "then proceeded to examine and ascertain a suitable site for a public bridge across the Kickapoo Creek, and, after thorough examination, decided on the following place: "Amediately above the present crossing of the public road from Peoria to Lewistown." This was the first movement ever made to erect a public bridge within the limits of Peoria County. It did not, however, prove to be immediately successful. At the December session of the same year another inspection of the site was made. A contract for building the same was let to John L. Bogardus, who entered into bond in the sum of $500, with John Dixon and Dr. Augustus Langworthy as sureties, for the faithful performance of his contract. In this, however, he failed, and at the March term, 1828, it was ordered that a suit be commenced against him and sureties on his bond, and to that end the necessary documents be forwarded to the Attorney General.

Up to this time it had been the custom of the Court, upon granting a ferry license, to fix the rates of toll that might be charged. This had been done in the case of John L. Bogardus, and the rates allowed him were generally adopted as to all the others in succession, as their licenses were granted. At the June term, 1828, however, a general order was made fixing the tolls to be charged on all ferries crossing the Illinois River at the following rates:

For each foot passenger.....	6¼ cents.
For man and horse.....	12½ cents.
For Dearborn, sulky, chair with springs	50 cents.
One-horse wagon.....	25 cents.
For four-wheeled carriage drawn by 2 oxen or horses.....	37½ cents.
For cart with two oxen.....	37½ cents.
For every head neat cattle, horses or mules	10 cents.
For each hog, sheep or goat.....	3 cents.
For every hundred weight of goods, wares and merchandise.....	6¼ cents.
For each bushel of grain or articles sold by the bushel.....	3 cents.
All other articles in equal and just proportion.

But double these rates might be charged by John L. Bogardus at the Peoria Ferry when the river should be out of its banks, so that a landing could not be made at the first material bend in the (Farm) creek from the ferry.

At the September session of that year began a contest between Simon Crozier and Jesse Walker for the ferry at the mouth of Fox River. Crozier applied for a license to keep a ferry across the mouth of Fox River, also across the Illinois River above and below the mouth of Fox River. James Walker on behalf of his father, Jesse Walker, made application for a renewal of the latter's license to keep a ferry at the same place. These applications were both postponed until the December term, when, upon Crozier's motion, they were again postponed until the March term, 1829; but on a subsequent day of the same session, said order was reconsidered and the license of Jesse Walker was renewed.

At the March term, 1829, viewers were appointed to locate a road from Peoria to the west bounds of the county by way of Prince's Grove [now Princeville—Ed.], and in the direction of Rocky Island [the western boundary of their jurisdiction then being on the line between ranges 4 and 5 east, but beginning again at the Fourth Principal Meridian and extending to the Mississippi River—Ed.]. At the June term, 1830, these viewers made their report and the road was established.

At the same March term, 1829, ferry licenses were granted as follows: To William Haines, a renewal of the license to William Clark at

C. M. Brown

Mackinaw Bluffs; to William Eads, across the Illinois River at the Trading Post [Wesley City—Ed.]; to Archibald Clybourne and Samuel Miller, across the Chicago River at the lower forks near Wolf Point, crossing the river below the northeast branch and to land on either side of both branches to suit the convenience of all persons wishing to cross; and to James Andrews, across the Illinois River at the mouth of Little Vermilion river, near the present city of La-salle.

On June 13, 1829, it was again ordered that a bridge be contracted for, to be built across the Kickapoo Creek at the ford on the Lewistown road from Peoria, 164 feet in length, to rest against two certain tress, one on each side, marked "B." On the 8th of July following that date it was ordered that the bridge across Kickapoo Creek, engaged to be built by John Cameron, be accepted as finished according to contract, and that he be allowed $50 as a balance due upon the same. The total cost of the bridge is not here stated. John Cameron has the credit of having built the first bridge erected by public authority in Peoria County, the same resting against two trees, one on each side, as supports. This bridge, probably like many of its successors, was not proof against the action of the water in the treacherous Kickapoo, for at the December term, 1831, it was found to be in need of repairs, which were made under the supervision of John Coyle at a cost of $30.00.

At the December term, 1829, James Scott and George Miller were licensed to keep a ferry across the Illinois River within one mile of the mouth of Bureau Creek. [This was the Hennepin Ferry—Ed.] At the June term, 1830, William See (a minister of the Methodist church) was licensed to keep a ferry across the Callimink (Calumet) at the head of Lake Michigan.

Prior to July, 1830, it had been the custom in granting ferry-licenses to require certain license fees or taxes to be paid to the county. It was at that term ordered that the following named ferries be taxed for the ensuing year, as follows:

William Haines (Pekin).....	$ 4.00
William Eads (Trading House).....	2.00
John L. Bogardus (Peoria).....	10.00
Matthews & Chandler (Narrows).....	2.00
Miller & Scott (Hennepin).....	2.00
James Adams (Little Vermilion).....	2.00
Clyborne & Miller (Chicago).....	2.00
William See (Callimink).....	2.00

After this term the following ferry licenses were granted: September term, 1830, to Jesse Egman, across the Illinois River on Sec. 25, T. 7 N., 6 E. [Kingston—Ed.]; December term, to Thompson and Wright across the Illinois River within one-half mile of Sandy Creek (Au Sable); January term, 1831, to Abner Eads across the Illinois River at his landing, the same to be located at the mouth of the ravine next below the "pre-sent Court House" [The Hamlin house below Liberty street—Ed.], or as near said ravine as the weather and water would permit. This must have been not more than two blocks from that of Bogardus. But as Bogardus had the advantage of being in direct communication with the roads on the east side of the river, Eads conceived the idea of ousting him and appropriating the whole to himself. He therefore lodged a complaint against Bogardus charging him with not keeping his ferry according to law. Bogardus was thereupon cited to appear before the County Commissioners at the September term, but being a lawyer, he was not slow to avail himself of any legal technicality to delay the hearing. There being only two Commissioners, Cleveland and Hamlin, present, Bogardus objected to Hamlin's sitting in the case for the reason he had already expressed an opinion on the merits. The hearing was then postponed until the December term, by which time Hamlin had resigned and John Coyle had been elected in his stead. The Court met (probably at the Court House), but immediately adjourned to the house of Henry B. Stillman, all the members, Cleveland, French and Coyle, being present. Witnesses were examined, arguments heard and judgment of forfeiture of his license rendered against Bogardus, for the reason his ferry had not been kept according to law. Bogardus took an appeal to the Circuit Court, but having taken a change of venue to Sangamon County, the records fail to show what became of the suit. But Bogardus still retained possession of the ferry.

At the March term, 1832, the Commissioners revoked the ferry license of Matthews and Chandler at the Narrows, and granted one to Vincent Barton, the father of our esteemed fellow citizen, William C. H. Barton, from whom the village of Bartonville receives its name. Within a year or two thereafter this ferry seems to have passed into the hands of Charles Ballance, and thereafter continued in possession of his successors until it was superseded by the Upper Free Bridge.

At the same term viewers were appointed to locate a road from Peoria, by way of Hamlin and Sharp's Mill, through the settlement on the fork of the Kickapoo, in the direction of the county seat of Knox County. The report of these viewers was made and the road established at the September term, 1832.

The northeast part of the county now begins to loom up with some degree of importance. A license was granted to Samuel Allen to keep a ferry across the Illinois River opposite the (now extinct) village of Allentown [between the present village of Rome and the city of Chillicothe—Ed.] A road was also laid out from the village of Rome through the northern part of the county to the Knox County line, for the surveying of which Charles Ballance, as County Surveyor, was allowed the sum of $18.00.

A road was also laid out from John Coyle's, passing through Rome to the north line of the county.

At the March term, 1833, John Coyle was authorized to build a bridge across Dry Run, where the road crosses it on Sec. 3, T. 8 N., 8 E., which bridge was finished and accepted at the September term following. For the building of this bridge, which was the second ordered by the Commissioners, Coyle was to receive $10 in advance and $15 more upon completion thereof. This road probably occupied the same ground as the Galena road, but subsequently a state road was laid upon it.

At the March term, 1833, viewers were appointed to locate a road from the public square across the Kickapoo, to intersect the Knox County line. The viewers made their report at the September term ensuing, which was confirmed and the road located as follows: "Beginning at the head of Main street at the northwest corner of the town fraction [now in Dr. Miller's lot, near the head of Franklin street—Ed.], thence west 65 poles, thence north $37\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west, 60 poles to the bend in a ravine, thence south 81 degrees west, 20 poles 20 links to the top of the bluff, thence north $85\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west, 312 poles to the head of a ravine of the Dry Run, thence north 22 degrees west, down said ravine 18 poles to a bend, thence south 88 degrees, west 94 poles, thence south $87\frac{1}{2}$ degrees, west 60 poles, thence south $69\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west, 104 poles, crossing Dry Run." By closely following the courses and distances of this survey it is not difficult to identify it as the original Farmington road, but, instead of ascending the bluff at Main street as at present, it ascended it at Howe's Hill (now State street), and from the top of the bluff it ran in a straight course, disregarding section lines, to the head of the ravine at the present entrance to Laura Bradley Park. Many other roads were located by the County Commissioners, but being mostly of a local character and having been superseded by other and later surveys, it is unnecessary to take any further notice of them.

In 1833 a road was laid out from John Ridge-way's on the Galena road, through Rome and Chillicothe, to meet a road laid out by the Commissioners of Putnam County. This road was, by act of the Legislature of February 27, 1837, made a state road, the point of intersection with the Galena road being in section 27, 10 N., 9 E. [at or near the present site of Mossville—Ed.], and the points named being Rome, Chillicothe and Windsor, where it again met the road to Galena. The same Legislature laid out another road from Peoria to Galena by Osceola and Savanna. This seems to have been the original of the Mt. Hawley and Lawn Ridge road. It began at the public square, ran up Main street to Knoxville avenue, thence north past Kellar and Mt. Hawley until it came within two or three miles of the county line, where it bore off to the northwest.

In 1836 a state road was laid out from Chicago to Peoria through Ottawa. This road seems to have come by way of Peru to Boyd's Grove, where it united with the Galena road, which it followed from that point to Peoria.

In the same year a state road was laid out on the west side of the river from Peoria to Pekin, thence in a southeasterly direction until it intersected with the state road leading from Peoria to Springfield.

About the same time the Commissioners of Peoria County laid out a road from Peoria in the direction of Stephenson, the county seat of Rock Island County, now the city of Rock Island; also one beginning at the present intersection of Knoxville avenue and McClure avenue, running thence in a northwesterly direction to French Grove and thence to Knoxville; one from Peoria by way of Hale and Greenwood's mill (now Pottstown), Edwards, South Port and Newburgh to Knoxville. The routes so selected by the County Commissioners were afterwards substantially adopted by the Legislature as state roads. That from Stephenson to Peoria was made a state road by act of February 7, 1837. It came by way of Lafayette and Princeville, thence diagonally to Mt. Hawley; that from Peoria to Knoxville by way of French Grove (since then known as the Knoxville road), was made a state road by act of January 31, 1837. On the same date an act was passed establishing a state road from Peoria by way of Canton to Quincy. A few days later an act was passed establishing a state road from Warsaw to Peoria, by way of Carthage, Macomb and Canton, but it was provided that if a state road should have already been located from Canton to Peoria (alluding doubtless to the proposed Quincy and Peoria road), the Commissioners should not lay out the Warsaw road further than its intersection with such other road. In addition to these there was also a state road laid out by act of February 10, 1837, from Peoria to Hendersonville in Knox County, by way of Prince's Mill (now Princeville). This road also occupied substantially the same route as the one which had been laid out, in part at least, by the County Commissioners.

It therefore appears that, within twelve years of its organization, Peoria County had become the center of a system of state roads leading in every direction: one to Springfield; one to Danville and the state line; one to Ottawa and Chicago south of the river, and one between the same points north of the river; one to Galena through Princeton and Dixon; one to Galena through Osceola and Savanna; one to Rock Island through Lafayette, Wyoming and Princeville; one to Hendersonville by way of Princeville; one to Knoxville by way of Kickapoo and Brimfield; one to Knoxville following the Kickapoo Creek; one to Knoxville by Farmington; one to Warsaw by Canton, Macomb and Carthage; one to Quincy by Canton, and one to Pekin and thence southeast to the Springfield road.

Another road deserving of mention is that from Peoria by way of Aiken's Mill to intersect the road from Peoria to Farmington. The town of "Peoria Mills" had been laid out near the place where Lincoln Avenue extended crosses the Kickapoo. This road commenced at the South end of Adams, then at Franklin street, running thence west on First street in Monson & Sanford's Addition to its western terminus, thence by courses and distances and following some of the streets in "Peoria Mills" to a bridge across the Kickapoo. This survey, taken in connection with the village plat, gives us the location of Aiken's Mill nearly one-half mile north of the Lincoln Avenue or Plank Road bridge. After leaving the creek, the road zig-zagged up the bluff until it finally terminated in the Farmington road to the northeast of the county farm. It was doubtless laid out in the interest of the proprietors of the mill and village site, as many other roads were laid out, and possibly occupied the same ground as the road that now leads past the poor farm.

With the completion of this system of roads Peoria was well supplied, and, with a very few exceptions, no other roads of great importance have since been laid out, except those of a local character.

By the first of April, 1839, communication by stage had been established from Peoria over the following routes: To Ottawa by way of Northampton, Boyd's Grove, La Salle and Utica; or by Chillicothe, Henry and Webster on the north side of the river; also by Washington, Hanover (Metamora), Lyon's Colony (Magnolia) and Vermilion, on the south side; thence to Chicago by two different routes. There was also a route from Peoria to Chillicothe, where it crossed the river, thence to Lacon, and Hennepin and Vermilion to Ottawa. The route by Washington and Hanover was much the shortest, it being only 66 miles, that by Chillicothe and Henry 78 miles, while that by Northampton was 86 miles, and from Ottawa to Chicago the distance was 80 miles.

From Peoria to Galena the stages went by way of Northampton, Windsor (Tiskilwa), Princeton and Dixon, 160 miles; to Oquawka they went by Charleston (Brimfield), Knoxville and Monmouth, 81 miles; to Monmouth by Harkness, Farmington and Middle Grove, 61 miles; to Fort Madison by Farmington, Ellisville, La Harpe, Appanooce, crossing the Mississippi opposite Fort Madison, 96 miles; to Warsaw by Canton, Macomb and Carthage, 100 miles; to Stephenson (Rock Island) by Wyoming, Wethersfield (near Kewanee) and Richmond (Geneseo), 82 miles. This route did not follow the state road by way of Lafayette and La Grange further than Wyoming (Toulon being yet unknown). To the east and south the stages ran by way of Groveland and Mackinaw to Bloomington, whence other lines ran to Vandalia and Danville; also to Springfield by way of Groveland, Tremont, Conger's Grove, Irish Grove (on Salt Creek), 68 miles. At Springfield connection was made with stages to Vandalia, Danville and Terre Haute. Stages also ran from Peoria to Havana by Pekin, 44 miles, and to Clinton by Mackinaw, 55 miles; also to Quincy by Lewistown, Rushville and Clayton, 84 miles, and to the same point by Macomb, Augusta and Walnut Point, 117 miles. These routes continued about the same for ten years or more, the route to Ottawa on the south side of the river being so changed as to run by the Detroit Ferry (Narrows), thence direct to Metamora; and the river route to Havana being extended to St. Louis by way of Beardstown, Naples and Alton, 237 miles.

Aside from the means of transportation afforded by the river and canal, these roads afforded all the facilities for travel and trade enjoyed by the people of Peoria County prior to the introduction of the railroads.

CHAPTER XVII.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

No sooner had the Commissioners organized for business than they commenced taking steps to provide the county with suitable public buildings. One of their first orders, made on the day of their organization, provided for the erection, on some suitable site to be designated by them, of a Court House twenty feet square and nine feet from the floor to the joists, with a good plank or puncheon floor; also, of a clerk's office fourteen feet square with a good puncheon floor, both to be of good materials and finished in a workman-like manner—the clerk's office to be erected by the 20th of the same month, and the court house by the 25th day of May, next ensuing. For some reason, probably a lack of funds, these orders, four days later, were rescinded and the project abandoned.

It appears from all accounts that the County Commissioner's Court was not at that time held on the quarter section upon which the county seat had been located by the Legislature, but at the house of one Joseph Ogee, below the ferry on the fraction upon which Bigelow and Underhill's addition was afterwards laid out; for, at the June term of the same year, they allowed said Joseph Ogee the sum of one dollar for the use of his house for the County Commissioner's Court on the 8th day of March, and, as the Circuit Court was then about to convene (as was supposed), it was ordered that it be held at the house of Joseph Ogee, below the ferry landing. The June term was, however, suffered to lapse, and the first term, which was held in the month of November, following, as well as the May term of the County Commissioner's Court of the following year (1826), was held at the same house; for we find that, at their July session of that year, said Joseph Ogee was allowed three dollars for the use of his house at the time of holding the last Circuit Court and the County Commissioner's Court at said May term. The next term of the Circuit Court (November, 1826) was held at the house of Louis Beeson, who, at the December session (1826), was allowed therefor the sum of $10.00. The location of this building is not given, but it is not at all improbable it was the same as that of Ogee. Joseph Ogee was a half-breed with a full-blooded Pottawatomic wife. He had probably come with the advent of the American Fur Company in 1818, to their trading post at Opa (Wesley City), where it is known that Beeson had been located. The fur trade was at this time under control of John Hamlin, of Peoria, and it is probable the employes had changed their residence.

It is learned from authentic sources that Ogee had the best house in Peoria, it being the only one constructed of hewn logs. He did not, however, remain here long, but soon afterward removed to Rock River, as hereinbefore stated. The house in which the court was held at the December term, 1826, (The Beeson House) is thus described in a recent history: "The Court was held in a log building fourteen feet square that stood on the bank of the river, just below the bridge of the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railway. It had only one window and its loft was low—in fact, it was a genuine log cabin." A writer in Drown's Historical View of Peoria, (1844), supposed to be John Hamlin, says the house in which the court was held in November, 1826, was "a log building on the bank of the river, in which jurors slept on their blankets on the floor."

For the next two years it appears somewhat uncertain where the courts were held. At the January term, 1827, of the County Commissioner's Court the Sheriff was authorized to procure a house for the next term of court. No other orders appear on their records until the March term, 1829, when John Hamlin, for the consideration of seventy-five dollars, conveyed a certain house to the county by the following instrument:

"I do hereby assign to the County Commissioners of Peoria County, for the use of said county, all my right, title and claim to a certain log house situated in the town of Peoria, for and in consideration of seventy-five dollars—the said house known as the one built by Simon Crozier, and formerly occupied as a store house by said Crozier.

"JOHN HAMLIN.

"Peoria, Ill., March 3, 1829.

"Witness: John Dixon."

At the same time it was ordered that "the Treasurer pay John Hamlin seventy-five dollars for a house for the use of the County, which house was formerly occupied by Simon Crozier as a store house."

It has been supposed by some that this house was also situated below the present railroad bridge; but Mr. Ballance, who arrived in Peoria soon afterwards, says in his History of Peoria, it was located "at or near where the Fort Clark Mill stands" [which was on the river bank on the northeasterly side of Harrison street—Ed.] Mr. Drown, erroneously supposing it to have been the building ordered to be erected by the County Commissioner's at their first meeting, says: "it was put up on the bank of the river a little south of Fort Clark on Block 51, [between Liberty and Harrison streets—Ed.]. It was built of hewn logs, 16 feet by 14 feet, with a cellar under it which served as a jail. It stood until 1843, when it was removed and Mr. Orin Hamlin's steam flouring mill erected on its site." It is evident this was not the Ogee house, and it may not have been the Beeson house, but the one bought of Hamlin, and that it was situated above the bridge, instead of below it. The latest history of Peoria, erroneously locating it below the bridge, says it had been erected and occupied as a store-house by Simon Crozier, and was the one in the upper story of which the Circuit Court was held, when the cabin court room became too small to accommodate the attendance. It is true it was the Crozier house, as stated in the instrument of conveyance, but it is erroneous to say it was below the bridge. Nor is the reason there given for its occupancy correct, for it was no larger than the Ogee house. A pencil sketch of Peoria in 1831, attributed to J. M. Roberts, which, as a lithograph, has found its way into the public prints, corroborates Mr. Drown and Mr. Ballance in locating it just below Fort Clark. It may, therefore, be considered reasonably certain that, while the Ogee house was located below the bridge, the later one occupied the site of the "Old Red," or "Fort Clark Mill," now occupied by the warehouse of the Peoria Transfer Company.

The style of the building, as already described, is corroborated by the records, for we find that at the June term, 1829, it was ordered that the lower story of the Court House be used as a jail; and, at the September term of the next year, John Hamlin, from whom it had been purchased, was given the use of the cellar under the same until the month of April then next at $3.00, which sum had been paid by F. Bourbonait, the preceding winter, for storing his goods in the basement.

In the meantime this building, called the court house, was undergoing extensive improvements. At the September term, 1830, the Clerk was authorized to get it repaired, "i. e. plastered in the joints, weather-boarded and a window with glass on the river side, and a plank floor laid loose on the joice above—the work to be done on as good terms as could be had reasonably, and that he should present his bills to the next Commissioner's Court properly authenticated." At the same time, John Hamlin was authorized to purchase a ten-plate stove with the necessary pipe to cost not more than $30. It does not appear that these repairs were made, but it is probable they were, as they are not included in a more extensive order for repairs and improvements made at the June term, 1831, which order reads as follows: "Ordered that the Treasurer pay $16 for repairs to the Court House as follows: A desk, the boarding and casing to be of walnut plank 6 feet long, 4½ feet high, 3½ feet wide from the wall, sided in front and posts faced at the other end; narrow strip on front top, from that inward slope 12 inches, floored with any kind of sound plank, one step from the room floor, all but the floor to be plained, a narrow strip on the inside end of the slope—four benches, two 14 feet long, or the length of the room, two 6 feet long, one and one half inches thick, with an additional strip or piece where the legs are put in. The lower room, the three hewed logs missing to be put in place, that is, replaced with a door cheek, a door to be made of strong inch plank, hinges, pad-lock and staples to be furnished by the workmen. Also two benches for table." These improvements were all doubtless made, for subsequently at the same term, the use of the cellar was given to John Hamlin; there was an allowance made to Moses Clifton of $16.75 for repairs to the Court House.

The accommodations thus furnished do not appear to have been sufficient for all county purposes, for we find several orders subsequently made for the use of private houses by the Commissioners. One significant order appears on July 10, 1834, when leave was granted (to whom not stated) to keep a school in the Court House for one quarter, except in term of Court or when needed by County Commissioners or for elections. It is also said to have been used for religious meetings as occasion required. It was sold to Bigelow & Underhill in 1835 for $60.00, and according to Mr. Drown it remained standing until 1843.

In the year 1833, steps were taken looking to the erection of a new Court House. But the necessity for a jail was then pressing upon the authorities from an unexpected quarter. A gang of thieves had made their appearance in the county and it became necessary to send one of them to Schuyler County for trial, and two others to the jail in Putnam County for safe keeping until the sitting of Court. Over and above the ordinary court costs the expenses attending their imprisonment were as follows:

To Giles C. Dana for arresting and keeping L. Thomas and Joseph McMechan	$ 2.50
Amos Stevens for conveying Thornton Hollis to Schuyler Co.	49.50
Wm. Compher for conveying Webster Evans to Putnam County	29.00
William Compher for conveying Joseph McMechan to Putnam County	29.00
William Compher for pursuing Thornton Hollis	9.37
William Compher for bringing two prisoners from Putnam jail	31.00
Obadiah Motley, Sheriff Putnam County, for keeping Evans from November 21 to April 22	68.50
Obadiah Motley for keeping McMechan November 28, to April 22	65.37
Total for three prisoners	$284.25

It was accordingly ordered that lot 3 in block 37 be set apart for the building of a jail. The contract for its erection was let to George De-Pree, who, at the April term, 1835, was awarded orders to the amount of $381.00, which was probably not its entire cost, for Mr. Ballance, in his history, says it was to have cost $1,000, which sum he thinks too much for so small a building. He describes it as follows: "About the year 1834 a jail was built of square logs, on the alley between Main and Hamilton and between Monroe and Perry streets. It was sixteen feet square and fourteen feet high. The lower story was constructed of three thicknesses of logs—two lying horizontally, and one between them standing perpendicularly, so that, should any attempt be made to bore the logs, the perpendicular ones would come down and stop the hole. The upper story was of only one thickness of logs. To give strength, these logs were dove-tailed at the corners. Above the strong room there was a strong floor, and a trap door. Through this trap door prisoners were passed and then the ladder drawn up. The floor of the lower part was made by square timbers fitted close together, and the whole covered with oaken plank spiked down." It does not appear to have had any windows in the lower story, for Henry Halin was afterwards at the March term, 1839, ordered to put one in. This was the only jail Peoria County had until the year 1849, when a new one was erected as hereinafter described. The lot on which it was situated was sold to Halsey O. Merriman, June 9, 1847, for $150, the contract providing for a conveyance of the same on or before March 1, 1849, or sooner if it ceased to be used as a jail before that date.

As the filling of one want often creates another, so the possession of a jail created the necessity of a jailor's house. This was supplied by contract with Daniel Bristol, who erected one on the same lot with the jail, for which he was paid $270.00 at the June term, 1836, but there is no certainty that this was its entire cost. It was then immediately rented to Stephen G. New-lank until the November following at $5.00 per month.

Initial steps for the building of a Court House were taken at the June term, 1833, when the Clerk was ordered to advertise in the Sangamon Journal for sealed proposals, to be delivered at the Clerk's office until the 6th day of July then next, for the furnishing of 150,000 brick on the public square, at which time contracts would be awarded; also, that at the same time contracts would be let for the stone and lumber that might be wanted to construct a Court House.

The matter of expensive drawings and a percentage to the architects for superintendence would, to the casual observer, seem to have been overlooked; but it was not so, for we find that at the March term, 1834, Reuben B. Hamlin, who was one of the constructors for furnishing the lumber, was allowed $15.00 for a draft of the Court House, besides a bill of timber for the same.

At the July term, 1833, the bids for brick having been received, the contract for the same was awarded to Samuel Hackelton, at $5.00 per thousand, and to (Alvah) Moffatt and (Reuben B.) Hamlin was awarded the contract for the lumber. The brick were burned at the foot of the bluff near Knoxville avenue by Moore & Pitt, in whose employment was Robert Smith, now of Mossville.

The necessity for a Court House is well illustrated by an order made at the same September term, to the effect that William R. Swinerton be paid for room rent for the Clerk's office, but that thereafter the Clerk should have leave to keep his office in the Court House, but not to exclude the Sheriff therefrom. At the same term Aquila Wren was allowed $60.00 to purchase plank for doors and sash for the new building.

At the January term, 1834, John Hamlin was made agent to furnish rock upon the ground for the foundation and to procure hewn timber for the Court House upon the best terms obtainable. The Clerk was directed to advertise in the Sangamon Journal, Beardstown Chronicle and St. Louis Republican, [there being then no newspaper in Peoria—Ed.]; that sealed proposals would be received at the Clerk's office until the third day of the next term for doing the mason work in laying the foundation walls, and also the brick work, the county furnishing the materials. Proposals were also invited for the carpenter work exclusive of the doors and windows—plans and specifications to be seen at the Clerk's office.

At the March term, 1834, the contract for the mason work was awarded to Charles W. McClallan and the carpenter work to George B. Macy. John Hamlin was released from his agency to procure materials, and, at the ensuing April term, Francis Voris was appointed agent to superintend the erection of the building and served until July 10th, when he was succeeded by Isaac Waters.

The work had now been begun, and at the June term, 1834, the following orders were made in payment for the first work done on the (then) new Court House:

F. Voris, digging 85½ yards foundation at 10 cents per yard$ 8.50
 C. W. McClallan for quarrying 58 window sills at 62½ cents each, 2 door sills at 62½ cents each, and 200 feet water table at 6½ cents per foot..... 50.00

 Alvah Moffatt for hauling 16.62½
 George Martin for pine plank 283.00
 John H. Dusenberry for time and $5.00 advanced for quarrying rock 6.12½

The Commissioners having undertaken to furnish the materials and to have the work done by separate contracts, a large amount of labor devolved upon them in procuring materials, in superintending the work, in auditing and paying accounts, all of which would be interesting if space permitted. A few leading facts will sufficiently indicate the progress of the building towards completion. At the July special term, 1834, Joseph Mitchell was paid for hauling caps, sills, water tables and scaffold poles; Alvah Moffatt $150, for money advanced to purchase lumber; C. W. McClallan, $50 on mason work and John Pitt for hauling caps and sills. At the October term of the same year, John Hamlin was again appointed agent for the same purpose of procuring materials, the lack of which had caused serious delay in the progress of the work. At this time a controversy sprang up between the Commissioners and Charles W. McClallan arising out of this delay. The Commissioners declared the contract violated on his part and took the whole matter into their own hands. The difficulty was brought to a close by the appointment of Francis Voris, George B. Macy, William Compher, Jacob Chrisman and A. S. Buxton as arbitrators, who awarded McClallan $76 damages for the delay, and he was then permitted to go on with his contract.

Down to this period it seems the building was a plain structure, the exterior consisting of four brick walls without portico or ornament of any kind, and possibly without a cupola. It was at this time determined that it should have a portico and, if a cupola or bell tower had been provided for in the original plan, it was now determined that it should have a balustrade. It therefore appears that, at the April term, 1836, Joshua Bowman was awarded a contract for foundation stones for the columns, the same to be four feet square, ten inches thick and to cost $35.00. It seems that Hamlin and Macy had also been somewhat delayed in their work from causes already mentioned, and that, in consequence of the alterations, they would be put to additional expense and be subjected to still further delays. It was therefore ordered that they should proceed with their work according to contract, and that all such extra work, additions, alterations and damages should be allowed thereafter, the amount to be computed by two disinterested mechanics. The work then went rapidly on towards completion. The walls were up ready for the superstructure some time in May, and they had "a raising," with a dinner furnished by that prince of caterers, Augustus O. Garret, for which he obtained an order on the treasurer at the June term. At the same time the clerk was ordered to post notices for proposals to be in by July 16, for the painting of the building inside and outside.

At the August term, Joshua Bowman was awarded a contract to furnish, cut and lay stone steps around the piazza and up to the back door of the Court House, at 62½ cents per foot. The plastering was not done until late in the fall, for it appears that on October 16th, Charles W. McClallan secured an order for $100, on his contract for plastering to be paid when the first coat was on. Soon after this the November term of the Circuit Court took place, and it seems to have been held in the Court House, while in an unfinished state; for at the December term Reuben Hamlin, William P. Buxton, Nathaniel Dyes, John Brown, Albert Hurd and Job Ross were each allowed compensation for suspension of work on the Court House during the sitting of the Circuit Court. At the same term Henry Gilbert, on the part of the County, and W. A. Blair, on the part of Reuben B. Hamlin, assessed the additional compensation to be allowed the latter under the resolution of the preceding April, as follows:

To additional size of building.....	$	300.00
To one extra window		11.50
To extra work on windows.....		75.00
To balustrades around bell deck.....		50.00
To damages for failure on part of contract.....		570.00
To hindrance for lumber this summer..		50.00
To glue 20. at 31¼ cents.....		6.25
To extra work on capitals		150.00
To cash paid for labor		1.50
To cash paid for drayage50

The Court House was then far enough advanced to admit of the occupancy of a portion of the first story, which was divided into six rooms, and Horace P. Johnson, an attorney, brother of Elbridge G. Johnson, subsequently State's Attorney, was granted leave to occupy room No. 2 from and after the 9th of December. On the 11th of the same month Joshua Bowman was awarded the contract for building and erecting four plain round columns in front of the Court House, to be completed by the first day of July then next, at $10.00 per foot, running measure. About the same time a contract was entered into with C. W. McClallan to put a cornice around the ceiling of the court room, which seemed to be not attractive enough without one. Emigrants from the East were now pouring in, and the prosperity of the times seemed to justify these additional expenditures to make the Court House more attractive. These two contracts were completed and settled for, at the June term, 1836. When this Court House was torn down in 1876, the sections of these columns were sought after as relics and purchased by officers of the Court and members of the bar, some of which may yet be seen on the sidewalks in front of their dwellings.

The Court House was now practically finished, a few extra touches, such as gutters and conductors, lightning rod and shutter blinds on the steeple being subsequently added. Aside from the public officers, Horace P. Johnson seems to have been the sole occupant for a year. At the December term, 1836, rooms were let as follows: No. 2 to Horace P. Johnson at $50.00 per year; No. 3 to Charles Kettelle; No. 5 to E. N. Powell, at the same rent, and the grand jury room to A. M. Hunt at $45.00, with liberty to the Grand Jury to occupy it during Circuit Court. At the July term, 1837, No. 4 was rented to Onslow Peters, until the December term, for $12.50. At that term there was a re-letting as follows: No. 2 to Horace P. Johnson and Jacob Gale (the latter of whom has but recently died); No. 3 to Charles Kettelle; No. 4 to Onslow Peters, and No. 5 to E. N. Powell at $50. At the re-letting the next year some changes appear: No. 2 going to Johnson; No. 3 to Kettelle; No. 4 to Peters & Gale; No. 5 to George B. Parker (New Probate J. P.); No. 6 to Frisby & Metcalfe, at $50.00 each. At the June term, 1839, No. 7 was let to Lincoln B. Knowlton, excepting when needed for jury purposes. In later years some of the partitions were taken out and the first room on the right of the hall was occupied by the Sheriff, and next to him was the office of the Circuit Clerk. On the left of the hall a large room was occupied by the County Clerk, and this was afterwards also used by the Board of Supervisors. Next to him was a small room occupied by the County Judge, who shared his room with a firm of attorneys.

The court room located in the second story was reached by stairs inside the building, on each side of which was a jury room, but some years later a balcony was constructed in the portico which was approached by twin stair ways, one on each side of the main entrance. From that time onward the court room occupied the entire second floor.

The log jail above described was made to serve its purpose until the year 1849, when a more commodious one and better suited to its purpose was completed on the corner of Washington and North Fayette (now Eaton) streets. The process of procuring this needed improvement was even more tedious than had been that of the Court House. On June 7, 1844, the Commissioners made an order that notices be given in "The Press" and "Register" (Peoria newspapers) requesting any person or persons to produce plans at the succeeding September term for a jail to be built of stone. Nothing further seems to have been done until December 4, 1845, when a contract was entered into with George O. Kingsley for the erection of a jail, of which the plans are not given, for $6,640. At the March term, 1846, the jail was located upon lot number one of the subdivision of lots one and three, in block eighteen, in the town of Peoria. Chester Hamlin was appointed to superintend the work and to report progress at each succeeding term, and to have two per cent commission. Charles Ulrichson, an architect, was allowed $10 for examining the plans and specifications.

Kingsley made some little progress in the work, for which he was paid $616, in the aggregate; but, at the September term, 1846, the contract was by mutual agreement rescinded. The work was then suspended for that season, but at the December term the Clerk was directed to advertise for proposals to be submitted at the January term, 1847, for the building of a jail according to plans and specifications in the Clerk's office. On January 6, 1847, a contract for the erection of the same was let to Thomas Turlatt, Thomas P. Smith and William Smith, substantial farmers of what is now Logan township, for the sum of $7,450.

The progress of the building seems to have been very slow, probably on account of lack of funds. But, although the jail still lacked the roof as contracted for, from the furnishings of which the contractors seem to have been relieved, it was on April 14, 1849, accepted as fully completed and, on settlement, there was found due them the sum of $1,695.99. It would seem that the contractors had been relieved from that part of the contract which required a copper roof, and that a temporary one had been substituted which was afterwards replaced by an iron one. Thus, after the lapse of five years from the first movement in that direction, the county found itself in possession of a substantial jail. Its acceptance from the contractors was probably hastened somewhat by the fact that the old one had been sold to Merriman, under a contract which provided for the delivery of possession on March 1, 1849.

That part of it which fronted the street had the appearance of an ordinary brick dwelling house of the style in which such houses were usually built. It was of brick and was used for the Sheriff's or jailor's house, while the rear portion, or jail proper, was of stone. The cells were on the first floor ranged around the outer walls, in which grated windows were inserted. A hall ran between the two ranges of cells. On the second floor was a large room called the debtor's room, so called from the barbarous practice of imprisoning men because they could not pay their debts. It was later used as a place of confinement for female prisoners. The brick portion still stands, but the jail part has been removed.

In 1867, the Board of Supervisors bought the lot on which the present jail is located for the sum of $6,000, the same having originally belonged to the county and having been sold by the County Commissioners for seventy-five dollars. The new jail was completed at a cost of $75,000, and was placed in the custody of the Sheriff on the 24th day of February, 1869.

The Court House erected in 1835, having become insufficient for the needs of the county and a more secure place for the records having become a matter of prime necessity, it was about the year 1858 determined to erect a new one. A very chaste and beautiful plan was adopted at an estimated cost of about $100,000. It was to stand on the northwest side of the public square with one front on the square and one on Jefferson avenue. It was, however, not thought wise to proceed at once with the erection of the entire building, but only so much thereof as would afford sufficient room for the Clerks' offices and a safe depository for the records. The plan adopted contemplated a rotunda in the center approached through a portico on each front, and surmounted by a handsome dome. In one wing of the first floor were to be the Clerks' offices and, in the other, rooms for the other county officers. A court room was to occupy each wing of the second story. The first story of the northeast wing was erected according to the plan. The portion so erected was divided lengthwise into two rooms, occupied respectively by the Circuit and County Clerks. It was thoroughly fire-proof; and, although unsightly in appearance, served these purposes well for a period of nearly twenty years.

On the 10th of December, 1874, Mr. Horace G. Anderson, chairman of the committee on public buildings, submitted a report to the Board of Supervisors in favor of the erection of a new Court House. After quite fully setting forth the insufficiency of the existing one, the report concluded with three resolutions, as follows:

"Resolved, 1. That the County of Peoria needs a new Court House, and, that, in order to build the same, it is necessary to issue County bonds.

"2. That the question of issuing county bonds to the amount of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, to run not exceeding ten years, and to draw not exceeding eight per cent interest, be submitted to the legal voters at the next April election.

"3. That the County Clerk be instructed to give the proper notice that the question will be submitted to be voted upon at that election, and that he cause to be printed on the ballots to be used at that election the words, 'For County Bonds' and 'Against County Bonds,' as provided by law."

After being amended so as to change the time of voting from April until the next November election, the resolutions were adopted by a vote of 16 in the affirmative to 9 in the negative.

The vote on the question of issuing bonds, taken November 2, 1875, resulted in the affirmative; 4,213 votes being cast for and 2,007 against the issue.

Plans were invited and, after much time spent in their examination, those of Messrs. Wilcox and Miller, architects, of Chicago, were adopted on March 31, 1876.

The architect's description is as follows:

"Style, Venetian Italian; plan, cruciform with grand colonnade entrances or porticoes forty-two feet wide on the two fronts. At the Main and Hamilton street fronts, two story colonnades and arcades. Size, 177 feet front, by 90 feet on Main and Hamilton. Height to cornices, 90 feet, and to top of lantern one hundred and sixty-six feet from the base line. Material of the exterior walls, Amherst stone from the Clough quarry near Cleveland, Ohio."

The contract was let to Philip H. Decker, of Chicago, on May 12, 1876, at his bid of $290,071.31, and was signed by John A. McCoy (of Millbrook), Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

"The old Court House was sold to David Burns for $250, to be removed within ten days. On Saturday, the 13th of May, the members of the Peoria bar, many of whom had grown old in the practice of their profession beneath its shadow, assembled in the court room of the condemned structure for a formal leave taking before the work of demolition should commence, Jonathan K. Cooper presided. Speeches were made by Judge Gale, E. G. Johnson, E. P. Sloan, D. McCulloch, Judge Loucks, John Holmes and others. The speeches were full of reminiscences incident to the courts, court-houses, lawyers and judges in early times. Some of them were historical, some humorous, but all appropriate to the occasion."

The corner-stone was laid on Saturday, September 30, 1876. The ceremonies on that occasion were simple, appropriate addresses being made by Jonathan K. Cooper, Esq., one of the earliest members of the bar then living, and by Hon. Joseph W. Cochran, Judge of the Circuit Court. After the speeches, Thomas Cratty, Esq., a prominent member of the bar, and Mark M. Aiken, one of the oldest settlers, officiated in placing within the stone many documents and articles of historical value.

The building was completed in the beginning of the month of November, 1878. On the 18th of that month the event was celebrated by a grand reception to the public accompanied by a banquet. This was followed by a season of speech-making introduced with prayer by Rev. J. D. Wilson, Rector of Christ (R. E.) Church, and participated in by Messrs. Lawrence W. James, Thomas Cratty, Washington Cockle, Fuller, McCoy, Tipton, Cremer, and Judges Day, McCulloch, Joseph W. Cochran and Sabin D. Paterbaugh. All day long there was a throng of visitors to the new building, and at night it amounted to a crusade. About 250 persons sat down to the banquet prepared by Charles H. Deane, proprietor of the Peoria House.

After sundry additions to and deductions from the original contract price, resulting in changes of specifications had been duly allowed, the net cost of the building was found to be $248,028.75.

It is warmed by steam generated at a boiler house in the rear of the jail across Hamilton street, and conducted through a tunnel.

The clock in the tower was manufactured by the Seth Thomas Clock Company, of New York. The bell, weighing 4,000 lbs., is from the Meneely and Kimberly Bell Works, at Troy, New York. Both bell and clock were furnished by the American Clock Company, of New York, at a cost of $2,495. The stone coping around the square was furnished by Messrs. Trichel & Son, of Peoria.

After the demolition of the old Court House until the completion of the new, the courts were held in two buildings, originally churches, the First Baptist situated on the lot now used as a part of the county jail premises, purchased for temporary use as a Court House, and the Congregational church situated on the corner of Main street and the alley in the block next above the public square. Both buildings have since been removed.

THE ALMS HOUSE.

On the 11th day of December, 1847, the County Commissioners purchased of William Mitchell the south half of the northeast quarter of section 9, township 8 north, 7 east, for a poor farm for the sum of $1,000. The buildings then on the land were considered sufficient for the present needs of the county, and Commissioners immediately took measures to have the same opened for the receipt of paupers by the first of February ensuing. They visited the farm, bought furniture and provisions, and in person proceeded to make all necessary arrangements for the support and accommodation of those who should come under their care. Having invited and received proposals from different persons to undertake the superintendence of the same, that of Hiram Partridge was accepted, and, on the second day of February, 1848, he was appointed the first Superintendent of the Poor Farm of Peoria county for one year, at the salary of $275—he to give bond in the sum of $1,000, and to have charge of the Poor House and the poor to be placed therein.

On the 9th of March ensuing it was ordered that the Poor House be established on the south half of the northeast quarter of section 9, township 8 north, range 7 east, and that the same was then ready for the reception of the poor of the county; that notice thereof be published in the public newspapers and notices sent to the several overseers of the poor, requiring all persons chargeable to the county to be conveyed thither.

On the 7th of February, 1849, that being the end of his first year, Hiram Partridge was paid $75, the balance due on his salary; also $68 for three cows and twenty-two hogs purchased of him, and $8 for harvest hands paid by him. He was re-appointed Superintendent for the ensuing year and for the services of himself, his wife, three boys and the use of a yoke of oxen, one wagon and one horse, he was to receive three hundred and seventy-five dollars. The next year for the same service, less the yoke of oxen, but plus the use of a cow, he was only to receive $275. This ended his appointments by the County Commissioners, but he continued for years afterwards under appointment by the Board of Supervisors.

"In the summer of 1865, the Board of Supervisors purchased the northwest quarter of section 10, 8 No., 7 E. known as the Herron Farm, adjoining the poor farm, and as an addition thereto, for which they agreed to pay $9,000. This tract consisted of 160 acres, and increased the poor farm to 240 acres. On the 22d of February, 1869, a committee previously appointed reported that they had received several propositions for the erection of an almshouse, and that the bid of G. L. Ryors, for $50,000, made on the basis of the plans shown, was considered to be the lowest and best; also that the committee had prepared a bill to be presented to the Legislature authorizing the Board to issue and sell bonds to the amount of $60,000, for the purpose of erecting the building under consideration, but the Board cut down the cost of the proposed building to $30,000, and a contract was entered into with Charles Ulrichson.

"In February, 1870, the committee in charge of the work reported that Mr. Ulrichson had completed the contract, and that the building was ready to be delivered to the County.

Contract price for building.....	$ 31,879.00
Extra allowance for smoke house, outhouses, etc	3,131.61
Heating apparatus furnished by Keyser
& Co., St. Louis.....	2,940.00
Total cost of building	$37,950.61

"In closing the account, it was voted by the board to present Mr. Ulrichson with an order on the County Treasurer for $500.00 as a token of respect and honor for the faithful manner in which he had performed his part of the contract. This sum added to the above total makes the cost of the Peoria County Alms-house $38,450.61."

Ever solicitous for the welfare of the unfortunates, our Board of Supervisors, in the year 1880, began to agitate the project of providing an asylum for the insane poor. As early as the April meeting in 1881, a committee appointed at the preceding meeting in December, reported a set of plans; but, in view of prospective legislation covering the same ground, the matter was postponed. At the meeting in March, 1882, the committee in charge again reported a set of plans prepared by Mr. Ulrichson, for a building to cost $28,390.00 which were adopted, but the matter was again postponed. At the September meeting of the same year a resolution was adopted to submit to the voters at the November election a proposition to issue bonds to the amount of $50,000, payable in twenty years with interest at 4½ per cent, which proposition was ratified by the voters. Subsequently $40,000 of these bonds were issued and sold at 93½ cents on the dollar.

At the March term, 1883, the committee was authorized to receive bids to be submitted to the new Board to be elected in April following. The new Board entered into a contract with A. F. Miller for the erection of the main building, which was to be of brick, three stories in height, and, with the firm of Kinsey & Mahler, for the plumbing. The building was completed by the time of the meeting in December at a cost, as nearly as has been ascertained, of $37,000.

At the July meeting in the year 1885, the Board purchased of Patrick Jordan the north half of the northeast quarter of Section 9, T. 8 N., R. 7 E., at the rate of $90 per acre, thus making the poor farm consist of two contiguous quarter sections of land.

In March, 1886, the main building or almshouse proper was consumed by fire to such an extent that only the walls were left standing—the asylum, although closely contiguous, was not burned.

At the April meeting a special committee, consisting of the chairman, E. J. Case, Charles P. King, John S. Potter, A. D. Campbell, Crosby White and Thomas Clinch, was appointed to settle with the insurance companies and to attend to all matters pertaining to the re-building of the almshouse. This committee reported at the May special meeting that they had settled with the insurance companies for $14,030.43; that they had the walls of the burnt building braced and stayed in a thorough manner, had secured plans and specifications for its re-building and had received bids for the work. The contract was then awarded to Fred Meintz for $15,172. By the time of the meeting in December of the same year, the building had been completed, with some changes and modifications in its structure, at a cost of $17,020.86.

The fire had consumed not only the building but nearly all its furniture and equipments, rendering it necessary to replace them all with new, at a great expense, but the committee reported that not only was the building better than it had been before, but also that it was then better furnished. Seventy-five new bedsteads had been made by one of the inmates at a cost of not to exceed eighty-five cents each.

The condition of the institution at that time is reported as follows: The number received was 85; discharged, 45; deaths, 16; average number of inmates, 142; average cost of each per day, 14½ cents.

The following is the inventory of live stock and farm products on hand at that time: 4 mules worth $600; 3 horses, $100; 20 milch cows, $500; 3 two-year old steers, $75; 3 one-year old, $45; 1 two-year old heifer, $40; 3 one year, $75; 1 bull, 12 calves, $100; 53 old hogs, $636; 85 shoats, $350; 9 acres corn, average 35 bushels per acre; 45 acres corn; 40 acres oats, 1,500 bushels; 20 acres rye, 15 bushels per acre; 8 acres potatoes, 300 bushels; 30 acres meadow yielding 50 tons hay.

The expenses as follows: salary of overseers, $1,200; inspectors, $200; physician, $300; incidentals, $337.85; repairs and lumber, $1,309.60; hired help, $1,218.50; provisions for one year, $6,986.71; cash turned into the County treasury, $1,257.32.

The last extensive improvement erected upon the poor farm was a hospital for the sick and infirm. The adoption of this much needed improvement had occasioned a spirited contest in the Board, between the advocates of an independent hospital, to be owned and under the control of the County, and those who favored uniting with the City of Peoria in the erection of a larger building for the use of both City and County. The advocates of the first plan prevailed and a plan was adopted sufficient to accommodate about sixty patients.

Plans were presented and adopted at the September meeting in the year 1896, but the contract was not let until a subsequent date, when it was let to H. J. Kinney at his bid of $10,281.00. By the time of the September meeting in 1897, the building was completed at a total cost of $11,418.88.

Since that time a small chapel has been erected on the farm costing a few hundred dollars, the actual amount not ascertained.

From these statistics it will be seen that the County is now well equipped with public buildings. But the rapid increase of population and business betoken the near approach of the time when the Court House, at least, will have to be enlarged.

CHAPTER XVIII.

EARLY CHURCHES.

As already seen, the Roman Catholics can rightly claim to have been the first to proclaim the Christian religion within the present boundaries of Peoria County. In fact, that was the only form of christianity known in this region for more than one hundred years. What its influence for good may have been upon the people of those days we have no need here to inquire, for between those times and the present there is a hiatus of several years when there were no white people here, and the church, if the former inhabitants ever had one, had ceased to exist as an organized body. If any French people remained in this region after the destruction of Le Ville de Maillet they were like sheep without a shepherd.

As the American settlements began in the southern part of the State, we must look in that direction for the first appearance of the church among the pioneers. The Methodists and Baptists, having imbibed the true missionary spirit at an earlier day than the Presbyterians or Congregationalists, they were the first to enter upon the missionary soil of Illinois. But for many years their numbers were few, and, in many cases, their preaching as well as their doctrines were crude, but being men of earnest zeal and consecrated purpose, they wielded a mighty influence over the people.

To those who had left christian homes and influences in the settled portions of the country, to try their fortunes upon the frontiers, the coming of the missionary or local preacher was regarded as a benediction from on high; he was soon taken into their confidence, became the adviser in all their plans, was present at their marriage feasts, baptized them and their children into the visible church, buried their dead and administered consolation to the bereaved.

Unfortunately no vital statistics, except the records of marriages, were, in early times, required to be kept. But from this meager record we may learn something of the introduction and growth of the church among the people. For the first six years after the advent of Abner Eads and his party into the region around Fort Clark, we find no trace of any marriage having been performed by a minister of the gospel.

It has been stated that William Eads, brother of Abner Eads, came with his family to Fort Clark in 1823, and that his coming was the planting of Methodism in Peoria. If this is the true date of his arrival, the singular fact is revealed that, very soon after his coming, he received an appointment as Justice of the Peace, for he was commissioned as such on June 17th, and in December of that year, the records of Fulton County disclose the fact of his having exercised the functions of that office in the performance of a marriage ceremony. As these early marriages, both in Fulton and in Peoria County, disclose many interesting facts regarding the formation of society in this county, they are here given by name. The first marriage in Fulton County after it was separated from Pike took place on July 2, 1823, and is of special interest to Peorians. It was the marriage of Thomas Lee Ross and Susan Nye, a niece of John L. Bogardus, the first lawyer of Peoria, celebrated by the brother-in-law of the groom, Hugh R. Coulter, J. P. Thomas Lee Ross had a brother Ossian, a prominent citizen, who was defeated in the race for Sheriff in 1823, by Abner Eads of Peoria. The next marriage ceremony, which occurred July 20, 1823, was that of Dr. Alexander Wolcott, Indian Agent at Chicago, and Eleanor Kinzie (her real name being Ellen Marion), daughter of John Kinzie, the founder of Chicago. This marriage ceremony was performed by John Hamlin, J. P., of Peoria, on a trip to Green Bay, as elsewhere related. Dr. Wolcott was a graduate of Yale College; studied medicine, became Surgeon's Mate in the army, was appointed Indian Agent at Ft. Dearborn, and, not long after the organization of Peoria County, received an appointment as Justice of the Peace.

Among other Fulton County marriages are the following: 1823, August 3, John Gerrel and Ann Griffin by John Hamlin, J. P.; 1824, March 10, Alvah Moffatt and Clancy Eads by _____ J. P.; November 2, Theodore Sargeant and Rachel Brown by David W. Barnes, County Commissioner; 1825, February 22, William C. Clark and Polly Wentworth by Ossian Ross, J. P. Theodore Sargeant was at first rejected as suitor for her daughter by the mother of Polly Wentworth, and then married Rachel Brown; his companion in travel, David W. Barnes, performing the ceremony, while Polly Wentworth married the peddler, William Clark, of Peoria. She probably, under the name of Mary Clark, was a member of the first Methodist class of Peoria.

During the first year of its existence there were, so far as its records show, nine marriages celebrated in Peoria County, only one of which was by a minister of the gospel. They were the following: 1825, March 22, William Blanchard and Betsy Donoho by Jacob Wilson, J. P.; April 22, Abner Cooper and Sarah Chilton by Stephen French, J. P.; June 23, Levi McCormick and Lydia Eads by Nathan Dillon, J. P.; August 18, Samuel Miller and Elizabeth Kinzie, by John Kinzie, J. P.; in December, Jacob Wilson and Emily Donoho (date and officer performing ceremony not known); December 11, Archibald Allen and Lauretta Rensen by John Dixon, J. P.; January 10, 1826, John Hamlin and Elizabeth Smith, by Rivers Cormack, a minister of the gospel; December 22, David Harkey and Margaret Barber by John Phillips, J. P.

During the next two years there were eighteen marriages in the county, not one of which was celebrated by a minister. Rivers Cormack is, therefore, the sole representative of the sacred office in the matter of marriages for a period of three years next after the organization of the county. Who he was, whence he came or whither he went seems not to be known. Had he done much preaching he certainly would have been mentioned. He was, during the same year, appointed to take the census of the county but declined the offer. He is subsequently mentioned in connection with one or two other positions of minor importance, but does not seem to have been a man of much influence. He is not mentioned as a voter at the first election, nor does his name appear among the list of taxable inhabitants.

In the year 1825, the same in which the county was organized, the Methodist missionaries began to appear.

Jesse Walker is the first regular minister of the Methodist Church to appear on the marriage records, May 3, 1828; Isaac Scarrett, a (Methodist) missionary, April 22, 1829, the second; Gershon Silliman, an elder (minister) of the Baptist Church, September 21, 1831, the third; Palmer Dyer, rector of St. Jude's Episcopal Church, January 10, 1835, the fourth; Isaac Kellar, a minister of the Presbyterian Church, September 15, 1835, the fifth; Calvin W. Babbitt, minister of the Presbyterian Church, October 5, 1835, the sixth; and Jeremiah Porter, a minister of the Presbyterian Church, February 15, 1836, the seventh. These are all the ministers whose names appear upon the marriage records for the first eleven years of the county's history. At that period the influx of population began to be very great, other ministers soon came and the marriages became about equally divided between them and the civil officers.

At the first meeting of the Illinois Methodist Conference, begun and held on October 23, 1824, Rev. Jesse Walker was appointed a missionary to the Indians near Fort Clark and up the Illinois River toward the State of Michigan, including all the country between the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers. It does not appear at what precise date he arrived at Peoria, but it must have been late in the fall. He found the people quite willing to receive him, and immediately set about forming a class, an organization which lies at the foundation of every Methodist Church. The names of the members were as follows: William Early (the leader) and his wife; Susanna Walker, wife of the missionary, James Walker, his wife and son; Rev. Pierce McCormack, a local preacher; William Eads and wife; Mrs. Rebecca Eads, wife of Abner Eads; William Holland and wife; Mrs. James Latham, Mrs. John Dixon, Mrs. Hamlin, William Blanchard and Mary Clark.

Of these, James Latham, formerly Probate Judge of Sangamon County, had come in 1821 as Indian Agent, with his family, in company with John Hamlin, bringing with him William Holland as government blacksmith. As nothing is said of the wife of William Blanchard, it is probable the organization took place before his marriage, which occurred March 22, 1825. John James L. Brown.

Hamlin was not yet married, and it is said that Mrs. Hamlin, above mentioned, was his mother, Rev. Jesse Walker was then in his fifty-ninth year, and had a son James, married. He had his residence here at the time of the organization of the county, for his name appears on the poll book of the first election.

During that winter seventeen others were added to the church among whom was Mrs. Ogee, a Pottawatomie Indian, wife of Joseph Ogee, elsewhere mentioned.

John Dixon, afterward Circuit Clerk and founder of the city of Dixon, is also mentioned as a member. The first meetings were held in the log cabin of William Eads, who continued to be a prominent member of the church for years.

At the conference which met in August, 1825, Rev. William See was appointed to the Peoria circuit, and Jesse Walker was continued as a missionary to the Indians. In the spring of 1826 he accompanied Mr. John Hamlin, in a Mackinaw boat, on a through trip by water from Peoria to Chicago. At this time these two enterprising men began to see the importance of establishing commercial relations with Chicago, for, in the month of June following, the missionary obtained a license to keep a ferry across the Illinois River at the mouth of Fox River, doubtless to connect the road then being laid out from Peoria with one from that point to Chicago. The fact of this visit is well established, and it is believed he at that time preached the first Methodist sermon ever heard in Chicago.

In the summer of 1826 a camp meeting was held on the banks of a small stream, about a mile north of the present Court House, in Peoria. The exact location of this camp does not seem to be known, but inasmuch as it was customary to hold them in the woods, Birket's Hollow would seem to fit the location given.

At the conference held in September, 1826, Revs. Walker and See were continued at their posts, the famous Peter Cartwright being the Presiding Elder. In the month of November following, Mr. Isaac B. Essex and family arrived at Peoria and joined the Methodists. Jesse Walker appointed him teacher for the Indians, with whom he gathered the few white children there were in the village.

The conference which met in September, 1827, appointed Rev. Smith L. Robinson to the Peoria circuit. Rev. William See went to Chicago, where he became the first resident preacher.

In the summer of 1828 a very successful camp meeting was held on Farm Creek, opposite Peoria and about two miles distant, at which Ninian Edwards, then Governor of the State, was present. At the conference of that year Revs. Jesse Walker and Hardin H. Parkington were appointed to the Peoria circuit. This was the last year of Jesse Walker's ministrations in this neighborhood. He then went farther north and seems to have been located for a time on Fox River, also at Plainfield, nine miles from Joliet, and afterward spent some years in Chicago, where he occupied a log house on "Wolf Point," both as a dwelling and a church. He died October 5, 1835.

He was a most earnest and indefatigable worker, the pioneer of Methodism in a large part of this State and Missouri, having founded the churches in St. Louis and Chicago, as well as in Peoria. He was a Virginian by birth, born in Rockingham County, June 9, 1766, removed to Tennessee in 1802, and in 1806 came to Illinois, locating first at Turkey Hill, St. Clair County. In 1807 he held the first camp meeting ever held in Illinois, at a point near Edwardsville, and gradually worked his way north with the advancing frontier. He was of short stature and very dark complexion, walking with an erect, independent bearing. He was a man of great force of character, inured to all manner of hardships, and rendered most valuable services to the early churches.

The work so auspiciously commenced by Jesse Walker was, however, doomed to decline. In September, 1829, James Latta was appointed to the Peoria circuit, Peter Cartwright continuing as Presiding Elder over a district extending from St. Louis to Wisconsin, over which he was expected to travel several times in a year. Peoria circuit was also large, and it was necessary for Rev. Latta to preach at some point nearly every day. About this time (April 22, 1820) the name of Rev. Isaac Searrett appears on the records of marriages as a missionary, but the record fails to show any appointment until the conference of 1830, when he was appointed to the Peoria mission, which seems to have meant the work among the Indians. The same year Rev. Stephen K. Beggs was appointed to the Tazewell circuit, which then included Peoria. He found the class in Peoria had been dissolved, but through his efforts four families were gotten together and William Eads made class-leader. In June, 1831, Mr. Beggs went with Jesse Walker to Chicago and assisted in organizing the first class there. At the conference of 1831 Rev. William Royall was appointed to the Peoria mission, but found no church members here and only about ten families in the village. He was succeeded the next year by Rev. Zadoc Hall, who, in November, organized a class consisting of William Eads and wife, Laura Hale, Abigail Waters and David Spencer. Preaching was at first held in the log tavern of William Eads on Water street between Fulton and Liberty, and in the summer in the old court house on the river bank. Mr. Hall had seventeen regular appointments and traveled that year about 5,000 miles. He labored for forty years in Central Illinois.

At the conference in September, 1833, Rev. Joel Arrington was appointed to the Peoria mission, Rev. John Sinclair being Presiding Elder, and a class was organized with Mark M. Aiken, who had but recently arrived in the place, as leader. The population was then growing rapidly, and regular services began to be held on the Sabbath. They were of a union character, and, when Mr. Arrington could not be present, they were led by Rev. Jonathan G. Porter, a Calvinistic Methodist (as it is said), a shoemaker by trade, whom Mr. Aiken had brought with him from the East. In September (1834), just before conference meeting, a new class was formed consisting of Mark M. Aiken, leader, Samuel B. King, Abigail Waters, Hannah Harker, Laura Hale, Mrs. Hamlin, Nancy Phillips, Mary Caldwell and Josina W. King. This was the beginning of what proved to be a permanent organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Peoria. This was a noted year for the formation of churches, it having witnessed that of the Methodist, Protestant Episcopal and two Presbyterian Churches in Peoria, and one of the latter denomination at Princeville. At the ensuing conference Rev. Leander S. Walker and Mark Robinson were assigned to the Peoria circuit, and in 1835 Rev. William C. Cummings. The latter held meetings in the house of Daniel Bristol, afterward a local preacher, also in the carpenter shop of Samuel Markley, and later in the new Court House. The first Sunday-school in Peoria was started by the Methodists in the same year.

In 1836 Peoria was made a station, and Rev. James W. Dumahy appointed minister. After six months' service he was succeeded by Rev. N. G. Berryman. At this time a lot 72 feet on Fulton by 71 feet on Madison street, was donated by Mark M. Aiken and Asahel Hale for a church. In 1837 Rev. Asahel E. Phillips was assigned to Peoria. He also preached in the Court House, and, as is said, in Rev. David Page's Academy on Second street. In 1838 Revs. William F.

Williams and William Cundiff were assigned to Peoria, and a Rev. Knox labored some here during that year.

At the conference of 1839 Rev. Stephen Beggs was appointed to the Peoria station and Rev. Enos Thompson to the Peoria circuit. The church at Peoria was found to be in a very depressed condition, and the only dwelling house the minister could obtain was a dilapidated one, where he was compelled to remain in very uncomfortable circumstances for three months, when his necessities were relieved by the generosity of George B. Parker, through whom a good house was secured and offered to the pastor free of rent. The only place of worship they had was the carpenter shop of Daniel Bristol, situated on the alley between Water and Washington streets. But the indefatigable Beggs was not content with that. So, rallying his forces around him, they went into the woods and cut timbers for the sills and plates of a new building, begged lumber from the sawmills and brick from the brickmakers. When the material was all ready they assembled at the church and had a "raising." One man hauled the brick for the foundation and another laid them up, and in just one week from the beginning the frame was up. Funds were then solicited far and near for its completion; the sawmills were again appealed to; Josiah Fulton gave a large red-oak tree, others felled it, sawed it up, hauled it in and split it into shingles. Jacob Wilson gave the poles for the rafters, which were carted four miles, and another brother hewed and framed them, and Leonard L. Loomis lathed and plastered the building for his donation. The building was 31 by 40 feet, situated on the same lot which had been donated by Mark M. Aiken and Asahel Hale. Its furniture was not costly, the seats being made of slabs supported by wooden pins in the usual style.

The Methodist Church had now become anchored at the corner of Fulton and Madison streets, where it remained for many years. It had passed the pioneer state, and thenceforward its history belongs to the City of Peoria.

The organization of the Presbyterian Church bears a great resemblance to the political frame work of our government. First there is the General Assembly, embracing the whole country; next below that are the synods covering a smaller territory, now co-incident with the several States; next below them are the presbyteries, of which there are now eleven in the State of Illinois; and next below them is the session of the particular church, which is the lowest in authority. Formerly the territorial extent of synods and presbyteries was much greater than now; the synod of Indiana at one time covering not only that State, but all of Illinois and Missouri. Presbyteries also overlapped State lines, churches in Illinois being attached to presbyteries lying partly in Illinois and partly in Kentucky, Indiana or Missouri. On October 16, 1828, the Center Presbytery was formed, which covered the entire State of Illinois, the first meeting of which was held at Kaskaskia, January 9, 1829. The first Presbyterian church in this vicinity was organized at Canton on Saturday, September 13, 1828, by Rev. John M. Ellis, then a missionary of the American Home Missionary Society. It is not very certain to which presbytery the Canton church would have belonged, but probably to the Presbytery of Missouri, of which Mr. Ellis was a member. But in about a month thereafter, by the action of the Synod of Indiana, the new presbytery was formed and Canton fell into the Center Presbytery. This church was known as the Fulton Church, as it embraced all the territory of Fulton County where any Presbyterians were found. The next nearest Presbyterian churches were at Springfield and Jacksonville, the first named having been organized January 30, 1828, by Rev. John M. Ellis, the last by Rev. John Brich, one of the three Presbyterian ministers whom Mr. Ellis found in the State on June 20, 1827. This minister shortly became closely identified with the formation of the Presbyterian Church of Peoria.

It appears that at the Presbytery of Sangamon, which met at the Sand Prairie Church in April, 1834, Rev. Calvin W. Babbitt and Flavel Bascom reported that there were twenty members of the Presbyterian Church in the county of Peoria who desired to be formed into a church. Thereupon the presbytery appointed those two ministers to perform that duty.

On the 16th day of August, 1834, a church was organized at Princeville by Rev. Robert Stewart, who had but recently been ordained and was then stated supply at Canton, and by Rev. Theron Baldwin, then in the service of the American Home Missionary Society. Jonathan E. Garrison, Hugh White, James Morrow and Erastus Peet were its first ruling elders, and, nine months after its organization, Rev. Calvin W. Babbitt, who had preached the first sermon on that occasion, became its minister. He remained about three years, when he was succeeded for a short time by Rev. George G. Sill.

Early in the summer of that year Rev. Flavel Bascom, who, a year before, had begun his labors as a missionary in Tazewell County, "went to mill" to the one owned by Joshua Aiken on the Kickapoo, three miles west of Peoria, where he met the proprietor. Joshua Aiken was a Congregationalist, and reported two others of the same faith, Moses Pettengill and Dr. Enoch Cross, who had just arrived at Peoria. Mr. Bascom found them with their wives, who were sisters, occupying an unfinished attic in the house of the widow Betsy Aiken, on the bluff near where the St. Francis Hospital now is. It was there those three men resolved on taking the preparatory steps to found a church. But both Pettengill and Cross were soon prostrated with the terrible fever which prevailed that year, and the project had to be deferred. The conditions then existing are thus graphically described by Dr. Cross himself in a communication written to the church at its semi-centennial:

"We found the Court House not quite up to our notions of so dignified a structure. It was a log building, some fifteen feet square, standing on the low bank of Lake Peoria, on one side of which was a raised platform for the Judge, and its seats for lawyers and jurors were formed out of logs split in halves and the split side turned up and raised from the floor by wooden pegs. It was there, in that humble room, and from that rude pulpit, that the early members of your church gladly assembled to listen to the word, though dispensed to them from uncultured lips. Much that was then of deep interest to me has faded from memory. But one of our preachers I distinctly recollect. He was an Englishman and a Methodist. If he did not agree with Paul in the doctrine of "predestination," in practice he did harmonize with that apostle in not being a burden to the church. Six days in the week he labored with his own hands, not at tent-making but at shoemaking, and when the holy Sabbath came, his work bench was placed at one side of the judge's seat, and hammer and lapstone, with other implements of his trade, were neatly covered over with his leathern apron, while he, having donned a clerical black coat and a white neck-tie, stood before us ready to feed his little flock, which did not often number more than eight or ten, unless we reckon the flock of sheep and lambs that took shelter from the heat in the basement or cellar kitchen under the court house floor, or the prairie mice which, to the great delight of the children, held high carnival between the logs. Some of us were lovers of sacred song, but such music as we then made would not now be considered very "artistic," yet it was full of devotion and sincere worship, though its melody was sometimes a little disturbed by the plaintive bleating of sheep and lambs beneath our feet."

During the same year a committee consisting of Rev. Romulus Barnes, who seems to have been then laboring in Fulton County, and Cyrus L. Watson, then at Rushville, were appointed to organize a church at Peoria. That committee came to Peoria in December, 1834, and, upon invitation, Rev. Flavell Bascom, then of Pleasant Grove, but who had preached occasionally at Peoria, assisted in the exercises. The organization took place December 28, 1834. (1)

But there was another element then in Peoria that had not full faith in the orthodoxy of their New England neighbors, who seemed to be in the ascendancy. So, under the leadership of one Samuel Lowry, an Irishman who had been ruling elder in a Cincinnati church, and therefore was still a church official, a few of the orthodox faith got together in his house, on Water street between Main and Hamilton, on December 22, and having Rev. John Brich present, proceeded, without any authority from the presbytery, to organize a church according to their own notions. This was not known to the presbyterial committee, who proceeded to fulfill the duties of their appointment on the 28th day of the month, as above stated. The Lowry church, therefore, antedated the regular organization by six days. Mr. Ballance, in his history, says this church consisted of Samuel Lowry, Mrs. (Andrew) Gray, Mrs. (Matthew) Taggart, John Sutherland, Nelson Buck, and perhaps one or two others. The regular organization consisted of Moses Pettengill and Lucy his wife, Dr. Enoch Cross and Charlotte his wife, Robert E. Little and Clarissa his wife, Theodore Tarlton and Belinda his wife, Joshua Aiken and Jane his wife, Mrs. Betsy Aiken, Miss Sarah Aiken and Luemda Hardesty, all of whom except Mrs. Hardesty were from New England, and all Congregationalists except Dr. and Mrs. Cross and Mrs. Hardesty, who were Presbyterians. Samuel Lowry and John Sutherland were chosen elders of the first organization, and Moses Pettengill, Enoch Cross and Joshua Aiken elders of the second or regular organization. Both parties made application for admission into and recognition by the presbytery at its next meeting, which was held in Quincy, April 2, 1835. The church organized by the committee of the presbytery was at once received, but action upon the request of the Lowry church was deferred and a committee of investigation appointed. It appeared from their application that Mr. Lowry had presented a paper purporting to be a record of its doings, together with a subscription for the erection of a house of worship, and evidence that a missionary had been appointed to labor at Peoria. The committee reported against the reception of the church on account of irregularities in its organization. The name of the missionary intended for this church is not given, but in the summer of that year (1835) Rev. Isaac Kellar removed from Hagerstown, Maryland, to Peoria, and commenced preaching there as a missionary. At the meeting of the presbytery at Canton October 7, 1835, Mr. Lowry again appeared, requesting admission for the First Presbyterian Church of Peoria, and another committee of investigation was appointed, which committee reported, "that although they consider the paper from that church purporting to be a record of its doings, deficient in point of form, yet, as it does appear from the face of the document and from the testimony of the clerk of that church to have been the design of both Mr. Kellar, missionary, and of the people regularly to organize the church according to the views of the presbytery, and further, though the election of elders in that church appears to have taken place before the regular ecclesiastical organization of the church; yet, as the people had obtained a charter of incorporation as the First Presbyterian Church of Peoria, and supposed themselves to be regularly organized at the time, they therefore recommend that the First Presbyterian Church of Peoria be recognized as under the care of presbytery and that Mr. Samuel Lowry be admitted to take his seat as a ruling elder from that church." The report was adopted, and the church was thereafter recognized as in regular standing. Samuel Lowry had so far succeeded in establishing a church sound in the faith. Rev. John Brich, the hero of this transaction, without whose official presence the church could not have been organized, only preached a few weeks, and it is said was succeeded for a short time by Rev. Charles Gault before the advent of Isaac Kellar, but he soon went farther south. John Brich was an Englishman by birth and peculiarities. In the school of the Countess of Huntingdon he received his education for the ministry. At what period he came to this country is not known. Physically he was large and capable of much endurance. His talents were respectable, but his learning and culture were limited. But he had sound sense, a warm heart and an earnest zeal in the Master's cause, which he pursued self-denyingly, traveling extensively at his own charges, visiting the people in their widely scattered houses and settlements, everywhere preaching the word and gathering churches as he was able." (1) He perished in the noted change of temperature Friday, December 16, 1836. It seems that, finding himself unable to proceed on his journey, Mr. Brieb took the saddle from his horse and sat down at the foot of a black-oak tree, where he was found dead in a sitting posture. The place where he was found was about twelve miles southwest of Lincoln, in Logan County, and possibly on the road from Peoria to Springfield.

Samuel Lowry had purchased two lots, 1 and 3 in block 19, from the County Commissioners, situated at the south corner of Adams and Jackson streets, upon which the congregation proceeded, in the year 1835, to erect a frame house of worship by subscription, under a promise from Mr. Lowry that he would, when he should obtain the title, convey the same to the trustees, and which promise he was afterward charged with having violated. This was the first church building erected in Peoria County. It is said to be still standing, having been converted into a dwelling by the addition of a second story, and now occupied by Peter Hayden, No. 113 Jackson street. The Pettengill church, as the other one came to be called, also proceeded to erect a house of worship on the southeasterly end of lot 5 in block 14, just across the alley from Rouse's Hall, on the northeasterly side of Main street. They purchased the southeast half of this lot from the County Commissioners on April 29, 1835, but the deed was not placed on record until August 25, 1836. This deed was made to the trustees of Main Street Presbyterian Church, which shows they had a corporate existence at that time and by that name. Flavel Bascom took up a temporary residence here and served as a supply until the arrival of Rev. Jeremiah Porter, November 22, 1835. In a letter to the church on the occasion of its semi-centennial, Mr. Porter says: "A small church was being built on my arrival in Peoria, and the people were worshipping in the upper story of a drug store—John P. Burlingame's. The unpretending church being completed after a few months, we occupied it." Mr. Drown says it was erected (possibly dedicated) on the 26th day of April, 1836. "It was a building 28x50 feet, plastered inside and outside, and marked to represent stone work." Its erection was contemporaneous with that of the Court House, and, with the exception of that building, was the most pretentious structure in the village.

The two churches having each a house of worship of its own, went on peacefully for the next two years, when the great division between "Old School" and "New School" took place, the Lowry church taking the side of the "Old School" and the Main Street church the side of the "New School." The latter continued, with varying fortunes, under the pastorates of Jeremiah Porter (1835-1837), John Spaulding (1837-41), William T. Allen (1843), and J. S. Lamb (1845), until October 27, 1847, when by the action of the congregation it was changed to a Congregational form of government, as it had always been in spirit.

The Lowry church, however, became in course of time torn with dissensions. Soon after the advent of Rev. Isaac Kellar, some members of his old charge in the East and others from the same vicinity located in Peoria. Among others may be mentioned the Schneblys, the Lindsays, the Campbells, Clark D. Powell, and others who were the staunch friends of Mr. Kellar. For some unexplained reason a hostile feeling sprang up between Samuel Lowry and Mr. Kellar, and Mr. Lowry began to assert such authority over the church property as to dictate who should preach at certain times. The distinguished prelate, Philander Chase, Episcopal Bishop of Illinois, was on one or more occasions placed in the pulpit to the exclusion of Mr. Kellar, when he was there ready to perform his duties as missionary supply. There had also been an attempt made by the Lowry party to have one Rev. John Williamson installed as pastor, to whom the majority objected. These high-handed proceedings led to an examination of the title of the church property, which was found to be the private property of Samuel Lowry or his son, John Kyle Lowry. The majority then withdrew and established their place of worship in the Court House, proceeded to elect elders and engaged Mr. Kellar as their supply—they claiming to be the legitimate First Presbyterian Church of Peoria. In this proceeding we find the names of Henry Schnebly, Robert Campbell, John A. McCoy, Samuel Livingston and William Weis, with twenty-six others. A long warfare ensued, which was carried to the synod, thence to the General Assembly, thence back to the synod and into the presbytery, the contest being whether there were two churches or only one, and if only one which was the one. The controversy seems never to have been fully settled, but in course of time, on account of removals and other causes, the Lowry church became very much weakened and finally became extinct for want of members; not, however, without obtaining title to the two lots occupied by the church, they having been first decided to John K. Lowry, and by him to the church, and then mortgaged by the church for about $500.

The church in which Mr. Kellar was the stated supply thus became the only Presbyterian Church of the "Old School" in Peoria, its official designation being the "Presbyterian Congregation of Peoria," and, after the Main Street Church had become Congregational, it was the only Presbyterian Church in the city until 1853. In 1844 this congregation completed a substantial brick building on Fulton street between Adams and Jefferson streets, which at this writing is being demolished. After passing first into the hands of the Universalists, and then to the Jews, it was finally devoted to business purposes. The congregation worshipped in that building until April, 1852, when they entered a new and elegant church on the corner of Main and Madison streets, which still stands, but is now used for business purposes.

The Congregational Church continued to worship in their first building until about 1850, when a new building was begun on the site of the old one and completed in July, 1852, when they occupied that building and remained until many other changes had taken place which belong to another part of this history. Thus it was that Congregationalism and Presbyterianism were planted together, grew up side by side and have ever been in friendly co-operation in the service of their common Lord and Master.

During the same period other Presbyterian churches were springing up in other portions of the county. Rev. George Sill, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, who resided between Farmington and Canton, preached at Brunswick and Rochester. At Brunswick a Reformed Church was organized, which afterward became Presbyterian. At Rochester a Presbyterian Church was organized, which on October 9, 1838, was received into the presbytery, but in 1856 it was formally dissolved. In 1836 a church of the Associate Reformed (now United) Presbyterian denomination was organized with ten members at Smithville by Rev. John Wallace. Its first ruling elders were John McFadden, Thomas P. Smith and Thomas Smith, all prominent citizens. This organization is still in existence.

Of the Protestant Episcopal Church we have the following accounts. Mr. Drown gives the following quotation from the Illinois Champion of November 1, 1834: "A meeting of gentlemen friendly to the establishment of a Protestant Episcopal Church in this county was held at the house of Mr. Garrett in Peoria, on the 27th of October, 1834. The Rev. Palmer Dyer, from New York, presided, and William Frisby, Esq., was appointed secretary. An Episcopal Church was organized in due form, by the name of 'St. Jude's Church, Peoria.' This is understood to be the first and, as yet, the only regularly organized parish of any denomination in the county. The following gentlemen are the officers duly elected: The Rev. Palmer Dyer, rector; Messrs. Edward Dickinson, Samuel C. Baldwin, wardens; Messrs. A. O. Garrett, Dr. Joseph C. Frye, Wm. Mitchell, Dr. Rudolphus Rouse, Dr. Geo. Kellogg, P. A. Westervelt, Wm. Frisby, A. M. Hunt, vestrymen; William Frisby, Esq., clerk."

Mr. Ballance says that at that time Mr. Garrett was keeping a tavern at the corner of Main and Washington streets; that Mr. Dyer had put up there as a traveler or boarder, and, as there was no house of worship in town, he preached in Mr. Garrett's ball-room. He proposed to organize a society for religious worship. There were few, if any, Episcopalians present, but nobody objected to preaching, and all were more or less ardently in favor of it. So he organized an Episcopal Church, without any reference to the kind of religious training his audience had had, or the religious opinions they entertained. After giving the names of the officers as above, accompanied with some characteristic comments, he says, "it was for several years recognized by Bishop Chase as a very proper Episcopal organization, yet at a subsequent time he ignored it and treated it as never having existed, and organized in its stead another which he called St. Paul's Church, which is regarded by that denomination as the parent church of the city." This statement concerning St. Jude's Church having had an existence for several years is corroborated by Peck's Gazetteer of 1837, which gives one Episcopal Church a place among those of Peoria. Of a church building no token of remembrance seems to have been preserved. In fact, it would seem from the language of that publication that it did not have one. It says, "Peoria now has * * * two Presby- terian houses of worship, and congregations (Main Street and Lowry's—Ed.), one Methodist, one Baptist, one Unitarian and one Episcopal congregation." None are mentioned as having houses of worship except the Presbyterians. The others were simply congregations of worshippers.

Prior to the year 1834 there were no Episcopal churches in the State of Illinois. The general convention of that church, observing the destitute condition of the western country, had made provision in favor of feeble dioceses, under which provision clergymen came into the State from several parishes, organized a diocese and assembled a regular convention. This convention was held in Peoria on Monday, the 9th day of March, 1835, Rev. Palmer Dyer, rector of St. Jude's Church, of that city, being the secretary. There were probably not more than four clergymen present, but it was resolved unanimously, "That this convention do hereby appoint the Rt. Rev. Philander Chase, D. D., a Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, to the Episcopate of Illinois, and that he be and is hereby invited to remove into this diocese and to assume the Episcopal jurisdiction in the same." Bishop Chase accepted the situation, and about the same time Rev. Samuel Chase having received ministerial orders, the bishop made an arrangement with him to come to Illinois as a missionary. The two, in a quaker wagon drawn by a pair of fine horses, traveled down the St. Joseph's River to the town of Niles, and thence to Michigan City, where the bishop delivered the first Episcopal sermon ever preached at that place. From Michigan City they drove along the water's edge of the lake to Chicago, then a newly built town of but few houses but having a flourishing trade. Peoria was his next stopping place; here he officiated, preaching to the congregation which had been recently formed by Palmer Dyer. From Peoria he went to Springfield, where Mr. Samuel Chase had found an opening for a school. After officiating at Springfield he went to Jacksonville and performed like service there. His intention was to go on as far as Alton, but he was deterred from doing so by a report that the cholera had broken out at that place.

On his return to Springfield he received a letter from his wife, enclosing one from Palmer Dyer urging him to attend the next general convention to be held at Philadelphia. While there, on the 28th day of June, 1835, he administered the communion for the first time in Springfield. He then undertook a perilous journey by way of Danville, and thence through the State of Indiana to his former home in Gilead, in the State of Michigan. After having made due preparation for the journey, he set out for the general convention at Philadelphia.

After due consideration, that convention received into its fellowship the diocese of Illinois, which had been recently formed, and of which Bishop Chase was now regularly constituted the bishop. The condition of the church in Illinois is thus described by the committee to whom this whole matter had been referred: "It is but little more than two years since the introduction of the worship and ordinances of our church into this State, and it is less than one year since there was only a solitary clergyman in the whole of this extensive and inviting field. This church had been organized in some of the most important towns of the State. The clergy of the diocese consists of the bishop, four presbyters and two deacons. Communicants in four parishes, 39; baptisms, 2 adults, 14 infants; confirmations, 13; Sunday-school scholars in three parishes, 58; marriages, 3; burials, 5.

"But one house of worship has been completed in the diocese. The good hand of God hath been manifest in effecting thus early the formation of the diocese upon the very frontiers of the far West, and in securing to it, at the commencement of its existence, the invaluable blessing of the Episcopal supervision. Clergymen are only wanting to gather the people into the congregations and to extend throughout the Prairie State, by the blessing of God, the reign of apostolic truth and order."

This convention met in September, 1835, at which time Bishop Chase was confirmed in his appointment to the Episcopate of Illinois, but there was no home for the bishop, no salary attached to his appointment, no parish to receive him and no school for the education of the ministry. There was but one church in the whole diocese, that at Jacksonville, and only three or four clergymen, two of whom, as he says, were on the wing with no permanent support to detain them. It was at this time that he determined to revisit England in the interest of the college which he intended to found.

Such were the small beginnings of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the State of Illinois, which, at that time, had its headquarters in Peoria.

Although the Baptist missionary, Gershom Silliman, was on the field, as appears from the marriage record, as early as 1831, it does not appear that they had any organized church in the county until the year 1836. On the 14th day of August, of that year, a church was organized at Peoria with the following members: Henry Headly, who was their preacher; J. R. Stanton, A. M. Gardner, Adam Gardner, William H. Swinerton, Alpheus Richardson, Ruth Chichester, Mary Stanton, Mary Frye and Melinda Harrison. For some time they held their meetings in the court house. In the latter part of the year 1837 Rev. Alexander Rider took charge of the church, and from 1839 to 1842 Rev. A. M. Gardner was pastor. In the autumn of 1843 Elder J. D. Newell became pastor, and a year later it was determined to erect a church. Benjamin Frye, George W. Willard and Smith Frye were elected trustees, and a lot on Hamilton street opposite the public square, now owned by the county and used as a lawn appurtenant to the jail, was purchased of Thomas L. Mayne for the sum of $200. The pastor made a successful trip soliciting aid from Eastern churches, realizing between $1,700 and $1,800. They then erected what at that time was considered a very fine church, built of brick, with basement, audience room, portico approached by two wide flights of steps from the street, and the whole surmounted by a steeple. The dedication took place October 17, 1846. From this church have sprung all the other churches of that denomination in the city.

Thus were laid the foundations of those Protestant churches which have continued to shed their benign influences over this community until the present day.

CHAPTER XIX.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

By the compact entered into between the United States and the State of Illinois at the time of its admission into the Union, the sixteenth section in every township was granted to the State for the use of the inhabitants of said township for the use of schools. A solemn trust was thus created in favor of the people in each township, to be utilized in some form in the interest of public education as the Legislature might direct. At its first session an act was passed for the protection of these lands against depredators who would rob them of their timber, also for the leasing of them for limited terms. Nothing further was done until the fourth General Assembly, which convened November 15, 1824.

About a month before the passage of the act creating Peoria County, an act was passed for the establishment of a system of free schools. This measure was introduced by Joseph Duncan, of Jackson County, afterwards Governor, and was approved by Governor Edward Coles and his council of revision on the 18th day of January, 1825.

This act introduced a new feature into the legislation of the State. Before that time the affairs of each county, including the oversight of the school lands, had been in the hands of the county officers, and no such thing as local elections for town or school officers had been known. By this act a system closely resembling the town system of New England was introduced for the government of public schools. It embraced many of the essential features of our present school system, but greatly lacked the power to raise sufficient funds by taxation to maintain it.

The County Commissioners of Peoria County were, however, prompt to avail themselves of all the benefits of the then existing school laws, such as they were. On the 12th day of March, 1825, only five days after their organization, acting under a previous law, they made an order appointing Abner Eads and Daniel Prince trustees of school section 16, township 8 N. 8 E. The number of school children then in the village must have been near thirty, for we find that number actually in school the following year.

There is no public record yet discovered that any school was kept in Peoria during that year, but it is very certain that Norman Hyde, Clerk of the County Commissioner's Court, taught during the latter part of the winter and the succeeding summer. Hon. James Latham, formerly Probate Judge of Sangamon County, who died in December of the year following, was at that time a resident of Peoria County, and among the papers of his estate appears the following, evidently in the handwriting of Norman Hyde:

"Estate of James Latham, deceased, To N. Hyde, Dr.
1825, June 22. To amount of school contribution	$ 3 00
1825, June 22. To amount of school bill	6 95
1825, August 24. To amount of last quar- ter schools	2 01
Then follows an itemized postoffice bill amounting to	5 41 $\frac{1}{4}$
Also an itemized bill of probate fees, ...	8 00
Total	\$25 87$\frac{1}{4}$

"All of which is to be indorsed on Hyde's note to Latham."

From this it would appear that Latham had had at least one child in school during the winter and summer of 1825, and, inasmuch as the debt was owing to Norman Hyde in person, and that it was allowed among other items of personal services, the inference would be that he had been the teacher. In corroboration of this view, in a letter received from Elijah Hyde Ferguson, a nephew of Norman Hyde, dated December 2, 1899, the writer says that he had heard his uncle (Norman) say he had taught school at Fort Clark the first or second winter after his arrival. That he was also postmaster is shown by the public records.

At the September term, 1825, of the County Commissioner's Court, the record shows that, upon the petition of the "common school voters" of the village of Peoria and its vicinity, it was ordered that fractional townships 8 and 9 N., R. 8 E. (now Peoria and Richwoods) should form a school district in pursuance of the act of 1825. That an attempt, at least, was made to organize the district and to build a school house appears from a document found among the papers of Elijah Hyde, brother of Norman Hyde, which reads as follows:

"In pursuance of an order of the legal voters of Peoria school district, No. 1, the trustees made the following appointment of families in classes, to erect and finish a school house sixteen by eighteen feet, and at least ten feet high from the ground from (to) the eaves bearers, to-wit:

"The first class to consist of Henry Neely, James Walker, John Hamlin, John Parker, to cut the logs for the body and sills, ribs, butting poles, joists, sleepers, eaves bearers, chimney and chinking stuff, door facing, curtain, to split puncheon stuff for floor, benches, and all other necessary timber for the said house; the second class to consist of Isaac Waters, James Latham, William Clark, Aug. Langworthy, to cut and split 700 clapboards, hew the puncheon stuff for floor, seats, and lay the floor; the third class to consist of William Holland, Abner Eads, George Sharpe, Alva Moffatt, to haul all the timber and stone for the house, and to chink the same, cut and face the door and windows and cut out the fireplace; the fourth class to consist of Isaac Hyde, John Dixon, John L. Bogardus, Archibald Allen, to build the chimney and daub the house, make the door, windows and writing tables and hang the door and bank the house.

"All the classes to join to raise and cover the house and lay the floor.

"To Mr. Elijah Hyde: You are requested to call on each individual in the above classes, and notify all those belonging to the first, second and third classes to meet and perform their several portions from Wednesday to Friday next, both inclusive, and the fourth class to meet and perform their respective portions of labor also from Monday to Wednesday next, both inclusive; and you will fail not to serve the same on each of the above named persons before the 12th day of the present month, and make due return thereof, and thereof fail not on pain of five dollars.

Witness:

NORMAN HYDE.

"Clerk of Peoria common school district, No. 1, Peoria, Dec. 25, 1825."

A discrepancy appears in this paper in the fact that it bears date December 25, but the command is that it should be served on the 12th day of the same month; also in the fact that the fourth class were to perform their work, which included the finishing of the building, on the same day the others should have commenced theirs. It shows, however, an attempt to comply with the law in respect to the erection of the school-house. It is probable, however, that it was never erected, for in the following year, as will be seen, Maria Waters could not find a suitable room in which to teach until she got the Ogee house, which was then or afterwards used as the Court House. This proposed school-house is never heard of afterwards.

The next move was the creation of another district, embracing all of townships 10 and 11 N. Ranges 8 and 9 E. (all of Medina, Hallock, Chillicothe and Rome). Previous to this time there had been other schools of a private character. While Peoria County was yet a part of Fulton County and about the year 1823-4, one Peter Grant had taught a small school at Fort Clark at so much per quarter. He subsequently removed to Lewistown and thence to Palmyra, Missouri, where he died in 1840. In the year 1826 one John Essex, under the direction or employment of Jesse Walker, the noted missionary, taught an Indian school, to which white children were also admitted.

The next school taught in the county, after that of Essex, of which we have any certain knowledge, was taught in the summer of 1826 by Miss Maria Waters, daughter of Isaac Waters, afterwards the Clerk of the County Commissioner's Court, and who on the 18th day of November of the same year became the wife of James P. Harkness. She lived to a great age, highly respected. In 1876 she furnished the President of the Illinois Industrial University the following account of her school, which is so well corroborated by contemporaneous events that its truthfulness cannot be doubted:

"In May, 1826, as was then the custom, I wrote out an article of agreement proposing to teach school at Peoria, as Fort Clark had then come to be called, enumerating the branches I proposed to teach—spelling, reading, writing, arithmetic, geography and needle work, at $1.50 per scholar, for a term of three months and board. The teachers in those days boarded around among the patrons of the school. Thirty scholars were subscribed and I had an average attendance of twenty-four. My patrons were Judge Latham, then Indian Agent; Dr. Augustus Langworthy; Joseph Ogee, Indian interpreter; John L. Bogardus, John Dixon, John Parker, George Sharp, William and Abner Eads, Captain Joseph Moffit and Isaac Waters. The school was commenced in a log cabin owned by William Holland, the village blacksmith, where it was continued but one week, because there were no windows and no light except the open door. It was opened the second week and completed in Ogee's new hewed log cabin, which was afterwards used as a court house."

This is all we know of the earliest schools of the county. (1) The system attempted to be inaugurated by the act of 1825 was of short duration.

The next Legislature modified the taxing power, by limiting the tax to one-half of one per cent., so that no person should be taxed for the support of any free school without his consent in writing expressed, but that no person not paying tax should be permitted to send any scholar to a public school. It also provided that persons so consenting might vote to raise one-half the necessary funds by taxation, the other half by subscription. The same act provided for the appointment by the County Commissioner's Court of three trustees of school lands for each township, with power to survey and plat the same; to lease the same for a period of ten years and to collect the accruing rents. They had also power upon petition of a majority of free-holders, to lay off their several townships into school districts, to contain not less than eighteen scholars subscribed or going to school. Although trustees of school lands had theretofore been appointed, yet this was the real origin of our boards of trustees, which, in all changes of the school law, have been continued until the present time.

At the September term, 1827, of the County Commissioner's Court, the following trustees were appointed in pursuance of said act: For township 11 N. 8 E., John Thomas, Resolved Cleveland and Simeon Reed; for township 10 N. 8 E., Henry Thomas, Stephen French and Elias P. Avery, and for township 8 N. 8 E., George Sharp, William Clark and William Birkett.

It seems, however, that the old districts formed under the law of 1825 had not been abolished, but that a new element had been grafted on the remnants of the old system in the organization of the Township Board of Trustees. Accordingly we find that at their September term, 1829, the County Commissioners divided district No. 1 on the east and west line that runs between sections 10 and 15 in township 10 N. R. 8 E., the north district to be called the LaSalle district, the south to be called Love's district, but (by what authority does not appear) they proceeded to appoint Simeon Reed, Resolved Cleveland and Hiram M. Curry trustees of the former, and Samuel Merrill, Moses Clifton and David Sturm trustees of the latter, these officers being elective under the law of 1825.

In the meantime an act had been passed, approved January 22, 1829, which provided for the appointment by the County Commissioner's Court of a commissioner and agent for the inhabitants of the county, who should be a resident thereof and give bonds for the faithful discharge of his duties. This was the first act providing for the appointment of school commissioners. Upon petition of nine-tenths of the legal voters of the township (changed in 1831 to three-fourths), he should proceed to advertise the school lands for sale for forty days, by posting and by publication in a newspaper nearest the land, such sale to take place at the county seat and during the sitting of the Circuit Court (this last clause repealed in 1831).

Nothing special was done under that act by our County Commissioners, except the appoint-

(1) In a recent volume entitled "Schools and the Teachers of Early Peoria" by Maj. Henry W. Wells, the author has by great research collected the names of a number of Teachers who had taught in Peoria from the earliest settlement until about the time of the commencement of the free schools. In addition to those mentioned in the text he gives the following: 1832, Isaac Shelden Dewey; 1833, Cyrus W. Parker; 1834, Miss Margaret Fash, now Mrs. H. Couch; 1835, Miss Bigelow; 1838-44, Miss Jane Taggart; 1837-9, Miss Johnson; 1837-8, Miss Rogers; 1838, Asa T. Cassell; 1838-9, Miss Sarah Winslow; 1839, Mr. Rice; Miss Abby Lovett; 1844, Wm. Rusby, John Porter; 1845, Robert Cooper; 1846-7, Alfred Washburn; 1847, Anastasia Joyce, Mr. Hooper, Mrs. Walker; 1848, Rev. J. L. Chamberlain, Samuel L. Coulter; 1849, Mrs. Gastort; 1849-50, S. F. Ottman; 1851, Thomas Griffith; dates not given, Mr. Ferris, Charles Doty, Mr. Hay, Miss Ellis. The School Commissioner's account books show others: 1837, Moses Winslow, Mrs. Gantley, Eliza Wilson, Miss Bedford; 1838, Mary Waters and J. E. Douglas.

The School Commissioner's book also shows the following: Townships 11 N. 9 E. 1836, B. W. E. Ehmer; 1837, Laura Goodsell, Nancy Atwood, Julia Bates, Abner Russell, Mary Curry; Township 10 N. 8 E. 1838, S. B. White, O. S. Springer, A. M. Howard. Township 9 N. 8 E., 1837, Moses Winslow, E. Bailey; 1838, J. G. Bryson.

ment of Archibald Clybourne, Samuel Miller and John Bt. Beaubien as trustees of township No. 37, N. R. 14 E. (Chicago).

At their September term, 1831, the County Commissioners appointed Jeriel Root as the first commissioner or agent for the disposal of the school lands in Peoria County, but it does not appear that his duties were very oppressive, for there were no petitions filed nor sales made during his incumbency. But, the law having made provision for the sale of the school lands, the question would naturally present itself, in what manner could the proceeds of such sale be rendered available for the support of the schools. The Legislature of 1833 devised a plan whereby the inhabitants of any township might associate themselves together for the purpose of building a school house, in which event they might borrow from the Commissioner upon personal security, the funds belonging to such township, upon condition they should erect a good brick, stone or frame school house within one year, and after the first year should cause a school to be kept therein at least three months of each year, until the money should be repaid. By the same act provision was made for the distribution of the interest upon the township funds, so created, among such teachers as might by the law be entitled thereto, the requisite being the keeping of a proper schedule.

It was under the law, as it then stood, that most of the school lands of Peoria County were sold. The County Commissioner's Court, at the March term, 1833, appointed Andrew M. Hunt as commissioner and agent for their sale, and it was under his administration that the first sales were made. At the same term Samuel T. McKean, Ashbel Merrill and Thomas Mmer were appointed trustees of township 11 N. 6 E.; John Coyle, Reuben Hughitt and William Nixon, trustees of township 9 N. 8 E.; Stephen Stratan, John Hinkle and Absalom Cox, trustees of township 7 N. 7 E.; Nicholas Sturm, Samuel McClelland and Zelotes Mark, trustees of township 10 N. 8 E.; William Eads, Alvah Moffatt and Reuben B. Hamlin, trustees of township 8 N. 8 E.

No account has been preserved of any school having been kept in Peoria after that of Maria Waters, until the year 1832, when Mr. Charles Ballance, a young lawyer lately come to the place, "seeing some children about and learning there was no school in the village, rented a room and opened a school, but it was so badly patronized, for want of children, that in a short time it was closed. Several attempts of this kind were, with more or less success, made by young ladies." (1) At the July term, 1834, the County Commissioner's Court granted leave (to whom not stated) to keep a school in the Court House, for one quarter, except in time of court, or when needed by the County Commissioners or for election. It is possible that this permit may have been given to Miss Elizabeth Morrow, who, two years later, became the wife of a highly respected citizen, Mr. Amos Stevens, for Mr. Ballance relates that in that year she came to Peoria, and, not being able to rent a room for that purpose, he gave her the use of a small frame house he had built for an office, on the site of Herron's stone front building on Main street, opposite the Court House. But the young lady teachers mentioned by Mr. Ballance were not without a competitor in one George H. Quigg, to whom the use of the Court House may have been given instead of Miss Morrow. In the "Illinois Champion" of December 6, 1834, appears a notice that Rev. Leander Walker would preach at the "School House" Sunday, December 14th, and every other Sabbath thereafter. But the location of the school house is not mentioned.

At the June term, 1837, Andrew M. Hunt resigned the office of School Commissioner and Charles Kettelle was appointed in his stead, giving bond in the sum of $20,000.

In the Peoria "Register and Northwestern Gazetteer" of January 20, 1838, appears a notice that Methodist services were held every Sabbath in Mr. Douglas' school-room, A. E. Phelps, minister. This room must have been occupied only temporarily for a school-room, for in the issue of September 22, 1838, of the same paper appears a notice that Mr. J. E. Douglas would recommence his school in the Main Street Presbyterian church on Monday, October 8.

But few changes were thereafter made in the school laws until the session of 1840-41, when the entire system was revised and remodeled, but the same general plan was retained. The office of School Commissioner now became elective, as also that of district director. Trustees were still to be appointed by the County Commissioner's Court, and they were given power to examine teachers or to appoint examining boards for that purpose. Every teacher must have a certificate for the township in which he proposed to teach.

sioner elected by the people. He was re-elected in 1843, and served until 1845, when Ezra G. Sanger was elected and served until 1847. Charles Kettelle was then re-elected and again in 1847, and served until June, 1848, at which time he resigned. Clark B. Stebbins was elected at the ensuing election in August and served one term. Ephraim Hinman was elected in 1851 and served until his successor was elected under the free school law of 1855.

Another revision of the law took place in 1845, when the Secretary of State was made Superintendent of common schools, and the several School Commissioners were made ex-officio superintendents of schools in their respective counties. They were required to visit all the townships, inquire into the manner of conducting schools, examine teachers in the rudimentary branches, grant certificates good anywhere in the county. The board of trustees was made elective, with power to appoint a treasurer who should be superintendent in the township, and who should also loan the funds of the township and generally perform the duties of clerk and treasurer. The trustees were given power to lay off their townships into districts, to purchase libraries, also real estate on which to erect school houses, and generally perform such duties as are incumbent upon such officers until the present time. Although subsequent revisions took place in 1847 and 1849, the general plan here outlined remained until the adoption of the free-school law of 1855.

The school lands of Peoria County were all sold between the years 1834 and 1846, both inclusive. As the law during all that period required the petitions for the sale in any one township to be signed by three-fourths, at least, of all the legal voters thereof, such petitions afford very good evidence of the distribution, as well as the growth of the population, the value of the lands and the names of the voters. They may be found in the office of the County Superintendent of schools, but lack of space forbids the insertion of these interesting documents in the body of this work.

Thus it was that, step by step, there grew up around this donation of school lands as a nucleus, a system having all the essential agencies for the operation of a complete system of public schools. But like an engine without steam, it lacked the propelling power—the power of taxation. This essential element had been aimed at in the Duncan law in 1825, but for causes already stated it had failed. It was only after a lapse of thirty years, and as the result of the most persistent efforts on the part of the advocates of absolutely free schools, this main spring of the system was finally supplied.

A series of noted conventions were held in different localities, beginning with one at Vandalia during the session of the Legislature in the year 1833, all looking to the establishment of an efficient system of public education. The next convention was held at Vandalia at the beginning of the session of the General Assembly which convened in December, 1834. At this convention there were present from Peoria County William A. Stuart, Esq., and John Hamlin, then our Representative in the Legislature.

Another convention was held at Springfield, that city being then the State capital, commencing on the 18th day of December, 1840, at which time Peoria was represented by Onslow Peters, who, among other able speakers, made an address. At that convention was organized "The Illinois State Education Society," of which Hon. Cyrus Edwards was made president, and Colonel Thomas Mather and Hon. Samuel H. Treat, of Springfield, Hon. William Thomas, of Jacksonville, Dr. W. B. Eagan, of Chicago, and Onslow Peters, of Peoria, were made vice-presidents. A committee was appointed, of which Mr. Peters was a member, to prepare a memorial to the Legislature, which was presented on the 13th day of January, 1841. This committee consisted of twelve of the ablest men in the State—lawyers, preachers, editors, etc.

In its number for May, 1844, the "Union Agriculturist" proposed another educational convention, in which Peoria was advocated as the most suitable place for it to be held, because it could be more easily reached than Springfield, on account of the facilities offered by navigation on the river. This call was taken hold of with great vigor and determination by the friends of popular education throughout the State. That convention was held at the time and place designated, and, although not so numerously attended as was hoped, it demonstrated that Peorians were wide awake to the cause on behalf of which it had been called. As this was a noteworthy event in the early history of Peoria, it will be of interest to here record the names of those in attendance from this county, many of whom are inseparably connected with its history in more respects than one. They are as follows: Amos Stevens, Dennis Blakeley, Dr. Edward Dickinson, William R. Hopkins, Rev. Isaac Kellar, William M. Nurse, A. Cooper, J. McClay Smith, William A. Herron, Dr. L. A. Hannaford, Rev.

G. E. Sill, William W. Thompson, L. Coolidge, R. Edgerton, George Robinson, Isaac Hamlin, Thomas N. Wells, William H. Fessenden, William Hale, Jonathan K. Cooper, David Page, Jacob Gill, Jacob Gale, Alfred G. Curtenius, Moses Pettengill, Dr. Rudolph Rouse and Onslow Peters. Hezekiah M. Wead, afterwards a resident of Peoria, was one of the four who represented Fulton County. William M. Thompson then represented the Peoria district in the State Senate. On his motion Onslow Peters was made chairman on the second and third days of the convention, in the absence of Rev. Mr. Kent, of Galena, who had presided on the first day. Jonathan K. Cooper was at first made secretary, but, being obliged to absent himself, H. N. Wead was made secretary on the third day. After three days' deliberation the convention unanimously recommended a system amendatory of the school laws.

The Peoria convention was not without its influence in shaping the future legislation of the State. Hon. Hezekiah M. Wead had been placed on a committee of that body with John S. Wright and D. J. Pinckney, to prepare and submit to the Legislature a memorial expressive of its sentiments and wishes, and had taken an active part in its preparation. This important document was presented in person by Mr. Wright to the committee on education of the Senate (1845), of which committee Mr. Thompson, of Peoria, was chairman. A bill was prepared and introduced, which embodied many of the amendments suggested by the memorial, but only a few of them met with the approval of the Legislature at that time. It was, however, enacted that the Secretary of State should be ex-officio State Superintendent of the common schools, the School Commissioners should be ex-officio County Superintendents in their respective counties, and examiners of teachers. The entire law was revised and made more efficient in many of its provisions.

Mr. Wead and Mr. Thompson were both members of the Constitutional Convention which framed the Constitution of 1848, and, with John M. Palmer, chairman of the committee on education, and other friends, labored diligently to have some provision inserted in the new constitution insuring to the people of the State the benefits of a system of free schools. But the time for that measure had not yet arrived, and the consummation of their efforts was left for future legislative action.

In the meantime the friends of popular education did not relax their efforts to bring about that much desired result. Conventions were held at Jacksonville in June, 1845, at Winchester in September, 1845, at Chicago in October, 1846, and at several other places between that date and January, 1849, at which time the school law received its last revision, prior to the adoption of the free-school system.

No sooner had the people of Peoria County, under the provisions of the new Constitution, adopted the township organization system, than its Board of Supervisors took active measures to further the interests of public education.

In the month of September, 1850, two young men arrived at La Salle from the east. One was William H. Powell, afterwards State Superintendent of Public Instruction, the other, Charles C. Bonney, afterwards a prominent attorney of Peoria, now of Chicago, who attained a world wide reputation in connection with the Congress of Religions, at the Columbian Exposition, 1893. Mr. Powell located at La Salle, where he established an academic school, called "The La Salle Institute." Mr. Bonney came to Peoria, where, on November 4, 1850, he opened a school of similar character, which he named "The Peoria Institute." It was kept in the basement of the Baptist church on Hamilton street, opposite the Court House. The courses of study were elementary higher English, French and Fine Arts. It was continued through four terms, when Mr. Bonney gave up teaching and entered upon the study of law in the office of Peters & Blakeley. He was admitted to the bar September 23, 1852, but continued an active interest in educational matters for several years thereafter.

In the latter part of the year 1851 he conducted a correspondence with Governor French, Secretary of State David L. Gregg, State Treasurer John Moore, Professor J. B. Turner, Professor William Goodfellow, Dr. E. R. Roe and others, in favor of a State educational convention. The proposal was received with favor, and arrangements were made for a first meeting, which was held at Springfield in the month of July, 1852. Little was done, however, except to discuss plans for future action. On account of illness Mr. Bonney was unable to attend.

On December 28, 1852, at the instance of Mr. Bonney, "The Peoria County Educational Society" was organized, with Onslow Peters as president, Mr. Bonney as secretary, and a vice-president and corresponding secretary in each township. Under the authority of the Board of Supervisors, who appointed him public lecturer on education, Mr. Bonney also organized a "Township Educational Society" in each township.

In his capacity as public lecturer he held more than twenty educational conventions, and made more than twenty addresses during the years 1852-3. In a recent letter to the writer Mr. Bonney says: "My experience in organizing the educational conventions to which I have referred, was exceedingly interesting and gratifying. The attendance was remarkably good, and the interest far beyond what could have been expected."

Mr. Powell came to Peoria in the winter of 1853-4 and engaged in the real estate business with Henry S. Austin and Jacob Guyer, under the firm name of Austin, Guyer & Company. After two years' residence here, he was elected to the office of State Superintendent of Public Instruction. He then took up his residence in Springfield, and, after the expiration of his term of office, removed to St. Louis.

In the fall of 1853, a call was issued for a convention to be held at Bloomington, on the 26th day of December of the same year. This call was headed by Alexander Starne, Secretary of State and ex-officio State Superintendent of Schools, and signed by thirty-one leading educators and friends of public schools, among whom appear the names of Hon. Onslow Peters, then Judge of the Peoria Circuit Court; H. O. Snow, Principal of Peoria Classical Institute; Mr. C. C. Bonney [to whose name is erroneously attached the title of superintendent of schools, Peoria County—Ed.], and W. H. Powell, of La Salle Institute. That convention was held according to appointment, and immediately after its adjournment the State Teachers' Institute was organized. The Legislature was memorialized to adopt three measures: first, the establishment of the office of State Superintendent; second, the establishment and support of normal schools; third, absolutely free schools. The Institute so brought into existence adjourned to hold its next annual meeting at Peoria, on the 26th day of December, 1854.

A special session of the Legislature had been called by Governor Matteson, who, doubtless largely influenced by the proceedings of the convention lately held at Bloomington, as well as by the public press, which was then teeming with vigorous and well written articles on the subject, had included in his proclamation the subject of the establishment of a system of free schools.

Just before the convening of the Legislature in special session Hon. Washington Cockle, of Peoria, had been elected to fill a vacancy in the Senate from his district. He entered upon his duties at the opening of the session and, on the 28th of February, 1854, wrote to his home paper the following letter:

"SPRINGFIELD, February 28, 1854

"The most important bill to the future interest of the State has just passed the Senate and is now a law. The great principle has been settled that every child in the State shall have an education; that property shall pay for this its greatest safeguard; that the only enduring and reliable foundation for our republican institutions has now been laid, and the future progress of our State will be as great in moral and intellectual culture as it has been in material wealth. The bill authorizes the appointment of a State Superintendent of Common Schools, whose principal duty it shall be to prepare for the next General Assembly a plan for a system of common schools recognizing the great principle of education for all, has passed both houses. This is the entering wedge."

The Legislature had passed an act creating the office of State Superintendent of Public Instruction, with directions to him to investigate the system prevailing in the several States, to formulate a bill for an act to create a system of free schools for Illinois, to visit the various sections of the State and to explain his system to the people, which he should report to the ensuing session. Hon. Ninian W. Edwards, of Springfield, was soon afterwards appointed to that office and discharged his duties in a remarkably able manner.

On March 23d, of that year, have been organized at Peoria a stock company, having in view the higher education of boys, which was known as "The Boys' Stock School."

One of the most important services ever rendered to the State of Illinois was the bringing to the City of Peoria by this association, of Mr. Charles E. Hovey, first Principal of the school. It was at a time when public interest in popular education was at the boiling point.

The State Teachers' Institute was to hold its next session at Peoria, and, upon coming to the Peoria, Mr. Hovey at once grasped the situation and threw himself into the work with a remarkable degree of tact and energy. He at once took a leading position, not only in Peoria, but in the State at large.

The Illinois State Teachers' Institute held at Peoria in December, 1854, was a most notable one.

Ninian W. Edwards, State Superintendent, in a very able manner presented his plan for a new and improved school law. Professor J. B. Turner, formerly a professor in Illinois College, and Dr. R. C. Rutherford, presented the plan of the Industrial League for a State University with a normal department. There were also present as invited guests, Professor Charles Davies, for many years connected with the Military Academy at West Point, and author of a popular series of text-books on the various branches of mathematical science, who delivered two addresses; also Professor Calvin Cutter, of Warren, Massachusetts, author of Cutter's Anatomy and Physiology for schools, who also delivered an able address on the importance of that study; also Dr. L. M. Cutcheon, of the University of the State of Michigan. Professor John N. Niglas, the Principal of the Germon School at Peoria, was also present and took part in the exercises and discussions, as did several other Peorians, active among whom were Henry Grove and Elihu N. Powell.

This session was held in the Court House, then the largest hall in the city, which was well filled day and night. It was at this meeting the "Illinois Teacher," a periodical issued in the interest of public education, was at first started, the place of publication being the city of Bloomington. At the next session of the institute, which was held at Springfield, December 26-29, 1855, Mr. Hovey was elected its president and sole editor of the "Illinois Teacher," of which he assumed the entire financial responsibility. He removed its place of publication to Peoria, where it met with phenomenal success. (1) Two years later he was at the head of the Normal University. In an historical sketch of "Early Education in Illinois," contained in the report of the State Superintendent for 1885-6, it is said of him: "The vigor with which he conducted the 'Illinois Teacher' for the next two years (with his friend N. C. Nason for printer and publisher, who made the journal the best work of its class, typographically); the life he gave to the State Board of Education; the enthusiasm he aroused, which brought to the Chicago meeting of the Association in December, 1856, over three hundred teachers from outside the city; the sagacity he showed in adhering to the plan for a normal school as an institution by itself, to be chartered at once, and, at the same time, in not only avoiding a rupture with the men favoring a university, which would have been fatal, but in retaining their good will and support, which were essential to success; the genuine Yankee grit he displayed in building, almost literally without money, the normal school building (for he was chairman of the building committee, as well as Principal of the school) during the financial crash of 1857 and the years of depression which followed; the skill he evidenced in selecting for his assistant teachers, the men with whose help he was able to organize the school upon sound principles, so that it was speedily admitted to be one of the best normal schools in the country—all these show that he was the man for the work which it fell to him to do."

It was this man whom the board of directors of the "Boys' Stock School," of Peoria, brought to Illinois.

As a result of the influences heretofore detailed, the General Assembly in 1855 inaugurated the free-school system, not only by general act, but by a special act for the city of Peoria.

Although the frame work of the system was then in existence, the changes made in the law rendered the work of putting it into operation one of no small magnitude. The townships were to be divided into districts; directors, as well as trustees, were to be elected; taxes were for the first time to be levied and collected; sites were to be selected, school houses to be built and teachers were to be employed in every district. The term of Mr. Hinman as County Commissioner was about to expire, and, inasmuch as the political cyclone then sweeping the country had wrested him from his moorings in the Democratic party, he could not expect another nomination. A new candidate was found in the person of a young man in his twenty-fourth year, who, at the ensuing election in November, was successful.

After his nomination and before his election, on the 10th day of October, 1855, the Peoria County Teachers' Institute was organized in the "Boys' Stock School," on Sixth street. No full account of this meeting has been discovered, but the names of a few of the teachers present are remembered. Charles E. Hovey, the Principal of that school, was the instigator and principal manager of the movement. Ephraim Hinman County Commissioner, and David McCulloch, soon to be his successor, and Henry B. Hopkins, first superintendent of the Peoria city schools, were present, also Messrs. H. O. Snow, R. H. Allen and ——— Clark, teachers in the Peoria public schools; the Misses Matthews and Woodworth, of the Peoria Female Academy; Mrs. Hovey, and possibly Miss Herrington, who afterwards became the wife of E. W. Coy, principal of the high school, now prominently connected with the public schools of the City of Cincinnati.

(1) See chapter on "The Press."

The duties devolving upon the new County Commissioner were arduous. The new law was complicated and hard to be understood. It required prompt action on the part of the new school officers to put it into successful operation at an early day. He therefore addressed himself to the work with youthful ardor, visiting the schools, holding meetings, consulting with school officers and teachers, and in every way possible urging forward the work of organization. He would go by rail as far as the two railroads then in operation would carry him, and then take a circuit on foot. When within reach of the city he would appoint a meeting at some suitable point for Friday night, and then send to the city for help. Hovey and Hopkins, and possibly others, would come by private conveyances, assist in the meeting (rather take charge of it), and then convey the weary Commissioner to his home. In this way the work was inaugurated, the results of which will appear from the appended table, one of which was the erection of thirty-four new school houses within the short period of two years.

The Commissioner also brought before the Board of Supervisors the matter of the "Peoria County Teachers' Institute," and obtained appropriations for its support for two years. At his instance also, the Board made appropriations for sending a copy of the "Illinois Teacher" for two years into every district in the county (132 in all).

During his incumbency the swamp lands of the county were sold, but contrary to his recommendation that the moneys derived therefrom should be used for the establishment of a county normal school, they were distributed among the townships and added to the principal of their several school funds.

The "Peoria County Teachers' Institute," in the early days of its existence, held semi-annual meetings, the second of which took place at the "Boys' Stock School," March 24-29, 1856. The first day was consumed with its organization and routine business. The exercises of the second day consisted of a blackboard exercise in vowel sounds by Miss Brown and a drill in reading by Mr. Clark, both of Chillicothe; an exercise in teaching English grammar, by H. B. Hopkins, of Peoria; an exercise in teaching arithmetic, by R. H. Allen, of Peoria; an exercise on outline maps by C. E. Hovey, and a general discussion on the best methods of opening a school at the beginning of a term, participated in by Messrs. Wmship, Clark, of Chillicothe, Clark of Peoria County (Logan) and Clark of Peoria City. Drill exercises of like character continued throughout the entire week. Evening sessions were held in the Court House, where lectures on practical topics were delivered.

On Wednesday evening Dr. C. C. Hoagland, of Henry, who had been prominently connected with the schools of New Jersey, lectured on the method of teaching composition. On Friday evening Professor Foster lectured on chemistry, and on Saturday evening Dr. Cutcheon on physiology. To the last named an admission fee of 25 cents was charged.

The third institute was held in the new school house at Chillicothe, in October, 1850. This was a noted gathering. Through the influence of Mr. Hovey a half dozen or more New England girls had found positions as teachers in Peoria. They all attended the institute and made it one of pleasure, as well as profit. To their credit be it said, the sprightliness of these young girls and the life and spirit they imparted to the institute went far to give it popularity among the teachers of the county, and so to increase its usefulness.

The fourth institute was held in April, 1857, in the Congregational church at Elmwood, in the basement of which Professor Taft was conducting an academy.

The fifth institute was held at Princeville, October 10, 1857. This institute was in charge of Dr. C. C. Hoagland, Mr. Hovey, who had been the principal leader of former institutes, having been elected Principal of the State Normal University.

The sixth institute was held at Peoria in April, 1858. Of this one no definite account has been discovered. No mention is made of any institute in October, 1858. It is possible none was held.

The seventh institute was held at Peoria, April 2, 1850, the eighth at Brintfield, September 6, 1850. The latter was in charge of Newton Bateman, State Superintendent.

HISTORY OF PEORIA COUNTY.

Hon. Nicholas E. Worthington, at present Judge of the Circuit and Appellate Courts, was then in charge of an Academy at Brimfield.

The Peoria County Teachers' Institute, thus auspiciously inaugurated, has had a continued history up to the present time, the full account of which is not here practicable. It is enough to say that it has been one of the most potent agencies in furthering the cause of popular education in Peoria County.

The progress made in the schools of the county is indicated by the following table:

The free school law having gone into operation in the year 1855, the reports from the several townships for that year were so very meager that no report was made to the State Superintendent. The reports for the year 1856 were also very meager and afford no reliable basis for comparison. The report for 1857, may therefore be taken as the basis of comparison for subsequent years. The progress annually made until 1862—after that year at intervals of eight and ten years—is shown in the table.

A few of the peculiarities shown in this table may need explanation. The disproportion between the number of schools and the number of children in attendance results from larger school houses, particularly in the towns and cities, while the ratio between the number taught and the number of children under 21 has remained about the same. The number of school houses has not greatly increased, but, from the largely increased number of teachers employed, it may be concluded (which fact is shown by the reports) that the number of school-rooms in which schools are kept has been correspondingly increased. Another marked feature is that, while the rate of wages paid to teachers has been doubled, the ratio between the wages of male and female teachers has remained about the same; the number of male teachers gradually growing less and that of female teachers rapidly increasing. The most significant feature of the table, however, consists in the great increase of local taxation, and the corresponding increase of the amount paid to teachers, showing the willingness of the people to tax themselves for the support of the public schools.

The list of County School Commissioners and Superintendents will be found in the chapter on County Officers.

Charles P. Taggart, a young lawyer of Peoria, succeeded Mr. McCulloch as Commissioner in 1861, and conducted the affairs of his office with such marked ability that he was appointed a member of the State Board of Education, in which capacity he had much to do with the affairs of the State Normal University. He was succeeded in 1863, by William G. Randall, who resigned before the expiration of his term. Nicholas E. Worthington received the appointment at the hands of the Board of Supervisors to fill out the unexpired term, and at the next election was elected to the same office under the title of County Superintendent of Schools, the name having been changed by the Legislature.

CHAPTER XX.

RAILROADS.

A glance at the map of Illinois, in the year 1838, will demonstrate how singularly wise were the legislators of the preceding year, in locating the lines of the projected railways constituting the great internal improvement system. The main line of the Central Road began at the confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers, running thence to Vandalia, Shelbyville, Decatur, Bloomington, La Salle, Dixon, and terminating at Galena, following almost the identical route on which the Illinois Central Railroad was afterward located. Another line was located from Alton to Shawneetown, by way of Edwardsville, Nashville and Pinckneyville, with a branch from Edwardsville to Mt. Carmel by way of Carlyle and Salem. A third line was to run from Alton to Paris, thence to the State line to meet an Indiana road from Terre Haute, touching Shelbyville and Charleston on the way. A fourth line ran from Quincy by way of Mt. Sterling, Mereidosia, Jacksonville, Springfield and Decatur to Danville and thence to the State line to meet another Indiana road from Covington, almost the identical line on which the Wabash Road was afterward laid. Another and shorter line was located from Bloomington to Pekin, with a branch from Mackinaw to Peoria. The last of the series, and that in which Peoria was greatly interested, was located from Peoria by way of Canton, Macomb and Carthage to Warsaw on the Mississippi River, almost the identical line now occupied by the western division of the Toledo, Peoria & Western west of Canton.

The grading on the lines from Peoria to Warsaw and from Bloomington to Pekin was let by contract, and by December, 1838, twelve miles west from Peoria and twelve miles east from Warsaw had been so let, also the whole work from Bloomington to Pekin and Peoria. The estimated cost of the line from Bloomington to Pekin and Peoria was \$11,736 per mile, or \$630,810 in the aggregate for 53 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles, and that from Peoria to Warsaw \$8,331 per mile, or \$966,396 in the aggregate for 116 miles. In these estimates the rolling stock was not included.

The amount of money expended on the Peoria & Warsaw Road was in the neighborhood of $700,000. This did not include the iron nor the spikes, which were a much smaller factor in the building of railroads then than now. From a construction contract now in possession of the writer, the style of the roads then being constructed by the State may be gathered. The specifications and prices ran as follows: For white pine timber work per lineal foot span, "Long's Plan," including side covering requisite on each section for bridges, etc., thirty dollars; for longitudinal rail per lineal foot 5x7 inches, nine cents; for each cross tie 8 feet long 6x6 inches, seventy-two cents; for mud sills per lineal foot 7x9 inches, twelve and one-half cents; for foundation blocks per cubic foot, at least eighteen inches in diameter, fifteen cents; for mechanical work per section putting down blocks, rails, securing iron work and completing superstructures, twelve hundred dollars; for painting per square yard for bridges, at estimate of engineers; for excavating for block pits per cubic yard, at estimate of engineer; for transportation of each one hundred pounds of iron rails, spikes, etc., from Peru, at estimate of the engineer, work to be begun in forty days and completed by August 27, 1840, a period of fifteen months. The bubble having burst and the work having been suspended, the contractor afterward laid in a claim for damages, in which he represented that he had proceeded to make the necessary arrangements to complete the work on said contract, had performed a portion thereof, and had received some estimates toward the amount of work already done; that on the 1st day of June, 1840, by a general order of the Board of Public Works, the work was suspended to his damage, to-wit:

For altering a gristmill into an over-shot sawmill for the purpose of sawing railroad timber.....	$1,000 00
For loss of use of said mill from June, 1838, to 1st October, 1840.....	1,500 00
For difference between contract price and purchase price for delivery of 4,000 cross ties.....	1,360 00
For difference between contract price and purchase price for delivery of 16,000 feet lineal measure of rails.....	507 00
For loss on teams, tools, etc., in preparing to commence work on contract.....	500 00
For loss of time and expenses, in procuring said contract and neglecting farming and other business.....	1,000 00
For amount supposed to be due for labor done on the contract not included in estimate.....	500.00

According to this claim, he had purchased his cross ties for thirty-eight and was to receive seventy-two cents for them from the State, and that he had purchased the rails at $52 per thousand lineal feet and was to receive $90 per thousand from the State.

The railroads contemplated by the Legislature of 1837 were expected to conform to the description here given, but the project failed, and fortunately, as it now seems, none of them except a short line from Springfield to the Illinois River were completed.

The Peoria & Oquawka Railroad Company was chartered by Act of the Legislature, approved February 12, 1849. The town of Oquawka (Yellow Banks, from its sand hills) had been laid out on a gigantic scale about the year 1836-7. Even at that early day the proprietors were contemplating a railroad to Peoria. It is said that lots were offered at public sale; that chartered steamboats, with bands playing and flags flying, came all the way from St. Louis, giving a free ride to all who wished to come, and that, under the stimulus of this outer exciting cause, and a still more potent one within, some of the lots were run up to $1,500, $1,800 and even $1,000 apiece, a price never since realized. It was to this ambitious town that Peoria, Knox and Warren Counties proposed to build a railroad, because it was a good shipping point on the Mississippi River.

The Peoria & Oquawka Railroad Company, by its charter, was to have a span of life of fifty years, with the right to construct and maintain, during that brief period, a railroad from Peoria on the Illinois River to Oquawka on the Mississippi River, on such route as its directors might select. Its capital stock was to be $500,000, divided into shares of $100 each, with the privilege of increasing the same to $1,000,000. The company was afterward authorized to build a branch road to commence at or west of Monmouth, from thence to the Mississippi River at or about Shokokon in Henderson County [opposite Burlington.—Ed.]. This proved the death blow to the hopes of Oquawka of becoming the emporium of the military tract. Burlington was now to become the western terminus of the railroad. Asa D. Reed, of Fulton County, William J. Phelps, Rudolphus Rouse, Peter Sweat and Joshua P. Hotchkiss, of Peoria, were added to the Board of Commissioners. Two years were added to the period of completion.

The Commissioners having performed their duty, the subscribers to the stock held their first meeting at the Court House in Knoxville, on Friday, the 20th day of June, 1851. The meeting was called to order by Elihu N. Powell, Esq., of Peoria, on whose motion Hon. Charles Mason, of Burlington, Iowa, was chosen chairman, and Harmon G. Reynolds, of Knoxville, secretary. A committee of six, consisting of James W. Grimes, of Burlington, James Knox, of Knoxville, Abner C. Harding, of Monmouth, Julius Manning, of Knoxville, Elihu N. Powell, of Peoria, and Ivory Quinby, of Monmouth, were appointed a committee to draft a code of by-laws, and Charles Mason, Abner C. Harding, James Knox, Asa D. Reed, James W. Grimes, Samuel Webster, Julius Manning, Rudolphus Rouse, and Washington Cackle, were chosen the first Board of Directors.

The directors were instructed by resolution to immediately secure the graded track owned by the State between Peoria and Farmington (the old Peoria & Warsaw), and to contract for the repairs to and the super-structure for the same, so that that part of the road might be completed at the earliest possible period, and in the most permanent and substantial manner. Had it been known then that as valuable coal deposits lay underneath the prairies as were known to exist along the Kickapoo Creek, possibly this instruction might have been followed. But other counsels prevailed, and two years later under legislative authority, the route by Farmington was abandoned and the more expensive one up the Kickapoo was adopted.

The faith of the company was irrevocably pledged to the completion of the road from Peoria to Monmouth, and thence to a point on the Mississippi River opposite Burlington, leaving that part between Monmouth and Oquawka to be completed after the Burlington branch should be built, and upon that pledge the stock had been and should thereafter be subscribed.

James Knox, of Knoxville, was chosen President, William R. Phelps, of Peoria, Treasurer, and Robert L. Hannaman, of Knoxville, Secretary.

Thus was launched into existence that company to which Peoria was indebted for its first railroad. What was expected of it by its projectors at the time of its charter in 1849, may be gleaned from the comments made by the editor of the Knoxville Republican at the time of its completion through to Galesburg. In its issue of February 4, 1857, in comparing the actual results with the first anticipations, it says: "In 1849, little was known of the business and travel that railroads make—that ever follow as a matter of course upon their construction. No one that wished to be deemed sane would hazard an opinion of the business that would approximate the ordinary and actual result. In that year, we believe it was, a committee was appointed to determine what this road would do if completed, and the estimate was so meager that it was never published. The result of their deliberations was, that a train of cars once a month would be sufficient to do the business of the road, and that one passenger train a week would more than accommodate the traveling public."

The first construction contract was let to Channey Hardin and Ivory Quimby (with whom was associated Abner C. Harding as silent partner), on the fourth day of October, 1851, for the construction of that portion of said road between Knoxville and a point on the Mississippi bottom opposite Burlington, where the piling was to commence, including all bridges and the furnishing of good T railway iron of the weight of fifty pounds to the yard, for which they were to receive $12,000 per mile, to be paid, as follows: first, $100,000 in the stock of the company to be subscribed by the contractors; second, the proceeds of all subscriptions to the stock in the counties of Warren and Henderson; third, the residue in bonds of the company, convertible into stock at the option of the holders, and bearing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. They were also to build the road across the bottom to be paid for on the estimate of the engineer of the company. They were to furnish a locomotive engine with necessary freight cars as soon as one mile of the track should be completed, and should complete the whole within two years, provided the said bonds could, within that time, be converted into cash or used to buy the iron at a discount of not more than ten per cent. By a subsequent contract the company itself undertook to furnish the iron at $5,000 per mile, and the contractors were relieved from that duty. The road was completed from the Mississippi River to Galesburg by the 17th day of March, 1855, at which time it passed into the possession of the Chicago & Aurora Railroad Company and the Central Military Tract Railroad Company (then about being consolidated under the name of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company), by virtue of a contract or lease by which that combination was to have possession until it should be reimbursed for its advances for railroad iron, for the security of which it held the majority of the bonds of the road. This was the origin of that great system of railroad, which, under the name of the C. B. & Q., has spread itself over the western country. The Peoria & Oquawka could never release itself from the grip thus acquired, and the entire line from Peoria to Burlington was soon absorbed by that growing corporation.

The Peoria & Oquawka Company had made some sort of an arrangement with the Governor to purchase the right of way of the old Peoria & Warsaw Railroad, but the Legislature of 1852 had released it from that obligation on account of the impracticability of the route, and had also relieved it from the necessity of going by way of Farmington, provided it would build a branch to that town, which was subsequently done, the initial point being Elmwood.

The company undertook to build the east end from Peoria to Knoxville by letting it out by contract in short sections, and had substantially completed the road to Edward's Station by the 3d day of April, 1855. Being unable to go on with it any further, it entered into a contract with Wm. S. Moss, William Kellogg, Charles S. Clarke, Hervey Lightner, and Richard Gregg, all of Peoria, under the firm name of Kellogg, Moss & Co., to which firm James Knox, of Knoxville, was soon afterwards admitted, for the construction of the road from the end of the completed portion near Edwards to Knoxville, and at the same time gave them a lease for five years for the entire line to Burlington, subject to the rights of the Chicago & Aurora and Central Military Tract Roads. In fact, this lease was of such a comprehensive nature that, for the time being, it transferred to Kellogg, Moss & Co. the entire road with all its rolling stock and equipments of every kind, its uncollected subscriptions to stock, all unappropriated first and second mortgage bonds, and all other assets, they to pay the stockholders' annual dividends of four per cent. upon their stock after the completion of the road from Peoria to Burlington, and after the expiration of the lease they were to retain possession until re-imbursed all their outlays.

The company having failed to furnish C. Hardin & Co. the iron to lay the track between Galesburg and Knoxville, that firm refused to go on with their contract any further than Galesburg. In view of the commercial importance to which Chicago was rapidly attaining, it might be inferred that, having reached Galesburg, and there come into direct communication with a line leading directly to that city, the towns of Galesburg, Monmouth, Burlington and those further west would have little interest in the completion of the road to Peoria, and it soon began to appear as if Peoria was to be ignored. Kellogg, Moss & Co. had completed their contract from Edwards, and, in the month of December, 1856, the company entered into a contract with them for the completion of the road from Knoxville to Galesburg, to be completed by the first of February, 1857.

In the meantime, the Legislature having authorized the Peoria and Oquawka Company to extend its road to a point on the Indiana State line, not more than forty miles north or south of an east or west line through LaFayette, that part of the road had been partially built. The first contract was let on the 17th day of June, 1853, to Wm. H. Cruger, James Hurry, Charles A. Secor, and Wm. F. Buckner, under the firm name of Cruger, Secor & Co., for that portion of the road from Peoria to the Chicago & Mississippi Railroad (now the Chicago & Alton). Between that date and June 20, 1853, said Hurry and Buckner had dropped out and Samuel Gilman and Thos. C. Fields had become members of the firm of Cruger, Secor & Co., at which latter date a new contract was let to them for the completion of the road from the river to the Chicago & Mississippi Railroad, and afterwards, on December 22, 1856, they took the contract for the remainder of said road to the Indiana line. This "Eastern Extension," as it was called, was also heavily incumbered, and its bonds fell into the hands of eastern capitalists who were interested in maintaining the continuity of the road from Burlington to the Indiana line, while the first and second mortgage bonds of the western end had fallen into hands that seemed intent upon breaking that continuity at Peoria.

The last rail was laid on the road between Peoria and Galesburg on the 31st day of January, 1857, and on the next day trains began to run between these two points. On the 2d day of February, 1857, the road between Peoria and the Chicago & Alton was completed and trains began running. On the 12th day of April, 1857, the trains began to run over the bridge across the Illinois River, which had been erected in the interests of both sets of contractors. The test of the bridge was made on that day by drawing a construction train loaded with bridge timbers from the easterly side and back again to East Peoria. In anticipation of what follows it may be stated that, by special act of the Legislature of February 21, 1861, the name of the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad Company was changed to the Logansport, Peoria & Burlington Railroad Company. Another act of February 14, 1863, provided for the sale, under foreclosure, of the road from Peoria to the Indiana line and the organization of a new company. The road was sold, March 21, 1864, and conveyed by the purchasing committee, May 14, 1864, to the new company called the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railway Company, which was afterwards, on December 14, 1865, consolidated with the Mississippi and Wabash Railroad under the name of The Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railway Company, which company built the Western Division from Hollis, in Peoria County, to Elvaston, which, with the line from Elvaston to Warsaw, already constructed by the Mississippi & Wabash Railroad, constituted the present through line from Peoria to Warsaw. The road was sold under decree of foreclosure, and, on May 22, 1880, was deeded to the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad Company, and again sold under decree of foreclosure and conveyed July 1, 1887, to the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railroad Company, which now owns and operates the entire property. Trains began running from the Chicago & Alton (Chenoa) to the eastern branch of the Illinois Central (Gelman), on the 21st day of November, 1857, and to the State line, on the 31st day of December, 1859, where connection was made with the Logansport, Peoria & Burlington to the east, by which it was hoped that the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad should become a part of a great trans-continental line between the east and the west.

But complications arose between the representatives of these respective interests, which culminated in the C. B. & Q. becoming the owner of the entire line from Peoria to Burlington.

In the summer of 1857, Abner C. Harding became a member of the firm of Kellogg, Moss & Co., after which it continued under the name of Moss, Harding & Co., in whose interests the road was operated until the month of October, 1860, when they sold out their interests to the C. B. & Q. Not long afterwards the mortgages were foreclosed and the title to the road went into that company, where it still remains.

The State had acquired the right of way for the old Peoria and Warsaw Road, one hundred feet wide through what is known as Water street from Bridge street westward, and the C. B. & Q. claimed the exclusive right to occupy this entire strip for railroad purposes under the grant from the State to the Peoria & Oquawka Company.

The Peoria & Oquawka Company had also as early as 1851, secured a permit from the city council to occupy the same strip within the limits of the city. The C. B. & Q., had therefore a strong hold upon the ground as successor to all rights of the Peoria & Oquawka Company, and was not at all disposed to yield those rights in favor of any rival company. As no route could be established through the city, without either coming in over this right of way or crossing it at one or more points, much litigation arose between Moss, Harding & Co., and their successor, the C. B. & Q., and other companies seeking an entrance, and, in at least one instance, a very important line of road, the Peoria & Hannibal, was entirely defeated.

On February 11, 1853, a charter was granted to the Illinois River Railroad Company to build a road from Jacksonville, by way of Virginia, Bath and Pekin, to LaSalle. From the fact that Peoria is not mentioned as a point on the route, it is to be presumed the intended route lay wholly on the eastern side of the river; but, by a later act, the company was authorized to unite with other roads and to build a bridge across that stream. The point in view was to reach Peoria by building a bridge at Pekin, and by coming in on the westerly side of the river.

On the 12th day of February, 1853, a charter was granted to the Peoria & Bureau Valley Railroad Company to build a road from Peoria to Bureau Valley at a point not higher up the Bureau Creek than Indian Town (Tiskilwa). This road was completed by the fall of the year 1854, and the first passenger train reached Peoria about dusk on the evening of November 9th of that year. This being the first railroad to be put in operation whereby Peoria was brought into railroad connection with the rest of the world (the Peoria and Oquawka, although the first to lay its tracks in the City, not being then completed), a time of great rejoicing was had. Hundreds of people gathered at the foot of Main street where the train came to its first full stop, speeches were made and every possible demonstration of joy was indulged in.

The Illinois River Road was finished from Jacksonville to Pekin about the year 1859, but never extended any further on the easterly side of the river than that point, the Peoria & Bureau Valley having supplied all needed railroad facilities from Peoria to La Salle. There was therefore a gap of only ten miles between Peoria and Pekin to be filled, to make direct communications between the river towns south of Peoria and Chicago. It was thought, not without reason, that the Chicago & Rock Island Company had some designs upon the Illinois River Road, as a further extension of its lines in that direction. This gap, therefore, became the seat of contention between rival interests.

In the meantime the Eastern Extension of the Peoria & Oquawka road, having passed through divers hands—it having for a time been known as the Logansport, Peoria & Burlington road, and afterwards as the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw road—had been making a struggle to obtain a foothold in that portion of the City southwest of Walnut street, where it entered the City over its bridge. These conflicting interests led to almost interminable litigation. Injunction followed injunction, there being as many as five pending at one time. When one company could not obtain its point in any other way it would resort to strategy, only to have its tracks removed by force from what was claimed as the rightful possession of another.

At this late date it is impossible to convey even the faintest idea of this strife. The result of this contention was that the tracks coming into Peoria from the southwest, instead of being constructed on parallel lines, as they might have been, took a form resembling the meshes of a fish-net, ultimately causing such a blockade of trains as to render the formation of a terminal company a great necessity.

The Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville Company, after much litigation, succeeded about the month of August, 1864, in completing its line into Peoria, but not as far as Bridge street. These contestants were not the only companies interested in getting into Peoria from that direction. The Pekin & Decatur road, chartered in 1855, with its termini at Pekin and Decatur, afterwards changed to the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur road, and still later, by sundry consolidations, to the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville road, had been built; also the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington & Pekin road, afterwards changed to the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western, had been projected. These roads were looking towards Peoria as affording more profitable termini than Pekin, but the way did not seem clear for their entrance. There had been a charter granted to a company called the Peoria & Springfield Railroad Company, with power to build a road between those two cities, which had procured the right of way and had constructed that part of its road from Peoria to Pekin, including the bridge across the Illinois River at the place now known as Bridge Junction. Over this track the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western and the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur had obtained the right of way by lease.

In the year 1868, the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Company built its road from Hollis, in Peoria County, to Warsaw, following practically the old Peoria & Warsaw Railroad west of Canton. It did not, however, build its line from Peoria to Hollis, but obtained the use of the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville track over that portion of its line.

In addition to the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, there were, therefore, four other roads entering Peoria from the southwest: the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western, the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur, the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville, the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw (Western Division), the first two coming in on the Peoria & Springfield track and the two latter over the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville track.

The Peoria & Springfield road, as well as the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville road, having been sold under decrees of foreclosure, the purchasers entered into an arrangement for the joint use of these tracks by the four roads named, and, to that end, the Peoria & Pekin Union Railway Company was formed and the two tracks between Peoria and Pekin were conveyed to it, the stock being divided between the four roads named.

In the year 1880, the Lake Erie & Western road reached Peoria, coming in by way of Farmdale and East Peoria, thence connecting with the Peoria and Pekin Union track near Wesley City. That company has also become interested in the Peoria & Pekin Union stock.

The St. Louis, Peoria & Northern Railway Company was organized February 20, 1896, for the purpose of uniting and consolidating three other companies. Its road was completed and put into operation to its junction with the Peoria & Pekin Union at Grove Station, and thence over the Peoria & Pekin Union track to Peoria.

Thus it happens that six other roads enter Peoria over the tracks of the Peoria & Pekin Union Company.

The Peoria & Pekin Union Company, in the year 1881-2 erected the Union Passenger Depot on Water Street between Chestnut and Oak streets, into which all the passenger trains, except those of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, arriving in and departing from the city, now enter. The company has also extensive freight houses between their passenger depot and the river.

Other important railroad connections are had over the old "Eastern Extension" road, now known as the Toledo, Peoria & Western. In 1869, the Peoria, Atlanta & Decatur Railroad Company was chartered with power to construct a road from Peoria to Decatur. The township of Peoria subscribed $100,000 to the stock of this road, and it was built mainly in the interest of Peoria. It was completed, from its junction with the Toledo, Peoria & Western at Farmdale, to Decatur, in 1874. From Farmdale it has had the use of the Toledo, Peoria & Western tracks into the city. By a consolidation of this road with the Paris & Decatur Company, chartered in 1861, and the Paris & Terre Haute Company, chartered in 1874, a new company was formed called the Illinois Midland Company. In 1880, this road was sold under foreclosure, and, in February, 1887, reorganized as the Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad. In 1892 it was leased for a period of ninety-nine years to the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company and became known as a part of the "Vandalia System."

The Lake Erie & Western Railroad is the result of a consolidation of the Lafayette, Bloomington & Mississippi Railroad, which had been opened in 1871, with certain Indiana and Ohio lines, constituting an entire length of 710 miles, of which 118 miles are in the State of Illinois. In May, 1885, a further consolidation was effected with the Lake Erie & Mississippi Railroad, organized to build an extension from Bloomington to Peoria. The road was sold under decree of foreclosure in 1886, and a new organization effected under the present name. As already stated, this road comes into the city by way of Farmdale and East Peoria, at both of which points it crosses the tracks of the Toledo, Peoria & Western, thence to its junction with the Peoria & Pekin Union near Wesley City. The extension from Bloomington to Peoria was built in 1887-8, the first trains reaching Peoria in the spring of 1888. The main line from Peoria to Sandusky, Ohio, is 416 miles, with branches from Indianapolis to Michigan City, 161 miles, from Fort Wayne to Rushville, Indiana, 109 miles, and from Akron, Ohio, to Delphos, Ohio, 162 miles. Early in 1900 the entire system was bought in by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Company, and now belongs to that system, although still retaining the name of Lake Erie & Western Railroad.

The Chicago & Alton Railroad Company has, for many years, had a branch line from Dwight on its main line to Varna in Marshall county, where it again branches to Lacon, in Marshall County, and Washington, in Tazewell County. In recent years it has had a running arrangement with the Toledo, Peoria & Western, whereby trains have come into the City of Peoria over the tracks of the latter, thence over the tracks of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville, to Delevan, in Tazewell County, where it formed a junction with its Kansas City branch, and to Lincoln in Logan County, where it again met its main line leading from Chicago to St. Louis. Recently, however, it has acquired the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis road, and is now running through trains from Chicago to St. Louis over that line.

The Toledo, Peoria & Western road has also a running arrangement with the Wabash Railroad, whereby a direct line is maintained between Peoria and Chicago.

The Rock Island & Peoria Railroad enters the city from the north by way of Princeville, Dunlap, Alta and Peoria Heights. The present company is an outgrowth of two other companies, the Rock Island & Peoria and the Peoria & Rock Island Companies. The road was opened its entire length, January 1, 1872, and in 1877 it was sold under decree of foreclosure under its present name. It is now operated in the interest of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Company.

It was constructed mainly through Peoria enterprise. As first organized the company was called the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad Company. It was organized about November 1, 1867. The first meeting of stockholders was held at Bureau Junction soon after its organization, at which time there were nine directors elected, five of whom were from Peoria, namely: William F. Bryan, Valentine Dewein, William H. Cruger, Henry T. Baldwin, and Dr. William R. Hamilton; two from Stark County, namely: Patrick M. Blair and Miles A. Fuller; and one each from Henry and Rock Island, namely: William A. Wiley from Henry, and ——— French from Rock Island. On the night of the same day a meeting of the directors was held in the room over the First National Bank of Peoria, at which time Dr. Hamilton was unanimously chosen President, and a resolution was passed authorizing him to select a corps of engineers and proceed to survey whatever route he thought best between Peoria and Rock Island.

Two main routes were surveyed, one by way of Dunlap, Princeville, Wyoming, Toulon, Galva, Bishop Hill, Cambridge, Osco, Orion, and Coal Valley, with a possible variation of the same from Toulon to Cambridge by way of Kewanee, instead of Galva. The other route was from Peoria to Kickapoo, thence through Jubilee, Brimfield, West Jersey and Lafayette.

Estimates were made upon each of these routes, what it would cost to grade, bridge and tie the route. The corporate authorities along the line were then asked to subscribe to the stock of the company, and to issue their bonds in payment thereof. To authorize such a subscription it was necessary to hold an election in each corporation proposing to subscribe. The City of Peoria voted to subscribe $100,000; the County of Peoria, $100,000; Princeville Township, $50,000; Akron Township, $30,000; Brimfield Township voted to subscribe $50,000, but the Princeville route having been adopted, the proposed subscription of Brimfield was never made, and, through some legal technicality, the subscription of Akron Township was declared void after three thousand dollars had been paid.

The following municipal subscriptions were made in Stark County: Valley Township, $30,000; Essex Township, $25,000; Toulon Township, $50,000; Toulon Borough, $10,000; and Goshen Township, $50,000. In Henry County the following: Henry County, $50,000; Galva, $25,000; Cambridge Township, $50,000; Osco Township, $50,000; Orion Township, $30,000.

Bonds were issued in payment of these several subscriptions, all of which were negotiated by Dr. Hamilton in Hartford, Connecticut. The contract for grading the entire road was let to the firm of Prescott & Jamison, who finished it, and the bridging was let to other parties. In about a year from that time the work had so far progressed that the company was ready to make a contract for the super-structure and equipments, and a contract was then made with Benjamin W. Smith, of Columbus, Ohio, who had his main office in New York City, to furnish the iron, lay the track, build the station houses, and furnish the necessary equipment for the road for a million and a half of the bonds of the road, the company giving him at the same time $1,200,000 in stock so as to enable him to control the road, the company furnishing the ties. The bonds of the several municipalities were sold by the company at an average of about ninety cents on the dollar. With the means thus provided the road was completed.

Subsequently, through foreclosure of the mortgage to secure its own bonds, the road passed out of the hands of the company and a re-organization took place by which the present Rock Island & Peoria Railroad Company obtained the control of the road. Although the several municipalities along the line never realized anything out of their subscriptions, yet they were abundantly repaid for the same in the advantage accruing from the building of the road.

After having acquired the road from Galesburg to Peoria and that from Yates City to Lewistown, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Company also acquired title to a road leading from Buda on its main line to Elmwood, entering Peoria County to the north of Princeville and passing through the villages of Monica and Brimfield. From Lewistown it extended its route to Rushville, crossing its line from Rock Island to Saint Louis at Vermont in Fulton County, thus placing Peoria in communication, by that route, with both Chicago and Saint Louis.

About the year 1873, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe road was built through the northern part of the county, crossing the Illinois River about one mile north of Chillicothe and running west through Chillicothe, Hallock, Akron, Prince-ville, and Millbrook, along the line of which have sprung up the new villages of Edelstein, Laura and Chase. It has also acquired the road formerly known as the Chicago, Pekin & Southwestern, which passed through the towns of Minonk, Roanoke and El Paso in Woodford County, thence to Washington, and terminating at Pekin in Tazewell County. At Eureka it unites with the Toledo, Peoria & Western with which it has the joint use of its track to the Pekin Junction, a short distance east of Washington. At Pekin it connects with other roads coming to Peoria.

In 1878 a company was organized at Monmouth called the Burlington, Monmouth & Illinois River Railroad Company, with the view of constructing a narrow gauge road to some point on the river, but later it was determined to change it to a standard. A company then organized with a view of utilizing the old State grade westward from Peoria. This company was called the Peoria & Farmington Railroad Company, and, by the year 1882, had built the road to Farmington and were operating it. The Iowa Central Company which was then building a road crossing the Mississippi at Keithsburg and pointing towards Chicago by way of Streator, consolidated its interests with the Peoria & Farmington Company and finished its road to Farmington in the spring of 1883, since which time it has been operated as a contiguous line about five hundred miles in length.

The Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Company is now (1901) constructing a road from a point on its main line near Sterling, in Whiteside County, to the City of Peoria, coming into the city from the west by way of the Kickapoo Creek from Pottstown.

The City of Peoria having become so abundantly supplied with railroads leading to all points of the compass, has become one of the most important distributing points in the Mississippi Valley.

CHAPTER XXI.

POLITICAL ANNALS.

When the first American settlers came to Peoria, James Monroe was President of the United States, Shadrach Bond was Governor of Illinois, Ninian Edwards and Jesse B. Thomas were United States Senators and Daniel P. Cook was sole Representative in Congress. The Constitution of 1848 apportioned the State into Representative districts to continue until the first census should be taken, after which the number of Representatives and Senators was to be fixed by the General Assembly. Under this first apportionment, Madison County, which then included Peoria and all the northern part of the State, was entitled to one Senator and three Representatives. George Cadwell was Senator and John Howard, Abraham Prickett and Captain Samuel Whitesides were the Representatives. Elections for Senators, Representatives, and members of Congress were to be held on the first Monday in August. The Governor and other elective State officers were to hold office for four years, Senators four years, and Representatives two.

The first general election held after the settlement of Peoria occurred in the year 1820, when James Monroe was re-elected President, Daniel P. Cook was re-elected to Congress, George Cadwell was re-elected State Senator from Madison County, and Joseph Borough, Nathaniel Buckmaster and William Otwell to the House. The Second General Assembly, which met on the 4th of December, 1820, fixed the number of Senators at eighteen and of Representatives at thirty-six, which ratio was continued until 1831. At the same session the County of Pike was erected and was attached to Greene County as a Senatorial District, and was given one Representative by itself.

At the election of 1822, Edward Coles was elected Governor, Daniel P. Cook was re-elected Representative in Congress, George Cadwell was elected State Senator from Green and Pike Counties, and Nicholas Hansen received the certificate of election and took his seat from Pike County. This seat was contested by John Shaw, but Hansen was declared elected.

A resolution for submitting to a vote of the people the question of calling a convention to amend the Constitution so as to permit the holding of slaves, having passed the Senate, the same came to the House for adoption. The House lacked one vote to insure its passage, and this vote was supposed to have been secured by the sudden conversion of one William McPatridge, previously an anti-slavery member. The resolution was put upon its passage, but to the amazement of its supporters, when the name of Hansen, of Pike, was called, he recorded his vote against it. Shaw, the contestant of Hansen's seat, was known to favor it. A resolution was then introduced to re-consider the vote by which Hansen had been awarded the seat, which resolution prevailed, and, upon the final vote, Shaw was successful, and Hansen was unceremoniously turned out. The resolution for submitting the question of the Constitutional Convention was adopted and went to the people at the next election.

At this session Jesse B. Thomas was re-elected United States Senator, and the County of Fulton was erected out of the territory formerly belonging to Pike County, including Peoria and all north of it. Greene, Morgan, Pike and Fulton were given a Senator, and Fulton and Pike were given one Representative.

At the election which took place, August 2, 1824, after a most exciting campaign, the question of calling a convention was overwhelmingly defeated, the vote standing 4,972 for, and 6,640 (a majority of 1,668) against it. Fulton County gave sixty votes against the convention to five in its favor, while Pike gave 165 against and only 19 in its favor.

At that election Daniel P. Cook, who was a vigorous opponent of slavery, was re-elected to Congress; Thomas Carlin (afterwards Governor) was elected State Senator from Greene, Pike Morgan and Fulton Counties (the last two being new counties attached to Greene and Pike for election purposes); Nicholas Hansen was re-elected as Representatives in the lower House from Pike and Fulton Counties, and Archibald Job from Greene and Morgan Counties, the other half of the Senatorial District. Hansen having resigned before the expiration of his term, he was succeeded by Levi Roberts, of Pike County.

At the Presidential election which followed in November, the total vote cast in the State was less than one-half of that cast on the slavery question. There being no election by popular vote, and Illinois having but one Representative, Daniel P. Cook, the vote of the State was cast by him in favor of John Quincy Adams, who was known to be opposed to the further extension of slavery.

It was the Legislature elected on that eventful second day of August, A. D. 1824, that enacted the law by which Peoria County was erected as heretofore related.

A second session of this General Assembly was held commencing January 2, 1826, at which time a reapportionment of the State was made for Senators and Representatives, and, although it had been enacted at the first session that the new County of Peoria should vote with Sangamon in the choice of Senators and Representatives, it was at this second session enacted that it should be associated with Pike, Fulton, Adams, Morgan and Schuyler, and that this large district, embracing nearly if not quite one-third of the State, should have one Senator and one Representative. This General Assembly also elected two United States Senators, John McLean to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Ninian Edwards, and Elias Kent Kane for the full term of six years, the latter of whom, as we have seen, rendered valuable service in securing the title to our county seat.

At the election which occurred in August, 1826, Ninian Edwards, of Madison County, who had formerly been Territorial Governor, was elected Governor, but Samuel M. Thompson, his associate on the same ticket for Lieutenant Governor, was defeated by William Kinney, a Baptist minister, as was also Daniel P. Cook for Congress by Joseph Duncan. At this election the first poll was opened at Chicago, then attached to Peoria County, where thirty-one votes were cast; one at Galena (known as the Fever River precinct), where 202 votes were cast; one at Mackinaw where 51 votes were cast, and one at Peoria where 81 votes were cast—369 in all, of which Edwards received 239, Thompson 247, and Cook 250. Archibald Job, of Morgan County, was elected Senator from the counties of Pike, Fulton, Adams, Morgan (which for that election alone formed part of the district), Peoria, and Schuyler, he having received only 36 votes in Peoria County against 174 for James Harris, 87 for Lewis Kinney, and 54 scattering. Henry J. Ross, of Pike County, was elected to the lower House from the counties of Pike, Adams, Schuyler, Fulton and Peoria, which at that time, as well as thereafter, formed a Representative District, and which for subsequent elections were to constitute the Senatorial District as well. Henry J. Ross had 40 votes in Peoria County against 96 for John L. Bogardus, 154 for Jesse Harrison and 39 for Ossian M. Ross.

Peoria County at this time was not Democratic. At the August election, in the year 1828 (Jo Daviess County with its two hundred and more votes having been cut off), George Forquer, the half-brother of Thomas Ford, afterwards Governor, received fifty-six votes for Congress, to nine for Joseph Duncan, the Democratic candidate; Henry J. Ross, for State Senator, received fifty-nine votes, against six for John A. Wakefield; Ossian Ross received thirty-eight votes for Representative, against eighteen for John Orendorf and six for John Turney; Orin Hamlin received forty-eight votes for Sheriff, against twelve for William Clark. Peoria Precinct distributed its thirty-three votes as follows: For Forquer, 23; Duncan, 9; Henry J. Ross, 26; Wakefield, 6; Ossian Ross, 5; Orendorf, 18; Turney, 6; Hamlin, 15; Clark, 12. Duncan for Congress, Henry J. Ross for Senator, Turney for Representative and Hamlin for Sheriff were the successful candidates in their respective districts, that of Duncan being the entire State.

At the Presidential election of that year, Peoria County cast the following vote: For the Jackson electoral candidates, Richard M. Young, 41; A. M. Houston, 43; John Taylor, 46; and for the Adams candidates, Elijah Hles, 61; Samuel H. Thompson, 93; and George Webb, 78 votes. Peoria Precinct cast 81 votes, distributed as follows: For Hles, 51; Thompson, 54; Webb, 52; for Taylor, 29; Houston, 20; Young, 27. Chicago Precinct cast 42 votes, of which 26 went for the Adams ticket, and sixteen for the Jackson ticket. Precinct

No. 4 (Warren and Mercer Counties) returned 14 votes for Hes, 13 for Thompson and 3 for Taylor.

In those days newspapers cut but a small figure in politics. The first newspaper published in Peoria County was the "Hennepin Journal" (at Hennepin, now the county seat of Putnam County), which began publication September 15, 1827. This was the only newspaper published in Peoria County during the heated Presidential campaign of 1828.

At the State election of 1830, there were no political issues before the people, the candidates for Governor being both Democrats. John Reynolds was elected Governor. His opponent was William Kinney, the Hard Shell Baptist minister, then Lieutenant Governor. Neither one was a teetotaler; they both spent liberally in providing the people with physical, as well as intellectual stimulants. Henry J. Ross held over as State Senator, and Joel Wright, of Pike County, was sent to the Lower House as a new member from the Peoria District. On account of the new apportionment expected, the election for Congress was postponed until August, 1831, when Joseph Duncan was again elected from the State at large.

The State having attained to the requisite population for three Congressman, the Legislature, which met December 6th, 1830, apportioned it into three Congressional Districts, Peoria County falling into the Third, which embraced the entire northern part of the State, including twenty-two counties of the fifty-six then organized. Several new counties north of Peoria, and formerly included in it, having now become fully organized, a Senatorial and Representative District was erected out of the counties of Peoria, Putnam, Cook, La Salle and Jo Daviess. At the election of 1832, Joseph Duncan was elected to Congress from the Third District, but, being elected Governor two years later, resigned his seat and was succeeded by William L. May, a Democrat, then of Springfield. James M. Strode, of Cook County, was elected to the Senate, and Benjamin Mills, of Jo Daviess County, to the lower House, from the Peoria District.

At this period two men make their appearance in public life, whose names are intimately and permanently interwoven with the history of Peoria. One was Benjamin Mills, our Representative in the Legislature, proprietor of Mills' Addition to Peoria, the other was William L. May, who in later years obtained the charter to build the wagon-road bridge at Hudson (now Bridge) street, the first to be erected over the navigable portion of the Illinois River.

Benjamin Mills resided at Galena. He was a lawyer of remarkable learning and ability, and enjoyed the reputation of being the most brilliant lawyer at the Galena Bar, if not in the entire State. He was a native of Massachusetts, came to Illinois in 1819, settled first at Greenville; probably lived for some time in Sangamon County, and about 1826 or '27, went to Galena where the lead mines were attracting much attention. He took a prominent part in all measures having for their object the establishment of a free-school system.

William L. May was a lawyer by profession, but possibly more of a politician than a lawyer. He was a native of Kentucky, came to Edwardsville at an early day and removed thence to Jacksonville. In 1826, he was elected to the Legislature as the Representative of Morgan County, and two years afterwards, having received an appointment from President Jackson as Receiver of the Land Office at Springfield, he removed to that place.

In 1834, these two men, Mills and May, were pitted against each other in the race for Congress, one from each end of the district. For some time, as it is said, they canvassed the district together, making speeches to the same audiences; but Mills, getting tired of it, proposed to May that they should go home and make no more speeches during the campaign, to which May agreed. But there being no railroads nor telegraphs and but few newspapers, it was charged that May violated his agreement, and, without the knowledge of Mills, continued speaking in his own end of the district, where the population was more numerous. He won the day and took his seat in Congress, where he remained for two terms.

At the same election James W. Stephenson, of Jo Daviess County, was elected to the Senate and John Hamlin, of Peoria, to the House of Representatives. Mr. Stephenson having resigned before the expiration of his term, was succeeded by James W. Strode, of Cook County, for the remainder of the term. John Hamlin was the first member elected to the Legislature from the present limits of the County of Peoria. Rock Island County had been carved out of Jo Daviess and, for this one election, voted in the Peoria district.

At this election Peoria County cast 233 votes in all for Governor. On March 10th of this year, "The Illinois Champion and Peoria Herald," the first newspaper within the present limits of the County, was started by Abram S. Buxton. It was at first neutral in politics, but soon became Whig.

The ninth General Assembly held two sessions, commencing December 1, 1834, and December 7, 1835. Among Mr. Hamlin's associates were Abraham Lincoln, John Dougherty, Jesse K. Du Bois, James Semple, John T. Stuart and Orlando B. Ficklin, all of whom became prominent in State, and some in National politics. William L. D. Ewing was elected to the United States Senate in place of Elias Kent Kane, deceased; acts were passed in aid of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, and a new apportionment law was enacted, by which Peoria and Putnam Counties were constituted a Senatorial district, with one member of the Senate, and Peoria a Representative district with one member of the House.

At the election in August, 1836, William L. May was re-elected to Congress, John Hamlin to the Senate, and Francis Voris, of Peoria, was elected as a new member of the lower House.

It was about this period that Elijah P. Lovejoy, a Presbyterian minister, came to Alton and commenced the publication of The Observer, a paper which condemned slave-holding. Three times within twelve months his plant was destroyed by a mob. Having as many times re-established it, a fourth attack was made November 7, 1837, during which Mr. Lovejoy was foully murdered.

At the election of 1838 Thomas Carlin was elected Governor, John T. Stuart Congressman from the Third or Peoria District, John Hamlin was re-elected State Senator from Peoria and Putnam Counties, and William Compher and Moses Harlan were elected to represent Peoria County in the lower House.

The first session of the Legislature elected at that time made large appropriations for the completion of the public works. But a financial crisis having set in, and the State being already more than $13,000,000 in debt, a special session was called to meet December 9, 1839. This was the first session ever held in Springfield. Its principal enactments were the stopping of the public works, the calling in of all unsold bonds and the abandonment of the whole system.

The great influx of population had increased the vote of Peoria County from 531 in 1836 to 1,529 in 1840, which were almost equally divided between Van Buren, who received 767 votes, and Harrison, who received 753, while Birney, the Abolition or Liberty candidate, received only 9. In view of the approaching national census and a new apportionment, the Legislature had postponed the Congressional election until 1841, but the apportionment having not then been made, Congressmen were elected in the old districts, John T. Stuart being then re-elected from the Peoria District.

Three new counties—Bureau, Marshall and Stark—having been carved out of Putnam, John Hamlin was elected State Senator to represent the entire Senatorial District then composed of five counties, while William J. Phelps represented Peoria County alone in the Lower House.

The Legislature elected in 1840 had performed the most wonderful exploit in apportioning the State into Senatorial and Representative districts. Especially was this the case in regard to Peoria, which was thrown together with Stark and Bureau in a Senatorial District, also by itself for one Representative, and with Fulton for one and with Stark and Bureau for one. The election of 1842 showed 950 votes in the county for Thomas Ford for Governor, against 767 for Joseph Duncan; for William W. Thompson, Democrat, for state Senator, 923 against 744 for Charles Ballance, Whig; for Representative from Peoria County, 942 for Levi A. Hannaford, Democrat, against 773 for Phelps, Whig; for Representative from Peoria and Fulton, 948 for Samuel Hackelton, Democrat, against 747 for Davidson, Whig; and for Representative from Peoria, Bureau and Stark, John H. Bryant, Democrat, had 923 over Brees, Whig.

This Legislature was intensely Democratic. Sidney Brees was elected United States Senator, the State was apportioned into seven Congressional Districts, all of which except one were Democratic. That into which Peoria County fell was the Fifth, composed of the counties of Greene, Jersey, Calhoun, Pike, Adams, Marquette (never organized), Brown, Schuyler, Fulton, Peoria and Macoupin. So ludicrous was this division that Simon De Witt Drown, who afterward became the historian and statistician of Peoria, in March of that year commenced the issue of a little campaign sheet called The Gerrymander, the first number of which contained a map of each district with a representation of the animal it was supposed to resemble. The First was called "The Swing Tailed Roarer," the Second "The He Goat," the Third "The Porcupine," the Fourth "The Bureau Entire Swine," the Fifth (Peoria District) "The Nondescript," the Sixth "The Jo Daviess Setter," and the Seventh "The

For reasons already stated, the first election in this district was fixed for August, 1843, the second in August, 1844, so that, within the space of one year, two regular Congressional elections took place in this county. At the election in August, 1843, Stephen A. Douglas was the Democratic candidate for Congress, Orville H. Browning the Whig candidate, and ——— Moore the candidate for the Liberty or Abolition party. There were 1,821 votes cast in Peoria County, of which Douglas received 948, Browning 830, and Moore 43.

It will be observed that the county was still very evenly divided between the Whigs and the Democrats, the Whigs having gained in three years 181 votes, the Democrats 177, and the Abolitionists 34—a total gain of 282 votes. The Abolition vote was found mainly in Peoria, Copperas and Harkness precincts.

The Abolition party was the first in the field for the campaign of 1844, it having met at Buffalo August 30, 1843, less than a month after Stephen A. Douglas had been elected to Congress from this district. Its candidates were James G. Birney for President, and Thomas Morris, of Ohio, for Vice-President. The Whig party met in Baltimore May 1, 1844, and nominated Henry Clay for President and Theodore Frelinghuysen for Vice-President. The Democratic party met in Baltimore May 27, 1844, and nominated James K. Polk and George M. Dallas for the same offices. Each of the parties adopted a platform of principles upon which it went into the campaign with the utmost vigor and enthusiasm. The Whigs had the Peoria Register as their organ, while the Democrats had the Peoria Democratic Press, and De Witt C. Drown, on his own behalf, as a supporter of "The Mill Boy of the Slashes," as Clay was popularly called, was publishing The Gerrymander. At the August election Douglas was re-elected to Congress, Thompson to the State Senate, while Levi A. Hannaford was elected to represent Peoria County, John S. Zieber, proprietor of The Democratic Press, to represent Peoria and Fulton Counties, and B. M. Jackson to represent Peoria, Stark and Bureau Counties in the Legislature. This Legislature was uneventful, except for the election of James Semple as United States Senator, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Samuel McRoberts, and for the submission to a vote of the people of a proposition to call a convention to revise the Constitution.

At the August election, 1846, Augustus C. French (D.) was elected Governor, the vote of Peoria County standing for French 1,061, for Kilpatrick (W.) 676, and for Eells (Ab.) 108; Stephen A. Douglas was re-elected to Congress, the vote in this county standing for Douglas 1,073, Vandeventer 613, and for Wilson (Ab.) 105. Peter Sweat was elected to the State Senate, the vote in this county being 819 for Sweat, 808 for Lincoln B. Knowlton (W.), and 108 for Moses Pettengill (Ab.). There seems to have been no party contest in Peoria County for members of the lower House, Washington Cockle having received 1,231 votes, Thompson (Independent Democrat) 194, Root (Anti-Monopoly) 63, and Smith (Ab.) 113, as Representatives from Peoria County; Samuel Hackleton received 1,140 votes against 117 for Birge (Ab.) for Representative from Peoria and Fulton, and Thomas Epperson received 1,000 votes against 553 for Thompson (Whig) and 106 for Porter for Representative from Peoria, Stark and Bureau Counties. But Henry S. Austin, of Farmington, was elected by the vote of Fulton County, with Cockle, of Peoria, and Epperson, of Stark. The county cast 794 votes for and 401 against calling a Constitutional Convention.

An election for delegates to that Convention took place on the 19th day of April, 1847, when Lincoln B. Knowlton, of Peoria, and William W. Thompson, of Brimfield, were elected to represent Peoria County, and Onslow Peters, of Peoria, to represent the counties of Peoria and Fulton in the Convention. A constitution was framed and submitted to a vote of the people March 6, 1848, and ratified by a vote of 59,887 for and 15,850 against.

The new Constitution went into effect April 1, 1848. Great changes were effected by it in the conduct of the internal affairs of the State. The Senate was limited to 25 members and the House to 100; elections were thereafter to take place on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, and the General Assembly was to meet on the first Monday in January; the Judges were made elective, those of the Supreme Court to hold for nine years, and those of the Circuit Courts to hold for six years, the elections to be held on the first Monday in June. There was created a County Court, which was to have jurisdiction in all probate matters, thus doing away with the office of Probate Justice of the

Chas. Callender

Peace. The County Judge, with such Justices of the Peace as might be designated by law, was to transact the county business instead of the old County Commissioner's Court. But a provision that the General Assembly should provide, by a general law, for a township organization under which any county might, by vote of the people, organize, having been inserted, of which Peoria County soon afterward availed itself, this power of the County Judge was exercised only for a short time here. The State Government was very much strengthened and the imposition of the two-mill tax, to be devoted to the payment of the public debt, gave it character and credit abroad which it had not enjoyed for many years.

At the time this new Constitution went into effect, Augustus C. French was Governor, Sidney Breese and Stephen A. Douglas were United States Senators, William A. Richardson was our Representative in Congress, Peter Sweat was State Senator, and Washington Cockle, Henry S. Austin and Thomas Epperson were our Representatives in the Legislature.

A division in the Democratic party in 1848 had led to a serious complication. The regular convention met in Baltimore May 22, and the Whig convention at Philadelphia on June 7, 1848. The disaffected Democrats met in Buffalo June 22, where they adopted the name of "Free Soil Party." The Liberty party, then known as the Liberty League, met at Buffalo.

The Whigs nominated General Zachary Taylor, the Democrats General Lewis Cass, the Free Soilers Martin Van Buren, and the Liberty League Gerritt Smith for President of the United States. The vote of Peoria County at this election stood 1,237 for Taylor, 1,161 for Cass, 368 for Van Buren.

The first election for State officers under the new Constitution was held, as before, in the month of August, but after that time in November, as now. The term of Governor French having been cut short by the adoption of the new Constitution, he was, by common consent, re-elected, the Whigs making no nomination. William A. Richardson was re-elected to Congress from the Peoria District, and again in 1850, which was the last election under the apportionment of 1843. David Markley, of Fulton County, was elected State Senator from the new district composed of Fulton and Peoria Counties, and Ezra G. Sanger Representative from Peoria County, which, for the time being, constituted a district by itself. The Legislature elected at that time was Democratic. It elected General James Shields United States Senator in place of Judge Breese, endorsed the policy of the administration in regard to the Mexican War, and, what might now seem surprising, also endorsed the "Wilmot Proviso." This step demonstrated that Illinois had then reached the limit of subserviency to the slave power. This Legislature also introduced the system of township organization, by which Peoria County has now been governed for the period of half a century. It also provided for the submission of the question of organizing under that law, to a vote of the people at the general election in November, 1849. At that election Peoria County voted for township organization 2,147, and against it 19. This was a triumph for Onslow Peters, who is generally regarded as the father of that law, and probably led to his election as Circuit Judge four years later.

In pursuance of this vote, the County Court, which had been in existence under the new Constitution only one year, and then consisting of Thomas Bryant, Judge, and Joseph Ladd and John McFarland, Associate Judges, entered an order at its December term, 1849, appointing David Sanborn, George Holmes and Mark M. Aiken Commissioners to divide the county into towns (townships, as now called), who performed their duty, and on February 5, 1850, reported to the Court the division as it now stands, with the single exception that a small piece, extending from the city to the bridge at the narrows, has been taken from Richwoods and added to Peoria.

The first election for Supervisors occurred in April, 1850, and the first meeting took place on the 8th of the same month, only twelve townships being represented, as follows: Hollis, by Stephen C. Wheeler; Akron, by Benjamin Slane; Rosfield, John Combs; Limestone, Isaac Brown; Orange, Samuel Dimon; Princeville, L. B. Cornwell; Richwoods, Josiah Fulton; Jubilee, William W. Church; Chillicothe, Charles S. Strother; Millbrook, Clark W. Stanton; Benton, Jonathan Brassfield; Trivoli, David R. Gregory. It being discovered that Orange and Benton bore the same names as two others in the State, which was not allowable, the name Benton was changed to Radnor, and Orange to Fremont, but the latter name having also been appropriated, the town was finally given the Indian name of Kik' moo.

The county having now become fully organized under the new Constitution, it will be unnecessary to follow up the elections as closely as has been done heretofore.

A new Congressional apportionment law was passed in 1852, by which the State was divided into nine districts, the Fourth consisting of Fulton, Peoria, Knox, Henry, Stark, Warren, Mercer, Marshall, Woodford, Mason and Tazewell. Under this apportionment the following Congressmen were elected: 1852 and 1854, James Knox; 1856, 1858, and 1860, William Kellogg. At these same last three elections Owen Lovejoy, afterward elected from the Fifth or Peoria District, was elected from the adjoining Third District, and was the contemporary of Judge Kellogg during his entire period in Congress.

The next apportionment was in 1861, when the State was divided into thirteen districts, with one from the State at large, in consequence of the population exceeding the estimate when the act was passed. The Fifth District, which was the famous "war district," consisted of the counties of Peoria, Knox, Stark, Marshall, Putnam, Bureau and Henry. Under this apportionment the following Congressmen were elected: 1862, Owen Lovejoy, who died March, 1864, and was succeeded by Elen C. Ingersoll, who was again elected in 1864, 1866 and 1868. In 1870 Bradford N. Stevens succeeded him.

The next apportionment was in 1872, into nineteen districts, the Ninth consisting of Peoria, Knox, Stark and Fulton, in which were successively elected in 1872 Granville Barriere, in 1874 Richard H. Whiting, in 1876 and 1878 Thomas A. Boyd, and in 1880 John H. Lewis.

The next apportionment took place in 1882, when the State was divided into twenty districts, the Tenth consisting of the same four counties, Peoria, Knox, Stark and Fulton, in which were successively elected the following Congressmen: 1882 and 1884, Nicholas E. Worthington; 1886, 1888, 1890 and 1892, Philip Sidney Post.

The next apportionment was made in 1893, when the State was divided into twenty-two districts, the Fourteenth consisting of Marshall, Peoria, Fulton, Tazewell and Mason, in which there has been elected but one Congressman—1894, 1897, 1898 and 1900, Joseph V. Graff.

The Senatorial and Representative apportionment made by the new Constitution governed in the election of 1852, when Peter Sweat was elected to the Senate and Charles P. King to the House of Representatives. Peter Sweat having been appointed Postmaster by President Pierce, he resigned his position, and at a special election held on the 4th day of February, 1854, Washington Cockle succeeded him as Senator for the remainder of the term.

An apportionment was made at a special sesion of the Legislature, which convened February 9, 1854, when Peoria, Marshall, Putnam and Woodford were made a Senatorial District, and Peoria and Stark were made a Representative District with two members. Under this apportionment the following Senators were elected: 1854 and 1856, Dr. John D. Arnold (Anti-Nebraska); 1858 and 1860, George C. Bestor (R.); and the following Representatives: 1854, Henry Grove (Anti-Neb.), of Peoria, and Thomas J. Henderson, of Stark (Anti-Neb.); 1856, John T. Lindsay, of Peoria (R.), and (accidentally) Martin Shallenberger (D.), of Stark; 1858, Thomas C. Moore (R.), of Peoria, and Myrtle G. Price (R.), of Stark; 1860, Elbridge G. Johnson (R.), of Peoria, and Theodore F. Hurd (R.), of Stark.

Another apportionment was made in 1861, when Peoria, Stark, Marshall and Putnam were made a Senatorial District, and Peoria and Stark continued as a Representative District with two members. Under this apportionment the following Senators were elected: 1862 and 1864, John T. Lindsay (D.), of Peoria; 1866 and 1868, Greenbury L. Fort (R.), of Marshall County; and the following Representatives: 1862, William W. O'Brien (D.), of Peoria, and James Holgate (D.), of Stark; 1864, Alexander McCoy (R.), of Peoria, and Richard C. Dunn (R.), of Stark; 1866, Thomas C. Moore (R.), of Peoria, and Sylvester F. Ottman (R.), of Stark; 1868, William E. Phelps (R.), of Peoria, and Bradford E. Thompson (R.), of Stark.

The Legislature elected in 1866 had submitted to the voters of the State a proposition for calling a convention to frame a new Constitution for the State, which proposition had been adopted at the general election of 1868. The Legislature elected at that time provided for an election of members of the Convention which was to meet at the State Capital on December 13, 1869. That election was held at the same time as the general election for that year, when Henry W. Wells (R.), of Peoria, and Miles A. Fuller (R.), of Stark County, were elected as Representatives from the district composed of those two counties. The Constitution framed by that Convention was ratified at an election called for that purpose and held on the second day of July, 1870, and went into effect on the eighth day of August, of that year. By authority of that instrument the Governor and Secretary of State made a new apportionment for Representatives in the General Assembly to be elected at the next election, the Senatorial Districts to remain as they then were, but each was entitled to two Senators. By this apportionment Peoria County became entitled to three Representatives, to be voted for on the cumulative plan; that is, the voter could have three votes which he might distribute among the three, or, if he should see fit, divide them between two, or vote them all three for one candidate. This is what is known as the "Minority Representation" plan, inasmuch as it gives, in most cases, the minority a chance to elect the third man. The Senators thereafter to be elected were to hold for four years. At the election of 1870 Lucien H. Kerr, of Peoria, and Mark Bangs, of Marshall County, both Republicans, were elected to the Senate, and James M. Rice (R.) and Samuel Caldwell (R.), with John S. Lee (D.), were elected to the House of Representatives.

A new apportionment was made by the Legislature elected at that time, by which Peoria County became, and has ever since continued to be, a Senatorial District by itself, and entitled to one Senator and three Representatives. Under this apportionment the following Senators have been elected: 1872 and 1876, John S. Lee (D.); 1880 and 1884, Andrew J. Bell (D.); 1888, Mark M. Bassett (R.); 1892, John M. Niehaus (D.); 1896 and 1900, James D. Putnam (R.)—also the following members of the House of Representatives: 1872, Julius S. Starr (R.), Michael C. Quinn (D.), Ezra G. Webster (R.); 1874, William Rowcliffe (R.), Julius S. Starr (R.), Patrick W. Dunne (D.); 1876, Latham A. Wood (R.), Nelson D. Jay (D.), Robert S. Bibb (D.); 1878, Horace R. Chase (D.), Bernard Cremer (D.), Washington Cockle (R.); 1880, Joseph Gallup (D.), David Heryer (R.), John M. Niehaus (D.); 1882, Samuel H. Thompson (R.), Joseph Gallup (D.), Michael C. Quinn (D.); 1884, Mark M. Bassett (R.), John Downs (D.), William McLean (D.); 1886, Nelson D. Jay (D.), James Kenny (D.), John M. Hart (R.); 1888, John M. Hart (R.), James Kenny (D.), David B. Stookey (D.); 1890, John Johnston (D.), John L. Gehr (D.), Thomas J. Edwards (R.); 1892, Peter Cahill (D.), John Holmes (D.), William O. Clark (R.); 1894, Aquilla J. Daugherty (R.), Alva Merrill (R.), Peter Cahill (D.); 1896, Aquilla J. Daugherty (R.), Alva Merrill (R.), Almon H. Bristol (D.); 1898, Alva Merrill (R.), Edward D. McCulloch (R.), Peter F. Cahill (D.); 1900, Alva Merrill (R.), Edward D. McCulloch (R.), John F. Buckley (D.).

CHAPTER XXII.

THE IMPENDING CONFLICT.

The campaign of 1840 was a memorable one. The electoral, as well as the popular vote of 1836 had been divided between Martin Van Buren, William Henry Harrison, Hugh L. White, Daniel Webster and Willie P. Mangum. Van Buren had been elected President and Richard M. Johnson Vice-President. In 1840 the opposition were more united. The Whigs had placed in nomination for the Presidency that sturdy old pioneer Governor of Indiana Territory, William Henry Harrison, the hero of the battle of Tippecanoe, with John Tyler, of Virginia, as the candidate for Vice-President, while the Democrats had staked all their hopes of success upon Van Buren. In drawing a contrast between Van Buren and Harrison, a recent writer says: "On the other hand, it was asserted that General Harrison had lived in a log cabin. This fact was made to play an important part in the canvass, and log cabins were erected in the public parks of some of the wealthier cities, ornamented with coon skins, after the fashion of frontier huts, to show the complete identification of the party with the common people and their interests. Monster meetings, covering many acres of ground, were held in many parts of the Union. Eloquence and song—Tippecanoe and Tyler, too—with perhaps a little cider drinking, united to extol the merits of the Whig candidates. General Harrison himself addressed an open air meeting at Dayton, Ohio, estimated to number about 80,000 people. On this tide of popular favor, Harrison and Tyler were carried into office by an overwhelming majority." A comparison of the votes, however, shows a majority which, in these days, would not largely exceed that of McKinley in some single State at the late election, the vote being 1,275,011 for Harrison, and 1,128,702 for Van Buren. The Abolition candidate, James G. Birney, received only 7,509 in the entire Union, of which only nine were cast in Peoria County.

These Abolitionists of Peoria were found chiefly in the Main Street Presbyterian Church—a church, Presbyterian in name but Congregational in reality. Two years later their voices were heard.

On the 13th day of February, 1843, occurred a scene in Peoria which well illustrates the domineering power of the slave oligarchy in those times. On the 3d day of the same month, and again on the 10th, there appeared in the "Peoria Register," a notice as follows: "The Peoria Anti-Slavery Society will hold a meeting in the Main Street Presbyterian Church, on Monday evening, the 13th inst., at early candle-lighting, for the purpose of organizing and electing officers for the ensuing year."

This little notice had much the same effect upon the pro-slavery element as the matadore's flag has in the bull ring. To say they became excited is putting it too mildly. They were angered, they were maddened, they were exasperated, they were furious. They called a meeting at the Court House at 3 o'clock on the same day on which the Abolition meeting was to take place at the church. That no injustice may be done their memory their proceedings, published at the time under their own sanction, are here given:

"Peoria, February 13, 1843.—At a large and respectable public meeting of the citizens of Peoria, convened at the court house in this town, at 3 o'clock p. m., on motion of Mr. E. N. Powell, Andrew Gray was chosen chairman, and John S. Zieher, secretary. Mr. J. McCoy then moved the adoption of the following preamble and resolution, which was seconded by G. T. Metcalfe, Esq.

"Whereas, we have noticed, with extreme regret, an advertisement in the Peoria Register of the 10th of February, 1843, in substance as follows:" (Here follows the notice already given) and,

"Whereas, we are desirous of expressing our entire disapprobation of the views and principles generally entertained and promulgated by the members and advocates of said society, believing that the doctrines advocated by them are in direct conflict with the laws and Constitution of the United States, and their ultimate, if not direct tendency, is to produce discord and disunion between the Federal States of this Union with no possibility of benefit resulting to those in whose favor their sympathies appear to be enlisted; and that the organization of such a society in the town of Peoria would tend to discourage and disgrace us as a community, and create domestic and personal difficulties and disorders; therefore,

"Resolved, That we will oppose the public organization of any anti-slavery society in the town of Peoria, and that, however desirous we may be that our opposition should be confined to reason and argument alone, yet, in case it shall become necessary, in order to prevent the catastrophe, that force should be used (how much-soever we may regret that necessity), we shall hold ourselves bound to employ it when all other measures shall have proved unsuccessful."

"On motion of Mr. I. Underhill it was Resolved, that a committee of five be appointed whose duty it shall be to attend the anti-slavery or abolition meeting referred to in the preceding preamble and resolution, read the same to the meeting, and take such steps as may be deemed proper to carry out the same.

"The following named gentlemen were then by nomination appointed said committee, viz: I. Underhill, E. N. Powell, C. Cleveland, G. T. Metcalfe and Henry A. Stillman, and on motion N. H. Purple was added to the committee.

"On motion of N. H. Purple, Esq., Resolved, That the citizens of Peoria will attend en masse at the Main Street Presbyterian church this evening and aid the committee to enforce the resolutions of this meeting.

"On motion of G. T. Metcalfe, Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be published in the 'Peoria Democratic Press' (Signed) A. GRAY, chairman, and John S. Ziber, secretary."

A statement of the proceedings which followed this meeting was made out and signed by five of the most respectable citizens of Peoria who had taken part in the anti-slavery meeting, which statement was presented to the two papers then published in Peoria, "The Democratic Press" and "The Peoria Register," but refused insertion in either of them. It is as follows:

"Mr. Editor:—A few weeks since some of the citizens of this place, supposing themselves to be in possession of the constitutional right of liberty of speech, and feeling bound to do something in behalf of human rights, agreed to meet in the Main Street Presbyterian Church (their own house), on Monday, the 13th inst., for the purpose of organizing an anti-slavery society. They believed that such efforts were sanctioned by the laws of love, and have yet to learn that any statute law or constitutional principle was violated.

"Well, sir, the evening arrived and the friends of freedom organized the meeting by appointing Mr. Taylor chairman. His election was opposed by a loud no from those who came to deprive us of our rights. But as they had no right to vote Mr. Taylor took the chair. Having stated the object of the meeting and his views in taking the chair, he called on Mr. Allen to lead in devotional exercises, singing and prayer. As soon as prayer was ended, Mr. Purple, in behalf of the committee consisting of Messrs. Metcalfe, Stillman, Underhill and Cleveland, from a meeting held in the court house in the afternoon, stepped forward and called the attention of the meeting to a paper which he held in his hand containing a preamble and resolutions, the purport of which was that anti-slavery principles were illegal, unconstitutional and discouraging, and that if we would not peacefully dissolve the meeting, they would do it by violence. Mr. Allen then attempted to reply to the communication, but was immediately interrupted by loud and boisterous yells and stamping from the crowd. The chairman then arose and asked, "Shall Mr. Allen be heard?" Some said, "Hear." He then spoke three or four minutes in behalf of our inalienable rights to the liberty of speech, amenable only to the regular action of the law. He then attempted to read the constitution of the Peoria Anti-Slavery Society, that the people might understand its principles, but was immediately stopped by the same outcries. Again the chairman asked, "Will you not hear this constitution read?" Again some said, "Hear." He then read the first paragraph and was immediately and effectually stopped by the most fierce and violent noises. The chairman attempted in vain to quell the disturbance. The spirit of violence seemed to rise higher and higher every moment. The Sheriff and other peace officers were present, but did nothing to secure to us the possession of our house and the freedom of speech. Many wealthy and influential members of the community were there, some of them countenancing the riot. Law and order were completely trampled under foot. Under these circumstances it was thought best to adjourn. We did so, and after some time left the house without molestation. Thus we escaped personal injury, but had our inalienable rights rudely and violently taken from us. (Signed) James Taylor, John Reynolds, Moses Pettengill, A. T. Castle, T. Adams."

On the night of the 14th of the same month another public meeting was held in the court house, of which the following is an official report:

"Peoria, February 14, 1843.—Pursuant to public notice the citizens of Peoria assembled in the court house this evening at 6 o'clock, when, on motion, Fr. Voris, Esq., was called to the chair, and L. Howell appointed secretary.

"On motion of Mr. Bryan, Resolved, that a committee of five be appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the sense of this meeting.

"The chair was authorized to appoint the committee as follows: W. F. Bryan, Andrew Gray, W. R. Hopkins, E. N. Powell and J. Rankin."

"After the committee had retired a short time they returned the following report, which so tersely and forcibly expresses the prevailing sentiments upon the slavery question, that no mere abstract or condensation thereof would do it justice:

"Whereas, An effort has been made by a very small minority of our citizens and others to effect a public organization of an abolition society in Peoria; and,

"Whereas, The principles of modern abolitionism are at utter variance with the letter and spirit of our glorious and revered national Constitution, which teaches and enjoins harmony and union between the citizens of the several States; and,

"Whereas, It is the duty of every good citizen to support and maintain the government which affords him protection, and of every patriot and lover of his country to frown indignantly upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of the citizens of the Union from citizens of another portion;

"Resolved, That the citizens of Peoria are opposed to the formation of an abolition society within their community, and will resist every attempt to effect the public organization of such a society among them, so long as they possess the power to do so.

"Resolved, That, so long as the great mass of our population is utterly opposed to the principles and practice of modern abolitionists, and regard them with abhorrence, as revolting to all those sentiments of pride and self-respect which white men ought to possess, and to all lessons of patriotism and veneration for the Constitution and laws of the country which we have received from our fathers, we will not submit to the introduction among us of a society avowing these principles.

"Resolved, That the late abortive attempt to effect the public organization of an abolition society in this place might justly have been regarded with contempt and indifference, on account of the insignificance of the number of persons who were concerned in it, had not the fact that an active and latterly avowed agent of a foreign society was at the head of the attempt, made it apparent that the puny infant was destined, by the aid of foreign nurses and tutelage, to become a giant, whose strength would bid defiance to all efforts to resist his treasonable projects.

"Resolved, That we entertain as high and holy regard for 'liberty of speech,' in its rational constitutional sense, as do any of the misguided zealots whose distempered philanthropy transforms the world (both temporal and spiritual) into a negro; but that we cannot and will not permit that sacred right to be used as a 'wooden horse' for the introduction among us of runaway slaves, free negro loafers, practical amalgamation, treason, disunion, civil war, the destruction of all those rights of 'life, liberty and property' (to which we have at least an equal claim with the negro), and other evils necessarily resulting from the establishment of abolition principles.

"Resolved, That we rejoice in the sudden and effectual abortion of the recent attempt to foist an abolition society upon us, and proclaim our unalterable determination to frown upon every succeeding attempt as indignantly and as effectually as upon the first.

"Resolved, That we look on the negro race with kindness, but that we do not desire them, like frogs in Egypt, in our bed chambers and around our tables.

W. H. Carroll

Resolved, That we view the press as an expression of the views of the people and not as the director, and we will support no print that advocates views contrary to our interests and our honor.

Resolved, That we view slavery as the domestic business of the South, not our business or our sin, and a matter in which no State or individual has a right to interfere, particularly against the wishes of those interested.

Resolved, That abolition has been the ruin of every town in which its seed has taken root. We want no such forced products here, and ask in tones of authority to be let alone, and that in the Rev. Wm. T. Allen we see a disturber of the public peace, and one whose business is agitation and abolition, and that his services here can be dispensed with."

"On motion of Mr. May, Resolved, that a committee of five be appointed to request the proprietors of the newspaper presses of our town not to give publicity to any of the proceedings of the abolition societies, nor to publish any of their notices whatever, nor any communications advocating their peculiar doctrines, and if any of them refuse to comply with such request that we withdraw our support and patronage from such newspaper press.

"The chair was authorized to fill the committee, and he appointed I. Underhill, E. N. Powell, G. T. Metcalfe, L. B. Knowlton and L. Howell.

"On motion of Dr. Castle, it was resolved that the proceedings of the meeting be signed by the chairman and secretary and published in The Press and Register. (Signed) FRANCIS VORIS, Chairman; LEWIS HOWELL, Secretary."

Prior to the month of September, 1842, Mr. Samuel H. Davis had been editor and proprietor of the Peoria Register, a Whig publication in no wise tainted with abolitionism. At that time he disposed of the Register to the Messrs. Butler, by whom it was published at the time of the transaction just related, but for reasons not necessary to state here, Mr. Davis had continued to edit the paper under an arrangement made with Messrs. Butler until that time.

On Wednesday, the 15th day of February, 1843, there was handed into the office of that paper the resolution passed at the meeting of the citizens of the court house on the 14th of the same month. Mr. Davis had not been at either meeting. On being informed of the proceedings at the Main Street Presbyterian Church, he apprised the proprietors of the Register that he should speak of them in terms of the severest condemnation. They replied that, being opposed in principle to the views of the abolitionists, they had determined to publish nothing more on either side. He then informed them that he could have nothing further to do with the paper and that they must procure another editor. This closed his connection with that paper.

Mr. Davis then issued a pamphlet, giving a full account of the transaction, which he read at an anti-slavery convention held at Farmington on the 8th day of March following. As before stated, Mr. Davis was not an abolitionist, but a Whig, and issued this pamphlet, not in the interest of the abolitionists, but in defense of the rights of free speech and of the freedom of the press. At the Farmington convention resolutions were passed, not only severely criticising the proceedings, but condemning by name the persons interested therein as mobocrats and rioters, and that the Sheriff, Coroner and Constables by name had proved themselves recreants to the high trust and solemn responsibilities they had by oath assumed.

Although, on the occasion of the second meeting, the court house was well filled, the number of persons being estimated at between two and three hundred, yet Mr. Davis was satisfied that the greater portion of them wished to be considered as merely spectators; that upon a division of the house being taken only forty-four had voted upon a certain question, twenty-four in the affirmative and twenty in the negative, from which fact he concludes that the mass of the population did not enter into the views of the mob, but, on the contrary, they were the friends of law and order.

In commenting upon the proceedings, Mr. Davis said: "The friends of free discussion would doubtless be glad to know how far either of the two political parties were implicated in these outrages. On this occasion they ran together like kindred drops of water. At the first meeting, when it was resolved to resort to force, if necessary, to carry out their ends, and the people were called upon en masse to enforce the resolution, both the chairman and secretary were Loco Focos, and at the next meeting (on Tuesday night) these dignitaries were both Whigs. It was discovered on Tuesday morning that the mob had gone too far, and the Loco Focos, with a tact peculiar to them, contrived to shift off the responsibility upon their opponents. Hence, on Wednesday it was said by them that it was a Whig disturbance—that the committee to report resolutions at the second meeting were four-fifths Whigs, and that the committee to call on the newspaper proprietors were all Whigs. If these persons reflect the principles of Whigism, then I wish to have nothing more to do with it. But they do not. No! True Whigism is the impersonation of all that is lofty in morals and liberal in politics. Its master spirits are John Quincy Adams and Henry Clay. Look at the former, sustaining by his mighty power in the Representatives' Hall of Congress, the right of petition and of free discussion on all subjects against the malignant and exasperated opponents of this constitutional privilege. See the 'White Slaves of the North' fawning around their Southern masters and joining in the crusade to expel the 'Old Man Eloquent.' See how, with the spear of truth, the veteran statesman made them quail before him, while for three days he stood forth the champion of the dearest right granted in the charter of our liberties. There was Whigism, and there was one of the master spirits. In the other hall of Congress see Henry Clay, nature's own nobleman—the equally fearless champion of all the rights guaranteed by our free Constitution. See him when petitions for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia were poured into the Senate chamber, and when the Southern Senators would sternly forbid their reception, see him bearding the lions in their dens, and, armed at all points with the panoply of true wisdom, advocating their reference to the District Committee, with instructions to report fully, calmly and kindly, the reason which must impel Congress to decline the action sought."

After speaking of several other bright lights of both parties, who had stood by the principles of free speech and free press, he concludes as follows:

"There are some, aye, many men—may I not say of both parties?—planted by Providence upon this frontier of our country, who cherish an inherent love of liberty and are governed by the highest of all obligations, MORAL PRINCIPLE. These at the proper time will speak out—not in the impulses of passion, nor in the unbridled licentiousness of a mob, but through the still and quiet, yet more potent, expression of their unbought and unpurchasable suffrages."

Lawless as these proceedings were, it cannot but be observed there was underlying them a laudable sentiment of patriotism, a love of the Union of the States and a determination that, not in Peoria, should any encouragement be given to a political organization fraught with danger to our institutions. Men who had been trained to believe, as many of them had, that the institution of slavery had the sanction of divine authority, could not see it in the same light as did the Abolitionists, and believing that organized political action in favor of its overthrow tended directly to the dissolution of the Union, they were wont to regard the abolitionists as enemies of their country not to be tolerated. Although, in the light in which the institution is now seen, they were grossly misguided, it must be remembered their sentiments did not differ from those entertained by the great majority of their countrymen. The instigators of this movement were men of the highest respectability, five, if not six of them, being leading attorneys, one of whom afterward became a Justice of the Supreme Court, one a Judge of the Circuit Court, while the others maintained a respectable standing at the bar during the remainder of their lives. The others named were business men in good standing, most of whom either had been, or afterward became, public officers; some of them afterward also becoming ardent Republicans.

It must be remembered, too, that in a business point of view Peoria was then much more closely allied with the South than it has been for many years last past, the Illinois River then being its chief avenue of commerce. Although, at this distance of time, and in view of the changed circumstances under which we live, their actions may appear unjustifiable, yet we cannot withhold from them an acknowledgment of their honesty of purpose. The incident well illustrates the temper of public sentiment of the times.

About this time there was coming to the front a man of mighty power as an orator—one possessed of the courage of the lion—one who afterwards became noted as an anti-slavery leader and who, for a short period, represented Peoria County in the National Congress. From the day that Elijah P. Lovejoy was slain by the slave power, his brother Owen, who was also a minister of the Gospel, devoted his life to the extermination of that institution. He resided near Princeton, in Bureau County, and kept a station of what was known as the "Underground Railway." The abolitionists of the North had a secret understanding among themselves that, when runaway slaves should come to any of their houses, they should receive food and shelter and free transportation to the next nearest station, which was usually accomplished in the night time. In this way the fugitives were soon safely landed in Canada, beyond the reach of their pursuing masters. At the house of Owen Lovejoy many of these fugitives received food and shelter while on their way to a land of freedom.

Lovejoy was not an abolitionist of the school of William Lloyd Garrison and others who believed the Constitution of the United States to be "a covenant with death and a league with hell," but that it was one of the greatest safeguards of personal liberty; that the provisions therein contained for the protection of the slaveholders were but temporary in character and inserted simply to bridge over an emergency, and that under its benign influence the whole country would ultimately become free. Politically he was rather of the Lincoln and Seward school, while personally his noble soul would not permit him to refuse assistance to a fugitive seeking freedom, although the laws of the land forbade the act. In this respect he believed, with many other abolitionists, that there is a higher law, governing in the domain of conscience, morality and religion, to which a man is bound to yield obedience although all human law may be against it.

So believing, he yielded to the demands of this higher law as they were presented to his conscience, and in so doing, voluntarily ran the risk of amenability to the law of the land.

Accordingly, at the May term, 1841, of the Bureau County Circuit Court, Hon. Richard M. Young presiding as Judge and Norman H. Purple, of Peoria, Prosecuting Attorney pro tem., the grand jury returned a bill of indictment against Lovejoy for a violation of the law of the State. It contained two counts: one for harboring, secreting and clothing a certain negro girl named Agnes, then and there being a fugitive slave, he, the said Lovejoy, knowing her to be such; the second, for committing a similar offense with respect to another negro slave, called "Nance." The case came on for trial at the October term, 1842, Hon. John Dean Caton presiding; Norman H. Purple and the noted Benjamin F. Fridley, State's Attorney, for the prosecution, and James H. Collins, of Chicago, and Lovejoy in person, for the defense. The evidence presented a strong case against Lovejoy. The prosecution was conducted with marked energy and vindictiveness, while opposing counsel availed themselves not only of every technical ground of defense, but in vehement terms denounced the laws under which the indictment was preferred as unconstitutional and void. Fridley was noted over the north part of the State for his homely wit and drollery, and used his power in this regard without stint on this occasion. But when out of hearing of the jury he used it with equal effect upon the instigators of the prosecution. When the case was about to be called, one of them, addressing him, said: "Fridley, we want you to be sure and convict this preacher and send him to prison." "Prison! Lovejoy to prison!" said he: "your prosecution will be a d—d sight more likely to send him to Congress." Less than twenty years from that time, and at the time of the first emancipation proclamation, he was canvassing Peoria County for his fourth term in Congress, against a very popular opponent, Thomas J. Henderson, then doing duty at the front as Colonel of the One Hundred and Twelfth Regiment, Illinois Volunteers.

Another crisis in the slavery controversy was fast approaching. It was supposed to have been settled, so far as the Territories were concerned, by the Missouri Compromise of 1820. Now, however, Texas, an independent State upon our southwestern borders, was asking admission with its existing institution of slavery. This was accomplished at the close of Tyler's administration. The Mexican war soon followed and brought into the possession of the Government vast territories in addition to those already in its possession. Slavery agitation was again renewed with such a degree of violence as to again seriously threaten the perpetuity of the Union. The question was again brought to a settlement, as was supposed, forever, by the compromise of 1850—the wisest and most experienced statesmen in the land being then in Congress.

In 1854 Owen Lovejoy was elected to the Legislature as the Anti-Nebraska candidate from Bureau County, and vigorously supported Abraham Lincoln as the candidate for United States Senator. In 1856 he was elected to the Congress of the United States. While a member of that body an incident occurred which well illustrates the indomitable courage manifested, not only by him, but by other men holding like principles with him.

After the rendition of the Dred Scott decision, and on the very verge of the outbreak of the Civil War, Mr. Lovejoy came face to face with the autocrats of the slave power in the halls of Congress. About the time of the Dred Scott decision one Ephraim Lombard had brought an old negro, gray-haired and bent with age, but a slave, to the neighborhood of Bradford, in Stark County. The people there would probably have taken no exception to this, for the poor old negro's sake, had not Lombard boldly stated that he had brought him there as a slave; that by virtue of the Dred Scott decision, as he interpreted it, what was a man's property in one State he had a right to take into and hold as property in every State (a doctrine now advocated in defense of another public abomination), and that notwithstanding the Constitution and laws of Illinois he had the same right to hold "Old Mose" as a slave here as he had in Mississippi. To defeat this defiant attitude of Lombard, and it becoming known that "Old Mose," notwithstanding his age, had the fire of freedom burning in his heart, it was quietly arranged that he should be provided with free passage to Canada. "Accordingly," says the relator, "one Peter Risedorf, and another equally daring, met him by the light of the stars, and before morning he was placed in the care of Owen Lovejoy, at Princeton, twenty miles away. From there he was speedily "franked" by a member of Congress to friends in Canada." This having been reported to Congressman Singleton, Representative of Lombard's old district in Mississippi, the former undertook to reproach Lovejoy on the floor of Congress as a "nigger stealer." This brought out from Lovejoy that phillipic which has echoed around the world: "I do assist fugitive slaves. Proclaim it then upon the housetops; write it on every leaf that trembles in the forest; make it blaze from the sun at high noon and shine forth in the milder radiance of every star that be-decks the firmament of God; let it echo through all the arches of heaven and reverberate and bellow along the deep gorges of hell, where slave-catchers will be very likely to hear of it; Owen Lovejoy lives at Princeton, Illinois, three-quarters of a mile east of the village, and he aids every fugitive that comes to his door and asks it. Thou invisible demon of slavery, dost thou think to cross my humble threshold and forbid me to give bread to the hungry and shelter to the houseless? I bid you defiance in the name of my God."

Such were the sentiments entertained on both sides of the question less than a score of years before the "inevitable conflict" broke out into open warfare.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1854 TO 1856—RE-ADJUSTMENT OF PARTIES—LINCOLN AND DOUGLAS AT PEORIA.

Although the compromise of 1850 was supposed to have forever settled the agitation of the question of slavery in the Territories, yet, as events subsequently proved, it was nothing but a rope of sand.

The Southern States were not satisfied to let well enough alone, and, when the time had arrived for organizing Territorial governments in Kansas and Nebraska, which were within the territory made free by the Missouri Compromise, a provision was introduced that they should be left free to have slavery or not, as they should determine for themselves. This provision became known as the "Popular Sovereignty," otherwise derisively called the "Squatter Sovereignty," doctrine of Stephen A. Douglas. No sooner was it known that it amounted to a virtual abrogation of the Missouri Compromise (which it became, in fact, before the bill passed), than the whole North was ablaze with excitement. The Free Soil Democracy had, in 1852, adopted a ringing platform in opposition to slavery and all that grew out of it, one of its planks being, "That we inscribe on our banner, Free Soil, Free Speech, Free Labor, and Free Men, and under it will fight on and fight ever until a triumphant victory shall reward our exertions." Little did the men who adopted that platform dream that, within a little more than a decade thereafter, through the rashness of the slave-owners themselves, their most ardent hopes were to be realized.

The excitement growing out of the introduction of the Kansas-Nebraska bill reached Peoria in the month of February, 1854. A meeting was held at the court house on the night of March 2d, at which Dennis Blakeley presided, and Jesse L.

Knowlton acted as secretary. A committee of five, consisting of A. N. Sheppard, a dashing young Southron; Thomas J. Pickett, editor and proprietor of the "Peoria Republican" (until then the leading Whig paper); Samuel Dimon, a substantial farmer from Kickapoo; Hervey Lightner, and John Hamlin, two leading business men of Peoria, two of whom were Democrats and three Whigs, was appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the sense of the meeting. The resolutions expressed regret at the course of Senator Douglas and some of the Representatives in Congress; averred that the pending bill violated the letter of the compromise of 1850; that it would tend to disturb the harmony existing between the sections; would create sectional distrust and perpetual agitation, and urged upon the Legislature to instruct the Senators and request the Representatives to vote against the clause repealing the Missouri Compromise.

A counter meeting was then called to meet at the Court House on the 9th of the same month. This call was headed by Julius Manning, one of the ablest members of the Bar, and was signed by over one hundred leading Democrats. Manning was made president of the meeting, James M. Cunningham, vice-president, and A. B. Chambers, secretary. Wellington Loucks, Milton McCormick, William S. Moss, Augustus O. Garret and John Jewell were appointed a committee on resolutions. The resolutions had doubtless been undergoing the process of mastication for a week, but respect for the speakers present required that the committee should retire long enough for them, in the meantime, to arouse the enthusiasm of the meeting. During the interval speeches were made by S. Adams, Julius Manning and Daniel O'Keefe, the most typical Irish gentleman that has ever lived in Peoria. Speeches and resolutions alike indorsed the Kansas-Nebraska bill and enlogized its champion.

Peoria County having become associated with Knox and other counties in a new Congressional District, had, at the election of 1852, sent to Congress James Knox, of Knoxville, a gentleman of irreproachable character, and one ardently opposed to the further extension of slavery. He was a candidate for re-election in 1854. Dr. John D. Arnold, of Peoria, another man of fine scholarship and abilities and of irreproachable character, was a candidate for the State Senate, against John Burns, of Lacon. Henry Grove, a leading lawyer of Peoria, and Thomas J. Henderson, of Stark County (afterwards Congressman), were candidates for the Legislature, all of whom were elected. The Whig party having died, and the Republican party not having as yet been born, the ticket was headed, "The People's Ticket," a convenient name at all times for those whose political status has not yet become clearly defined. The vote in Peoria County stood: for State Treasurer, Moore (D), 1407; Miller (P), 1476; Congress, McMurtry, (D), 1392; Knox (P), 1490; State Senator, Burns (D), 1377; Arnold (P) 1504; Representatives, Moss (D), 1401; Grove (P), 1440; Moncriefe (D), 1389; Henderson (P), 1488.

"Never before," says a recent historian, "had it been so difficult to classify the members of the Legislature. There were among them a few old Whigs, who still adhered to the name, gloried in it, and were loath to surrender it; there were also straight Democrats, Anti-Nebraska Democrats, Know Nothings, Free Soilers and Abolitionists. On the main question of the Kansas-Nebraska issue the Senate stood fourteen Democrats and eleven Anti-Nebraska or inchoate Republicans; while in the House there were thirty-four Democrats and forty-one in opposition." [Our Senator and Representatives being classed with the anti-Nebraska forces—Ed.] Lyman Trumbull, an anti-Nebraska Democrat, was elected United States Senator to succeed General Shields, Democrat. Abraham Lincoln was the caucus nominee of the Whigs and General Shields of the Democrats, but neither of them could be elected. The contest finally narrowed down to Governor Matteson, on the Democratic side, and Mr. Trumbull, on the Anti-Nebraska side; the latter receiving fifty-one votes to forty-seven for Matteson—two not voting for either candidate. So close was this election that, if the delegation from Peoria had been Democratic, the result would have been just the opposite of what it was; and, as their majorities were less than 100 (except Arnold's, which was 167), it appears that Trumbull had an exceedingly small margin. In this Legislature our good friend and late fellow citizen, Dr. Robert Boal, represented Marshall County, and was a staunch supporter of Mr. Lincoln until, to save the day, Mr. Lincoln's name, at his own request, was withdrawn in favor of Mr. Trumbull—a Democrat—so completely had old party distinctions disappeared in view of an impending sectional crisis.

The campaign which preceded the election of 1854 was a notable one. Senator Douglas had in no small degree lost caste with the free-soil element in his party, and, in order to secure the election of a Democratic United States Senator as his colleague, it was necessary for him to make use of the most vigorous measures to prevent an open rupture. He therefore billed several meetings at important points in the State, one of which was to be at Springfield during the State Fair, one at Peoria on the 16th of October, one at Lacon on the 17th, and one at Princeton on the 18th. When this had become known, the attention of the Whigs at Peoria was turned towards Mr. Lincoln as the proper person to answer him. To this end the following letter, the original of which, in the hand-writing of Jonathan K. Cooper, is still in existence, was written and is here reproduced substantially in its original form:

"Peoria, Sept. 28, 1854.

"Hon. Abram Lincoln,

"Dear Sir:

"Understanding that Judge Douglas is expected to address our citizens on the 16th of next month on the principles of the Nebraska-Kansas bill, and feeling that what he may then advance should not be suffered to pass without suitable notice, the undersigned, on behalf of themselves and the Whigs of Peoria, are exceedingly desirous that (if not too great a tax upon your time and strength) you will consent to be present, and take a convenient opportunity, after the speech of Judge D. to reply to it, and give us your own views upon the subject. Permit us to say here, that we are not unmindful of the good service you have heretofore repeatedly rendered us, nor insensible of what we already owe you on that account—but this rather encourages us to solicit and look for a renewal of the favor.

This note, dated five days before his Springfield speech, was probably the first request received by him to answer the Senator at Peoria, as his friends in Springfield did not move in the matter until after that time. But be that as it may, Mr. Douglas did, on October 3d, deliver an address at the State Fair in defense of the Kansas-Nebraska bill. On the next day Mr. Lincoln, in a speech of four hours' duration, replied, and was followed by Mr. Douglas in a speech of two hours. Although there were many addresses delivered at the Fair by the leading politicians of the State, yet no one of them seemed the equal of that of Mr. Lincoln. It was therefore decided by his friends to urge him to take the stump and follow Mr. Douglas to the several places at which his meetings had been called.

Having accepted the invitation of the Whigs of Peoria, a joint debate was arranged between him and Mr. Douglas, which took place on October 16th, the day appointed for the Douglas meeting. The speaking on that memorable occasion was at the south corner of the (old) court house, where a small platform had been erected, partly under cover of the portico, the speakers and officers approaching it through a window, while the vast multitude covered the space as far out as where the new Soldier's Monument now stands. The meeting had been announced for some time as a Douglas meeting, and it had become known, only a few days beforehand, that Mr. Lincoln was expected to be present to reply. Mr. Douglas was met at some distance from the city by a large number of Democrats, and a procession, preceded by a brass band, was made up of footmen, horsemen and citizens in carriages, all under direction of Smith Frye, former Sheriff, as chief marshal. By the time it had reached the public square it numbered fully five hundred persons. The meeting was presided over by Washington Cockle, then State Senator, with the following Vice-Presidents: William McMurtry, of Knox County, candidate for Congress; Alexander Moneriefe, of Stark County, candidate for the Legislature; W. B. Baker, of Tazewell County; John Page, of Woodford County, and John Burns, candidate for State Senator, of Marshall County.

The speech of Senator Douglas occupied nearly, if not quite, three hours, closing at five o'clock. Mr. Lincoln then came forward and spoke in substance as follows: "My Fellow Citizens: I would like to make a bargain with you; Judge Douglas has occupied all the time allotted to him in his opening speech. It is now late in the afternoon, and if I begin my speech now, I will not be able to finish it until the time you will want to go to your suppers, and as I would not like to have my speech cut in two, I would suggest that we adjourn this meeting now and come together again promptly at seven o'clock. I can then finish my speech by ten and Judge Douglas can finish his by eleven, which is not an unusually late hour at this season of the year. And, as he has the last speech, if you want to hear him skin me, you had better come. (1) What do you say?" Immediately a cheer of approbation went up from his friends all over the vast audience, accompanied by throwing of hats into the air and other demonstrations of approval. This gave Mr. Lincoln the advantage of a larger night audience, as well as an opportunity to arrange his thoughts beforehand. The program for the evening was carried out as stated, but when the time came for Mr. Douglas to reply he seemed to be much worried and spoke in angry tones, sometimes in a manner not excessively courteous. Of course, both sides claimed the victory, and the party papers were profuse in laudations of their respective champions.

Of this speech Mr. Lincoln's biographers say: "Lincoln, as before, gave Douglas the opening and closing speech, explaining that he was willing to yield this advantage in order to secure a hearing from the Democratic portion of his listeners. The audience was a large one, but not so representative in character as that at Springfield. The occasion is made memorable, however, by the fact that when Lincoln returned home he wrote out and published his speech. We have, therefore, the exact revised text of his argument, and are able to estimate its character and value." (1)

Thus it happened that at Peoria, more than a year before the delivery of his celebrated "lost speech" at the Bloomington Convention, Mr. Lincoln, in a speech which is now among the classics of the world, outlined those arguments against the further extension of slave territory, which became the fundamental articles of faith of the Republican party, and which led it to final victory and the overthrow of the slave power.

The next day Senator Douglas was to speak in Lacon. As the Peoria meeting did not close until nearly midnight, and as there were then no railroads leading into Peoria, it became necessary for them to remain there over night. The next day the Senator departed by boat and Mr. Lincoln went in a carriage with Dr. Robert Boal and Judge Silas Ramsey, both of Lacon, who had come to Peoria to hear the speaking and to invite Mr. Lincoln to reply to Mr. Douglas at that place. As the matters which occurred on that day have been the occasion of much controversy, the following statements derived from original sources are here given. Dr. Boal, having, by invitation, delivered an address on the subject of his political reminiscences of Lincoln at the annual banquet of the "Creve-Coeur Club" of Peoria, February 22, 1890, the editor of this work called his attention to an apparent omission in his having said nothing about the Peoria debate. His reply was in substance that he had intended to do so, but to his regret it had slipped his mind. He afterwards, by request, wrote out the following statement and forwarded it, under date of April 17, 1890:

"In the summer of 1854, after the repeal of the Missouri Compromise and the passage of the Kansas and Nebraska Act, Senator Douglas found it necessary to go before the people of Illinois to defend his action. He made speeches at several points in the State; among them was the one made at Peoria. The Anti-Nebraska People (as they were called), composed of both Whigs and Democrats, invited Abraham Lincoln to answer him at the places where he was billed to speak. The Legislature to be elected in that year (1854) was to choose a United States Senator, and both Mr. Lincoln and Senator Douglas were interested in the result of the election,—the former as a prospective candidate for Senator, the latter to obtain a colleague who was of his political faith and would act in harmony with him. The meeting at Peoria was presided over by the late Washington Cockle. In introducing Senator Douglas he spoke of him as having done much for his State, particularly in securing the grant of land to build the Illinois Central Railway; but, to the best of my recollection, carefully avoided any defence of the Senator's action in relation to the slavery question in the Territories. Mr. Douglas commenced his speech about half-past 2 o'clock, and continued it until after 5 o'clock P. M. After he concluded, Mr. Lincoln arose and said he had a proposal to make to the audience which was, that they go home and get their suppers, then come back and he would talk to them. As an additional inducement he said that Senator Douglas had the closing speech, and 'if you would like to see him skin me, you had better come back.' The people had stood for nearly three hours in front of the steps of the Old Court House from which the speakers addressed them. They were tired from standing so long, but they came back in increased number, and with increased interest. At about seven o'clock Mr. Lincoln slowly arose and, after surveying the large audience, commenced his speech by saying, 'He thought he could appreciate an argument, and, at times, believed he could make one, but when one denied the settled and plainest facts of history, you could not argue with him; the only thing you could do, would be to stop his mouth with a corn cob.'

"I write this as I recollect it, and I believe I have given it substantially as he said it. Senator Douglas had an appointment to speak at Lacon the next day. The late Judge Silas Ramsey and myself went to Peoria to hear the speeches and to induce Mr. Lincoln to go to Lacon, the next day, to answer Senator Douglas. He agreed to go. We took him up in a carriage. Senator Douglas went up in the Mail Steamer, to Chillicothe, which connected with the branch of the Rock Island, which was only finished to that point. A number of Peorians went up on the boat and took the train to Sparland. Among them was the late Judge Powell of Peoria. In the conversation which took place between the Senator and the Judge, the latter told the Senator that Mr. Lincoln was on the way up to Lacon to reply to him. Mr. Douglas was surprised to hear it, but said little in reply. He did not expect to meet Mr. Lincoln. When we arrived about one o'clock at Lacon, we found Senator Douglas at the hotel. Mr. Lincoln went in to see him, and, after a few minutes, came out and told his friends that Mr. Douglas said he was sick and worn out, and would not speak. Mr. Lincoln, with his usual magnanimity, said he would take no advantage of him and would make no speech. The people were greatly disappointed. Nearly half the population in the county were in town to hear the distinguished men. An agreement was made between Senator Douglas and Mr. Lincoln that both would go home and stop their meetings. Mr. Lincoln left soon after the arrangement was made. Senator Douglas remained until the next day, and left ostensibly for Chicago. I was going to Chicago and was with him in the omnibus. Between Lacon and Sparland a carriage met us and stopped the omnibus. Senator Douglas got out of it, and took his satchel with him. I said to him, 'I thought you intended to go to Chicago.' 'Yes,' he said, 'but I will catch the train at Henry'. Instead of taking the train at Henry, he went to Princeton in Bureau County, and made a speech that day which Owen Lovejoy answered. In so doing he violated the agreement made with Mr. Lincoln and made a remarkably rapid recovery from his illness."

In the year 1872, Ward H. Lamon, Esq., of Springfield, published a biography of Mr. Lincoln in which occur the following passages relative to this memorable occasion. After giving an account of the Springfield meeting, he relates the following concerning the meeting at Peoria and what followed:

"But the speech against the repeal of the compromise signally impressed all parties opposed to Mr. Douglas' late legislation—Whigs, Abolitionists and Democratic Free-Soilers—who agreed with perfect unanimity that Mr. Lincoln should be pitted against Mr. Douglas wherever circumstances admitted of their meeting. As one of the evidences of this sentiment Mr. William Butler drew up a paper addressed to Mr. Lincoln requesting and urging him to follow Douglas until the election. It was signed by Wm. Butler, Wm. Jayne, P. P. Enos, John Cassady, B. F. Irwin and many others. Accordingly Lincoln followed Douglas to Peoria, where the latter had an appointment, and again replied to him in much the same spirit, and with the same arguments as before. The speech was really a great one, almost perfectly adapted to produce conviction upon a doubting mind. It ought to be carefully read by every one who desires to know Mr. Lincoln's power as a debater, after his intellect was matured and ripened by years of hard experience."

After quoting from the speech he continues: "No one in Mr. Lincoln's audience appreciated the force of his speech more justly than did Mr. Douglas himself. He invited the dangerous orator to a conference and frankly proposed a truce. What took place between them was explicitly set forth by Mr. Lincoln to a little knot of his friends in the office of Lincoln & Herndon about two days after the election. We quote the statement of B. F. Irwin, explicitly indorsed by P. L. Harrison and Isaac Cogdale, all of whom are indifferently well known to the reader:

"W. H. Herndon, myself, P. L. Harrison and Isaac Cogdale were present. What Lincoln said was about this: that the day after the Peoria debate in 1854, Douglas came to him (Lincoln) and flattered him that he (Lincoln) understood the Territorial question from the organization of the Government better than all the opposition in the Senate of the United States, and he did not see that he could make anything by debating with him, and then reminded him (Lincoln) of the trouble they had given him, and remarked that Lincoln had given him more trouble than all opposition in the Senate combined; and followed up with the proposition that he would go home and speak no more during the campaign, if Lincoln would do the same, to which proposition Lincoln acceded."

In the year 1892, William H. Herndon, who, for many years, had been a partner of Mr. Lincoln in the practice of law, published a biography of Mr. Lincoln in which the subject is treated in substance the same as had been done by Mr.

Lamon. After speaking of Douglas' violation of the agreement with Lincoln, he says:

"Lincoln was much displeased at this action of Douglas, which tended to convince him that the latter was really a man devoid of fixed political morals. I remember his explanation in our office made to me, William Butler, William Jayne, Ben F. Irwin and other friends, to account for his early withdrawal from the stump. After the Peoria debate, Douglas approached him and flattered him by saying that he was giving him more trouble than all the United States Senate, and he therefore proposed to him that both should abandon the field and return to their homes. Now Lincoln could never refuse a polite request—one in which no principle was involved. I have heard him say, 'It's a fortunate thing I wasn't born a woman, for I cannot refuse anything it seems.' He therefore consented to the cessation of debate proposed by Douglas, and the next day (?) both went to the town of Lacon where they had been billed for speeches. Their agreement was kept from their friends, and both declined to speak—Douglas on the ground of hoarseness, and Lincoln gallantly refusing to take advantage of 'Judge Douglas' indisposition.' Here they separated, Lincoln going directly home, and Douglas, as before related, stopping at Princeton and colliding in debate with Owen Lovejoy. Upon being charged afterwards with his breach of agreement, Douglas responded that Lovejoy bantered and badgered him so persistently he could not gracefully resist the encounter. The whole thing thoroughly displeased Lincoln."

In a foot-note is a letter from John H. Bryant relating to the Princeton speech. It took place as announced on October 18th, the next day after the Lacon meeting. He staid over night at Tiskilwa, where he was met by a number of Democrats and escorted to Princeton. Douglas spoke first one half hour and was answered by Lovejoy for one half-hour, when Douglas again spoke, continuing his speech until dark, when there was no opportunity for Lovejoy to further reply.

In the year 1887, while attending court in Peoria, Mr. Leonard Swett, of Bloomington, a warm friend of Mr. Lincoln, made a statement in the presence of the writer hereof and of several other well known citizens of Peoria, among whom, as he now recollects, was Dr. Boal, then residing in Peoria, the substance of which statement was as follows: As the writer now recollects, Mr. Swett stated that he was at Lacon on the day after the debate at Peoria, and possibly was present at the time of the agreement between Lincoln and Douglas. He further stated that, when they met, Mr. Douglas said in substance, "See here, Mr. Lincoln, this is not your fight. I am now engaged in a controversy with men of my own party in which I wish not to be interfered with. I do not wish to be drawn into a controversy with the opposition. Your time will come later on, and I hope you will not persist in following me up any farther now." This is, in substance, although it may not be the exact words used by Mr. Swett, and he may not have repeated the entire conversation.

Mr. Swett further stated that, after the agreement had been reached, Mr. Lincoln was, on the same day or night, taken in a carriage across the country to Kappa on the Illinois Central Railroad, and the next morning, the 18th of October, was attending Circuit Court in Bloomington. The next day (the 19th) Mr. Herndon says he reached Springfield, and at once set to work on the revision of his Peoria speech. The statement made by Mr. Lincoln to his friends in his office at Springfield, a day or two after the election, seems to be abundantly corroborated.

About this time a new element became prominent in the political affairs of the country, which for a time threatened to lead to serious consequences. The principle of native Americanism, or opposition to any alien-born having a right to participate in the affairs of the Government, was not new, but at this time it had assumed the form of a secret, oath-bound society, having lodges, grips and passwords like other secret orders. In the collapse of the old parties it attained to great prominence and influence. It drew largely from the Whig party, especially in the Southern States, in some of which it held the balance of power. To all outside of its own organization it professed to "Know Nothing," and hence it was generally known as the "Know-nothing party," and no one could tell with certainty beforehand, for what candidates its votes would be cast. Internally it was intensely Native-American, and, from its leading principle, had adopted the name of the American party wherever it had a ticket of its own. This party had its lodges and all its equipments in Peoria as in other places.

The American party was the first to organize for the great Presidential campaign of 1856. It held its national convention at Philadelphia on the 19th day of February, 1856, and placed Millard Fillmore in nomination for President, and Andrew J. Donelson for Vice-President. On the 22d of the same month a most important conference took place at Decatur, Illinois, a conference composed of twelve editors of the leading Anti-Nebraska papers of the State. Thomas J. Pickett, editor of the "Peoria Republican," was one of the twelve, and in him Peoria has the distinction of having contributed efficiently to the formation of the Republican Party in this State. The convention, which was presided over by Paul Selby, then of "The Jacksonville Journal," adopted a platform of principles and recommended the holding of a State Convention at Bloomington on the 29th of May ensuing. A State Central Committee, of which Mr. Pickett was a member, was appointed to take the matter in charge. Abraham Lincoln was present and took part in the deliberations of the committee.

On the same day these Illinois editors met in Decatur, a still more important meeting took place in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. This was a general meeting of Anti-Nebraska politicians from all parts of the North, with a few from the border States. At this meeting a National Committee was appointed; a call was issued for a National Convention to be held at Philadelphia on the 17th of June ensuing; an address was issued to the people and resolutions adopted demanding the repeal of all laws which allowed the introduction of slavery into Territories once consecrated to freedom; resistance by constitutional means to slavery in the Territories; the immediate admission of Kansas as a free State, and the overthrow of the administration then in power. This was the origin of the National Republican party.

The public mind at this juncture was in an exceedingly feverish condition. The Democrats were early in the field. Their State convention had been called to meet in Springfield on May 1st. As early as March 4th a mass convention was held in Peoria to name the delegates for the County, at which time the following gentlemen were appointed: William S. Moss, Peter Sweat (then postmaster), Washington Cockle, with Messrs. Smith and French. Ten days thereafter Senator Trumbull made a great speech in the Senate on the report of the Committee on Territories, regarding affairs in Kansas, which brought on a quarrel between him and Douglas on the floor of the Senate. This speech was given to the people of Peoria County before the Democratic County Convention of May 1st, and served to add fuel to the flame already kindled. About this time also a brutal assault was made by Preston S. Brooks, of South Carolina, upon Senator Sumner in the Senate Chamber. This also was taken up as a party question. This indignity was denounced by the Republicans of Peoria, as well as all over the North.

In pursuance of the call issued by the editors, the Illinois Convention assembled at Bloomington on the 29th of May and formally organized the party in this State. It was composed of leading men theretofore in antagonism with each other, but then all united in the advocacy of one common cause. William H. Bissell was nominated for Governor, with a full ticket for other State officers, Peoria being honored in the nomination of William H. Powell as the candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction. The name "Republican" was adopted, a platform was formulated and delegates were appointed to the Philadelphia convention.

The Democratic National Convention convened at Cincinnati on June 2d, and nominated James Buchanan as its candidate for President, against Franklin Pierce, the then incumbent, Stephen A. Douglas, the champion of "Popular Sovereignty" in the Territories, and Lewis Cass, the idol of the State of Michigan. It adopted a platform indorsing the Kansas-Nebraska bill, but repudiated its chief advocate by nominating a Northern man with avowed Southern principles, who afterwards trampled it under foot.

The National Republican Convention convened at Philadelphia on the 17th day of June, in pursuance of the Pittsburg call, and placed in nomination for President, General John C. Fremont, and William L. Dayton for Vice-President. Among other resolutions relating to the same subject it declared that it was both the right and duty of Congress to prohibit in the Territories those twin relics of barbarism—polygamy and slavery, and denied authority of Congress, of any Territorial Legislature, of any individual or association of individuals, to give legal existence to slavery in any Territory of the United States, while the present Constitution shall be maintained.

The lines having been thus clearly drawn between the three parties, and State tickets having been put into the field, the Counties, the Legislative and Congressional Districts soon fell into line.

On the 9th day of May a call had been issued for an Anti-Nebraska meeting to be held at the court house in Peoria on the 21st of the same month, to appoint delegates to the Bloomington Convention. This call was signed by B. L. T. Bourland, Amos Stevens, Bradford Hall and Alva Dunlap, as the committee. This was the first step taken towards the organization of the party in Peoria County. The convention, or meeting (there being no delegates appointed), was duly held as announced, Thomas C. Moore being chairman and Campbell C. Waite, one of the editors of the "Peoria Republican," secretary. Dr. John D. Arnold, Amos Stevens and Thomas J. Pickett were appointed a committee to prepare resolutions, and while they were deliberating, J. C. Vaughan, editor of the "Chicago Tribune," made a powerful speech in support of the principles of the new party. The delegates chosen to the Bloomington Convention were John T. Lindsay, Amos P. Bartlett, B. L. T. Bourland, Amos Stevens, Dr. John D. Arnold, Richard Scholes, Samuel Dimon, Thomas C. Moore, Alva Dunlap, George C. Bestor and Alexander McCoy.

The Bloomington Convention was duly held with the results heretofore stated. The Democratic Congressional Committee convened in Peoria on July 31, and nominated James W. Davidson, of Monmouth, as candidate for Congress.

It having become known that James Knox would not be a candidate for re-election to Congress, the minds of Republicans were at once turned towards Judge William Kellogg, of Canton. A call signed by B. L. T. Bourland, Dr. Robert Baul and Thomas J. Henderson as a committee, was issued for a Congressional Convention to be held at Peoria on the first Tuesday in August. That convention, the first Republican Congressional Convention in which Peoria County took part, was held at Peoria, according to the call, Judge Silas Ramsey, of Lacon, being the presiding officer. Judge Kellogg was nominated for Congress; a long string of resolutions, in line with the National and State platforms, were adopted; Senator Trumbull's course in the Senate was indorsed, as also that of Knox in the House of Representatives. A central committee consisting of Messrs. Grove, Bourland and Dunlap, of Peoria, Greenbury L. Fort, of Marshall, and Dr. Harris, of Tazewell, was appointed.

Another county convention was called and held on the 16th of August to nominate County officers and to choose delegates to a district nominating convention to be held at Princeville. Thomas J. Pickett, one of the editors of "The Republican," was nominated for Circuit Clerk, against Enoch P. Sloan, editor of "The Press," the Democratic candidate; John H. Batchelder was nominated for Sheriff, against Frank W. Smith; and Alfred R. Kidwell for Coroner, against Milton McCormick.

The Princeville convention was duly held, and nominated John T. Lindsay and Calvin L. Eastman for the Legislature, and Alexander McCoy for State's Attorney. Dr. John D. Arnold was nominated for re-election to the State Senate at a convention subsequently held in Lacon.

On the 9th of October a monster mass meeting of Republicans was held at Peoria, at which speeches were made by Abraham Lincoln, Lyman Trumbull, William (commonly designated as Deacon) Bross, of Chicago, and others.

On October 21st another meeting was held at Peoria, addressed by Owen Lovejoy and other prominent Republicans. Not to be outdone by the Republicans, the Democrats also brought to Peoria some of their leading men. On September 12th they held a mass meeting at Peoria, which was addressed by William A. Richardson, candidate for Governor, Colonel Carpenter, a prominent politician from Kentucky, John A. McClernand (now lately deceased), a member of Congress from Illinois, Robert Holloway, of Monmouth, and Wellington Loucks, of Peoria.

On November 1st, however, their greatest meeting was held, at which Stephen A. Douglas made one of the greatest efforts of his life, closing with the words, "Buchanan is President, Breckenridge is Vice-President, and Dick Richardson is Governor of Illinois." The prediction proved true only in part, for Richardson was defeated at the polls by William H. Bissell, the first of a long line of Republican Governors, which remained unbroken for a period of thirty-six years.

Peoria County, however, went Democratic, Buchanan receiving 2,534 votes, Fremont 2,156, Fillmore 465; for Governor, Richardson had 2,552 votes, Bissell 2,275, Morris 302; for Congress, Davidson had 2,694, Kellogg 2,278, Griffith 75; for Circuit Clerk, Sloan had 2,666, Pickett, 2,365. Lindsay and Eastman, for the Legislature, doubtless both had majorities in the District, but by mistake in the middle letter of his name, many votes were cast for Calvin M. instead of Calvin L. Eastman, and in that way Shallenberger, the Democrat, obtained the seat and held it through the session. Kellogg was elected to Congress and Arnold to the State Senate.

Two days after the inauguration of President Buchanan the famous Dred Scott Decision was promulgated by the Supreme Court of the United States, by which slavery was made national and freedom local. A new phase was now added to the already perplexing situation. Great encouragement was thereby afforded the slave oligarchy, seeing, as they did, that all three departments of the government, legislative, executive and judicial, were then arrayed on their side. It seemed now that slavery was forever entrenched in the Constitution of our country, and that what was supposed to be the "land of the free" to people of all nationalities, races and colors, was henceforth to be the protector of human slavery and oppression in its vilest form.

But God's clock had struck the hour of slavery's doom; the shadow had gone down upon the dial and it could not be brought back. It was now to be seen whether human enactments could stand against eternal principles of right and justice, whether iniquity enacted into law should prevail against the law of God.

When Mr. Douglas returned to his home in Chicago after Congress had adjourned in 1858, Mr. Lincoln was there to engage in the contest. Mr. Douglas spoke to an immense audience from the balcony of the Tremont House, taking for his text that sentence in Mr. Lincoln's Springfield speech, in which he had said "I believe this Government cannot endure permanently half free and half slave." Mr. Lincoln spoke in reply from the same place on the following night. From that time until the election a political battle raged, which has no parallel in history. On July 17 Mr. Douglas spoke again at Springfield, and was replied to by Mr. Lincoln. Soon after this a joint debate was arranged between them to take place at the following places and dates: Ottawa, in Lovejoy's District, on August 21; Freeport, in Washburn's District, August 27; Jonesboro, in Samuel Marshall's District, on September 15; Charleston, in Aaron Shaw's District, on September 18; Galesburg, in William Kellogg's District, on October 7; Quincy, in Isaac N. Morris' District, on October 13; and at Alton, in Robert Smith's District, on October 13; three in Republican and four in Democrat Districts.

Although Peoria was not named as one of the points at which one of the joint discussions should be held, yet it had the benefit of a speech from each of the champions at the very beginning of the contest. The Republican Congressional Convention had been called to meet at Peoria on the 10th of August, just two days prior to the debate appointed at Ottawa, and an immense mass meeting had been arranged for that oc-caison. Mr. Lincoln had spoken in Lewistown on the 17th. The Democrats had also arranged for a meeting for Senator Douglas on the 18th, the day preceding that of the convention. Immense crowds attended both meetings, but it was conceded that, on account of longer notice and more extensive advertising, the Democrats had the greater number. Mr. Douglas made one of his strongest efforts, in anticipation of what was before him in the near future. On the next day Judge Kellogg was re-nominated for Congress, after which Mr. Lincoln replied to the speech of Douglas, and was followed by Judge Kellogg in one of his most eloquent efforts. These speeches of Lincoln and Douglas may be regarded as the preface to the great debate which followed. In the interval between the debates each candidate filled speaking appointments of his own. The Fourth, or Kellogg's District, seemed to be the battle ground. During the campaign Mr. Lincoln made at least five speeches in this District and Douglas fully as many. Three days after the Freeport debate Mr. Lincoln and Judge Kellogg attended the Republican County Convention of Tazewell County, at Tremont, where both made characteristic speeches.

The headman's axe at Washington was now busily engaged in decapitating all Democratic Federal office holders who would not fall into line with the administration party. On the 4th day of September it was announced in the public press that James W. Davidson had been removed from the office of United States Marshal for the Northern District of Illinois, and that Charles N. Pine, of the Chicago Herald, an administration paper, had been appointed in his place. Four days later, at the Douglas Democratic Congressional Convention held at Peoria, Mr. Davidson received and accepted the nomination of that party as competitor of Judge Kellogg.

There were only two State officers to be elected in the year 1858, State Treasurer and Superintendent of Public Instruction. The Republican candidates were James Miller and Newton Bateman, those of the Douglas Democrats, William B. Fondy and ex-Governor Augustus C. French, and of the Administration Democrats, John Dougherty and ex-Governor John Reynolds.

The local nominations for Peoria were, on the Republican ticket, George C. Boston, for the State Senate, nominated at a convention held at Lacon, September 24; Thomas C. Moore and Myrtle G. Brace for Representatives; David D. Irons for Sheriff, and Daniel Bristol for Coroner, all nominated at Princeville, September 8th. The Douglas ticket was E. C. Ingersoll and Jacob Jamison for the Legislature, nominated at Princeville, September 15th; William S. Moss for State Senator; John Bryner for Sheriff, and Dr. John N. Niglas for Coroner. On the 18th of September the National (or Administration) Democrats, at a convention at Lacon, nominated Henry S. Austin for State Senator, and on the 23d of the same month, at Peoria, nominated Jacob Gale for Congress, Matthew McReynolds and Washington Corrington for the Legislature, George Jenkins for Sheriff and Samuel Tart for Coroner.

George W. Raney had for a number of years been conducting a Democratic newspaper in Peoria, under the title of "The News," then recently changed to "The Democratic Union." He had never been friendly to the "Popular Sovereignty" doctrine of Douglas, and had taken the side of the Administration in the Kansas-Nebraska imbroglio in 1856. He was now to receive his reward. Peter Sweat, one of the oldest and staunchest Democrats in the County, whose loyalty to party had always been equal to that held by him towards the country, had espoused the Douglas side of the controversy. He was then, by appointment of President Pierce, Postmaster at Peoria. The axe now fell upon his neck, and Raney got the place, just five days after Gale's nomination to Congress.

The joint-debates between Douglas and Lincoln at Ottawa, Freeport, Jonesboro and Charleston having been held, their next meeting place was at Galesburg on October 7th. On their way there both spoke at Pekin, Douglas on the 2d and Lincoln, with Kellogg, on the 5th. En route Mr. Lincoln stopped at Peoria and went to Pekin on the steamer Nile. On the 7th one thousand persons went from Peoria to Galesburg to hear the great debate. On October 14th, Carl Shurz addressed the Germans of Peoria in the German language. The debates between Lincoln and Douglas closed at Alton, on the 16th of October, but Mr. Douglas, not being satisfied with the condition of affairs about Peoria, returned here, and on the 23d of October made a speech in Parmely's Hall, which was filled to overflowing. But the Republicans were determined not to let him have the last speech here, and so they got Schuyler Colfax to close the campaign in the same hall on the night of November 1st.

The result in Peoria County was as follows:

State Treasurer—Miller, 2,593; Fonday, 2,639; Dougherty, 272.

Congress—Kellogg, 2,601; Davidson, 2,623; Gale, 286.

State Senator—Bestor, 2,585; Moss, 2,603; Austin, 281.

Representative—Moore, 2,569; Ingersoll, 2,666; McReynolds, 288; Brace, 2,565; Jamison, 2,632; Corrington, 245.

Sheriff—Irons, 2,622; Bryner, 2,664; Jenkins, 218.

Coroner—Bristol, 2,511, Niglas, 2,608, Tart, 329.

The result in the State was: for State Treasurer, Miller, 125,450; Fonday, 121,609; Dougherty, 5,071. Although the Republicans carried the State for their State ticket, enough Democratic Senators and Representatives were elected to return Douglas to the United States Senate, he receiving fifty-four votes on joint ballot, to forty-six for Mr. Lincoln. Never in the history of Peoria County have its people had the privilege of hearing so many and such masterly speeches as during the campaign of 1858. Within a radius of fifty miles Mr. Lincoln spoke at least five times, Mr. Douglas four, Carl Schurz once, Schuyler Colfax once, Judge Kellogg a number of times, with other speakers nearly every night, who in ordinary times would shine as bright political stars. During that campaign, from July 9th until the day of the election, a period of just one hundred days, Sundays excluded, Mr. Douglas made one hundred and thirty speeches. Thenceforth his battle was to be with the Administration wing of his own party, while Mr. Lincoln fast rose in the minds of the people to the first rank of living statesmen.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE CAMPAIGN OF 1860.

The parties in the campaign of 1860 were early in the field.

The first to nominate its National ticket was the "Constitutional Union" party, the successor of the "American" party of 1858. It held its convention at Baltimore on the 9th day of May and nominated John Bell, of Tennessee, for President, and Edward Everett, of Massachusetts, for Vice-President. The "Republican" party held its convention at Chicago on May 16th and nominated Abraham Lincoln for President and Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine, for Vice-President. The Fourth, or Peoria Congressional District, was represented in this convention by Henry Grove, of Peoria, and E. W. Hazzard, of Galesburg. The Democratic convention first met in Charleston, South Carolina, on April 20th, where a split took place between the adherents of Douglas and those opposed to him. A portion of the Southern delegates having withdrawn, those who remained adjourned to meet in Baltimore on the 10th day of June, at which time Douglas was nominated for President and Benjamin Fitzpatrick, of Alabama, for Vice-President. But the latter having declined, Herschel V. Johnson, of Georgia, was substituted. The Fourth Congressional District was represented in this convention by Benjamin S. Prettyman, of Pekin, and Robert Holloway, of Mommouth.

The delegates who had seceded at Charleston organized a separate convention and adjourned to meet at Richmond, Virginia, on June 11th, at which time another adjournment was taken to Baltimore on the 25th of the same month. Having by this time been re-inforced by some newly chosen delegates, the convention proceeded to the nomination of candidates, when John C. Breckenridge, of Kentucky, and Joseph Lane, of Oregon, were respectively chosen as candidates for the offices of President and Vice-President.

The four parties, as thus organized, held their respective conventions in Illinois, the Republicans nominating Richard Yates for Governor, Francis A. Hoffman for Lieutenant-Governor, Jesse K. Dubois for Auditor, Ozias M. Hatch for Secretary of State, William Butler for Treasurer, and Newton Bateman for Superintendent of Public Instruction. For the same offices the Douglas Democrats nominated James C. Allen, Lewis W. Ross, Bernard Arntzen, G. H. Campbell, Hugh Maher and E. R. Roe. The Breckenridge Democrats nominated T. M. Hope for Governor and Thomas Snell, formerly of Peoria County, for Lieutenant-Governor, while the Bell-Everett ticket was headed by John T. Stuart for Governor and Hugh S. Blackburn for Lieutenant-Governor.

It does not appear that either the Bell-Everett or the Breckenridge party made nominations in Peoria, but that here the contest lay wholly between the Republicans and Douglas Democrats. William Kellogg was the Republican and Robert G. Ingersoll the Democratic candidate for Congress; William Pitt Kellogg was the Republican and S. Corning Judd the Democratic candidate from this District for Presidential Electors; Dr. John D. Arnold held over as State Senator, so there were no candidates for that office. Elbridge G. Johnson, of Peoria, and Theodore J. Hurd, of Stark, were the Republican, and John T. Lindsay, of Peoria, and Jacob Jamison, of Stark, were the Democratic candidates for the Legislature; Alexander McCoy was the Republican and Henry B. Hopkins the Democratic candidate for State's Attorney.

The campaign was one of intense excitement and enthusiasm, rather than of argument. The principles advocated by the several parties had been settled, and it now only remained to line up the voters in favor of their respective candidates.

This campaign developed some new features in politics, which added greatly to the enthusiasm. There being no hall in Chicago large enough to accommodate the Republican Convention, a wooden building was erected for that purpose, which was named "The Wigwam." The name was a catching one, and suggested the erection of such buildings in all the principal cities. Although there were then in Peoria two good-sized halls, the Republicans determined to have one of their own. The lots now occupied by the National Hotel and the adjoining one being then vacant, the use of them was procured for a "Wigwam." This was a large rectangular building, inclosed with upright siding, and having a pitched roof of common boards. It was plentifully supplied with doors and windows, so it could be used as well for day as for night meetings. It stood some distance back from both Hamilton and Jefferson streets, and was in every respect such a building as to attract a crowd on short notice.

Another noted feature of the campaign was the organization known as the "Wide Awakes," a uniformed marching order made up principally of young men. It had its origin somewhere in New England, but such was its taking qualities, that it rapidly spread over the whole country. It introduced the use of oil in place of the old-time pine-knot torch; its uniform consisted of a flat cap with straight visor, and a black rubber cape. It was officered as a military organization, and was drilled to march in military order. During the campaign counter organizations sprang up among the Democrats under the names of "Ever Readies," "Little Giants" and "Douglas Clubs." They made it a point to attend every important meeting of their respective parties, often going many miles to add to the numbers and enthusiasm.

At this time the two leading parties were well sustained by their party organs, the "Peoria Transcript" and the "Democratic Union." For some time the former had been owned and operated by N. C. Geer, but on the 10th day of July, 1860, on account of failing health, he sold out to Enoch Emery and E. A. Andrews. Mr. Geer died a few months afterwards. Mr. Emery retained his connection with the paper, first in company with Mr. Andrews, and later on by himself for many years, and made it one of the leading Republican papers in the State.

A change had also taken place a short time before then, in the ostensible retirement of George W. Raney from the editorial management of the "Democratic Union," and the putting of William Trench in that position. As already seen, Mr.

Raney had been a strong supporter of the Buchanan, or Danite wing of the Democratic party, and still held the Peoria postoffice under appointment from Buchanan. It would not, under these circumstances, have been the proper thing for him to espouse the cause of Douglas, whom he had so recently and so vigorously opposed. At the same time, his paper being the only Democratic one of any prominence in the District, the party could not well afford to do without it. It was, soon after the split in the party, brought about that Trench, a strong Douglas Democrat, was put in as editor, and continued to occupy that position until after the election, when Raney again assumed the editorial management of the paper. These two papers were edited with ability, and, with the exception of occasional campaign dirt-throwing, reflected great credit upon the press of the District.

The occasion of the dedication of the "Wigwam," on August 31st, was made the occasion of one of the greatest demonstrations of the campaign. Delegations, made up largely of Wide Awakes, came from Tazewell, Woodford, Marshall, Fulton and Knox Counties, with bands playing and banners floating. The capacity of the wigwam was found to be wholly inadequate to accommodate the numbers in attendance, and three extra stands were provided in the Court House square, where speeches were delivered, both during the afternoon and at night. Among the speakers were David Taggart, a prominent politician of Pennsylvania; Dr. Mansell, William Pitt Kellogg, of Canton; Elihu N. Powell, of Peoria; Hon. Joseph Knox, of Knoxville; Owen Lovejoy, then Congressman from the Third District; Albert Potthoff and others, of Peoria. The number in attendance was estimated at not less than thirty thousand.

Another exciting feature of the campaign consisted in the joint discussion held between the candidates of the respective parties. Notable among them were the discussions of Judge William Kellogg and Robert G. Ingersoll, opposing candidates for Congress, and those of William Pitt Kellogg and S. Corning Judd, opposing candidates for the position of Presidential Elector. It rarely happens that such an array of oratorical talent can be brought together in a single District. Judge Kellogg was in the prime of life, and had already achieved a wide reputation as an orator at the bar, on the rostrum and in the halls of legislation, State and National. Ingersoll was not yet twenty-eight years of age, but had already begun to make his mark as an orator, which afterwards gave him world-wide fame. Pitt Kellogg had before then been pursuing his profession in a quiet way, but his talent as an orator had been discovered by Richard Yates, who had pushed him to the front in politics and was well rewarded for his favors shown. Kellogg soon showed himself to be one of the ablest debaters in the field. Judd was probably the most polished and scholarly of the four, and was possessed of talents sufficient to have carried him to the highest position. But unfortunately for him his sympathies for the South afterwards led him into a decided opposition to the war policy of the Government, and he never afterwards achieved any great political distinction. But during this campaign he conducted his side of the debates with tact and ability.

The principal event of the campaign on the Democratic side was a monster mass meeting at Peoria, on the 19th of September. Delegations were present from Fulton, Tazewell, Woodford, Marshall, Warren and Knox Counties. Their papers claimed 30,000 voters in attendance and 75,000 people participating in the meeting. Speaking took place at two stands, one on the north side of the Court House, where speeches were made by James C. Allen, candidate for Governor; Hon. A. C. Dodge, of Iowa, and Colonel J. L. D. Morrison, of Belleville; and one on the south side, where the people were addressed by James W. Davidson, of Monmouth; Richard T. Merrick, of Chicago, and Samuel S. Marshall, of McLeansboro. At night speeches were made by Robert G. Ingersoll and Bernard Arntzen, a banner was presented by the ladies to the "Ever Ready," and a grand ball was given at Parmely's Hall by the "Ever Ready" Clubs.

The array of speakers in this campaign was very large. Meetings were held at all principal points in the County, Elmwood, Brimfield, Rochester, Princeville, Chillicothe, Kickapoo, Lancaster, Trivoli, Smithville, and other centers of population, in school-houses, public halls, or in the open air, as best suited the convenience of the people.

When the night of October 6th arrived it seemed as if the Wigwam had been converted into a veritable pandemonium. The State elections in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana had taken place on that day, and reports said the Republicans had carried every one of them. Enoch Emery, editor of the "Transcript," read the telegrams from the platform as they came in, and, as every one favorable to the Republicans was read, shouts of applause rent the air, horns were blown, hats were hurled towards the rafters of the great building, hand clasped hand, and in many cases tears of joy ran down the faces of stalwart men. This demonstration was followed by one of a more formal character on the night of Thursday, October 11th, when all the "Wide Awakes" were called out, a torch-light procession was formed and glee-clubs sang songs through the streets. The news of Tuesday night had been confirmed, and now the election of Lincoln was considered certain.

The ensuing week was one of intense excitement. Speaking from a Republican standpoint, a writer in the "Transcript" of the 25th says: "The Republican cause, with Lincoln as its representative, has aroused the citizens of Peoria County as they were never aroused before. The campaign of 1860 will be memorable in the Central City for the vigor and enthusiasm with which the Republicans of this section have signalized it. The great Wigwam on the corner of Hamilton and Jefferson streets has been crowded with interested audiences night after night for the purpose of listening to Republican speeches, and the enthusiasm has increased with each meeting."

The same might have been truthfully said on the Democratic side, for the adherents of the "Little Giant" had almost as much cause for the outpourings of their enthusiasm as had those of the "Rail-Splitter" of New Salem.

At length the memorable 6th day of November arrived, the day which was to decide the fate of slavery in the United States, and to lead their people to a higher realization of the principles contained in the Declaration of Independence. From early morning until the close of the polls excited crowds gathered about the voting places, eagerly soliciting votes, arguing the questions involved, discussing the merits and demerits, the consistency and inconsistency of the respective candidates, as well as scrutinizing the qualifications of the voters. The parties were organized for the fray as they had never been organized before. Rallying committees had been appointed in each ward, distributors of ballots had been selected, and challengers stationed at the windows. If determination to win was ever seen at any other election it had its equal on that day.

When night came the inner circles of politicians assembled at the newspaper offices and committee rooms where they might be the first to receive the news of the election, be it welcome or unwelcome. But the great mass of the population assembled at the headquarters of the respective parties, "The Wigwam" and "Parmely's Hall."

As the Republicans had anticipated certain victory, their anxiety to hear the telegrams was almost without restraint, and, as their anxiety was more or less gratified with favorable reports, their enthusiasm became unbounded. When, at a late hour, reports had been received giving assurance of the election of Mr. Lincoln, it seemed as if Bedlam had been let loose, and to use an expressive modern phrase, the Republicans proceeded "to paint the town red." The pen must here give place to the imagination. For wild enthusiasm the like of this scene has never, before or since, been seen at Peoria. On Wednesday the excitement continued, but in a more quiet and earnest form. In the afternoon an impromptu meeting took place at the Wigwam which was filled to overflowing, all intent on receiving confirmatory news of the great victory. Congratulatory speeches were made, and songs were sung amid every conceivable demonstration of joy. At night this scene was repeated in an intensified form. There seemed to be no end to Republican rejoicing.

On the night of Friday, November 9th, there was a great illumination of the city, private dwellings as well as public buildings, newspaper offices and business houses, displaying lights in every window; a great torch-light procession of Wide Awakes, followed by a company of fanatics and citizens on foot, paraded the streets, while in the Wigwam the scenes of Tuesday and Wednesday evenings were repeated.

While refraining from any participation in these scenes, it is known there were many Democrats, who through constitutional scruples had been induced to vote for Douglas, that now secretly rejoiced in Lincoln's election.

What has been said of Peoria was true of all other cities in the North. The writer had the privilege of hearing John Sherman deliver an address to an immense audience in Philadelphia early in the campaign, where he first saw a company of "Wide Awakes." He heard Douglas at Harrisburg and again at Chicago, where he witnessed the illumination on his arrival in the city, and can safely say that, in no campaign that has taken place since then, have the scenes there enacted been repeated. The moral victory of freedom over slavery had now been won. The next contest was to be of a different character.

CHAPTER XXV

PEORIA IN THE GREAT UPRISING.

The people of Peoria County were not wholly unprepared for war. There were then in the city several military companies well officered and equipped. The most popular of these was "The National Blues," a company composed of some of the best blood in the city. It dated its existence from July 9th, 1856, during all of which time it had been the pride of the people. Its uniform, which closely resembled the dress uniform of the United States Army, together with the fine physique of the men, imparted to it a splendid appearance. It had been feasted and toasted time and again, and, to raise money for its support, entertainments with tableaux vivants and other spectacular performances had been given in the public halls. The other companies were the following: "The Peoria Rifle Company," organized August 4th, 1856, had forty members, and occupied an armory on Adams street south of Pecan. Paul Distler was Captain, Gottlieb Voelkers, First, and Joseph Herwig Second Lieutenant. "The Lafayette Rifle Company," organized August 5th, 1856, occupied an armory between Main and Fulton streets. The number of its members is not known. Its Captain was —————; William Gebhart was First and Frederick Streibich was Second Lieutenant. These two companies were composed of men of German nationality.

"The Peoria Emmett Guards," a company composed of Irishmen, organized in August, 1857, and numbering twenty-eight men, occupied an armory between Main and Fulton streets. Augustine H. Bushell was Captain, George L. Corcoran First and Patrick Kelly Second Lieutenant, John Gorman, Orderly Sergeant, H. George, Treasurer, and Patrick W. Dunne, Secretary.

Not any of these companies entered the army as an organized body, but they all became disorganized by their members joining the companies recruited for the war.

When the people of Peoria awoke from their slumbers on the morning of April 13, 1861, it was to learn that Fort Sumter had been fired upon by the insurgents at daybreak of the preceding day. Owing to a prevailing storm the wires were so badly demoralized the messages had to be thrice repeated before it was definitely learned that war had actually begun. Then for the first time the gravity of the situation began to be realized. Without waiting to hear from other places Peoria at once rushed to the defense of the country. That afternoon "The National Blues" in full uniform marched to the Court House Square, planted a flag-staff fifty feet high, ran up the stars and stripes, and saluted the ensign of their country with cheers and several volleys of musketry. (1) An immense crowd assembled to witness the scene, all animated by one common feeling of devotion to the flag.

Hon. Julius Manning, a leading lawyer, a life-long Democrat who had been a supporter of Mr. Douglas in the late campaign, then occupied an office on Main street and many were anxious to learn his sentiments regarding the present crisis. Proceeding to his office the crowd demanded a speech. In response to their call he appeared upon the balcony and, in a few short, impassioned and eloquent sentences, unequivocally declared himself for the Union, the Constitution and the flag of the country, pledging himself to support the authorities in putting down what he fully realized to be a formidable rebellion. This demonstration was entirely impromptu, but before it was over it had assumed the character of a mass meeting. It was the first public demonstration of the war, and Manning's speech did much to bring the wavering, if any there were, to the support of the administration. Flags were also hoisted on the City Hall, the Engine Houses and other public buildings.

(1) There is considerable confusion in the newspaper accounts of what followed during the next two weeks, and a doubt has been thrown upon the date of this pederasing. The "Transcript" was not issued on Sunday and its account would place it at the beginning of the week following. But the "Democratic Union" of Sunday, April 14 gave an account of it substantially as it is in the text. A careful comparison of the two papers, aided by my own recollection, convinces me that the events occurred substantially as they have been related.

Sunday came, and with it a feeling of deep solemnity. The morning paper brought the news of the evacuation of Fort Sumter. Allusion to the great fact of existing war was made in the leading pulpits, and earnest exhortations were made to stand by the constituted authorities.

On Monday, April 15th, the excitement became intense. President Lincoln on that day issued his call for 75,000 militia from the several States, and called an extra session of Congress to assemble on the fourth day of July then next ensuing. During the day it was ascertained that the quota from Illinois would be six regiments.

On the same day Governor Yates issued his proclamation convening the Legislature in extra session on the 23d of the same month.

These several proclamations were heralded to the people through extras issued from time to time during the day, as well as through the regular papers of the next morning.

Although the excitement was intense, there was as yet no organization. In the evening the people came together at the Court House. Lyssander R. Webb, one of the editors of the "Transcript," called the meeting to order, and on his motion William A. Willard, Mayor of the City, was called to the chair. Mr. Webb and William B. Whiffin, a Democrat attached to the "Democratic Union," were made secretaries. The object of the meeting was stated by Senator George C. Bestor, who had formerly been Mayor of the City. A stirring address was made by John Bryner (afterwards Colonel of the 47th Regiment), after which the form of enrollment was presented by Mr. J. Corwin Hansel for the information of those desiring to enlist. A committee consisting of Messrs. Bestor, Willard, Bryner and Webb was selected to draw up and present resolutions expressive of the sentiments of the citizens of Peoria, and, during their retirement for that purpose, addresses were made by Mr. John Durham, and Mr. William Trench, late editor of the "Democratic Union." The preamble and resolutions declared that, Whereas, the Government of the United States was then in danger from designing knaves and traitors, and the flag of our Union had been insulted and disgraced, therefore be it Resolved, "that, as friends of the Union and lovers of liberty, we will defend that flag at the cost of our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor; that the Union has conferred too many blessings upon us to hastily destroy or disturb our progress for the sake of present or future autocrats; that, as Illinoisans, we pledge the United States all we are, and all we possess, for the preservation of this glorious Union."

When the roll was opened for recruits, forty-seven names were attached, that of Jacob Corwin Haasel being the first. The Zouave Cadets also held a meeting for organization, which was adjourned until the next evening.

Tuesday morning opened with additional excitement. The substance of the proclamations of the President and Governor, was published under staring head-lines, and the citizens were called upon to stand by the Government. All who were desirous of forming a military company were requested to meet at the Court House that evening. The "Thanscript" editorially thus describes the situation: "The excitement in our city, for the past few days, has exceeded anything ever before known. Yesterday people paid little attention to business, but thronged the streets awaiting extras containing the news. National flags were flung out and patriotic demonstrations broke forth on all hands; party and party feeling were swallowed up in one united determination to stand by the Union, the Constitution, the stars and stripes, the Glorious Harbinger."

The Democratic Union of Tuesday (there being no Monday issue of that paper), came out unequivocally in support of the authorities, quoting President Jackson's motto, "The Federal Union: by the Eternal, it must and shall be preserved."

This day seems to have been taken up largely in recruiting,—no public meetings having been held. But the Zouave Cadets met at night and effected a partial organization. Wednesday, the 17th, brought a repetition, in an intensified form, of the excitement of the two preceding days. Mention was made in the morning papers of the formation, on the preceding night, of the Washington Rifle Company to be commanded by Dan Miles, who was arranging his business so as to take command; a call was made for a meeting of the Zouave Cadets that evening and for a public meeting at the Court House.

It was also announced that the rural districts had become equally aroused with the cities and towns, and, as a conspicuous evidence of patriotic devotion, it was stated that one man had walked in from Knoxville, a distance of forty miles, for the purpose of enlisting in his country's service. On that day Valentine Dewein, a prominent merchant, gratuitously tendered the use of his unfinished building (now Nos. 108-110 South Adams street) as headquarters for the recruits, and a meeting was called for that place during the day.

Before night Captain Dennison's company was full and had been tendered to the Governor by telegraph, over one hundred men having volunteered their services to the Government. Later in the day a message was received from the Governor accepting the company. The officers were Charles E. Dennison, Captain; John Wetzel, a veteran of the Mexican War, First, and Charles Proebsting, once an officer of the Prussian Army, Second Lieutenant; Loyd Wheaton (1) First, Robert Wilson, Second, Alexander Jackelfalusy, a countryman of Kossuth, Third, and Frederick A. King, Fourth Sergeants; Charles Reiss, First, David D. Snyder, Second, Anthony Roehrig, Third, and Samuel Caldwell, Fourth Corporals; Henry C. Pierce and Henry Walton, Musicians. According to announcement another highly patriotic meeting was held at night in the Court House at which John Durham presided, and speeches were made by Dr. Corcoran, Mark M. Aiken, E. K. Raymond, Barrett White, and others. Seventy-seven new names were enrolled, of whom thirty were Germans. A second company was started and those wishing to join it were requested to meet at Dewein's Hall, the new headquarters, on Thursday evening. Up to this time forty companies had been tendered to the Governor.

On Thursday the City was somewhat more quiet, but still active operations in the way of recruiting were going on.

On the evening of this day, as was afterward reported, Senator Bestor spoke at a meeting in Chicago, where he pledged himself to vote at the called meeting of the Legislature for an appropriation of $1,000,000, and for the raising of 100,000 men to put down the rebellion. At night the streets were thronged with people, a meeting of the National Blues was held at their armory, one of the Zouave Cadets at their new rooms on Main street, and one of the volunteers at their hall on Adams street.

There was an immense crowd at the meeting at the Court House. It was presided over by George W. Raney, who, as has been noticed, had been the leader of the Buchanan wing of the Democratic party in the campaign of 1858. Union speeches were made by L. A. Willard, a young lawyer, by W. W. O'Brien, who afterward became a vigorous opponent of the Lincoln administration, by Enoch P. Sloan, a strong Douglas Democrat, and by Lysander R. Webb and John Durham, Republicans. By this time every vestige of party spirit seemed to have been swallowed up in one united and patriotic sentiment for the salvation of the Union.

Friday, the 10th, came with no abatement but rather an increase of excitement. The "Transcript," in closing a review of the situation, said: "A week of such events is worth a life-time in ordinary firesides. We have a government." On the following morning (April 20) it said: "The war spirit in Peoria rose yesterday to fever heat. The headquarters of the volunteers were crowded throughout the day. In the morning the German Turners, to the number of forty stalwart men marched with fife and drum to the Blues' headquarters and volunteered. Over two hundred had offered by night, out of which one hundred and ninety passed inspection. Drills were organized and last night Blues' hall and several others were opened as drill rooms for recruits. The anxiety of the men to get into the company already accepted exceeds anything we ever saw before."

Addison S. Norton had, at 8:30 o'clock on the night before, commenced the enrollment of a second company, and by 8:30 P. M. on the 20th, the company was full and he was obliged to refuse applicants. On that day he tendered the company to the Governor but received no reply. Later on he was advised that the quota was full.

On the same day the Board of Supervisors appropriated $10,000 to equip the soldiers and to provide for the families of those who might be in need of help, and several gentlemen made standing offers through Mr. Holland that each of them would, at his own expense, support the family of any soldier who needed such help during the war, let it continue as long as it might. Flags were flung out from the banking houses of M. P. Stone & Co., (now the First National); L. Howell & Co., (now Peoria National); S. Pulsifer & Co.,

(1) Loyd Wheaton is a son of William G. Wheaton, once a resident of Peoria and Chief Engineer of the Peoria & Hannibal Railroad. The son who is now a distinguished officer in the Philippines, was educated in the Peoria schools, was a member of the National Blues, entered the army in Captain Dennison's Company; served through the war, rapidly rose in rank in the volunteer service, entered the regular army and is now a Major-General, having distinguished himself in the Philippine War.

During this day (Saturday) Captain Dennison's company were mustered in front of the residence of Senator Bestor on Main street, opposite the Court House, where a splendid flag, the handiwork of Mrs. George C. Bestor and Mrs. William S. Gregg, was presented them. Prayer was first offered by Rev. J. M. Waite, the presentation speech was made by Mr. Bestor, the Star Spangled Banner was sung as a solo by Miss Harris, the audience joining in the chorus, the closing prayer was made by Rev. S. J. G. Worthington of the First Methodist Church, after which three cheers were given for the Union, three for the ladies, three for the stars and stripes, and three for the Peoria Volunteers.

On the same afternoon an excited street meeting took place on Main street in front of the building of the Peoria Marine and Fire Insurance Company (the Iron Front, Nos. 209-211), caused by the raising of a splendid American flag, and by the playing of the Star Spangled Banner on the roof of the building by the Cecilian Band (an organization composed of men of Irish nationality). Henry Grove and Robert G. Ingersoll made patriotic speeches from the balcony of the same building, and Julius Manning and William W. O'Brien at other places. In the evening another meeting took place in the Court House, presided over by George C. Bestor, with Enoch P. Sloan as secretary. A stirring speech was made by Henry Grove, followed by one from Dr. George L. Lucas. Herman W. Snow (late member of the Fifty-second Congress from the Ninth District) offered a series of resolutions, which were passed, to not buy of or sell to any citizen or citizens of the States in rebellion any provisions, arms, ammunition, or other implements of war tending to encourage them in their disloyalty, or suffer the same to be done by others, until they should have returned to their duty or ceased to bear arms against the Government; also, as far as possible to prevent the transit of the same through our State for such purpose, and a committee of two from each ward was appointed to see that this resolution should be strictly observed.

On the same evening the Zouaves met to complete their organization, at which time Mr. Frank Peats, formerly of the Rockford Zouaves, volunteered to drill them in the then new tactics.

Thus ended the hitherto most memorable week in the history of Peoria.

The second Sabbath of the war brought with it a deeper feeling of solemnity than that which had characterized the first. Two hundred of the best citizens of Peoria had devoted their lives to their country's service, and, as to one-half of them at least, this was to be their last Sabbath in Peoria before encountering the perils of active warfare. The churches were well attended at the morning service, although many people were engaged in the work of preparation for the departure of one of the companies, and the enlistment of men for the others.

It was in the afternoon, at Parmely's Hall on Adams street, the interest of the day reached its climax. It was announced in the morning papers and at the several churches, that a special service would be held at the hall at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, at which the two companies of volunteers would be present. Before the hour appointed the great hall was packed with an expectant throng, with only seats enough in front reserved for the soldiers. At length the measured tread of two hundred stalwart men was heard on the stairway, increasing in volume as it reached the top of the second flight leading to the hall; and as the column marched down the middle aisle, bearing aloft the Star Spangled Banner, the flag of our country began to have a significance never before known to many of the beholders. The exercises were short but very impressive. The opening prayer was offered by Rev. Daniel M. Reed, pastor of the Universalist Church, followed by two addresses, one by himself and one by Rev. Wilber McKaig, pastor of the Presbyterian (N. S.) Church. A feeling of the deepest solemnity pervaded the meeting, and both addresses were replete with commendations of the patriotism already displayed by the soldiers and with words of encouragement to the courageous performance of the responsible duties they had assumed.

Monday, the 22d, was a day of continued excitement. The Court House Square was filled with squads of volunteers practicing the various military evolutions, but for want of a sufficient quantity of firearms, it was found impracticable to drill all the men in that branch of tactics. The National Blues had resolved not to enter the service as a body but to offer themselves individually, so they might be of greater service in several companies. It was at this point their services became of the greatest value. Having, in the course of several years' practice, becoming well skilled in military tactics, every man of them was now able to take charge of a squad of new recruits. In this way the companies recruited at Peoria were, at once and successfully, initiated into the requirements of the military service.

Up to this time volunteering had been going on with very little system. A few men having some knowledge of military affairs, would put their heads together, get the names of those willing to enlist, enroll their names and call a meeting for organization and election of officers. When once organized, a tender of the company would be made directly to the Governor. If accepted, the company would be ordered to the general rendezvous at Springfield, and, when mustered into the service, would be assigned to some particular regiment, a very tardy method of organizing an army. In this way Captain Dennison's company became attached to the Eighth Regiment (the second organized for this war), under command of Richard J. Oglesby as Colonel.

On the 22d of April, however, a dispatch was sent to the Governor by a young lawyer then in his 28th year, which seemed almost audacious in its tone. It read as follows:

"Peoria, April 22, 1861.

"To Governor Yates:

"With your permission I will raise a regiment of one thousand men to be ready on call. Will you accept?"

"R. G. INGERSOLL."

Coming from a Democrat, a lately defeated candidate for Congress, this dispatch not only startled the people of Peoria when, on the next morning, it appeared in the papers, but it brought re-assurance to the Governor, as well as to the entire community. That it was not a piece of bravado is proved by the fact that, although the offer could not then be accepted, it was afterward made good in the raising and mustering into the service of the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, on the 20th of December of the same year.

The Legislature soon afterward passed an act for the organization of ten new regiments, in pursuance of which, as hereafter stated, the Governor appointed Peoria as the rendezvous of one of them, and the organization then went on in a more orderly manner.

A new element of excitement about this time took possession of the public mind. A strange craft had gone up the river, in the shape of a small steamboat, and such was the excited state of public feeling that it was at once supposed to be a transport of supplies for the Rebel Army. A meeting had been appointed for that evening (Monday the 22d) at the Court House. The committee that had been appointed at a former meeting to see to the execution of the non-intercourse resolutions of Mr. Snow, reported the fact of the passage up the river of the strange craft aforesaid, and that it was supposed to be loading with a cargo of corn for the Southern army. Thereupon a scene of almost uncontrollable excitement ensued. The meeting had been called to order by George W. Raney, Hon. Elihu N. Powell had been chosen as Chairman and Edward Hudson, Secretary. Speeches were made by R. G. Ingersoll, Joseph F. Wilson, Lucien H. Kerr, and others, and it was resolved to intercept the passage of the boat down the river and to have her cargo unloaded, should it prove to be destined for a southern port. Mr. J. M. Fowler was appointed to see the bridge closed, and a resolution was adopted that no boats be allowed to descend the river after that date with any provisions or other articles contraband of war. This threatening aspect of affairs was deemed by many sufficiently serious to call for extreme measures, and one gentleman moved that a committee be appointed, whose business it should be to select a secret vigilance committee to look after the conduct of the suspected ones, and to stand guard over the safety of the city. This proposition was violently assailed on account of the secret character of the proposed committee, and the measure was defeated; but, instead thereof, an open committee was appointed consisting of the following gentlemen: John Durham, Robert G. Ingersoll, David McCulloch, B. M. Greenman, William S. Gregg, Charles Holland, Dr. George L. Lucas, Amos P. Bartlett, Enoch P. Sloan, William G. Wheaton, Hugh W. Sweney, Washington Coekle, Benjamin Cowell, William W. O'Brien, Tobias S. Bradley, James M. Cunningham, John Bryner, George Ford, Charles Ballance, John Comstock, Jacob Hepperly, Roger J. Brass, Jesse L. Knowlton, Horace G. Anderson, and Julius Manning—about one-half Democrats and one-half Republicans. The appointment of this committee, although wholly unnecessary, as was afterward proved, served a good purpose in that it placed the responsibility of whatever action might be taken upon a committee of trusted citizens, and by this means possibly averted acts of mob violence. This committee held one or two meetings, looked wise and knowingly, said little, shook their heads when questioned, but did little more. The suspected boat did not appear on Monday night nor on Tuesday. The next day (24th), in response to a telegram for instructions, Mayor Willard received one from Governor Yates that the authorities at Springfield did not want the lawful commerce on the Illinois River interrupted. On that, or the succeeding day, the boat arrived and landed at our wharf, when it was discovered that her mission was none other than the collection of produce for the St. Louis market.

This day (April 24, 1861) witnessed the first departure of volunteers from Peoria. Captain Dennison's Company, then called the "National Blues," but sometimes "Company A," armed with the muskets and equipments of the old company, and many of them still further armed with revolvers and bowie-knives presented to them by over-zealous citizens, took their departure at 11:15 o'clock by the Loganport, Peoria and Burlington (now T. P. & W.) Railroad. An immense concourse of citizens turned out to witness their departure. They were escorted to the station by Captain Norton's Company of volunteers, The Peoria Zouaves, The Emmett Guards, and a large number of citizens, the procession being headed by the Peoria bands. No formal leave-taking was had at the depot, but amid loud cheers, waving of handkerchiefs and other demonstrations of encouragement, they were hurried into the cars and were soon on their way. Their route was by the L. P. & B. to Chenoa, thence by the Chicago & Alton to Springfield. The Cecilia Brass Band accompanied them to their destination and returned the next day. On account of a slight accident this side of Washington, the train was delayed about an hour. At Washington, Cruger, Eureka and Secor, large crowds were gathered at the stations and loudly cheered them as they passed. At El Paso the people turned out en masse, with fife and drum, and gave the Company an enthusiastic reception.

The day following (April 25th) the Company was mustered into the service for ninety days, as part of the State Militia. But it was then found that no more than sixty-four men of the rank and file could be received, the Company then having ninety-six of that grade. To bridge over this emergency the officers set aside thirty-two of those least fitted for duty, and had the remaining sixty-four mustered into the service as Company E, of the Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, of which Richard J. Oglesby, afterward Governor and United States Senator, was commissioned as Colonel. The thirty-two who had been set aside from Dennison's Company either joined other companies or waited for an opportunity to rejoin the Company with which they had started out.

On the evening of the 26th the Home Guards met at the Court House, at which time five to six hundred names of valiant men, ready to do, to dare and to die (at home), in defense of their families and possessions, were reported. (1) Hugh J. Sweeney was chosen president of the meeting, and J. K. Murphy secretary. A committee of three from each ward was appointed to call meetings to organize into companies, no company to number less than fifty-six, and a committee of one from each ward was appointed to procure arms. The papers of the day stated that Peoria then had five companies of volunteers fully organized and drilling.

Two weeks of the war had now elapsed and Peoria County had taken a proud stand in defense of the Union.

On Monday, the 29th, three double wagon loads of volunteers came from Brimfield, the majority of whom joined the Zouaves. On that evening that company elected Frank Peats, Captain, John Hough, First, and Joe H. Stevenson, Second Lieutenants. The Peoria Light Artillery elected Peter Davidson, Captain, W. J. Gardner, First, and Herman Borris, Second Lieutenants. Captain Norton's company marched out on the prairie west of the city for a drill. At the request of the Bar, Judge Powell ordered that no jury be called for the May term of the Circuit Court.

Matters now remained in a more quiet state of expectancy for several days. On May 3d, however, the President issued his call for 42,000 volunteers for three years, 20,000 regulars for five years, and 18,000 seamen.

The Legislature, just then adjourned, had passed an act for the raising of ten regiments, one for each Congressional district, and the Governor, in pursuance thereof, had appointed Peoria as the place of rendezvous for the regiment to be raised in the Fourth District. A sufficient number of companies had already been tendered and the Governor, in appointing the place of rendezvous, designated the following companies to compose the regiment:

Mason County Volunteers, Mason County, Captain S. P. Walker; Monmouth, Warren Coun-

(1.) This was a movement growing out of the excitement of the times for which there was then no present necessity, as there were very few, if any, disloyal men in the city, and they were not in the least prominent. Subsequently, however, such an organization became one of the main factors in preventing the success of a gigantic conspiracy in the North.

ty, Captain J. S. Moore; Fairview, Fulton County, Captain A. D. Rose; Peoria, Peoria County, Captain A. S. Norton; Orion, Henry County, Captain Warren; Galesburg, Knox County, Captain F. M. Smith; New Boston, Mercer County, Captain E. P. Wood; Lacon, Marshall County, Captain B. F. Baldwin; Eureka, Woodford County, Captain J. D. Rowell; Fulton Blues (Lewistown), Fulton County, Captain L. F. Ross.

This order was issued on May 7th. In the meantime active preparations were going on at Peoria, but when the order came it was found that only one company, Norton's, had been accepted.

The old County Fair Grounds (now Table Grove Addition) was secured for the camp, which was named Camp Mather, after the Adjutant General of the State. The Fulton Blues, Captain Leonard F. Ross was the first to go into camp, which it did on Saturday, May 11th. The Lacon Company, Captain Baldwin, arrived on Monday, the 13th, at 8 A. M., and Captain Norton's (Peoria) Company at an early hour the same morning. On the same day five companies, occupying twelve to fifteen coaches, arrived on the C., B. & Q. Railroad, namely: Fairview Independent Rifles, Captain Rose, 90 men; Galva Company, Captain H. H. Bush, 96 men (in place of Orion Company); Monmouth Union Guards, Captain Moore, 108 men; Mercer Blues, Captain Wood, 96 men; Galesburg Invincibles, Captain Smith, 103 men, who proceeded at once to the camp and were sworn in. The Eureka Company, Captain Rowell, and the Mason Regulators, Captain Walker, 64 men, arrived later in the day and were duly sworn in. On the 23d of May Captain Davidson's Company of Artillery also went into camp at the same place, but not as part of the same regiment.

On the 26th of May the entire regiment was mustered into the service of the United States by Captain John Pope, of the United States Army. It was designated as the Seventeenth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers.

On the 10th day of June the regiment took its departure for Alton. The regiment, having by that time been somewhat imperfectly armed and equipped, left camp in the afternoon, marching by the customary road down Spring Hill, thence to Main street and down Main street to the river. Arriving at the levee it was massed in solid square and there addressed in a few eloquent and patriotic remarks, by Hon. Hezekiah M. Wead, after which it embarked on the steamers Sam Gaty and Lasalle, and was soon on its way to its new quarters at Alton, where, after being fully equipped, it was ordered into active service.

Up to this time all volunteers had been accepted for the period of three months, the limit of time the President was authorized by law to accept them. But the term of service being so short and the probable duration of the war being much beyond this limit, it became very apparent that new levies would have to be made in the near future. The War Department therefore advised the retention of the organization of all companies already formed, as well as the formation of others in anticipation of the action of Congress at its approaching special session in July. It will therefore, appear that many companies begun under the calls already mentioned, but not accepted, were continued over and mustered in under subsequent calls. While it appears that Peoria County had only two companies actually mustered into the service of the United States under these calls, there were others already recruited and ready to enter the service whenever an opportunity should be presented.

CHAPTER XXVI.

MUSTERING OF TROOPS.

During the interval between the mustering of the first 75,000 men under the call of the President and the meeting of Congress in July, matters remained in a confused condition. The President had exhausted his power and yet there was no prospect of the rebellion being subdued. On the contrary, it was continually growing in strength. The State of Illinois having made provision for the organization of ten regiments of infantry and one of cavalry, it was for a time doubted whether or not any of them could be mustered into the service of the United States during the period for which the first six regiments had been accepted. Then it was decided that six of them could be received to take the places of the first six when their term should expire, but later the War Department concluded to accept the whole of the ten regiments of infantry. As already seen, in the make-up of the Seventeenth Regiment, only one company from Peoria had been accepted. But such was the anxiety of the boys to get into the army that many of them were willing to enlist in regiments forming in other States. Finding an opening in the American Zouave Regiment forming at St. Louis, afterward known as the Eighth Missouri, two of our companies concluded to join it. Accordingly the Peoria Zouave Cadets, nearly a full company of quite young men, left for St. Louis on the 19th day of June, expecting to join that regiment as a company, with Frank Peats as Captain. Peats was at the time with the Seventeenth Regiment as drill officer, but had been with the Zouaves at Peoria, and had signified his willingness to become their Captain. But upon looking into the situation he found it not so inviting as he had expected, and upon arrival of the company at St. Louis declined the honor. This had the effect of disorganizing the Company for a time, but a large number of them concluded to remain, and, uniting with about forty men recruited by George W. Baker, at Pekin, they succeeded in organizing a new company under G. R. Swartout, as Captain, and as such joined the regiment.

On the 25th of June, the Elmwood Guards, David P. Grier, Captain, with about one hundred men, left for St. Louis and joined the same regiment. Captain Grier's company were sworn in the next day after their arrival and became Company G, of the American Zouave or Eighth Missouri Regiment. The Zouaves were sworn in on the 28th of the same month.

Soon after this the War Department decided to accept the regiment of cavalry tendered by the State, and active measures were soon taken to have the same organized. A movement was set on foot by William A. Murray to organize a company at Peoria. He succeeded in raising about thirty men, when it was decided to unite them with a similar company then forming at Knoxville under Jehiel B. Smith as Captain. They first went to Quincy and then to Alton, where, as part of a regiment consisting of seven companies, they were sworn into the service of the United States July 3, 1861.

Captain Davidson's Company had at first been sworn into the service of the State for only thirty days, but, in anticipation of another call, the men had been induced to remain in camp, and now, on the 5th of July, they were accepted into the service of the United States. They broke camp at Peoria, on July 10th, and embarked for Alton on the Steamer Sam Gaty with nearly one hundred men and four six-pound pieces of artillery. Before embarking they were mustered in front of the residence of Dr. Rudolphus Rouse at the corner of Main and Jefferson streets, where a splendid flag was presented by the ladies in a speech by Elbridge G. Johnson, Esq., responded to by Captain Davidson. From Alton the Company was moved to St. Charles, Missouri, and thence to several points, in the same State, finally arriving at Jefferson Barracks, where, on August 17th, it was mustered into the services of the United States as Battery A, in the Second Regiment of Illinois Light Artillery. Its operations during the war were confined principally to the States of Missouri and Arkansas.

The time of service of the three-months men was now about to expire and it was ascertained that a small percentage of them were willing to re-enlist. Especially was this true of the first company sent out from Peoria (Captain Dennison's) who, contrary to their wishes, had been kept on garrison duty at Cairo and not permitted to enter the field of active operations. It was ascertained that only about twenty of them would re-enlist in that regiment, but, through active efforts in recruiting new men, it was re-organized and mustered in for three years under Captain John Wetzel.

In anticipation of another call volunteering continued to be actively carried on, there being as many as eight recruiting offices in Peoria at one time. During the months of May, June and July, the Secretary of War had authorized the formation of seventeen independent regiments of infantry and five of cavalry. Among the former was one to be raised by Captain John Bryner, which was afterward known as the Forty-seventh Regiment of Illinois Infantry. Previous to the announcement of the receipt of this order, there had been no fixed purpose on the part of any of the Companies then being raised as to what regiment they should join, some preferring one and some another. But as soon as it was announced that Bryner had received authority to raise a regiment to be commanded by himself as Colonel, they began to rally around him, and in an incredibly short time his regiment was full.

The terrible disaster to our army at Bull Run on July 21st, instead of discouraging enlistment only led to greater activity. On the day following that event Congress had authorized the President to call into the service 500,000 men. On the 23d Governor Yates telegraphed the Secretary of War as follows: "Being advised that you are receiving tenders of additional troops, I desire to tender you for Illinois, thirteen additional regiments of infantry, most of them now ready to rendezvous; three additional regiments of cavalry and one battalion of light artillery. Illinois demands the right to do her full share in the work of preserving our glorious Union from the assaults of high-handed rebellion, and I insist that you respond favorably to the tender I have made." This tender was in addition to the regiments already being formed under the authority of the War Department, as already mentioned. It was accepted by the Secretary of War on the 25th. On the same day, Colonel Bryner was authorized to raise his independent regiment of infantry, it being one of the seventeen first mentioned. By the 28th he had seven companies pledged and more in prospect. On the 31st he received orders from the War Department to have his regiment ready to march in thirty days. He then had sixteen companies tendered him, only ten of which could be accepted. It was announced that the regiment would go into camp at the Fair Grounds on the 14th. On the 10th, detachments from Captain Lowe's Company of "Peoria City Zouaves," then changed to "Peoria City Rifles," and Captain Cromwell's Company, commenced preparing the Fair Grounds for the reception of the regiment. By the 14th several companies had taken up their quarters there and the remainder followed in a few days thereafter.

Camp Lyon, as it was then named, now became the center of attraction. The same scenes that had been witnessed while the Seventeenth Regiment was encamped there, were now repeated. According to previous announcement a mass meeting of the citizens was held there on the 22d, at which time spirited addresses were made by Thomas G. McCulloh, Jonathan K. Cooper and Washington Cackle, all urging a vigorous prosecution of the war and encouraging men to enlist in the service of their country. One week from that time, August 20th, it was estimated that fully 5,000 people of both sexes had assembled there in mass meeting. No better evidence of the unity of sentiment then prevailing can be found than the patriotic speech delivered on that occasion by Hon. Norman H. Purple. After reviewing the whole situation and the causes which had led up to the war, the Judge concluded as follows: "We must fight together the battle for the Union. The slightest dissension or disunion upon this great question is the sure harbinger of inglorious defeat. Let us first settle the previous question whether we have a government. It will be time enough to wrangle about local or national politics when it shall have been determined that we have a nation.

"Whatever may have been our previous political differences or predilections, I have an abiding confidence—yea, I may say, a personal knick- edge, that there is an honest, true-hearted patriot at the helm. The storm may rage, the winds may howl, the waves may roll mountain high across her decks, but the ship will never sink if it is in the power of that man to hold her on her course and bring her safely into port. I did not vote for him, nor knowingly aid in his election. I honestly wished for his defeat. I voted for John C. Breckenridge. God forgive me for that sin or error, whatever it may have been. He said he was a true-hearted, Union-loving man, and I believed him. Subsequent events have convinced me that we were mutually—mistaken."

Such was the great demand for this speech that it was republished in the tri-weekly "Transcript," of which a large extra number was printed. The splendid tribute paid to the President, with whom Judge Purple had an intimate acquaintance, speaks well for the head and heart of each of these great men who had often met in forensic debate, and who entertained for each other the highest personal regard.

At the same meeting Hon. Hezekiah M. Wead also made a patriotic speech, which was spoken of in terms of high praise by those who had been his political opponents. Unfortunately the text of this speech has not been preserved.

The attention bestowed upon this regiment by the citizens of Peoria were of such a marked character that, at a meeting of the officers on the second day of September, the thanks of the regiment were extended to the ladies for the many delicacies, as well as substantial, furnished the men, to Judges Purple and Wead for their patriotic speeches, to Rev. Hazen of the Christian Church and Hibben of the Second Presbyterian Church for their services in administering to the spiritual welfare of the men, and to Messrs. T. G. McCulloch, John C. Grier and Alexander G. Tyng for their lively interest manifested in the regiment.

This regiment was organized and sworn in on the 10th day of August, 1861, remained in camp at Peoria until September 21st, when it left on the Logan-spout, Peoria & Burlington Railroad by way of Chenoa for St. Louis. It remained in camp at that place, receiving its arms and clothing until October 9th, when it commenced active duties. At the time of leaving Peoria it was officered as follows:

Field and Staff Officers.

Colonel, John Bryner, Peoria; Lieutenant Colonel, Daniel Miles, Washington, Tazewell County; Major, William A. Thrush, Peoria; Adjutant, Rush W. Chambers, Peoria; Quarter Master, William Stewart, Henry, Marshall County; Surgeon, George L. Lucas, Peoria; First Assistant Surgeon, Timothy Babb, Peoria; Chaplain, Rev. Jeremiah Hazen, Peoria.

In the latter part of July, Basil D. Meek, Esq., of Woodford County, being in St. Louis on business relating to the soldiers, called upon General John C. Fremont, then in command of this Department, and obtained leave from him to raise a regiment of cavalry in Central Illinois. Mr. Meek immediately telegraphed Robert G. Ingersoll, Esq., of Peoria, to go to St. Louis and join him in his efforts. On arriving at St. Louis, Mr. Meek magnanimously offered the first place in the regiment to Ingersoll on account of his more extended acquaintance, he being commissioned Colonel and Meek, Lieutenant Colonel. Recruiting did not begin until some time in September, and the recruits began arriving at Camp Lyon not long after the departure of the Forty-seventh Infantry. This regiment was called the McKinstry Guards in honor of General McKinstry, Fremont's Adjutant General and Provost Marshal of St. Louis. It afterward became the Eleventh Regiment of Illinois Cavalry.

On account of the approaching winter and the necessity of supplying the regiment with horses, tents and full supply of camp equipage, the organization of the regiment did not proceed with the same degree of rapidity as that of the regiments of infantry. It was not until December 20, it was mustered into the service. It remained in camp until February 22d, when it marched to Benton Barracks, Missouri, arriving there on March 3d. It remained at Benton Barracks until March 25th, when it was ordered to the front and, in a very short time thereafter, was for the first time under fire at the memorable battle of Shiloh, on the 6th of April. According to Army regulations the regiment consisted of twelve companies instead of ten, as in the infantry regiments, with three Majors, and three battalion Adjutants. The regiment, when it left Peoria, was officered as follows:

Field and Staff Officers.

Colonel, Robert G. Ingersoll, Peoria; Lieutenant Colonel, Basil D. Meek, Woodford County; Majors, Sabin D. Puterbaugh, Pekin, David J. Waggoner, Lewistown, James H. Johnson, Peoria; Adjutant, David T. N. Sanderson,

Johnson. L. Cole

Peoria; Battalion Adjutants, George H. Chappell, Thomas Bracken, Lucien H. Kerr; Quartermaster, William Currie, Peoria; Surgeon, James McMaster, Dixon; First Assistant, Robert F. Stratton, Maquon.

In the latter part of August Captain David P. Grier and First Lieutenant Hugh Neill, of the Elmwood Guards, then stationed at Cape Girardeau, arrived home with instructions from General Fremont to raise a company of Sharp Shooters, to be attached to the Eighth Missouri Regiment, to which this company belonged. This company was rapidly raised to the number of one hundred and ten men, who, with Hugh Neill as Captain, left for St. Louis on the 17th day of September.

On November 15th a pleasing incident occurred in the visit of the Fourth Illinois Cavalry, Colonel T. Lyle Dickey commanding, to the Eleventh Regiment at Camp Lyon. Colonel Dickey was on his march southward, and having encamped at a point on the east side of the river in the vicinity of Peoria, brought his entire regiment to the city, on a visit to Colonel Ingersoll and his regiment, of whom there were then about seven hundred in camp. Having spent a pleasant afternoon at Camp Lyon, Colonel Dickey returned to his own camp in the evening.

In May, 1862, rumors that the enemy in great force was advancing on Washington, resulted in an urgent call upon the Governors to forward immediately to Washington all the volunteer and militia forces in their respective States. In response to this call five Illinois regiments, including the Sixty-seventh, were organized and mustered into the United States service for three months. These regiments relieved the veteran forces at Camp Butler and Camp Douglas, which were sent to the front. The Sixty-seventh Regiment, with Roswell M. Hough, of Chicago, as Colonel, and Eugene H. Oakley, of Peoria, as Lieutenant Colonel, was organized at Camp Douglas, Chicago, June 13, 1862, where it remained during its term of service doing guard duty.

As soon as these calls became known Charles K. Purple, of Peoria, son of the Hon. Norman H. Purple, organized a company, consisting mostly of citizens of Peoria County, which were recruited in the latter part of May and the beginning of June. This company was mustered in with the Sixty-seventh Regiment at Camp Douglas, and remained in service until the 6th day of October, 1862, when it was mustered out.

A company was also formed at Canton under command of William H. Frites, as Captain, of which a number of Peorians became members, and remained in service until the 27th day of September.

The crisis of the war seemed now to have arrived. The Union armies had been successful in capturing several strong positions. But every Union success only called for more men to hold the territory gained, while it enabled the rebels to concentrate their troops at other strong points, threatening the safety of the Capital itself. In this crisis seventeen Governors of loyal States, together with the President of the Military Board of Kentucky, addressed a note to the President advising him to call for such additional forces, and to take such additional measures, as might be necessary in his judgment to put down the rebellion. The President, having already issued his call for 300,000 additional troops, now increased it to 600,000 to be enforced by draft, unless within a certain number of days the quotas of the several States should be filled by volunteers. The effect of these calls was quite equal to that produced by the first call in April of the preceding year. The time had now come when the industrial classes must take up arms, either voluntarily or by compulsion.

In the morning papers of July 24th appeared a call signed by many of the citizens for a war meeting at the Court House that night. The Court House was so crowded the meeting had to be adjourned to the open air, when E. C. Ingersoll made a great speech, urging the immediate filling up of the quotas from this State (there having as yet been no general enrollment, nor any assignment of quotas by counties, townships, cities or wards). A resolution was passed calling for a special meeting of the Board of Supervisors and the appropriation of $15,000 for the support of the families of present and future volunteers, and $10,000 for bounties for enlistments. A committee of nineteen was appointed to visit every township in the county to urge upon the Supervisors to vote for these appropriations. Meetings were appointed to be held simultaneously on July 30 in every township, but when that night came the meeting appointed for Peoria had to be adjourned until another night because the good speakers were all in the country. Good work was however, being done in a private way. By the 20th the sum of $1,900 had been raised by private subscriptions to encourage volunteering, and by August 1st a new camp ground had been selected and was being put in readiness for the new recruits. This was named "Camp Peoria."

On Saturday, August 3d, a meeting was held at the Court House addressed by Henry Grove, E. C. Ingersoll and Washington Cockle, at which time a resolution was passed instructing the Supervisors of Peoria Township to vote for the appropriations asked at the previous meeting. On the 5th the Board met and voted the appropriations and promised more when needed.

On the 6th the County Clerk gave notice to the Assessors of the townships to file their lists of persons liable to do military duty within ten days from that date. At that time there were eleven recruiting officers in the city, and volunteering was going on at a lively rate. But a few days were given to fill up the quota before drafting should begin. Within the time specified, however, the quotas were filled and the county escaped the draft.

It was afterward ascertained that, up to that time, under all calls made, the quotas of Peoria County were 1,721 men, all of whom had been furnished.

Under these calls a rendezvous was appointed at Peoria, where several regiments in order took up their quarters. The first to arrive occupied the County Fair Grounds (Camp Lyon); the others occupied the prairie in the northeast quarter of the city.

The regiments brought together at Peoria at that time were the following:

The Seventy-seventh. Although not mustered into the service as early as some of the other regiments, the recruits for the Seventy-seventh began to arrive early in August. There was a spirited contest between the friends of Charles Ballance, Esq., and Captain David P. Grier, as to which of them should be Colonel. Mr. Ballance finally succeeded in getting the commission, but after holding it a short time resigned, and Grier was Colonel when the regiment left Peoria. This was one of the Peoria regiments. It was fully organized and mustered into the United States service on the 3d day of September, 1862. It remained in camp until October 4th, at which time it proceeded to Covington, Kentucky, and reported to Major General Gordon Granger, commanding the army of Kentucky, who assigned it to duty in the division commanded by General A. J. Smith. At the time of its leaving Peoria it was officered as follows:

Field and Staff Officers.

Colonel, David P. Grier, Peoria; Lieutenant Colonel, Lysander R. Webb, Peoria; Major, Memoir V. Hotchkiss, Peoria; Adjutant, John Hough, Peoria; Quartermaster, David McKinney, Peoria; Surgeon, Charles Winnie, Peoria; First Assistant Surgeon, James M. Cowen, Magnolia; Second Assistant Surgeon, John Stover, Minonk; Chaplain, Rev. William G. Pierce, of the Congregational Church, Elmwood.

The Eighty-fifth was considered a Mason County regiment. It was the first on the ground at Peoria, and took up its quarters at Camp Lyon. It was organized and sworn into the service of the United States on the 27th of August with the following field and staff officers:

Field and Staff Officers.

Colonel, Robert S. Moore, Havana; Lieutenant Colonel, Caleb J. Dilworth, Havana; Major, Samuel P. Cummings, Astoria; Adjutant, John B. Wright, Havana; Quartermaster, Samuel P. Wright, Havana; Surgeon, Joseph P. Walker, Mason City; First Assistant Surgeon, Phil. L. Diffenbecker, Havana; Second Assistant Surgeon, James C. Patterson, Mason City; Chaplain, Rev. Joseph F. Barwick, Havana.

The Eighty-sixth Regiment was considered a Peoria regiment, and was one of the earliest on the ground. It was organized and mustered into the service of the United States by Captain R. C. Ewing on the 27th day of August, 1862, at Camp Lyon. At the time of its leaving Peoria it was organized as follows:

Field and Staff Officers.

Colonel, David D. Irons, Peoria; Lieutenant Colonel, David W. Magee, Peoria; Major, James S. Bean, Trivoli; Adjutant, James E. Prescott, Peoria; Quartermaster, Charles H. Dean, Peoria; Surgeon, Massena M. Hooton, Peoria; First Assistant Surgeon, John Gregory, Farmington; Second Assistant Surgeon, Israel J. Guth, Peoria; Chaplain, Rev. George W. Brown.

The Eighty-fifth and Eighty-sixth Regiments left Peoria on Sunday, the 7th day of September, on a train of cars propelled by four powerful engines, and were hurried to the front at Louisville, Kentucky, where they remained until the 1st of October. They then entered the field of active service, and, on the 8th of that month, were both engaged with the enemy in the bloody battle of Perryville.

The One Hundred and Second Regiment was organized at Knoxville in August by the venerable ex-Lieutenant Governor William McMurtry, and was mustered into the service of the United States on September 1st and 2d. On September 22d it was moved to Peoria, where it took up its quarters in Camp Lyon, lately evacuated by the Eighty-fifth and Eighty-sixth. It remained in camp at Peoria until October 1st, when it was moved to Louisville, Kentucky, where it immediately took the field of active operations. At the time of leaving Peoria it was organized as follows:

Field and Staff Officers.

Colonel, William McMurtry, Henderson; Lieutenant Colonel, Franklin C. Smith, Oneida; Major, James M. Mannon, Aledo; Adjutant, John W. Pittman, Galesburg; Quartermaster, Francis H. Ruger, Galesburg; Surgeon, David B. Rice, Monmouth; First Assistant Surgeon, William Hamilton, Oneida; Chaplain, Rev. Amos K. Tullis, Hendersonville.

The One Hundred and Third Regiment was raised wholly in Fulton County. On the 6th of September nine companies arrived at Peoria and went into camp and organized the regiment. Finding there were enough extra men in the companies already in camp, a tenth company was formed, thus completing the regiment, which was mustered into the service of the United States on the 2d day of October.

On the 31st day of October they left camp and went to Cairo, where they took boat for Columbus, Kentucky, and were there placed on the cars and arrived at Bolivar, Tennessee, in fifty-two hours from Peoria. Amos C. Babeock was at first elected Colonel, and Parley Stearns Lieutenant Colonel, but they having resigned, the regiment when it left Peoria was officered as follows:

Field and Staff Officers.

Colonel, William A. Dickerman, Liverpool; Lieutenant Colonel, George W. Wright, Lewistown; Major, Asias Willison, Lewistown; Adjutant, Samuel S. Tipton, Lewistown; Quartermaster, William Mellor, Vermont; Surgeon, Richard Morris, Ellisville; First Assistant Surgeon, Sidney S. Buck, Fairview; Second Assistant Surgeon, James W. Van Brunt, Bernadotte; Chaplain, Rev. William S. Peterson, Canton.

The One Hundred and Eighth Regiment was organized at Peoria, and mustered into the service of the United States on the 28th day of August, 1862. It remained in camp at Peoria until the 9th day of October, when it proceeded by rail to Covington, Kentucky, and on its arrival there reported to Major General Gordon Granger, and was assigned to the First Brigade of the Third Division, Army of Kentucky. Having been equipped for field service, it marched with its division from Covington on the 17th day of October to Nicholasville, Kentucky, where it went into camp on the 1st day of November. When it left Peoria it was organized as follows:

Field and Staff Officers.

Colonel, John Warner, Peoria; Lieutenant Colonel, Charles Turner, Pekin; Major, Reuben L. Sidwell, Metamora; Adjutant, Benjamin F. Foster, Peoria; Quartermaster, George W. Raney, Peoria; Surgeon, John Cary, Peoria; First Assistant Surgeon, Richard A. Conover, Eureka; Chaplain, Rev. George W. Gue.

The One Hundred and Twelfth Regiment was recruited principally in Stark and Henry Counties. It was mustered into the service of the United States at Peoria on the 20th and 22d days of September, 1862. It left Peoria on the 8th day of October by rail, and arrived at Cincinnati about midnight on the 10th, when it immediately crossed the Ohio River and reported to Major General Gordon Granger. It was there brigaded with the Thirty-third Indiana, and Seventy-seventh, Ninety-seventh and One Hundred and Eighth Illinois. At the time of its leaving Peoria it was organized as follows:

Field and Staff Officers.

Colonel, Thomas J. Henderson, Toulon, Stark County; Lieutenant Colonel, Emory S. Bond, Cambridge, Henry County; Major, Joseph M. Hosford, Geneseo, Henry County; Adjutant, Henry W. Wells, Cambridge, Henry County; Quartermaster, George C. Alden, Annawan, Henry County; Surgeon, John W. Spalding, Galesburg; First Assistant Surgeon, Luther S. Milliken, Wyoming; Chaplain, Rev. Roswell N. Henderson.

From the foregoing it will be observed that several regiments were in camp at Peoria at the same time. Colonel John Bryner of the Forty-seventh Regiment, having resigned his commission early in September, was soon thereafter appointed commandant of the post at Peoria. Under his experienced management the camp soon assumed all the regularity of a well organized army. During this period daily dress parades of the entire command were had at five o'clock in the afternoon, at which hour many people from Peoria, as well as from the surrounding country, would visit the camp. In fact, the camp was visited daily by many hundreds of people from the surrounding country, bringing to their friends supplies of delicacies and substantial food not to be found on the menu of army rations. Thus were the days and weeks pleasantly spent in camp while the soldiers were being drilled, clothed and equipped for the service.

On the 27th day of September the people of Peoria witnessed the greatest military display which has ever occurred in the history of the county. On that day there was a grand review under command of Colonel Bryner of the five regiments (the Seventy-seventh, One Hundred and Second, One Hundred and Third, One Hundred and Eighth and One Hundred and Twelfth), then at Camp Peoria. Thousands of spectators from Peoria and the surrounding country witnessed the scene, and all felt a just pride in the appearance, as well as the advanced state of discipline of the men.

On the day of the departure of the Seventy-seventh Regiment one of the largest gatherings of people, from the country as well as from the city, that ever assembled in Peoria on any similar occasion lined the streets. But the train which had transported the One Hundred and Second Regiment to Cincinnati, a few days before, and which was expected to take the Seventy-seventh, had been impressed into the service of the Government for the movement of other regiments from Springfield, and the Seventy-seventh was loaded into twenty-four box cars seated with new pine boards, with the soft side uppermost, and straw for their bedding. One coach only was supplied for the invalids and officers, but it is to the credit of the latter that most of them shared the less comfortable accommodations with the privates. The train reached Logansport on Sunday morning, the 5th, and Cincinnati at noon of the following day. The boys had learned by this time that soldiering was not to be boy's play. Other regiments fared about equally with them.

The next week was one of sadness for Peoria. On the same day the Seventy-seventh left Peoria the bloody battle of Corinth was fought, in which the Forty-seventh sustained heavy loss, Colonel William A. Thrush being one of the number killed. On the 8th and 9th the equally bloody battle of Perryville was fought, in which the Eighty-fifth and Eighty-sixth took part, the latter also suffering severe loss. Word had also been received that seven companies of the Eleventh Cavalry had been taken prisoners.

On Thursday, the 9th, the One Hundred and Twelfth Regiment was moved from Camp Peoria through a beating rain, and as the men came to a flag suspended across the street they insisted on saluting it, although the rain was pouring in torrents. Being massed on the street, they uncovered and gave three lusty cheers for the Star Spangled Banner, and then moved on to the depot, where they embarked and were soon under way to the front.

On Saturday evening, the 11th of October, a meeting of citizens was held at the Court House to arrange for the funeral of Colonel Thrush. Resolutions were passed and a committee of arrangements appointed to act with other similar committees, the same being composed of the following well known citizens: Henry I. Rugg, Thomas G. McCulloch, Alexander G. Tyng, Hon. Elihu N. Powell, P. R. K. Brotherson, Dr. Benjamin F. Miles, James M. Cunningham, Hon. Marion Williamson, Hon. Washington Cogle, Mark M. Aiken, Jonathan K. Cooper and William A. Herron.

The funeral services took place at the Second Presbyterian Church on Sunday, October 19th, at which time a great concourse of people were present. The services were conducted in the open air by Rev. John S. McCulloch, pastor of the United Presbyterian Church, of which the family of Colonel Thrush were members. The coffin was draped in the American flag and covered with wreaths of flowers. At the conclusion of the religious services a procession was formed consisting of the One Hundred and Third Regiment of Infantry (the only one then in camp), the members of the National Blues, the members of his own regiment (the Forty-seventh) then in the city, the Master Masons, Knights Templar (of which organizations Colonel Thrush had been a member, who also furnished the Guard of Honor), all of which were followed by a long line of private conveyances, the whole procession being over one mile in length. At the cemetery the usual ceremony of the Knights Templar was observed, and all that was mortal of Colonel William A. Thrush was consigned to the tomb.

While the five regiments already named were being drilled and equipped, several movements were set on foot looking to the organization of at least three regiments of cavalry to be rendezvoused at Peoria. These, however, were finally consolidated into one under the command of Colonel Horace Capron.

The Fourteenth Regiment of Cavalry was recruited and organized in the fall and winter of

Roderick M. Cole

1862, with headquarters at Peoria. On January 7, 1863, the first and second battalions were mustered into the service of the United States, and on February 6th the third battalion. During the months of February and March it received its horses and equipments, and was placed in thorough discipline. March 28th it started for the front. April 17th it arrived at Glasgow, Kentucky, where it was brigaded and immediately entered upon active field duties. It drew its recruits from all parts of the State. At the time of leaving Peoria it was organized as follows:

Field and Staff Officers.

Colonel, Horace Capron, Peoria County; Lieutenant Colonel, David P. Jenkins; Major, Francis M. Davidson; Adjutant, Henry W. Carpenter; Quartermaster, Samuel F. True; Surgeon, Preston H. Bailhache, Springfield; First Assistant Surgeon, George A. Wilson, Peoria; Chaplain, Rev. Samuel Chase, Jubilee.

During the summer and early fall months, in anticipation of a draft, an enumeration had been made of those liable to perform military service, with the following result in Peoria County:

No further calls were made upon Peoria County, except for filling up regiments already in the field, until 1864.

The One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Regiment. Early in the spring of 1864 the Governors of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, believing that the rebellion was nearing its close, and desiring to aid the Government in every way possible, tendered to the President a volunteer force of eighty-five thousand men for one hundred days to relieve the veteran soldiers from guard duty at our forts, arsenals and elsewhere. Of this number, Illinois furnished thirteen regiments and two battalions, the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth being one of them. The regiment was raised at Peoria and was mustered into the service of the United States on the 1st day of June, 1864, and on the 8th of June, it moved to St. Louis by steamboat, arriving there on the 10th; thence it moved to Columbus, Kentucky, where it remained about a week, and was then moved to Cairo as a garrison for that place.

With commendable patriotism this regiment remained on duty for nearly two months after its time had expired, for which it received the thanks of the President in a personal letter to its commander. It was mustered out at Peoria on the 25th day of October, 1864. When leaving Peoria it was organized as follows:

Field and Staff Officers.

Colonel, Peter Davidson, Peoria (formerly of the Peoria Battery); Lieutenant Colonel, Horace H. Wilsie, Galesburg; Major, Solomon Z. Roth, Lamoille; Adjutant, David T. N. Sanderson, Peoria; Quartermaster, John Bryner, Peoria; Surgeon, Charles H. Latimer, Peoria; First Assistant Surgeon, Allen M. Pierce, Tremont; Second Assistant Surgeon, Joseph Shugart; Chaplain, Rev. Joseph T. Cook.

Another call for volunteers was made July 18, 1864, under which the One Hundred and Forty-Sixth Regiment, under Colonel Henry H. Dean, of Rockford, was organized at Camp Butler, September 18th, for one year. In Company G, of this regiment, Captain Ephraim F. Molton, of Pavillion, about twenty men from Peoria, and in Company I, Captain George W. Baker, of Washington, about forty men from Peoria enlisted. These served until the close of the war, doing principally guard duty.

Another call for volunteers for the period of one year was made December 10, 1864. The term of service of the One Hundred Day men having then expired, many of them re-enlisted under the new call. In the One Hundred and Forty-eighth Infantry, Colonel Horace H. Wilsie, of Galesburg; Company C, Captain Benjamin F. Burnett, Tremont; Company F, Captain Frank A. Thomas, of Galesburg, and Company G, Captain Robert G. Walsh, Camp Point, were a considerable number of men from Peoria. In the One Hundred and Fifty-first Infantry, Colonel French B. Woodside, Quincy; Lieutenant Colonel Herman W. Snow, of Peoria, about forty men from Peoria enlisted in Company A, Captain Harmon Andrews, of Sparland, and about thirty in Company E, Captain Herman W. Snow, of Peoria. Upon the organization of the regiment, which took place at Quincy on the 23d of February, 1865, Captain Snow was promoted to the office of Lieutenant Colonel. Both these regiments were sent forward to Chattanooga, where they continued to perform active service until the close of the war.

In the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois Infantry, Colonel Gustavus A. Smith, of Decatur, Company A, Captain Jacob B. Yeagley, of Akron, Peoria County, a few men, and in Company G, Captain Edmund L. Wells, about forty men from Peoria County, were enlisted. The regiment was organized at Camp Butler, February 28, 1865, for one year. It performed service in Tennessee in guarding railroads until the close of the war.

A considerable number of Peorians are found scattered through other regiments, but the foregoing are believed to be all the regularly organized bodies from Peoria County.

The services rendered the Government by Peoria County, as they appear from the Adjutant General's Report (Revised), foot up as follows:

Population in 1860	36,475
Revised enrollment, January, 1865	7,393
Quota of 1861	1,023
Quota of 1862	698
Quota on Call of 700,000 Feb. 1 and March 14, 1864	1,405
Quota on Call of 600,000 July 18, 1864	1,222
Total Quotas to Dec. 31, 1864.....	4,348
Total Credits to Dec. 31, 1864.....	4,143
Deficit	205
Quota, 1865, to Dec. 31	845
Aggregate to be raised in 1865.....	1,050
Credits to Dec. 31, 1865	764
Total Deficit	286
Total Quotas under all calls.....	5,193

Total Credits under all calls.....	4,907
Total Deficit	286

Recruiting was stopped before the companies had all been filled. Had it continued a short time the quota from Peoria County would have been entirely made up. Every call made upon it by the Government was filled by volunteering.

A close inspection of the reports, however, will show that, up to the time of the last calls, the county was very far in advance of the requirements of the Government. It will be seen that, of its total credits of 4,907 men, only 764 were furnished during the year 1865, leaving a balance of 4,163 furnished before January 1st of that year. But out of that number a very few enlisted during the year 1864, the only men furnished during that year being those in the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth regiment of One Hundred Day men, and those who enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-sixth One Year Men. It follows, therefore, that Peoria County, as well as other counties of the State, had, under the calls of 1862, furnished enough three-year men to practically clear it of all calls made in 1864 except the last.

The contributions in money standing to the credit of the County of Peoria, the City of Peoria and the several townships in Peoria County, in the Adjutant General's office, in aid of the suppression of the rebellion are as follows:

	BOUNTIES.	GENERAL EXPENSE.	SOLDIERS FAMILIES.

This vast sum does not cover the many thousands of dollars in value of the contributions made through the Christian and Sanitary Commissions, those made through private hands, nor the moneys paid for bounties to substitutes, those made to clear townships and wards from drafts, nor those paid for transportation to and from camps, hospitals and battle-fields in aid of sick and wounded soldiers, and for the burial of the dead. For all such purposes money flowed from the purses of our citizens as freely as streams of water.

Peoria County did its whole duty towards the suppression of the Great Rebellion, and in restoring the supremacy of the Constitution and laws of the Union over every foot of the National domain.

CHAPTER XXVII.

AUXILIARY WORK OF LADIES AID SOCIETIES AND OF THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

At the time of the outbreak of the war there was located on the northeasterly side of Main street, at the foot of the bluff, a small water-cure establishment under the proprietorship of Dr. Mortimer Nevins, but operated principally by women. On the 20th day of April, 1861, just two weeks after the beginning of the war, there appeared in the public press of the city a call for a meeting of women to be held there on the 30th of the same month to form themselves into a company of nurses to attend upon the sick and wounded soldiers. The next day after the publication of this call a meeting of other ladies was held at Rouse's Hall to make arrangements for preparing bandages, lint and shirts for the use of the soldiers. Mrs. Julia P. Bourland and Mrs. Erastus D. Hardin were made president and secretary, a committee was selected to procure material, and the next meeting was appointed to be held at the house of Mrs. Matthew Griswold (now the Cosmopolitan) on Madison avenue, on Tuesday, the 30th, the same day as that appointed for the meeting at the Water Cure. There was no rivalry between these two organizations, the one being intended to supply a corps of nurses, the other for the furnishing of supplies for the hospital service, of which the Government then had a very meager supply, considering the necessities of the times.

At this writing it does not appear possible to trace with any degree of minuteness the operations carried on by these patriotic ladies during the first year of the war, nor to show any direct connection between them and the more comprehensive work inaugurated at a later date, and carried forward through the agency of more perfect organizations.

In addition to the efforts put forth in Peoria, we find the ladies of Elmwood engaged in the summer time in the laudable work of making havelocks to shield the men from the intense rays of the southern sun, and in the winter time the ladies of Peoria, in response to a call of the Ladies' Aid Society of Palmyra, Missouri, engaged in the equally laudable work of making mittens to protect their hands from the cold. So the work went on during the early stages of the war, the women lending a helping hand wherever they could find a place to do so.

It is now an admitted fact that all the great organized sanitary movements of the war had their origin with the women of New York City. While it is true that, at earlier dates, local organizations had been formed in other cities, yet it was at a great meeting, held at Cooper Institute on the 6th day of May, 1861, that the "Women's Central Association for Relief" was organized for the purpose of concentrating the scattered efforts of the women of the country upon the one common object of furnishing comforts, stores and nurses, in aid of the medical staff. These humane efforts were met, not only with cold indifference, but with positive opposition by the military authorities, and there seemed to be an impassable barrier interposed between their friends at home and these brave defenders of their country, whose health or very lives might depend upon the kind ministrations of loved ones, who were not only willing but anxious to contribute to their well-being.

But the women were not the only ones to see the necessity of better sanitary measures in the army than those at its command. "The Physicians and Surgeons of the Hospitals of New York" and "The New York Medical Association for Furnishing Hospital Supplies" had held several meetings, and were equally anxious to contribute what they could to the accomplishment of similar purposes, but the doors seemed barred to them also. A delegation representing these three powerful associations was dispatched to Washington, and, after a hot contest of nearly a month's duration, they so impressed upon the authorities, not only their sincerity of purpose, but the feasibility of their plan of operations that, on the 9th day of June, 1861, the Secretary of War issued an order appointing a commission consisting of distinguished ministers of the gospel, physicians, army officers and laymen, to be styled "A Commission of Inquiry and Advice in Respect to the Sanitary Interests of the United States Forces." This was the origin of the great "United States Sanitary Commission." Through its instrumentality those who contributed of their free will to the alleviation of the sufferings of the sick and wounded and to their restoration to health, were made sure their gifts would reach the desired end, and so the whole people were encouraged to increase their benefactions.

In the course of a few months this great Commission had extended its operations throughout the entire country east of the Mississippi River, by establishing agencies for the receipt and distribution of stores in many principal cities. Its agents for the receipt of contributions were found in every town, while for their distribution its agents were to be found in every camp, on every transport, in every march, on every battle-field and in every hospital. It held out one hand towards the people for the reception of their gifts, and with the other distributed them to those in need.

In consequence of active military operations in Missouri, the "Western Sanitary Commission," which had been appointed, September 10, 1861, by General Halleck, had so far completed its arrangements to supply the needs in that vicinity, that it chose to retain its form of organization, and continued to act as an independent body throughout the war. It so happened that a portion of the gifts of Peoria reached their destination through the hands of the one, and other portions through the hands of the other organization, according to their respective facilities for reaching their desired destination.

The work of the Sanitary Commission, however, grand as it was, had reference only to the physical well-being of the soldiers, while their religious interests were left to other hands. The Young Men's Christian Associations of the country, early in the war, perceiving that the usual perfunctory ministrations of one chaplain to a regiment were wholly inadequate to supply the religious needs of the soldiers, held a convention of chosen delegates at New York City on November 16, 1861, and organized the United States Christian Commission, having in view the promotion of the spiritual and temporal welfare of the officers and men in the army and navy, in co-operation with chaplains and others. Immediately after its appointment the Commission met in Washington and organized by choosing George H. Stuart, a wealthy philanthropist of Philadelphia, as Chairman, and Hon. Benjamin F. Maniere, of New York, Secretary and Treasurer, who, together with Rt. Rev. E. S. James, D. D., of New York, Rev. Benjamin C. Cutler, D. D., of Brooklyn, and Charles Demond, Esq., of Boston, constituted the Executive Committee. A plan of operations was at once arranged, to which the approbation of the President, the Secretaries of War and the Navy, and the General in command was secured, and the work entered upon at once.

The full extent of the needs of the men in the army did not impress itself upon the minds of the people of Peoria at as early a date as in some other places. The great battles in the East in the summer of 1861, and those in Missouri during the same season, had aroused the people of the East, and likewise those in St. Louis, to the necessities of the situation, and had led to the organization of the Sanitary Commission, and the Christian Commission as well, in those sections. But it was not until the great movements of the army in February, 1862, that the people of Peoria were awakened to the full extent of the necessities of the situation.

Prior to February, 1862, there had been in existence in Peoria a society of women called the "Ladies' Assistance Society," designed chiefly for the relief of the poor. The Young Men's Christian Association also had an organization for religious work, but as yet it does not seem to have become affiliated with the Christian Commission. On February 2, 1862, it became re-organized as a corporation, with William Reynolds as President, and through it a new impulse was given to the work of the Association in the city, but as yet no work seems to have been undertaken for the soldiers.

Fort Donelson was captured by General Grant on February 16, 1862, after a hard fought battle, in which many Peorians were engaged. An attempt was made by several of our citizens to reach the scene of the conflict, but they were intercepted at Cairo with the announcement from the military authorities that all the supplies, nurses and surgeons necessary for the occasion had already arrived. The only one to obtain a pass to the front was James T. Rogers, who had authority to act for the Sanitary Commission as their agent to collect supplies at Peoria. On the 27th of February the wounded who were able to be sent home began to arrive, and great was their praise of Mr. Rogers for his indefatigable exertions in their behalf upon the field of battle, where many had lain for a long time with their wounds undressed.

On Tuesday, the 4th day of March, at the invitation of the Ladies' Assistance Society for all who desired to aid in the preparation of hospital comforts for the wounded soldiers, a meeting of ladies was held at the house of Mrs. Alfred G. Curtin, corner of Main and Madison streets, at which time and place was formed the "Ladies' Soldiers' Aid Society of Peoria," to meet every Thursday afternoon as long as aid should be required. Contributions from gentlemen in money and dry-goods to be sent to the same place were solicited. On March 6th a call signed by Mrs. Caroline T. Cogle, Secretary, was published for a meeting to be held the same afternoon in the room over A. P. Bartlett's store, where work would be ready and where all ladies were most earnestly requested to meet and assist in the good cause, and where donations in money and dry-goods from gentlemen would be gratefully received. As the necessities were urgent, they did not wait for the time for the next regular meeting, but on Tuesday, the 11th, a call signed by Mrs. Margaret Weis, Mrs. Nancy Culbertson and Mrs. Cogle was published for a meeting the same afternoon, at the same place, as they were anxious to forward a box of supplies during the week. Contributions of jellies and other delicacies for the sick, and old linen or cotton table cloths, sheets and worn garments were called for. No further account has been discovered of this first contribution of the Peoria Ladies' Aid Society to the sanitary work of the army. That it was forwarded according to their expressed intention there can scarcely be a doubt. One week later it was announced that there were 10,000 sick and wounded soldiers at Paducah, and that sheets, towels and handkerchiefs were needed, also butter, ale and porter, but that the noble ladies of the loyal States had supplied their principal wants. The fact was that the ladies of Cincinnati had by their promptness of action anticipated all others and sent them hospital supplies in abundance. On the 20th of March two large boxes were made up by the Peoria ladies, the contents of which were as follows:

Box No. 1—20 cotton sheets, 60 pillow cases, 12 linen handkerchiefs, 7 flannel shirts, 3 cotton flannel shirts, 30 cotton shirts, 11 second hand shirts, 15 pairs cotton drawers, 87 crash towels, 3 bed ticks, 23 pillow ticks, 3 pairs of woolen socks, 7 bundles cotton rags, 6 bundles linen rags, 1 bundle lint, compresses and bandages, 5 packages magazines and papers, 5 feather pillows, 1 can tomatoes, 1 can peaches, 1 can cherries.

Box No. 2—14 tumblers jelly, 2 cups jelly, 2 bowls jelly, 4 jars jelly, 1 jar pickles, 1 bottle peaches, 1 bottle blackberry jam, 2 bottles wine.

These boxes were marked "From Peoria Sanitary Committee," care Messrs. Greely & Gale, St. Louis, and were shipped by express, free of charge, by Mr. William C. Boilvin agent, Peoria. From this it would appear that the Sanitary Commission then had an agency or committee in Peoria to receive and forward its supplies.

The great battle of Shiloh was fought on the 6th and 7th of April. On the 10th the Ladies' Aid Society was to meet, and calls were made for the usual supplies to be sent for a box to be prepared that day. But all such efforts were a mere pittance in comparison with the necessities that were now upon them. On the morning of the 9th a large meeting of gentlemen, called upon short notice, was held in the Court House to take measures to send a delegation of physicians and others to the battle-field to attend the wounded and to contribute to their relief and comfort in such other manner as, in the opinion of the meeting, might be thought advisable. E. G. Johnson, Esq., acted as Chairman, and Henry B. Hopkins, Esq., as Secretary. The first action was to telegraph General Halleck if civilians would be permitted within the lines. On motion of Jonathan K. Cooper, Esq., the Ladies' Aid Society was invited to co-operate, and that it be requested to place at the disposal of a committee, to be there appointed, the supplies that they had prepared for the hospital at St. Louis. A committee was appointed to wait upon the physicians, who in a short time reported that Drs. Nevins, Andrew, Evans, Guth, Hooton and Colburn were ready to go, and that others had expressed a willingness, but were prevented by the condition of their patients.

A committee of solicitation was appointed consisting of John J. Wead, John C. Grier, Elibu N. Powell, Charles Ballance, E. C. Ingersoll, Sidney Pulsifer, Hugh W. Reynolds, Washington Cogle, Luther Card and David McCulloch. Another committee consisting of G. W. Raney, W. W. O'Brien and Henry Grove was appointed to wait on Mayor Gardner T. Barker and request him to call a special meeting of the City Council to make an appropriation. That committee soon reported that the Mayor had consented, and had promised that, if the Council did not make the appropriation, he (the Mayor) would contribute out of his own pocket as largely as any other man in the city. An Executive Committee consisting of Elbridge G. Johnson, E. C. Ingersoll, Elihu N. Powell, Washington Cockle and Henry B. Hopkins was appointed to take charge of the contributions with discretionary power as to their use. The Ladies' Aid Society was requested to meet at 8 A. M. on the 10th instead of 2 P. M., and to bring their supplies at that hour. Speeches were made by E. G. Johnson and Henry Grove, the latter concluding his remarks with a donation of $50. A subscription was then opened and $400 pledged on the spot. Drs. Nevins, Eaton, Guth, Evans, Hooton and Colburn left on the 10th, accompanied by James T. Rogers, agent of the Sanitary Commission, and David D. Irons, his assistant, with $1,000 in cash, $500 of which had been contributed by the City Council, the balance by private individuals (the largest contributors declining to make their names public), all raised within twenty-four hours. They had also in charge twenty-seven boxes, shipped free by the United States express.

At this point it will be remembered that, upon receipt of the news of the battle, Governor Yates had provided transportation for the wounded of the Illinois regiments to points in this State. Upon arrival at Cairo, therefore, the Peoria delegation found the wounded from this section located at Cairo and Mound City, but supplies still needed. On Saturday, the 12th, a meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society was held, at which with their own hands they had made up one hundred sheets. On Tuesday, the 15th, another meeting was held and another box prepared. Their meetings now became frequent, and their hands were kept busily at work. On May 14th it was announced that Rev. Mr. Eliot, of St. Louis, had sent twelve pieces of cotton goods to Peoria to be made up into garments for the soldiers, of whom there were 5,000 in the hospitals in that city. Their rooms were thenceforward kept open daily.

About this time the Young Men's Christian Association of Peoria entered upon active work in connection with the army. The raising of troops in the summer of 1862 had brought several regiments to Peoria, among whom the Association at once began religious efforts. A soldiers' committee was appointed consisting of William Reynolds, its President, Alexander G. Tyng, George H. Melvaine, William Carpenter and David W. McWilliams to have the direction of the work, who at once visited the camps and made arrangements for holding nightly meetings, the officers lending them all the encouragement possible. There were then at Peoria the Eighty-sixth Regiment, Colonel Irons, stationed at the Old Fair Grounds, or Camp Lyon, the Seventy-seventh, Colonel Grier, the Eighty-fifth, Colonel Moore, and the One Hundred and Eighth, Colonel Warner, at Camp Peoria, near the Pattery. The first meeting was held at the camp of the Eighty-sixth and was attended by about two hundred persons, the next at Camp Peoria, which was also largely attended. Deeming it necessary to raise funds for the purchase of religious reading for the soldiers, a meeting was called for that purpose at the First Presbyterian Church on Sunday evening, August 17th, at which the sum of $185 was raised. The American Bible Society donated 4,000 testaments, and the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago 400 soldiers' hymn books. The meetings were continued nightly for two months, during which time the One Hundred and Second, the One Hundred and Third and the One Hundred and Twelfth Regiments came into camp, and meetings were held in each of them from time to time. Up to November 3d, when the committee made its first report, about sixty meetings had been held, $210 in cash had been collected, nearly all of which had been expended for tracts, hymn books and other reading matter, there having during that time been distributed 4,500 hymn books, 3,000 testaments and a large amount of tracts and other religious reading. This work among the soldiers encamped at Peoria was productive of much good. One of the secular papers, after enumerating the amount of work done, bore this testimony to its effectiveness: "This has been no sectarian movement, as nearly every church in this city has assisted in the religious aid of those about to go forth—perhaps to die—in defense of their beloved country, and it is gratifying to know so large a number of the soldiers have expressed their thanks at the great interest taken in their eternal as well as temporal welfare. Go where you will in this day of strife—in the tent—the hospital—or on the battle-field—where one is discovered prepared to meet his Maker, there also is found a true hero, if need be, ready to do or die a martyr for those he loves."

About this time also the Young Men's Christian Association became affiliated with the United States Christian Commission, their President, William Reynolds, having received a commission from that body. In the first report to the Christian Commission Mr. Reynolds, the President, bore testimony to the work of the Ladies' Aid Society in the following language: "We have a Ladies' Aid Society in this place that are, and have been for the last year and a half, actively engaged in sending supplies to our sick and wounded soldiers. They have now an agent in the South with a large amount of sanitary stores, etc., for the wounded in the last two battles."

Soon after sending in this report Mr. Reynolds, on the 2d of February, 1863, left for the front, visiting Memphis, and the army then before Vicksburg and on the Yazoo River, where he found the men in bad condition. After an absence of about a month he returned and made arrangements for a more protracted visit at a later date. On the 1st of February the Association had sent its City Missionary, Rev. Hiram Doane, to labor in the hospitals at Nashville, but the unwholesome air of that service proving deleterious to his health, he proceeded to Memphis and became Chaplain of the Forty-seventh Regiment, and remained with it until the 21st day of July, when he died at the United States Hospital at Vicksburg, a martyr to the cause he so much loved, and after having witnessed the glorious achievement of the army in the capture of that stronghold.

On March 31st Mr. Reynolds, accompanied by Rev. Sanford H. Smith, then in temporary charge of the Second Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Reynolds was a member, and accompanied also by Miss Mary Smith, left for the Army of the Mississippi. After laboring for a while in the hospitals of Memphis and among the soldiers around that city and at Fort Pickering, Mr. Reynolds, in company with Mr. A. K. Burrell, of the St. Louis Association, proceeded to Helena and Vicksburg, leaving Mr. Smith and Miss Smith at Memphis, where the latter accepted a position in the Union Hospital. In their second report the Peoria Committee bear testimony to the self-sacrificing devotion of the patriotic women in the following language: "When the history of this war is written, one of its most glorious pages will be the record of the self-denying devotion of these Christian women, who have left comfortable and, in many cases, luxurious homes for years of labor in Southern Hospitals."

From Helena Messrs. Reynolds and Burrell proceeded to Milliken's Bend, and thence with the army on its march to Grand Gulf and the rear of Vicksburg. In two weeks' time at this point they distributed about three tons of religious reading matter to the soldiers. Leaving Milliken's Bend on the 8th of May, they reached home on the 15th of that month. On the 10th of June the Association commissioned Rev. Mr. Jennison, of Michigan, to go to Vicksburg, where he was at the time of the surrender and where he remained until the latter part of July, when stricken down by disease he was obliged to return home. At the same time Rev. Mr. Cornelison, of Illinois, was commissioned to labor in the hospitals at Memphis, from which place, after a service of seven weeks, he, too, was obliged to return.

During this year (1863) the Army Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, which was then in full affiliation with the United States Christian Commission, consisted of Alexander G. Tyng, George H. Mellvaine, William Reynolds, Rev. S. Wycoff, and Thomas G. McCulloh.

During this year also the work of the women of Peoria assumed a new phase.

"On June 3d, 1863, in Rouse's Hall at a meeting presided over by Hon. H. H. Leavitt, of the Supreme Court of Ohio, and a delegate to the Presbyterian General Assembly in session in this city, the loyal women of Peoria organized themselves into a society bearing the name of The Woman's National League, the objects and aims of which are indicated by the following pledge which the members were required to sign:

THE PLEDGE.

"We, the undersigned women of Peoria, believing that in this hour of national peril to our country, every influence, moral as well as military, should be brought to bear in the great struggle for National existence against a wicked rebellion; and that, while our fathers, husbands, sons, and brothers are giving their treasure and their blood, it is our duty to contribute the influence which God has given us in our social sphere to the same holy cause; and that, in this solemn crisis, loyalty to our country is bound to be outspoken, even in the case of woman, as true loyalty to our God:

"We, therefore, do constitute ourselves an association to be known as 'The Woman's National League of Peoria,' and do pledge our unconditional adhesion to our National Government in its struggle against the present rebellion, engaging to assist it by whatever means may be in our power, in the maintenance of our National Union, and of the integrity of our National domain.

"To this end we further resolve and pledge ourselves to encourage and sustain our brave soldiers, by deeds of kindness and by words of cheer, to use every fitting opportunity of expressing our unflinching determination to stand by the 'dear old flag,' and to honor those who fight in its defense, until the day of its sure and certain triumph; and to prove, in every way we can, that we consider loyalty to our country a part of our allegiance to our God."

To this constitution about three hundred ladies subscribed their names, and continued to work under it during the war and until their services were no longer needed.

The Army Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association for the year 1864, consisted of Alexander G. Tyng, Chairman; George H. McIlvaine, Corresponding Secretary; Theodore Higbie, Treasurer; William Reynolds, President of the Young Men's Christian Association; Thomas G. McCulloh, Rev. William E. McLaren (now Bishop of Chicago Diocese) and Rev. S. Wycoff. Their work for that year is best told in their own words.

"About the 1st of June, Chaplain McCabe, and Mr. William Reynolds, of our Committee, commenced canvassing the district, and in two months raised over forty thousand dollars. Their first meeting was held at Galesburg, where one thousand eight hundred and twenty-one dollars were raised. Next Peoria was visited, and in two meetings two thousand five hundred dollars were given. Bloomington gave one thousand five hundred and fifty dollars; Springfield, one thousand six hundred dollars; and Jacksonville, two thousand dollars. It was at the last place that these gentlemen met Mr. Jacob Strawn, the giant farmer of the West, who, when the cause was presented to him, at once handed them a check for five hundred dollars, saying that he would make his contribution ten thousand dollars, instead of five hundred, if the farmers of Morgan County would give a like sum. This proposition was at once accepted by Rev. Mr. McCabe and Mr. Reynolds, and, on the 6th of July, they commenced the canvass of the county. They were much assisted in this work by M. P. Ayers, Esq., banker of Jacksonville, who made all the appointments, and assisted at the meetings. In nine days they held eleven meetings, in country school-houses, churches, and groves, and raised ten thousand seven hundred dollars; which, with Mr. Strawn's ten thousand dollars, and two thousand dollars collected in Jacksonville, made twenty-two thousand seven hundred dollars, given by Morgan County, Illinois, to the Christian Commission.

"The people of Central Illinois are awake to the best interests of our soldiers, and believe our noble Commission the best channel through which to help them. Peoria, with St. Louis, Chicago, and Milwaukee, compose the Western Department, and have assigned to them, as their field of labor, 'The Army of the Mississippi.' Our own branch has, however, recently had for its special care the station of Cairo, the gate of the Western Army. During the last year the Chicago Committee erected there a building suitable to the wants and needs of the work, and we intend to keep from three to five delegates at work there all the time, looking after the spiritual and temporal wants of the thousands that pass and re-pass constantly. We have also given attention to the navy on our Western rivers, which has been much neglected, and have now completed arrangements by which we are enabled to send a package of books and papers, semi-monthly, to every one of the fifty-nine vessels composing the Mississippi squadron. We found Acting Rear Admiral Lee a warm friend of the Commission, and received from him all the assurance we need.

"The funds intrusted to our hands by the friends of our soldiers have been, to the best of our ability, faithfully applied to the objects for which they were given, and many a brave man, in his hours of want and pain, has blessed us and those who gave us the means to aid him. Our work has been carried on with the most rigid economy at all consistent with the magnitude of the work. We pay no office salaries, and our entire expense has been less than two per cent. on amount of cash and cash value of stores collected.

"During the past year we have received eight hundred and eighty-nine boxes, barrels and kegs. These stores have been sent to Cairo, Memphis, Vicksburg, New Orleans, and Nashville, and many thankful acknowledgments have been received.

"Finding that many soldiers, well watched over by the Christian Commission while in the hospitals, often suffer greatly for proper food and care while traveling home on furlough to recruit, as separated from their regiments they are generally without money, we adopted the following plan: Arrangements have been made with all the dining stations to take tickets furnished by this Branch in full payment of meals. A very cordial and hearty response has been given by all the proprietors, and very liberal discounts made. As these sick and wounded men all pass through Cairo, our delegates will visit every boat and train, and every sick soldier, without money, will be furnished tickets for the necessary meals on his journey. These tickets will be redeemed at the end of each month. Much suffering will thus be relieved, and each soldier will return with grateful recollections of the Christian Commission."

From the reports sent in to the central organization, the work of the Peoria Committee for 1862 may be summarized as follows: Men in home work, 16; meetings held for soldiers, 80; public meetings, 2; copies of Bibles and Testaments distributed, 4,000; pages of books, tracts, etc., 30,000; hymn books, 5,000; papers, $5,000; magazines, 1,000; cash expended by Committee, $270.

For the year 1863, cash received, $1,654.15; cash expended, $881.35; boxes shipped, 154; donated, $158; value of same, $3,100; delegates sent, 6; copies of scripture distributed, 12,000; Hymn and Psalm books, 11,500.

For the year 1864, cash received, $49,373.12; number of boxes and packages donated, 822; value of same, $16,672; boxes distributed, 889; cash remitted to central office, $22,835; cash paid for stores distributed, $6,757.10; cash paid for publications distributed, $2,619.44; cash paid delegates for expenses and for hospital stores and comforts paid for by them, $2,721.15; for stationery distributed, $1,337.75; cash paid for chapels, chapel flies, tents, wagons, horses and other stock, $1,201.61; for freight, labor, etc., $39,78; rent and office expenses, $406.68; for expense of meetings and salaries of collecting agents, $764.25; cash remitted to or purchases for other offices, $5,200; copies of scriptures distributed, 12,950; knapsack books, flexible and paper covers, 5,357; bound books, 1,956; magazines and religious newspapers, 9,100; pages of tracts, 60,000; delegates commissioned, 41; in field, January 1, 1865, 12; aggregate number of days' service, 1,526.

Subsequent reports of the Central Association not being at hand, the work of the Peoria branch cannot be followed out in all its details; but from reports of the local Treasurer it appears that, from January 1 to April 1, 1865, the cash receipts were $9,316.59; for the month of April, $2,531.70, with 84 boxes, barrels and kegs; and for the month of May, $1,375.19—making the total cash receipts up to that time, which was practically the close of the war, $93,922.90.

Soon after the organization of the Woman's National League of Peoria it began to systematize its work. In August, 1863, it organized "The Soldier's Rest," and, in January, 1864, "The Freedmen's Aid Committee" as branches of, or as auxiliaries to, its own work. Further divisions of its work are indicated in the following brief summary extracted from its own history:

"Mrs. Curtenius was President as long as the League existed, Mrs. William Weis was Vice-President, Mrs. L. R. Webb and Mrs. Julia P. Bourland, Secretary, and Miss Lizzie Calligan, Treasurer after the first year. Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng succeeded Mrs. Bourland in 1865."

"The labors of this Society in behalf of our soldiers were manifold, and different organizations attended to specific interests under the one general head. The 'Soldier's Aid Society' confined its operations chiefly to the soldiers in the field; the 'Soldier's Relief Society' attended mainly to the relief of suffering in the families of those who had gone to risk life in defense of their common country; while a 'Soldier's Rest' was established and maintained by the 'League,' where soldiers could find a temporary home in their goings to and from the field of battle. Receptions were held, all manner of stores provided in connection with the Christian and Sanitary Commissions, and the comfort of our soldiers looked after in all possible ways. The aggregate resources of the League, from first to last, were:

"Receipts from June 3, 1863, to July 5, 1866, $11,692.10 in money, and $1,948.64 in sanitary stores. Of this $1,935.05 was expended in dinners and festivals; $1,485.70 in receptions to soldiers; $2,913.40 in Soldier's Rest; $1,085.75 in care of sick soldiers; $1,307.64 in sanitary stores (additional); $2,162.63 in Freedmen's Society, etc."

Thus it was that a supplemental army of men and women grew up whose services were rendered to the country, not only without pay, but with a self-sacrificing devotion never before witnessed in the annals of the world.

As the war progressed new avenues of usefulness were constantly opening up to the Sanitary and Christian Commissions, and to the women of the country, to extend their ministrations more directly to the soldiers. One of the most useful of these was the establishment of special dietary kitchens in connection with the General Hospitals. In this domain of activity the hand of woman became a most powerful agency. The testimony of the Christian Commission in this regard is as follows: "The experience of our Hospitals in treating patients suffering from dangerous wounds, amputations, and those diseases which have proved most fatal, has shown the great value of the most careful nursing and suitably prepared diet. To meet this want more fully than had been hitherto supplied, to secure as nearly as possible the home attentions of a wife, mother or sister to those most needing their care, the Christian Commission has taken charge of the special diet kitchens in most of the United States General Hospitals, with the consent and under the direction of the surgeons in charge, adding cooking utensils and supplies to those already furnished by the Government. The ladies engaged in superintending the cooking in these kitchens are earnest, cultivated, Christian women, acting under the general direction of Mrs. Annie Wittemeyer, with her headquarters at Louisville."

In one of her reports, Mrs. Wittemeyer, Superintendent of this department of the work, says: "The ladies personally supervise the preparation and seasoning of every article of food and are careful to see it go to the wards suitably prepared and in sufficient quantity. * * * They (the kitchens) are kept perfectly clean and neat, are well furnished and equipped with stores, and everything connected with the work is conducted in a systematic and orderly manner."

After giving a list of articles and the number of rations issued through these kitchens, Mrs. Wittemeyer continues her report: "Some of the articles furnished in the above list may seem unfit for sick men; but when we take into consideration that there are many wounded men, who are allowed by the surgeon to eat any thing they may choose, and others who are homesick, or hopelessly ill, or dying, who in their loneliness and suffering remember and crave those things because a kind mother's hand once prepared such dainties for them, it is no longer a matter of wonder. And since the loved ones at home cannot cheer them with their presence and love in their dark hours of suffering, it is a delightful task to substitute home food and home comforts."

"In addition to their duties in the kitchen, the ladies visit the patients in the wards, write letters for them, and perform such other offices of kindness and trust as their condition requires."

In such labors of patriotism and love the ladies of Peoria County, together with the great body of loyal women both South and North, were, during the war, heroically engaged. They wrought not for fame or glory. They kept no record of their benefactions, and the amount thereof will never be known. But their good and patriotic deeds will continue to live in the grateful remembrance of every Union veteran, and, when the final account shall be revealed, they will doubtless receive the blessing: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me."

The magnitude of this auxiliary work can never be fully realized, but an approximate idea can be formed from that which is known. The money value of the supplies received by the United States Sanitary Commission was estimated at $15,000,000, while the cash receipts of the Central Treasury were about $5,000,000. The Historian of the Commission states that the receipts of the Branch Treasurers were never known, but they must have received and disbursed at least $2,000,000 more. "With each of them were affiliated hundreds or thousands of 'Sewing Circles' and 'Soldiers Aid Societies' established in every loyal town, village and country neighborhood in the North. Each of these raised a certain amount of money—larger or smaller for its own local work of gathering supplies—making them up and forwarding them to the branch with which it corresponded." The Commission made strenuous efforts to collect the statistics of this work, but not one in five hundred responded to the circulars sent out. "They had done what they could and cared not whether their work was remembered or forgotten. The very few answers these circulars called forth proved that full returns would have shown an aggregate of contributions severally small, but exceeding all the cash receipts of the Branch and Central Treasury together."

The Chicago Branch of the Sanitary Commission was a marvel of success. At an early stage of its existence, deeming an organization of the women of the Northwest essential to the calling forth of all its resources, the Commission called to its assistance two eminent ladies, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore and Mrs. Hoge, through whose indomitable energy and executive ability the women of every county, city, town and school district were brought together into effective and harmonious work. "The towns were divided into districts, and every home was visited; a central depot of deposit was appointed, to which humble as well as rich were alike invited to send contributions. In the country, committees went in wagons, begging as they went, and taking possession of what was given, as they labored from house to house. This was done day after day, first in one direction and then another, through mud and rain, by men and women. These collections were made by the delicate lady who could ill bear the exposure; by the farmer's wife who could ill spare the time; by the tradesman who could ill neglect his business; by the clergyman who could ill forego his strength. To remarks deprecating such efforts, the answer was, 'Our soldiers do not stop for the weather, neither must we.'

But their crowning efforts were in the organization of the great Sanitary Fairs at Chicago, one held in the last week in October, 1864, the other in the spring of 1865, the proceeds of the first being $80,000, and of the second $220,000. So bountifully did the people give that at the close of the war, this branch had a surplus of $130,000, of which it donated $80,000 to the Soldiers' Home and $50,000 to the United States Christian Commission.

In the four years of its existence this branch disbursed 77,000 packages from its storehouse, and $405,702 from its treasury. It received 31,000 packages from its tributaries, the remainder it purchased. The value of the whole disbursements amounted to $1,050,192. "This," says the report, "is the sanitary work accomplished during the war by the Aid Societies of the Northwest. This is what they achieved by their devotion, enthusiasm and patriotism. This is the brilliant result of their self-denying, tireless, abundant labors. This is what they did for their country in its hour of need. This is their record and their monument."

The contributions from Peoria County are not, and perhaps never will be, fully known. Perhaps it would make us too proud if they were. It was never intended they should be. But from the meager statistics we have, some idea may be gained of the manner in which they came in. In the report of the receipts of the Peoria Branch of the Christian Commission from January 1 to April 1, 1865, we find the following cash contributions from this county: From supper of Ladies' Aid Society of Elmwood, $605.00; German Church, Peoria, $2.00; Colonel D., Peoria, $5.00; U. P. Church, $30; Smithville, $13.00; Brimfield, $222.00; W. D. Barstow, Peoria, $2.00; Mrs. Morse, Peoria County, $2.00; Wesley Chapel, $37.00; Ladies' Aid Society, Jubilee, $50.00; Chillietho, $12.80; Elmwood lady, $2.00; Limestone and Salem, $50.21. These sums appear small to the people of the present day, but it must be remembered these gifts were made near the end of a four years' war, during which time the resources of the country had been undergoing a continual drain, and every penny then being contributed was consecrated money, and went into the treasury of the Commission in the same spirit as did the widow's mite, beside which the lordly gifts of a Rockefeller or Carnegie are as the chaff which flies before the wind. During these three months the receipts of the Peoria Branch were $9,418.18, of which sum $3,000 were received from the Tazewell County Sanitary Fair. But the cash contributions were not those of the greatest importance. It was the constant inflow of supplies, the products of their own constant and assiduous labors that told most loudly of the devotedness of the loyal women to their country's cause. During the month of December the Peoria Branch of the Commission received from the various societies, churches and individuals of Peoria County, and forwarded the same to the army as follows: From Ladies' Union Relief Society, Peoria, one box of soldiers' clothing, containing 167 garments; Prospect Soldiers' Aid Society, 2 kegs, 1 box; Princeville Soldiers' Aid Society, 3 boxes; Kickapoo Soldiers' Aid Society, 2 boxes, 4 barrels; Southport Ladies' Relief Society, 5 barrels; Ladies' Union Relief Society, Peoria, 1 box, containing 346 garments, shipped to St. Louis.

During the month of April, 1865, we find the following additional receipts: From Peoria Ladies' Soldiers' Aid Society, 6 boxes tomatoes; Princeville Ladies' Aid Society, 3 barrels horse-radish; Lancaster Soldiers' Aid Society, 1 box; Millbrook Soldiers' Aid Society, 2 boxes; Summerville Ladies' Aid Society, 1 box, 1 barrel, 1 keg; Princeville Soldiers' Aid Society, 3 boxes, 5 barrels, 3 kegs; Lancaster Soldiers' Aid Society, 1 box; Logan Soldiers' Aid Society, 4 cans. The mention of these societies is not intended to give them prominence over others not mentioned, for every village, and it might be said every neighborhood, had its society of women engaged in the laudable work. The above are extracted from the few reports at hand, while other societies were doubtless no less favorably mentioned in other reports of the Commission.

But the history of Peoria County's connection with the sanitary work of the army would be incomplete were no reference made to Aunt Lizzie Aiken, the story of whose life has been so happily told by her friend, Mrs. Galusha Anderson, in a little book entitled "The Story of Aunt Lizzie Aiken."

"In October (1861) the want of nurses began to be felt in the Illinois camps. Just outside of Springfield was Camp Butler, filled with recruits, many of whom were sick with the measles. The head surgeon of the Sixth Illinois Cavalry, 'Governor Yates' Legion, Major Niglas, of Peoria, returned home, anxious to find competent nurses to assist him. Nor was he alone in his solicitude; the mothers of Peoria had sons in the camp, and many of them came and implored Mrs. Aiken to go and care for them. Her own love of her country, and her heart filled with sympathy for the suffering soldiers responded to the appeal, and she consented to accompany Major Niglas, provided some lady could be found to join her. An advertisement for such a person was put in the local papers, and the next morning Mrs. Mary Sturgis, a widow, presented herself and was gladly accepted. The two nurses were about the same age, and at once took the greatest liking to each other. Both were earnest Christian women, both were alone in the world; Mrs. Sturgis a widow, Mrs. Aiken having no home, on account of her husband's illness.

"Nevertheless, in October, the two ladies and Mrs. Sturgis' daughter Mary accompanied Major Niglas when he returned to Camp Butler. They found in the Major a kind friend, who looked after their welfare so long as they were with the regiment. They reached Springfield toward nightfall, and, taking a carriage, rode the six or seven miles to camp, through the quiet fields flooded with the radiance of the full moon. Nothing could have seemed more remote from war and its distresses than this peaceful prairie. On reaching the camp they found that they were expected. A new tent had been provided for them, just opposite the long row of hospital tents." They remained with the regiment in all its movements until July 26, 1862, when, having reached Memphis, they were installed in the hospital service, and continued there until the close of the war—the idols of the soldiers.

Of her years of toilsome and devoted service to her country, time and space forbid us fully to relate. Her own estimate of her work, as well as that of other loyal women, as told by herself, shall conclude this chapter:

"There is so much to be done, so much need of more being done, so many sad hearts all about me to be cheered, so many broken spirits to be lifted tenderly and bound up lovingly, such great dark errors, such hungry, wolfish sorrows, all about me, to be struggled with and conquered for myself, as well as my brother soldiers, that I feel I cannot make a play-day of one single day in which God gives me the glorious privilege of living. * * * I deem my mission one of the holiest ever entrusted to mortals. I am content to work in a humble sphere, not forgetting that, though I may not be the swift flowing river, I may be a drop or portion of it, which is pouring its blessings out upon suffering humanity. * * * What rich, tender, happy, yet sad experiences I have had during my almost three years of service. I see grim-visaged war sit with frowning brow, holding his dripping sword, which has caused rivers of blood to flow on the battle-field, and deeper rivers of anguish from broken hearts and desolate fire-sides; what Spartan-like giving up of household idols, what noble acts of devotion and sacrifice of self! My sister, we are making up the leaves of a glorious history, and I thank God woman is writing her golden sentences upon its pages."

CHAPTER XXVIII

POLITICS OF PEORIA COUNTY DURING THE WAR.

Judging from the unanimity with which the people of the North resented the insult offered the national flag in firing upon Fort Sumter, and the unanimity with which they sprang to arms in defense of the Union, it could scarcely be believed there would have been any divided councils concerning the means to be employed in suppressing the rebellion. But no sooner had the first outburst of patriotic enthusiasm died away than it began to be whispered about that there were Southern sympathizers in our midst, and that a band of secessionists in the city were holding secret meetings at night. This charge, when openly made through the newspapers, was met from the Democratic side with the accusation that those instrumental in circulating it were bent on stirring up strife at home, and were attempting to inaugurate a course of political proscription against the Democrats.

It was subsequently ascertained that there was then in existence a secret political organization of a most dangerous character, called the "Knights of the Golden Circle," which, in time, threatened the very existence of the nation.

There being no general election of State officers in 1861, the election for county officers passed off without much excitement. Norman H. Purple and Julius Manning for the Constitutional Convention and Charles Feinse for Coroner had no opposition, while John C. Folliot for County Judge, Charles Kettelle for County Clerk, Isaac Brown for County Treasurer and Charles P. Taggart for School Commissioner had majorities ranging from 1,200 to 1,400.

Many leaders of that party, by reason of the places of their nativity, their family connections, their commercial relations and political affinities, entertained strong sympathies with the South, and it was exceedingly difficult, if not quite impossible, for them to sever their party ties, or to co-operate with a party which could tolerate such men as Lovejoy, Sumner, Phillips and other noted abolitionists.

Although at the outset the great majority of the Democrats were anxious to extend to the administration all the assistance in their power for the suppression of the rebellion, yet it was soon discovered that an opposition to some of the measures of the administration was springing up, chiefly with reference to the ever recurring question of slavery. It had become patent that, in the presence of our armies, slavery could not be tolerated. Escaped slaves were continually coming into the Union lines with their families of women and children. What to do with them became a burning question. Later on it became the settled policy of the administration to either give them employment or to enlist them in the army; in either case, the person so employed or enlisted to be forever free,—the question of compensation to be determined with respect to them, the same as with respect to other species of property.

Every movement looking to the freedom of the slaves was seized upon by the sympathizers with the South as an evidence of the purpose of the administration to convert the war, which ought to be waged solely for the restoration of the Union, into a war of emancipation.

As time wore on and the secret designs of the Northern Secessionists, under the influence of the "Knights of the Golden Circle," became more and more apparent to the administration, it was deemed wise to adopt the most effective measures to counteract them. This determination led at first to local suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, arrests of civilians by military authorities and their trial and punishment by military courts and commissions where the courts of law were still unobstructed; to the conviction, imprisonment and banishment beyond the Union lines of those found guilty; to the exclusion of seditious newspapers from the mails and to their final suppression.

While, as before remarked, the great majority of the Democrats were loyal at heart, yet it was felt there was an undercurrent of opposition to the administration, prompted by some as yet unseen influence, which portended trouble in the future.

These antagonistic influences were well calculated to provoke bitter partisan feelings between the opposing interests, and were made the basis of political action between the Democrats and Republicans. This war of words waxed exceedingly hot at Peoria before the close of the campaign of 1862.

The policy of the Democrats seemed to be to throw as much discredit upon the conduct of the war as possible. Their attitude towards the party is well illustrated by an editorial in the "Democratic Union," issued on the National Holiday, July 4, 1862, which says, "The Union, which used to be a sacred word, is now a scouted appellation, and the Constitution, the palladium of liberty, it trampled under foot. * * *

"Other counsels than those which have been omnipotent at the Capital must prevail, or there will soon come a time when the celebration of our national anniversary will not only be a farce, but it will be a rebuke to the craven spirits which have suffered the destruction of their country."

On July 12th, in an article on the United North, "The Democratic Union" said: "The conservative part of the North are willing to use all constitutional means to put down the rebellion, but they are not willing, and will never consent, that the war shall be prostituted for party purposes or by means that set the Constitution at defiance. * * * And nothing is more certain than this: that the legitimate, and we may say the unavoidable, result of their labors is not only a divided North, but anarchy and civil war at our own hearth-stones."

Such effusions as these could not have been otherwise than distasteful to men like E. C. Ingersoll, who had a brother at the head of a regiment fighting the rebels, whom they were calculated to encourage. It, therefore, happened that in about a week thereafter the "Union," in which he seems to have had some interest in connection with G. W. Raney and E. P. Sloan, was offered for sale. It continued to be issued regularly until August 28th, after which time, if issued at all, it must have been weekly or at irregular intervals until the 27th of September, when its publication ceased.

The Democratic State Convention having been called for September 10th, a call was issued by the Democratic County Committee for a convention to be held on the 4th day of that month to name its delegates. That call was issued August 13th, and just one week prior thereto the country had been startled by the announcement that a large number of "Knights of the Golden Circle" had been indicted by the Grand Jury of the United States at Indianapolis, for divers conspiracies against the Government. On the 28th of the same month the "Transcript" published a long expose of the operations of the same secret organization in Southern Illinois, in which many prominent citizens, some of whom have since filled high offices in the States and the Nation, were implicated. These charges and counter-charges had the effect of working up the passions of the party leaders to a high pitch of excitement.

The Democratic County Convention was held, as announced, at Peoria on the 4th of September. The resolutions adopted declared the Democrats to be true and unqualified friends of the Constitution and the Union; that, in the language of the Immortal Jackson, "The Federal Union—it must and shall be preserved;" that, while the war had been brought on by the joint action of the abolitionists and secessionists, yet it was the duty of all to rally to the support of the Constitution and the restoration of the Union, and to declare eternal hostility to all traitors so long as they remain such, both North and South; that they opposed the Government's purchasing or colonizing the negroes; asserted that certain remedies could be found in the laws for all infractions thereof, and no person ought to be transported out of the State; that every person charged with offenses against the law should have the right to a speedy trial by jury; and that they pledge their unqualified and united support to the President in maintaining the Constitution, preserving the Union and putting down the rebellion.

The Democratic State Convention was held on September 10th, as previously announced. It resolved that the Constitution and laws made in pursuance thereof are and must remain the supreme law of the land, and must be preserved and maintained in their rightful supremacy; that the rebellion must be suppressed, and that it was the duty of all good citizens to aid the General Government in all legal and constitutional measures necessary and proper to accomplish that end; that it is the duty of all good citizens to sustain the President against the purpose of the radical Republicans to induce him to "pervert the efforts to suppress this wicked rebellion into a war for the emancipation of the slaves, and for the overthrow of the Constitution." It also declared against the entrance of free negroes into the State, against the illegal arrest of citizens, and against all unjust interference with the freedom of speech and of the press. This Convention nominated James C. Allen for Congressman at Large, Alexander Starne for State Treasurer and John P. Brooks for Superintendent of Public Instruction.

The Republican or Union Congressional Convention, as it was then called, having been appointed to be held in Galesburg on the 16th of September, a County Convention to name delegates was held at Peoria on the 13th. Owen Lovejoy being a candidate for nomination in the new Fifth District, attended and made a speech in the evening, in which he indorsed fully the measures of the administration, and the recent letter of Mr. Lincoln to Horace Greeley, which has since become so famous. That Convention adopted a series of resolutions to the effect that Peoria County, "having contributed $50,000 and 3,000 of her sons to the suppression of the rebellion, demands, and has the right to demand, that the military operations be conducted with all the force, power and energy at the command of the Government; that every means authorized by the laws or usages of war, confiscation or emancipation, or both, be made use of to subdue the rebellion; that we demand that no peace or truce, no compromise, no cessation of hostilities and no mediation be allowed or thought of, until the traitors and rebels lay down their arms and the full authority of the Government be restored to every inch of soil rightfully belonging to it, and that we invite all who are for the Government without an if or a but to unite with us in sustaining the administration."

The Congressional Convention met, according to appointment, on the 16th at Galesburg and nominated Lovejoy for Congress. It adopted a long series of resolutions declaratory of Republican principles and of approval of the measures of the last Congress. They further declare that, notwithstanding recent reverses to our arms, the whole power of the loyal people ought to be put forth to crush the rebellion; that slavery had been the only disturbing element in our Government; that the rebellion was inaugurated to establish a slave empire, and that the only path to a permanent peace lay through its complete destruction.

The leading Democrats of Peoria County were men of intelligence, of sound judgment, of strong convictions and of determined will. They were as conscientious in their convictions, and for like reason, as were the majority of Southern people, in their support of the Southern Confederacy.

There were also those in that party who considered it no time for hair-splitting on constitutional questions. Mr. Lincoln had declared his paramount object to be to save the Union; that he would save it with slavery if he could, or without slavery if he must. The Republicans and those who were known as War Democrats were willing to follow him in the assertion of this doctrine to its legitimate consequences, even to the total extinction of the institution of slavery.

The time had therefore come when a separation between these two elements must begin. The first to move in the direction of separation was Hon. Walter B. Scates, of Chicago, who had formerly been one of the Justices of the Illinois Supreme Court. In a Democratic Convention, recently held in Chicago, he had endeavored to introduce resolutions strongly supporting the war measures of the administration, which resolutions had been smothered and not even permitted to be read. He then came out in a long letter powerfully arraiging the instigators of these arbitrary proceedings, and calling upon the conservative men of the State, Democrats and Republicans, to hold a convention, excluding both sets of extremists—the Abolitionists and anti-war Democrats—and to pledge the entire resources of the State, both in men and property, to sustain, aid and assist the Government in its gigantic struggle for existence. Ten days, he said, would be long enough to convene the war men who would come, ready not only to pledge their all, but to enter the field to drive back their adversaries. This letter appeared in the "Transcript" of September 19th, three days before the first proclamation of emancipation, and in the same issue one from Eben C. Ingersoll, of Peoria, indorsing the views and position of Judge Scates, and seconding his call for a convention of unconditional Union men of whatever party. The letter of Mr. Ingersoll having reached his brother, Colonel R. G. Ingersoll, at Corinth, Mississippi, the latter, under date of September 22d, wrote indorsing the course his brother had taken. Other defections from the Democratic party followed soon after.

The convention called for by the letter of Judge Scates was not held, but in pursuance of a regular Republican call their State Convention was held at Springfield on the 24th of September, the same day as that mentioned by Judge Scates. Eben C. Ingersoll was nominated for Congressman at Large, William Butler for State Treasurer and Newton Bateman for State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

The platform adopted took advanced ground on the issues of the war. It declared that there were only two parties in this country, the loyal and the dis-loyal; reiterated in a general way approval of the acts of the administration, and indorsed the proclamation of freedom and confiscation issued by the President, September 22, 1862, as a great and imperative war measure essential to the salvation of the Union.

The next day after the Republican State Convention the regular Democratic County Convention for the nomination of county officers was held at Peoria. The recent abandonment of the party by E. C. Ingersoll and others rendered it very essential that both wings of the party should be satisfied with its platform. That a struggle had taken place between them in the committee on resolutions is evident from the report submitted to the convention. The first series declare that the Democrats were the ever true and unqualified friends of the Constitution and the Union; that the Federal Union must and shall be preserved; that the Democrats were opposed to paying for negroes to be emancipated by the States; that they were opposed to military arrests and transporting men out of the States without trial, and, while deprecating the extravagances of portions of the public press, and still more strongly condemning all secret organizations, they would ever protest against all unjust interference with the freedom of the press by arbitrary and illegal arrests, or by extra-judicial suppression of newspapers in the loyal States, where the ordinary courts of justice were unmolested, as tyrannical oppression to the individual and oppressive to the public.

This portion of the report was intended for the Knights.

The next division, evidently drawn by a different hand, was intended to please the pro-slavery members of the party. It contained a facetious reference to the recent declarations of the President already quoted. Following the Springfield platform, it declared it to be the duty of all good citizens to sustain the President, not against the rebellion, but against the pressure of radical Republicans to induce him to depart from his declared principles and to pervert the war into one for the emancipation of the negro; agreed with him that such a measure would be ruinous, impolitic and calculated to strengthen the arm of the rebellion and to weaken the Government, and that it would have no more effect to put down the rebellion than the act of the Pope in issuing his bull against the comet.

This resolution had evidently been prepared before the issuing of the proclamation of emancipation, and the occasion had been passed when it could have had any force. But the innuendo it contained might still have the effect of holding the President up to ridicule in the position he then occupied.

But up to this point the War Democrats had been ignored. A final resolution was therefore appended to the report of the committee on resolutions, which read as follows:

Resolved, That we discard and repudiate any and all party affiliations or associations with those whose known sympathies are with the rebels in arms against the Government of the United States, and we are in favor of the general Government making use of the most vigorous measures consistent with the Constitution to suppress the rebellion, regardless of the consequences to the persons or property of the rebels resulting from legitimate warfare." (1)

No Republican could have wanted anything better than this last resolution. But the report had as yet nothing about the emancipation proclamation in the terms of approval or condemnation. To supply this palpable omission and to still further please the secessionists, George Jenkins in open convention offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the recent proclamation of the President freeing the slaves of rebels is unwise, unconstitutional and calculated to prolong the present rebellion."

(1) Up to this time the writer had been a Democrat, and, during the campaign which followed, supported Gen. Henderson against Owen Lovejoy for Congress. He was on the committee on resolutions which reported this platform. Finding the resolutions already cut and dried for the occasion, but not to his liking, he, on the spur of the moment, penned this last resolution and demanded that it be reported. No one had the effrontery to oppose it, and it went through the committee and the convention unchallenged.

There being a movement on foot to nominate a fusion or independent candidate for Congress from the Fifth District, the Democrats of Peoria County resolved not to send delegates to a Democratic Congressional Convention. Colonel Thomas J. Henderson, of the One Hundred and Twelfth Illinois Infantry, having been requested to allow his name to go before the Galesburg Republican Convention as a competitor of Lovejoy, had declined on the ground that he would not run as a candidate of any party. A convention of (what they called themselves) Unconditional Union men was therefore called to meet at Princeton on October 3d, which convention, much against his inclination, placed him in nomination as a candidate for Congress.

The great majority of Democrats preferred him to Lovejoy, while the secession element of the party reluctantly accepted him as the last chance to beat the Abolitionist. The anomalous condition of affairs at this time will be better understood by bearing in mind that Enoch Emery, the editor of the "Transcript," was Republican candidate for the Legislature with Calvin L. Eastman, of Stark County, against William W. O'Brien, of Peoria, and James Holgate, of Stark County, on the Democratic ticket. O'Brien was generally regarded as the spokesman of the anti-war or secession element, while Colonel Henderson was an unconditional Union man in command of a regiment in the field, and in favor of a vigorous prosecution of the war. Emery was a vigorous, pungent and sarcastic writer, and had published many articles severely reflecting upon O'Brien and others of secession proclivities, but it would not do for him to reflect seriously upon Colonel Henderson, the competitor of Lovejoy, who was leading a regiment against the rebels, while Lovejoy was staying at home attending to his own election. O'Brien and his friends were in a similar or worse dilemma. They had a candidate of their own in James C. Allen, candidate for Congressman at Large against E. C. Ingersoll, a War Democrat. But they had Colonel Henderson, a War Democrat, as their candidate for Congress in the Fifth District, against the abolitionist. If they could support him, why, it might be asked, could they not support Ingersoll? The answer is, that in Allen they had the candidate they wanted, while in Henderson they had the only available candidate they could get, while the War Democrats were free to vote for Henderson and Ingersoll without voting for either a secessionist or an abolitionist. The anomalous position in which the Democrats found themselves will more clearly appear from a comparison of their platform with that upon which Henderson was nominated, one of the principal planks of which is as follows:

Resolved, That from the day of his inauguration, when Mr. Lincoln recorded a solemn oath in Heaven to maintain, support and defend the Constitution, he has committed no act calculated to shake the confidence of the American people in his honest and earnest desire to suppress this wicked rebellion and to restore the Government to its supremacy over the entire land. We believe he was sincere when he said, in his letter to Horace Greeley, he would save the Union in the shortest way under the Constitution; we believe he meant what he said when, in the same letter, he remarked 'the sooner the National authority can be restored, the nearer the Union will be the Union as it was;' we believe that he was equally sincere in saying, 'my paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union, and is not either to save or to destroy slavery;' and we further believe that, in the spirit of these sentiments and in the fervent hope that this peace might sooner be restored, he, as President and Commander in Chief, issued his recent proclamation; and, finally to the remark of Mr. Lincoln to those who came to congratulate him, 'I trust in God I have committed no error,' we say, Amen." Others equally patriotic followed.

These brave words, probably better than any others extant, express the true sentiments of the War Democrats of that period.

It very soon became apparent that the patriotic professions of those who could give their support to Allen upon the Springfield platform, to O'Brien upon the Peoria platform, and to Henderson upon the Princeton platform, were the boldest kind of pretenses and shams. The War Democrats, therefore, began to rebel, some to forsake the party altogether, others to select the candidates representing their own sentiments and disavowing Allen and O'Brien.

On the 7th day of October, only four days after the Princeton Convention, Washington Coekle appeared upon the same platform with Ingersoll and made a speech denouncing the Democratic State Convention of September 10th, as not properly representing the party, over forty counties not having been represented and the platform as not expressing its true sentiments. Others who did not care to openly break away from the party confined their speeches to the advocacy of Henderson's election, and left the others to look out for themselves. Notably was this the case with reference to O'Brien, who ran far behind Henderson, and considerably behind the State ticket.

On the 14th of October the Republican or Union County Convention for the nomination of county officers was held at Peoria. That convention resolved that, during the present war, they would know no issue but that of the earnest and vigorous prosecution of the same; that they would repudiate all party until our common country should be free from peril, and, to that end, they would support no man for any office not an avowed Union man at all times and under all circumstances.

It would be going beyond the scope of this work to enter into details of all measures calculated to encourage the rebels, which were either passed by, or proposed in the Illinois House of Representatives, to which O'Brien and Holgate had been elected. It is enough to say they were of such a character as to induce Governor Yates to prorogue the Legislature until the day next preceding the expiration of their term of office. A series of resolutions had been adopted by the House which, after denouncing the administration in unmeasured terms, declared "that the war having been diverted from its first avowed object to that of subjugation and the abolition of slavery, a fraud both legal and moral has been perpetrated upon the brave sons of Illinois who have gone forth to battle for the Constitution and laws," that the war could not result in the preservation of the Union unless the President's emancipation proclamation be withdrawn, and that Congress, the administration and the executives and Legislatures of the several States be memorialized "to take such immediate action as shall secure an armistice in which the rights and safety of the Government shall be fully protected, for such length of time as may be necessary to enable the people to meet in convention aforesaid,"—"to so adjust our national difficulties that the States may hereafter live together in harmony." These resolutions were passed by a strict party vote, the Representatives from the Peoria District voting in the affirmative.

About this time a new and unheard-of element entered into the counsels of the Democracy of Peoria. The operations of the "Knights of the Golden Circle" throughout the country had, for some time, been watched, arrests had been made and some of them convicted and imprisoned.

Among these was Clement L. Vallandigham, the Commander-in-Chief of the order, a prominent politician and Congressman from Ohio, who had been tried by a military commission at Cincinnati, and sentenced to the penitentiary for treasonable practices. His sentence had, however, been commuted by the President to banishment beyond our lines into the Southern Confederacy. Through the assistance of the rebel authorities he had made his escape, and, having reached Canada, had commenced his operations there. While thus in exile he had been nominated by the Democrats as their candidate for Governor. "Here," said John Sherman, "is a convicted traitor nominated as the Democratic Governor of Ohio. He is opposed to the Government, opposed to the war, will not vote a man to suppress the rebellion and will not vote a dollar to sustain our soldiers. And yet the Democratic party call upon the Union men to elect this man as Commander-in-Chief of the army and navy of Ohio, and this in the midst of a war with the enemies of the country whom he was convicted of aiding." This man's cause the Democracy of Peoria County were also called upon to champion.

Their convention for the nomination of county officers met at Peoria on the 17th day of September, 1863. After passing the usual resolutions of denunciation of the administration asserting their own loyalty to the Constitution and the Union, and their opposition equally to secession and unconstitutional means of suppression of the rebellion, they further resolved that they were in favor of peace upon honorable terms, and would sustain all constitutional means to that end by whomsoever administered.

The resolutions of the Springfield Mass Meeting having met with the unqualified condemnation of the War Democrats, a call signed by over one hundred of the leaders,—such men as John A. McClernand, A. J. Kuykendall, M. M. Bane, E. C. Ingersoll, M. Brayman, S. W. Moulton, Thomas W. Harris and I. N. Haynie,—was issued for a convention to meet at Decatur on the 1st day of October. That convention was largely attended, E. C. Ingersoll, of Peoria, being placed on the committee on resolutions. It resolved that the prosecution of the war into any and every part of the Union, and wherever armed insurgents could be found, is constitutional, and that they denounced all resolutions, by whomsoever passed, which maintained contrary principles; that they were satisfied with the Constitution as it then was, and opposed any amendment to the same, or any armistice with the rebels; that the preservation of the Union was the paramount issue, and that they repudiated all parties and their sympathizers which sought to embroil the people of States and incite treason and armed resistance to law anywhere, and whose armed or secret purpose, if consummated, must end in rebellion; that they denounce the twenty-third resolution [the most offensive of the series—Ed.] of the Springfield meeting and all "who stand upon, abide by, or adhere to or sympathize with the same * * * as being in antagonism to and in direct conflict with the principles, the untarnished name and glorious history of the Democratic party, and as affording aid and comfort to the enemy;" that the Union must be preserved—each State in all its equality and sovereignty; that every nation has an inherent and God-given right of self-protection, and the authorities have all power necessary to preserve it; and that it was the duty of all good citizens to accord a hearty support to all measures necessary to suppress the rebellion. Other resolutions declaratory of the policy of the Democratic party followed, but the above are sufficient to show the irreparable breach between the secessionists and the War Democrats which occurred at this time.

The Unconditional Union men of both parties met in convention at Peoria on the 8th of October and placed in nomination candidates for county officers, Jesse L. Knowlton for Treasurer, George W. Maurice for School Commissioner, and John Anderson for Surveyor. The Democratic candidates were elected, but by majorities less, by more than one thousand, than those of two years before.

The course of the "Knights of the Golden Circle"—or "Sons of Liberty," as they had by this time come to be called—up to this time had been only preliminary to the great contest which was to take place in the election of a President in the year 1864. The line of demarcation between the secessionists and the unconditional Union elements in the Democratic party having been clearly drawn, the former were left at liberty to pursue their own course untrammelled by the presence of the latter.

The strength of the "Sons of Liberty" in the North having become known to the Confederate Government, it was determined to establish a communication with them in the interest of the rebellion. To this end a commission consisting of Jacob Thompson, C. C. Clay and J. P. Holcombe was dispatched to Canada ostensibly to operate in conjunction with the disaffected of the North, to utilize the prejudices existing against the conduct of the war, for the interest of the Confederate States. The real object was to organize the disaffected in the North into an actual rebellion, and to establish a Northwestern Confederacy. The scheme embraced an armed uprising of rebel sympathizers of the North, the release of 8,600 rebel prisoners then at Camp Douglas near Chicago, 7,554 at Springfield, about 6,000 at Rock Island and 5,000 at Alton. These were to be armed and organized to take possession of the Government; Chicago was to be captured and all its wealth devoted to the cause of the conspiracy.

The time agreed upon for this uprising was that of the Democratic National Convention at Chicago, which was at first set for July 4th, but for reasons of their own, the time of the meeting of the convention was postponed until August 29th.

The disgrace of having entertained this gang of conspirators for a day rests upon the city of Peoria. Between the time first set for the great uprising and the day to which it had been postponed, one of their preliminary meetings actually took place in this city. It was held on the 3d day of August, 1864; it had been largely advertised as a grand mass-meeting of the Democrats, and, as had been anticipated, drew a large crowd. The call as published in the "Evening Mail," was signed by about one hundred and fifty leading Democrats, of whom seven were from Peoria County; the objects stated were "to take into consideration the perilous condition of our country and express our indignation at the act of the President in kidnapping and removing beyond the jurisdiction of the civil authorities the Coles County prisoners," and calling upon the people to rally in their might. Thomas A. Hendricks, Daniel W. Voorhees, George H. Pendleton and other distinguished speakers were expected to address the meeting. The number of voters claimed by the Democratic papers to have been present was 25,000, but the Republicans claimed that the numbers from outside the city were very small. But whether small or great it was a disreputable affair. Two stands for speaking were erected, one on the north, the other on the south side of the Court House. The prominent speakers from a distance who had been invited and were advertised to speak did not appear. The "Transcript" of the following day says that from the corner of Washington street the great procession reached only one and one-half blocks up Main. The "Evening Mail" gave neither the numbers nor the length of the procession. But long or short it was characteristic of the occasion. There was not an American flag in it except one carried by a farmer near the tail end. Revolvers, sent here by the Sons of Liberty as boxes of law books, were openly distributed; many of the men composing the procession were armed with revolvers and daggers, and one of the floats represented President Lincoln in his coffin, the lid of which they were industriously nailing down.

The following, among other mottoes carried in the procession, are attested by the report of the "Evening Mail" of the following day, and, coming from a friendly source, will not be disputed:

"The Union, the Constitution and the Laws."

"Would rather die freemen than live slaves."

"Ours is a white man's Government—defile it not with miscegenation."

"Resistance to tyrants is obedience to God."

"Give me liberty or give me death."

"Usurpation unchecked is despotism accepted."

"The President is not the master but the servant of the people."

"Lincoln inaugurated the reign of terror."

"Let there be no strife between mine and thine, for we be brethren."

"We come under the banner of peace."

There was not a banner, nor a motto, nor a transparency in the whole procession condemning the rebels in arms against the Government, or giving encouragement to the soldiers in the field in their endeavors to suppress the rebellion.

After this disgraceful exhibition of disloyalty had closed, the meeting was first called to order at the north stand by William W. O'Brien, of Peoria, who was still a member of the Illinois Legislature, then enjoying its long vacation by order of Governor Yates, and on his motion Robert Holloway, of Mercer County, who, in the exile of Vallandigham, was Commander-in-Chief of the Sons of Liberty, was called to the chair. An address of welcome was delivered by Jacob Gale, the Mayor of Peoria, and prayer was addressed to the Throne of Grace by the Rev. Smithson, a blatant secessionist, who had recently been deposed from the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church for lying, but who was then going about the country making secession speeches.

A committee on permanent organization recommended for President General James W. Singleton, of Quincy, a city in which was located one of the head centers of the Sons of Liberty. Twenty-five Vice-Presidents were named, among whom are found the names of the same Robert Holloway, Vice Commander-in-Chief, and S. Corning Judd, of Lewistown, Commander-in-Chief, for the State of Illinois of the Sons of Liberty. But few of the other twenty-three afterward achieved any fame other than that derived from their participation in that meeting.

Ten newspaper correspondents present were made secretaries, two of them at least representing papers that had come under the ban of the administration.

In his introductory address General Singleton said the object of the Democrats was "an armistice and a call for a convention to settle upon the terms of peace."

Letters expressing sympathy with the objects of the meeting were read from Fernando Wood, the noted secession Mayor of New York; from Thomas H. Seymour, of New York, and from George H. Pendleton, who, at the demand of the secessionists, was soon to become a candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States. Speeches were made by Amos Green, David Sheehan, S. Corning Judd and Rev. Smithson, all of a character in sympathy with the object and intent of the meeting.

The "Transcript" of August 8th, in summing up the character of the meeting, gives the following as the facts: (1) The American flag was excluded from the procession. (2) A white flag with a single star floated over the speaker's stand, and trailing beneath it were the stars and stripes. (3) No cheers were heard for the Union, but cheers were frequent for Jeff. Davis, for the Northwestern Confederacy and for Stonewall Jackson. (4) No word was uttered against the rebels, while the administration were denounced as traitors and the Chief Executive as a man deserving to be hanged. (5) While professing to be for freedom of speech and freedom of the press, one speaker declared he would put padlocks on the mouths of every clergyman and silence every pulpit in the land. (6) That one of them had said to a well known lady that Grant could not take Richmond, and that, if necessary, to prevent him the peace men would turn in and help the rebels.

When this deluge of denunciation had ceased, a motion was made and declared carried, that an adjournment be taken to Springfield on August 18th.

At Stand No. 2 the meeting was called to order by W. W. O'Brien, and speeches were made in the same strain by several other prominent Democrats.

In the evening, the report says, 5,000 assembled in the Court House Square to listen to William A. Campbell, Jr., of Chicago, a Mr. Clark, of Christian County, and for an hour to O'Brien, whose remarks, fortunately for his good name, were not reported.

The resolutions adopted were the most denunciatory of any yet adopted by the Democrats. Having repeated substantially what they had said before in denouncing the administration, they preferred the following direct charges against it:

"It has denied to sovereign States all constitutional rights, and thereby absolved them from all allegiance."

"It has trampled down a nation that it may install a military despotism upon the ruins of constitutional liberty."

"It has and is still waging a bloody and relentless war for the avowed purpose of exterminating 8,000,000 of freemen from the homes of their fathers, and blotting from the American Constellation one-half of the States of the Union."

"It has sought to arouse and enlist the most wicked and malignant passions, reckless of all ends if it but subvert the existing Government and immolate American citizens."

"It has struck down freedom of speech and of the press."

"It has stripped from the American citizen his panoply and conveyed him to the bastille without process of law, without charge and without opportunity of trial."

"It has, by military violence, suppressed the freedom of the ballot and dictated elections at the point of the bayonet."

"It has annulled every constitutional guaranty for the protection of the citizen and subjected him to an impossible tyranny of military violence."

When the 20th day of August, the day of the projected uprising, had arrived, there was found to be a screw loose in the machinery. The Government had sent a regiment of soldiers to Camp Douglas, and it had become noised abroad in and around Chicago that the newly arrived contingent amounted to seven thousand men. Thereupon the Valiant Knights flunked, and never afterward boasted of their valor.

The election in Peoria County, as usual, went Democratic. On the local ticket there were three War Democrats, Ingersoll, Taggart and Sloan, upon whom the vials of the rebel wrath were poured out without stint, to which they replied in kind. The Democratic majority averaged one hundred and seventy-eight, as follows:

For Governor—
Robinson	(D) 3,750
Oglesby	(R) 3,561 189
Congressman at Large—
Allen	(D) 3,747
Moulton	(R) 3,568 179
Congress, Fifth District—
James S. Eckles	(D) 3,743
Eben C. Ingersoll	(W. D.) 3,570 173
Representatives—
William Rounseville	(D) 3,738
Jacob Jamison	(D) 3,742
Alexander McCoy	(R) 3,583 155
Richard C. Dunn	(R) 3,571 171
States Attorney—
George E. Ford	(D) 3,758
Charles P. Taggart	(W. D) 3,545 213
For Circuit Clerk—
Thomas Mooney	(D) 3,728
Enoch P. Sloan	(W. D) 3,568 160
For Sheriff—
George C. McFadden	(D) 3,738
Samuel Crouse	(R) 3,535 203

The result in the nation and in the State was overwhelmingly Republican or Union—Lincoln being re-elected President; Oglesby, Governor; Moulton, Congressman at Large, with the other Republican candidates for State officers; Ingersoll was elected to Congress in the Fifth District, while McCoy and Dunn were elected to the Legislature and Taggart as State's Attorney by the aid of the Stark County vote, leaving to the Democrats the barren victory of holding the county offices in Peoria County.

What followed was but the subsidence of the storm and the calming of the troubled waters. Another short military campaign and the adoption of the Thirteenth Constitutional Amendment completed the great victory. In the latter great event the Representatives of Peoria bore a conspicuous part. On the 31st day of January, 1865, the final vote was taken in the House of Representatives upon the passage of the resolution to submit to the Legislatures of the several States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States declaring that "neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction," the same having already been adopted by the Senate. On that vote Eben C. Ingersoll, the Representative from the Fifth District of Illinois and at the time a citizen of Peoria, voted in the affirmative. Upon the announcement of the vote a scene of the wildest enthusiasm broke forth in the House, as well in the galleries as upon the floor, and it was several minutes before the Speaker, by vigorous pounding of the gavel, was able to restore quiet; but having succeeded in procuring a temporary lull, as related by General John A. Logan, "advantage was instantly taken of it by the successor of the dead Owen Lovejoy, Mr. Ingersoll, of Illinois, his young face flushing with the glow of patriotism as he cried, 'Mr. Speaker! In honor of this immortal and sublime event, I move that the House do now adjourn.' The Speaker declared the motion carried, and renewed demonstrations of enthusiasm."

Ingersoll rushed to the telegraph and sent home this dispatch: "John Brown's soul is marching on. The Constitutional Amendment passed to-day."

It was then late in the afternoon, and the amendment did not receive the approval of the President until the following day. It was then telegraphed by Senator Trumbull to Governor Oglesby at Springfield, who immediately submitted it to the Legislature. On the same day, the amendment coming to a final vote in the Senate, our Senator, John T. Lindsay, who had been elected as a Democrat, voted in the affirmative. It was carried by a vote of 18 to 6, three voting in its favor being Democrats. "This action of the Senate having been reported to the House, Alexander McCoy [Representative from Peoria and Stark Counties—Ed.] moved that the latter body concur. The previous question having been moved by Merritt L. Joslyn and carried, the joint resolution was adopted by a vote of 58 to 28. Six Democrats did not record their votes, all the others voted in opposition."

It now required only a few months' time to complete the great work commenced by President Lincoln, and to give the sanction of law to the measures of freedom which he had but imperfectly inaugurated in his Proclamation of Emancipation. That proclamation was not universal. It did not profess to emancipate the slaves in those parts of the Union which had remained loyal. Had the Union been restored and peace secured without a constitutional amendment, slavery would still have received protection under the American flag.

"But the hand that guides the destiny of nations suffered not the cloud of war to lift from our horizon until an amendment to the Constitution of the United States had been submitted to the people for adoption, whereby it was declared that slavery should not exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction." As soon as that was done, our armies met with immediate and triumphant success, the rebellion was crushed, the Union restored, slavery was abolished and universal freedom proclaimed to every man wheresoever the flag should float.

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE MONUMENTS.

The cloud of war had not yet been altogether lifted when the people of Peoria County began to consider the propriety of erecting memorials to those of their fellow-citizens who had yielded up their lives in defense of their country and their homes. This thought took definite form at the September meeting, 1865, of the Board of Supervisors, when Dr. John Emery, the Supervisor from Trivoli township, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That an appropriation of _____ dollars be made for the erection of a suitable monument to be erected in the Court House yard, upon which shall be inscribed the names of all the soldiers who have died from this county, with their company and regiment."

This resolution was referred to a committee appointed by the Chairman of the Board, consisting of Dr. Emery and Messrs. Matson and Day, with instructions to procure plans, specifications and estimates and report at the next meeting of the Board. This committee reported at the April meeting, 1866, that they had received several plans, each to cost about the sum of $5,000. The contract was awarded to Robert Campbell, of Peoria, who proceeded at once with the work. The site chosen was near the center of the Main street side of the square and about midway between the old Court House and the street. The corner-stone was laid with Masonic ceremonies, Grand Master Harmon G. Reynolds officiating.

The dedication of this monument, which took place on October 11, 1866, was the occasion of one of the greatest demonstrations ever witnessed in Peoria. It was felt that the laying of the corner-stone, although executed with all due decorum, had not afforded the returned soldiers or their friends an opportunity for testifying in an appropriate manner their devotion to their country or their veneration of the memory of those who had fallen in its defense. It was therefore resolved to make its dedication the occasion for a more patriotic demonstration. General Benjamin F. Butler was invited, and accepted the invitation, to deliver the principal oration. On the day appointed an immense concourse of people assembled at Peoria, consisting largely of war veterans and their friends, from this and neighboring States. A pleasing incident of the occasion was the presence of "Old Abe," the veteran war eagle which had been carried throughout the war by the Eighth Wisconsin Regiment, with whom some of the Peoria regiments had been brigaded in many a weary march, and with whom they had stood shoulder to shoulder in many a hard fought battle.

Early in the day the Peoria House, corner of Hamilton and Adams streets, where General Butler had his lodgings, was surrounded by an excited throng rending the air with cheers for the hero of New Orleans, and for their old commander, General John A. Logan, who also was present. A procession was formed, in which eleven companies of infantry and one of cavalry appeared, followed by an immense throng of civic societies, the Peoria Fire Department and citizens in carriages and on foot. After marching through the principal streets it finally reached the public square, where the exercises were to take place.

"Spencer's band played a patriotic air, after which Colonel R. G. Ingersoll introduced Rev. Mr. Pierce, of Elmwood, who opened the exercises with an appropriate prayer. Gilig's band played a dirge, after which the dedicatory poem by Mrs. P. R. K. Brotherson was read by Colonel R. G. Ingersoll."

After the reading of the poem the monument was formally dedicated by the veteran preacher and chaplain, Rev. Richard Haney, in a few simple but impressive and patriotic sentences. The oration was then delivered by General Butler. Passing in review some of the leading events of the war, and dwelling at some length upon the patriotic spirit of the people and the heroism of the men who had fallen in defense of the Union, the General closed with this eloquent and patriotic peroration:

"Is it not, therefore, fit that this monument should be raised to them, and upon it their names inscribed as a perpetual memorial to their children and ours, as an object of gratitude, of love, of emulation and of reverence to those that shall come after them? Our children, and our children's children, shall be inspired to deeds of heroic valor by their example in the field as soldiers; our posterity will bless their memories and keep them green forever, for their preservation of popular government and free institutions, as citizens. And we may not on this sad, though joyous occasion, forget the true officers, regular and volunteer, who led them, of whom, when we say they were captains worthy of such soldiers, we pronounce their highest eulogy. Yet the living will pardon us, and the dead will smile upon us, for putting before them in the foremost ranks of honor, as they stood before them in the front rank of battle, the true defenders of their country—the private soldiers."

When the new Court House had been erected, and it had become necessary to alter the grade of the square, this monument was removed to the Jefferson street front, where it still remains. At the time of the removal and before it was reset, the entire shaft was worked over, repolished and about fifty names added to those already chiseled on its sides, and the three lower bases, which had begun to show signs of deterioration, were replaced with new ones. This new work was done by Messrs. Trichel & Sons, whose names have since then become imperishably associated with a grander work of art situated in another quarter of the same square.

Although not costing so much money, nor so pretentious in appearance, as some that have since been erected in other counties, yet being one of the first of its kind, and undertaken when the county was yet struggling with the burdens imposed by the war, it affords a lasting testimonial of the devotion which the people of Peoria County bore to the memory of their patriot dead, and, from the time of its erection until now, it has marked the rallying spot where the living may commemorate their patriotic achievements.

Springdale Soldiers' Monument.

Among the Peoria men who fell at Fort Donelson was a young man named Henry Miller, whose remains were among the first to be brought home for burial. This circumstance brought out a suggestion in the "Transcript" of March 15, 1862, that a suitable lot be purchased for the burial of such of the soldiers as should lose their lives in the war without having a suitable burial place provided. The Directors of Springdale Cemetery immediately tendered the gift for that purpose of the best lot in the cemetery and of suitable size, subject to the only conditions that it should be governed by the rules and regulations of the Association governing other lot-holders, and that some person or persons be designated to keep it in order and repair. This offer was afterward made good in the donation of the choice lot on which the monument was erected and in which many soldiers lie buried.

The Women's National League of Peoria having, after a period of three years devoted to constant and assiduous labor, completed its work, its members turned their attention to the erection of a suitable monument to the soldiers who lay buried in their cemetery lot. Accordingly, on July 5, 1866, the League, by unanimous vote, merged itself into "The Soldiers' Monument Society," agreeing to donate the balance in its treasury ($82.16) as a nucleus towards a fund for the erection of the monument. The following extracts are taken from an account of its erection and dedication from the pen of Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng in Johnson's History.

"Very shortly after the disbanding of the Women's National League of Peoria the active members of the same organized a new society, having for its object the erection of a suitable monument to the soldiers who are buried in Springdale Cemetery. A lot of about one hundred and fifty feet square had been presented for the burial of the soldiers by the Cemetery Association, and the women composing this Association felt that it was a fitting close to their labors of love for their soldiers, to honor their final resting places.

"In the spring of 1870 the monument was completed and in its place. It was designed and executed by Mr. Robert Campbell, and cost $2,500. It is an imposing and attractive structure, and can be seen from all parts of the cemetery. It faces the burial place of the soldiers. Thirty-seven soldiers are buried in this lot at Springdale Cemetery. Each grave is provided with a small, neat headstone, with the name of the soldier carved upon it. There are three unknown graves. The Monument Association also paid into the 'Trust Fund of the Cemetery' one hundred dollars to ensure the perpetual care of this lot for all time. The dedication took place May 30, 1870, Decoration Day. It was a beautiful day and large numbers of people came in from the surrounding country to be present at the ceremonies. Many hundreds gathered at the soldiers' lot. The company were formed into a hollow square around the graves. A platform had been erected for the accommodation of the speakers and singers, and General Magee officiated as master of ceremonies. Thirty-four little girls, dressed in white, were detailed to strew flowers. They stood at the graves during the services, and at the proper time placed the flowers on the mounds tenderly and reverently. Prayer was offered by Rev. W. A. Spencer. Misses Ballance, Truesdale, Tilston and Mowatt sang the Decoration Hymn. The statue, which had been draped in the American flag, was then unveiled by Miss Annie Curtenius. The dedicatory address was delivered by Rev. S. A. Kingsbury, D. D. After this a soldier's requiem was sung by Mrs. Frank Field, Mrs. C. B. Allaire, Messrs. Charles F. Bacon and S. S. Patton."

The Chairman then introduced Colonel Lucien H. Kerr, who read a dedicatory poem written by Peoria's gifted authoress, Mrs. Frances B. M. Brotherson, for which reference must be made to her published works.

At the conclusion of the reading of the poem the benediction was pronounced by the venerable Rev. John Benson. In the afternoon of the same day impressive exercises were held at the Soldiers' Monument in the Court House Square, where an eloquent address was delivered by Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.

Shortly after the dedication of this splendid tribute to the heroes of Peoria County, an act of Congress was passed donating four pieces of artillery to the Association, which, in course of time, were placed at the four corners of the soldiers' lot in the cemetery, where they still remain mute defenders of priceless remains.

From the time of the dedication of the Springdale Soldiers' Monument until now, it has been the custom to hold the principal exercises of Decoration Day (May 30) at this spot, so hallowed to the hearts of all patriotic men and women. In these exercises the military organizations of the city, Bryner Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, the Sons of Veterans and all kindred organizations, together with the citizens of Peoria unite with the ladies of the Association. The monument at the Court House, as well as that at the cemetery, having been duly decorated, a procession is formed which first marches to that at the Court House, where a military salute is given, then to the soldiers' lot in the cemetery, where appropriate exercises are held, generally consisting of a prayer, an address, a military salute, the strewing of flowers on the graves and the placing of an American flag at the head of each.

For the purpose of perpetuating these annual ceremonies the Soldiers' Monument Association maintained its existence under that name until the year 1876, when it was again reorganized as the "Ladies' Decoration Day Association," under which name it still exists.

In the year 1884, there being then about forty graves in the lot [there are one hundred now—Ed.], it was found that additional ground would be needed before any more interments could be made. An agreement was entered into between the Ladies' Decoration Day Association and Bryner Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, whereby an adjoining lot, forty feet square, was purchased for $160, each Association to pay one-half the purchase money and one-half of the interment fee of $15 for each subsequent interment.

The Ladies' Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument.

As years rolled by and their ranks began to grow thinner by deaths and removals, the fires of patriotic devotion enkindled in their hearts by the torch of war, instead of dying out, continued to glow with increasing fervor, and the ladies of the Association longed to know if anything remained undone which might yet be done, to fittingly commemorate the names and services of those who had yielded to their country the full measure of patriotic devotion. Then the thought came into their minds that another monument was needed in some public place, one that should embrace all branches of the service in which the sons of Peoria, as soldiers or sailors, had borne a part. With them to conceive such a thought was to resolve to put it into execution, and to resolve was to accomplish.

The result of this resolve is the chaste and classic shaft which now adorns the south entrance to the Court House Square. The spot chosen is one of greater historic interest than was probably conceived of at the time of its selection, for it is within a few feet of the south angle of the old Court House, where, on the 16th day of October, 1854, Lincoln and Douglas met in their great joint debate, and within a few feet of the spot on which the National Blues, on the 13th day of April, 1861, erected their liberty pole and ran up and saluted the flag of their country. It was here also that Peoria's first contribution of her sons were drilled for the war, and within hearing distance of it were the stands from which the most distinguished statesmen had discussed questions of the most vital interest to the country.

But the spot was rendered still more historic by the dedication of this monument, in which the President of the United States and the members of his cabinet, with other distinguished statesmen, bore a conspicuous part. The President having planned a visit through the Western States, and the citizens of Peoria having undertaken the holding of a great corn carnival, it was so arranged that the visit of the President, the dedication of the monument and the opening of the carnival should take place on the same day, October 6, 1899. The occasion called forth probably the largest concourse of people from Peoria and the surrounding counties ever witnessed in the city. The scenes that day enacted cannot be better described than in the words of the local press of the ensuing day. From the "Herald-Transcript" the following extracts are made:

"The President of the United States was given a welcome such as no other city but loyal old Peoria could give. It was a display of pure, patriotic interest and an anxiety to do honor to the nation's Chief Executive. For many weeks Peorians and the people in surrounding cities and towns have been on the anxious seat over the coming of Mr. and Mrs. McKinley and their guests; and for two hours prior to the arrival of the train yesterday, Adams and Chestnut streets from the Court House to the Union Station were thronged with humanity. Every upstairs window contained as many faces as could be crowded into it, while many sought the roofs of buildings and other vantage points.

"The Presidential train was the finest and the most sumptuously equipped that ever came into Peoria. It consisted of the private car Campania, occupied by the President and his wife; the combination car Atlantic, the sleeper Ixion, compartment cars Chili and Omenia, the last two being for the use of the cabinet. In addition to the regular train was the Hawkeye, the Iowa Central's private car, in which the Peoria delegation went to Bushnell to meet the Presidential party.

"The procession started from Chestnut street, proceeded up Adams to Main, up Main, passing in review before President McKinley, to Jefferson, thence to Hamilton; up Hamilton to Madison; down Madison to Fulton; on Fulton to Jefferson, then to Franklin, where the procession disbanded.

"The children's parade proved a most interesting feature of the display. It is estimated there were from 5,000 to 6,000 school children in line. The girls wore white dresses and the boys blue caps. The girls carried arches of flowers and bouquets, and the boys flags. They rallied at the top of Hamilton street hill and marched down Hamilton street to the Court House, going around the square and past the reviewing stand."

A stand had been erected, covering the sidewalk, on the southwest side of the square, facing the monument. There the President and other distinguished guests, the ladies of the Association, committees in charge, the Mayor, the Chairman of the Board of Supervisors and others prominently connected with the ceremonies were seated, while the vast throng of not less than 70,000 people crowded around the stand and the monument, filling the entire space from the southwest side of Main street to the Court House with one densely packed mass of humanity. The exercises were opened with a most fervent prayer by Rev. John Weston, D. D., pastor of Calvary Presbyterian Church, himself a veteran of the war, after which the monument was unveiled by Mrs. Samuel A. Kinsey, Chairman of the Committee having charge of its erection, who had labored assiduously for six years towards the accomplishment of this worthy object. As the canvas dropped to the ground the sculptor, Mr. Fritz Triebel, overcome with emotion, burst into tears, and, amid the plaudits of the admiring throng, was grasped by the hand by the President of the United States and received his congratulations.

The monument was then inspected. The President and Cabinet officers, accompanied by prominent Peorians, marched around the monument, viewing it from all sides.

Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, President of the Memorial Day Association, then made the following address, which so aptly expresses all that was intended by the monument as to entitle it to a permanent place in the history of the County: "Mr. President and Friends:

"Early in the Civil War a band of loyal, patriotic women of Peoria organized themselves into a society, whose aim was to care for and honor the soldiers who had gone into the field of battle to support our Government and maintain our country, one and undivided. To this end they faithfully labored and prayed. Nothing was left undone which could minister to the comfort of our soldiers, or cheer their hearts. 'When the cruel war was over' these same devoted women continued this ministry, cherishing the memory of those who died, and erecting a monument to their honor in Springdale Cemetery, and also providing for the resting place within its hallowed grounds for such soldiers as had no family burial place, and have died in our midst in these years which have intervened. Each year as the 30th of May has come around they have strewn their graves with flowers, and lovingly recounted their deeds of loyalty and valor, and kept their memory green. But as years passed by and our ranks of faithful women were thinned by death, it came into the hearts of those who were left to build a soldiers' monument in our city which would last for all time, and tell to our children and children's children our loving gratitude to these brave men who took their lives in their hands and went forth to vindicate and sustain our Government in its hour of peril. Desiring to offer them only our very best, we appealed in loving confidence to those in authority in our county and city for means to aid us in carrying out our aims, to make this monument worthy of the purpose for which it was designed. To their eternal honor we gratefully record that they responded most generously to the appeal, and our county and city pledged each $10,000 towards the work. Providence raised up for us an artist of our very own, a gifted son of Peoria, who, though long dwelling among the classic associations of Italy, yet sprang with ardor to the work for his native city, and carried out our plan in a most satisfactory manner. It stands before us now, the embodiment of all we could desire, a permanent monument to the soldiers of Peoria County, both living and dead, an ornament to our beloved city long after we are laid to rest.

"In behalf of the Ladies' Memorial Day Association of Peoria, whose work for the soldiers has never ceased since the beginning of the Civil War, and with a heart full of thanksgiving to all who have made this offering possible to us, I present this Soldiers' Monument to Peoria County and City, through their representatives, the Chairman of the Board of Supervision, and his honor, the Mayor of the city, as a sacred charge. May it speak to all who see it of the honored men whose service for our country it commemorates, and may the principles for which their lives were given be enshrined in our hearts and minds forever."

Mr. John C. Kingsbury, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors, accepted the monument on behalf of the county in an exceedingly neat and appropriate address, and was followed by Mayor Henry W. Lynch, who accepted the monument on behalf of the city.

Colonel Martin Kingman, President of the Day, then delivered an address to the ladies of the Memorial Day Association, to his comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic and to his fellow citizens, which, after having recited with patriotic fervor the events which had led to the erection of this memorial shaft, concluded with the following eloquent peroration:

"Behold the completed structure! A marvel of stone and bronze, original in conception, perfect in finish, the creation of a sculptor famed on two continents, our own gifted, inspired Fritz Triebel.

"Comrades, a kind Providence restored us to our homes and peaceful pursuits. Gathered about this splendid shaft, these silent and pulseless figures, we thank God that we had some little share in advancing the cause for which our brothers gave their lives; we prize and love more than ever the dear old flag they and we defended, and which, floating to-day over Havana, San Juan and Manila, proclaims a victorious and expanding democracy, and is the promise of light and liberty to the darkened and the oppressed world around."

At the close of his address Mr. Kingman introduced to his fellow citizens as the "Citizen, Soldier and Statesman," William McKinley, President of the United States, who remained standing while being welcomed to the city by its Mayor, Henry W. Lynch. The President then spoke as follows:

"Fellow Citizens:—I am glad with my fellow-citizens of Peoria County and members of the Grand Army of the Republic, and Ladies' Memorial Day Association, to stand about the monument dedicated to patriotic service and heroic devotion in the holiest cause for which mankind ever engaged.

"This monument awakens sacred memories, fellow-citizens, and that is its purpose. It was erected by these patriotic women that it might for all time perpetuate a glorious page of American history. It tells the whole story of war, the siege, the march, bivouac, battle line, the suffering, sacrifices of the brave men who, from '61 to '65, upheld the flag. It tells of every page of history of that civil struggle, and tells of its triumphant consummation at Appomattox Court House, when Grant accepted the surrender of Lee, and we were kept a nation.

"I like this monument. I like this symbol I face to-day, 'the defense of the flag.' That is what we do wherever and whenever that flag is assailed, and with us war always stops when the assailants of our flag face Grant's term, 'unconditional surrender.' I do not intend to make a speech here to-day. I could add nothing of patriotic sentiment to that already uttered. I desire to express in this presence my appreciation, not of the tribute paid to the President of the United States, but the tribute the people of Peoria County have paid to the great defenders of the American flag in time of our great peril.

"You are proud of the monument. You should be proud of the demonstration which led to its unveiling. Six thousand school children of the city with flags in their hands and love of country in their hearts, and I could not but think, as I looked at the glorious procession, that my country is safe.

"God bless the school children of America. God bless the patriotic women of the United States and the patriotic band that carried this monument to a successful consummation.

"I congratulate you; you have everything in Peoria. I congratulate you that you found an artist of so high skill, born in Peoria, to execute this work.

"I thank you over and over again for this splendid demonstration of patriotism and devotion."

At the conclusion of the President's address the vast audience joined in singing "America." Lem H. Wiley, the Chief Cornetist of the Seventy-seventh Regiment Band, sounded "taps," and this splendid memorial to the patriotism of the sons of Peoria County was dedicated.

No more fitting conclusion can be given this chapter than the following tribute paid to the projectors of the monument by the editor of the newspaper from which these extracts are taken:

"The tall, graceful, dignified monument, occupying the southeast entrance to the Court House Square and challenging the attention and admiration of every passerby, is a most fitting symbol of the spirit of loyalty to the American arms that is enthroned in the heart and soul of Peorians. Primarily, it is a monument to the soldiers who have sacrificed their lives on battle fields that the sacred institutions of the country might live; but furthermore, it is a monument to the band of noble women who have striven for years, in the face of many trials and disappointments, to make it possible. Those who know of the struggle that they have been through, can appreciate what the magnificent shaft means to them. The sculptor has thrown all his skill and energy into the bronze groups that adorn the shaft, and it will always be a credit to the city, its designer and executor, and the Ladies' Memorial Day Association."

CHAPTER XXX.

PEORIA IN THE BLACK HAWK AND MEXICAN WARS.

The causes which led up to the Black Hawk war have been so thoroughly discussed, and the war itself has become so much a part of the current history of the State, as to render it unnecessary to repeat the same here. As Peoria County figured somewhat largely in that war, our attention will be directed principally to the operations in which its citizens took a prominent part.

On or about the 6th of April, 1832, Black Hawk crossed the Mississippi and commenced his march up Rock River Valley, accompanied by about five hundred warriors on horseback, while his women and children went up the river in their canoes. General Atkinson, who was then in command at Fort Armstrong, warned him against this aggression and ordered him to return, but he refused. It was his intention to enlist on his side the Winnebagoes and Pottawatomies, and, had he succeeded in his design, there was nothing to prevent a serious disaster to the white settlements in the northern and central portions of the State. Without revealing his full design to General Atkinson, he pleaded that he was going to join the Pottawatomies in making their corn crop for that season, his real design, however, being to wage a general warfare upon the whites.

On being informed of the movements of Black Hawk, Governor Reynolds, on April 16th, called for one thousand mounted volunteers from the central and southern portions of the State, to rendezvous at Beardstown on the 22d of the same month. The Governor was in daily receipt of information as to the operations of the Indians from Judge Young, Colonel Strode, and Benjamin Mills, at Galena, who urged speedy action for the protection of the frontiers.

Upon receipt of this intelligence two hundred men, under command of Major Stillman, were ordered to guard the frontier near the Mississippi, and two hundred under Major Bailey for the protection of the frontier between the Mississippi and the settlements on the Illinois. The country was in a great state of alarm, and independent volunteer companies were formed at every important station to patrol the country and to guard the homes of the settlers against threatened attack.

The troops ordered to rendezvous at Beardstown were duly organized into four regiments, an "old battalion" and a "spy battalion." This force left Beardstown on the 29th of April and marched up the Mississippi River by way of Oquawka. On arriving at the latter place, some delay having occurred in the receipt of supplies, messengers were dispatched to General Atkinson, at Fort Armstrong, who sent them a boat loaded with provisions. They then marched up the river to the mouth of Rock River, where they were all mustered into the service of the United States by General Atkinson.

In the meantime, an "odd battalion" of rangers, to be under command of Major Isaiah Stillman, had been organized and mustered into the service of the State. This battalion consisted of a company recruited in Peoria County, of which Abner Eads was Captain, William A. Stewart, First Lieutenant, and John W. Caldwell, Second Lieutenant; a company recruited in Fulton County, of which David W. Barnes was Captain, Thomas W. Clark, First Lieutenant, and Asa Langford, Second Lieutenant; and another company from Fulton County, of which Asel F. Ball was Captain, William D. Baldwin, First Lieutenant, and Daniel S. Baughman, Second Lieutenant.

The following is the full muster roll of Captain Eads' company:

"Inspector and Mustering Officer."

The foregoing copy differs somewhat from that contained in the Adjutant-General's Report published in 1882. This has two more names—William Egan and Thomas Tamplin—and has the appended certificates, which the other has not. It was copied directly from the original yet remaining in the office of the Adjutant-General, omitting some explanatory notes.

The report further shows that the mess, in which Jefferson Taliafero was, lost its camp-equipment, valued at $14; that Taliafero's horse, worth $35, died while in the service of the United States; that Wm. Eads lost a horse worth $55, Francis Sharp one worth $95, and that one belonging to Harris Miner had strayed or was stolen from Rock Island.

They were mustered into the service of the State at Peoria on the 23d day of April, but not into the service of the United States until May 16th, two days after the battle of Sycamore Creek or Stillman's Run, of which an account will be given. Another company recruited in Tazewell County, of which John Adams was Captain, Benjamin Briggs, First, and John O. Hyde, Second Lieutenant, marched with Major Stillman's battalion for a time, but it appears, from official reports, to have afterwards belonged to the Fifth Regiment under command of Colonel Samuel Whiteside.

The Peoria Company left Peoria on the 7th of May and marched directly for Dixon's Ferry where John Dixon, formerly Circuit Clerk of Peoria County, then resided. They were joined on the way by the two companies from Fulton County. They camped out three nights on the way, arriving at Dixon's Ferry on the morning of the 10th before any of the other troops had reached that point. From John Dixon they received information that Black Hawk had passed up the river with about seven or eight hundred Indians, who were not in a very friendly state of mind towards the whites. The other volunteers who had already been mustered into the service of the United States, arrived on May 13th and found Stillman's men in a state of almost uncontrollable anxiety to be led against the Indians.

Governor Reynolds, who was with the volunteers under General Whiteside (the regulars under General Atkinson not having yet arrived), seems not at first to have favored any such movement, but finally being over-persuaded, and still being Commander-in-Chief of the forces under Major Stillman, caused to be issued the following order: "Major Stillman: You will cause the troops under your immediate command, and the Battalion under Major Bailey to proceed without delay to the head of 'Old Man's Creek,' where it is supposed there are some hostile Indians, and coerce them into submission."

The accounts of what took place during the next day are so conflicting that it is almost impossible to arrive at the exact truth of the matter. The following, taken from the report of the Adjutant-General published in 1882, is probably as near the truth as it can be ascertained:

"On the following morning, May 14, 1832, they started with 275 men (Stillman's Brigade) and reached the 'Old Man's Creek' without adventure, pursuing their course up that stream some fifteen miles, to Sycamore Creek. They dismounted for the purpose of passing the night. While engaged in camp duties, three Indians, bearing a white flag, came into camp, and were taken into custody. These were soon followed by five more, who came near the camp, no doubt with the purpose of inviting an attack. (Or, as Black Hawk said, to see what would be done to the first three—Ed.) In this they succeeded and a party of Stillman's men immediately started in pursuit, while others followed as soon as they could mount, and soon three-fourths of the command had joined in an irregular chase across the prairie. The soldiers overtook and killed two of the Indians, and pursued the others to the edge of the forest. At this juncture Black Hawk, with about forty of his men, arose from an ambush, and, with terrific yells, charged on the assailants, who, in their turn, retreated in hot haste followed by the infuriated savages. The fearful din caused by the retreating soldiers and their pursuers caused a stampede in the remainder of the forces of the camp, and they all fled in an inglorious panic, and, in spite of the efforts of Major Stillman and others to rally them, the retreat was continued until they all reached the main force at Dixon. Major Perkins and Captain Adams, of Tazewell County, with about fifteen men, made a stand in which they somewhat checked the Indians, and thus saved the lives of many of the fugitives, who would otherwise have fallen victims to their pursuers. This rally cost the brave Adams his life, his body being found the next day near the dead bodies of two of the savages, whom he had undoubtedly slain before he himself was killed. As a result of the fight, eleven whites and seven Indians were killed, besides many wounded on both sides. (1)

"During the night of the battle, known since as 'Stillman's Run,' Governor Reynolds made a requisition for 2,000 men to be in readiness for future operations, while the utmost consternation spread throughout the State and Nation. Exaggerated reports of the numbers of the Indians, and the skill, ability, cunning and cruelty of Black Hawk, added much to the general alarm.

"General Scott, with 1,000 United States troops, was immediately ordered to the Northwest, to superintend the future operations of the campaign.

"When the news of Stillman's defeat reached the camp at Dixon, a council of war was held, and it was determined to return immediately to the battle field.

"The next morning, after obtaining ten oxen from Col. John Dixon, which were slaughtered and issued to the men without bread or salt, the whole force marched to the scene of the encounter. The dead were recovered, in most instances frightfully mutilated, and the fragments gathered together and buried; but, although Major Henry and his men effectually scoured the surrounding country for miles in every direction, the enemy could not be found and the whole force fell back to Dixon.

"The new levies, under the call of Gov. Reynolds, were to meet, some on the 3d of June at Beardstown, and the others on the 10th of the same month at Hennepin.

"The men first recruited now asked to be discharged, but, the Governor appealing to their patriotism, they agreed to remain from twelve to fifteen days longer, and the companies under Bailey (Covell's, McClure's, Pugh's and Adams'), with Stillman's Battalion (Captain Eads', Barnes' (2) and Ball's companies), were organized into a regiment known as the Fifth Regiment, or Whiteside's Brigade, under Col. James Johnson, and received into the service of the United States, and one part ordered to Ottawa for the defense of that place, while the others remained at Dixon to guard the stores, around which General Atkinson had caused embankments to be thrown."

Governor Reynolds wrote an account of the transaction which is slightly, but not in any material particulars, different from the foregoing. It is very evident that the whole force under command of Stillman was badly stampeded by a very few shouting and yelling Indians. That the whole matter was brought about by the too precipitate action of some of Eads' men is also apparent. It has been publicly charged that they were too freely supplied with rations of whisky, but this is denied by the survivors. They also deny that there was any violation of a flag of truce, but in this the evidence seems to be overwhelming. Black Hawk says that, after failing to obtain the assistance of the Pottawatomies and Winnebagoes, he was on the point of retiring across the Mississippi River, but when he learned of the approach of the volunteers, he sent a flag of truce to invite them to a conference, and that this flag of truce was violated by the killing of one of the bearers and holding the other two prisoners. In this he is corroborated by others, but the accounts are so conflicting it is deemed unwise to attempt a reconciliation.

Three days before this battle, on the 11th day of May, 1832, an order was made by the Judge of the Peoria Circuit Court that, so many of those persons summoned to attend at that term as Grand Jurors who were absent as volunteers in the service of their country, should be excused for not attending. The names of those who had been summoned but did not report were the following: Jesse Egman, John Hinkle, William Dufield, John Eno, Thomas Morrow, Jefferson Taliafero, and David Ridgeway. But only three of them, namely, John Hinkle, David Ridgeway and Jefferson Taliafero appear in the roll of the company. Two other names are reported as having been with the company—Steven Carroll as flag-bearer, and Dr. Augustus Langworthy as Surgeon, but the records fail to show these names.

The day after the battle the remains of the slain were gathered together and buried in a trench; but, being unmarked, the place of their sepulture was for many years unknown. But on November 14th and 15th, A. D. 1809, Rev. Robert Newlands, of Stillman's Valley, Illinois, assisted by J. A. Atwood, made an exploration of the supposed place of burial in which they were signally successful. An excavation was made and the remains of one soldier at the head of the trench were disinterred, which gave abundant proof that this was the place where all the slain had been buried. Soon afterwards an association was formed called "The Battle Ground Memorial Association," which became the purchaser of the battle ground, and it is the intention of that association to erect a monument to the memory of the dead. An appropriation for that purpose was recently made by the Legislature.

After the battle the Peoria men in Captain Eads' company were sent on scouting duty west of Dixon to the Mississippi River, thence along Henderson River and through Fulton County back to Peoria, where the company was discharged June 28, 1832.

The news of Stillman's defeat spread rapidly over the country as far south as Peoria and Fulton Counties. The people became terror-stricken and began fleeing from their homes to places of supposed safety. Mr. John Hamlin, of Peoria, was then in Springfield and, hearing the news of the defeat and of the flight of the people, hastened home with all possible speed. Arriving here he organized the people of Peoria for defense and arrested their flight by placing a guard at the ferry at the outlet of the lake, thus preventing a stampede in that direction. Measures were then taken to rebuild, or rather repair, Old Fort Clark, and it was put in a condition to afford some measure of defense, but the scare was soon over. Black Hawk, with his forces, instead of coming toward the Illinois River, beat a retreat toward the Wisconsin, and finally escaped across the Mississippi and the war was at an end.

Our neighbors of the northern part of Fulton County were put into a still worse condition of trepidation and fright than the people of Peoria County. Upon receiving news of Stillman's defeat, it was reported that three young men from the vicinity of Canton had been killed and a number of others wounded. This news not only cast a gloom over the community, but created such a feeling of insecurity among the bravest of the settlers as to amount to a panic. The excitement was intense. Stories of slaughtered families, of burnt homes, of captive women and children subjected to every fiendish indignity, were current subjects of conversation at every gathering. Meetings were called in every neighborhood and preparations for defense or refuge begun. Block-houses and stockade-forts were erected and scouts kept constantly in the prairies to the northward, to warn people of the approach of the Indians. One of these forts, consisting of two block-houses and a stockade, was built within the present limits of the city of Canton.

One of these scouts was Peter Westerfield, an old frontiersman, who was a Baptist preacher and a man of undoubted courage and experience on the frontier. Taking with him a Frenchman, the two rode north until they reached a point on the line between Farmington and Ellisville. There they discovered what seemed to be the trail of a recent party of Indians crossing the country, but which, in fact, was the trail of mounted white men going from Peoria westward. Having satisfied themselves that this trail had been made by a party of mounted Indians, they started back towards Canton to alarm the citizens and take measures for the safety of themselves and families. As they neared Big Creek north of the city they heard some shooting which they concluded must be that of the Indians murdering their neighbors, but which, in fact, was produced by some hunters and some parties shooting at a mark. Crossing the stream with all possible speed, they raised the cry of "Injuns!" "Injuns!" "The Injuns are killing Barnes's folks. Flee for your lives." On, on toward the fort they rode, and still their cry was, "Injuns! Injuns!" "The Injuns have killed everybody at Barnes's and Thurmans."

The whole country for miles around was then put in a state of alarm. From neighborhood to neighborhood, from grove to grove, as fast as the fleetest horses could carry the news, the people were aroused to the utmost activity of defense. All was the wildest confusion. Men sounded the dreaded alarm, women screamed, small boys, paled with fright, crept into the densest hazel thickets and fled for their lives. "To the Fort! To the Fort!" was now the cry, and soon the people were gathering, a pale, nervous, affrighted throng, within the little wooden enclosure which was their only hope of safety. Hastily constructed stockades were erected and breastworks thrown up, but when they came to look over the situation they found they had but few arms and little ammunition with which to defend themselves. The woman seemed possessed of greater presence of mind than the men, for, while the latter were so frightened they could not pour the melted lead into their bullet molds, a woman volunteered to do so and made them without spilling a drop of the melted metal. Other women prepared kettles of boiling water with which to greet their savage foes, while the men, at some places for want of better arms, cut cords of clubs from the adjoining forests.

Looking back at it from this distance of time, the whole performance seems like a farce; but to those who witnessed some of the exciting scenes which occurred in and about Peoria at the out-break of the late rebellion, it presents a scene of sober reality. The scare, however, was soon over, and when it was ascertained that there was no danger from the approaching foe and people had become restored to their sober senses, they were able to look back with amusement upon the ludicrous performance through which they had passed.

During the latter portion of his life, Major Stillman was a resident of Peoria County. He died, April 15, 1861, leaving his widow surviving him, to whom he left, by will, all his property, amounting to probably $4,500.

THE MEXICAN WAR.

Actual hostilities between Mexico and the United States began on the 24th day of April, 1846, when General Anita crossed the Rio Grande, surrounded a small detachment of dragoons, killed some of them and captured the rest. The news of this affair reached Washington in time for Congress to declare war on the 11th of May following, two important battles not then heard of having been fought on the 8th and 9th of the same month. The news of the out-break of the war reached Peoria by way of New Orleans about May 13th, ten days from that city. The Southern States were then reported to be ablaze with excitement; Louisiana had called out four regiments, and had appropriated $100,000, and one of the leading bankers had offered to advance to the Government $500,000 to defray the expenses of the war. In the next issue of "The Weekly Press," May 20, it was announced that, on the preceding day, news had been received through the "New York Journal of Commerce" up to 3:30 o'clock of the 11th inst., communicated by magnetic telegraph from Washington, that Congress had, on that day, declared that, by the act of the Mexican Government, a state of war existed between the two countries; that the President had been authorized to accept 50,000 volunteers, and that Congress had appropriated $10,000,000 for the equipment of the army—the volunteers to furnish their own clothes and horses, but, when mustered into the service, they should be equipped by the Government. The same paper had news from Point Isabel, the seat of war, up to April 24th, communicated through the "New Orleans Delta" of the 6th of May (the same date as that of the second battle, Resaca de la Palma). Such were the facilities for obtaining important news in the year 1846. The next issue of "The Weekly Press," May 27th, contained the President's Message to Congress and his Proclamation declaring war to exist between the two countries.

On May 25th, Governor Ford issued his proclamation calling for three regiments of volunteers from Illinois, each regiment to consist of ten companies, each company to consist of one Captain, two lieutenants, four sergeants, four corporals, two musicians and eighty men. But, inasmuch as the State forces were then in a disorganized condition, it was ordered that the commanders of regiments and odd battalions, or, if there were none, the Sheriffs of the proper counties, should order the regiments to convene en masse, and enroll therefrom the number of volunteers offering.

To understand this order, it seems proper to mention that the State was then divided into five military divisions numbered from one to five—the fifth embracing substantially the whole of the Military Tract—each having a Major General. Each division was subdivided into brigades, the Second Brigade of the Fifth Division consisting of the counties of Fulton, Peoria, Henry and Knox, and had, or was supposed to have, a Brigadier-General. Brigades were again subdivided territorially into regiments, to be designated by the superior officers as the population subject to do military duty should demand. It is inferred that Peoria County constituted a regimental district. At a subsequent date Governor Ford issued his General Order No. 2, directing that non-commissioned officers and privates should uniform themselves with blue jeans or cassinet jacket or roundabout, having standing collar and brass buttons, pants of the same material and glazed (oilcloth?) cap; the clothing to be paid for by the United States, the persons furnishing clothing to be secured on the pay-rolls of the volunteers.

This order appeared in "The Weekly Press" of June 3d, and, in the same issue, there was an order of Lincoln B. Knowlton, "Adjutant and Judge Advocate of the Peoria Regiment of Illinois Militia, per order of James B. McClellan, Major General Fifth Division Illinois Militia, in the absence of the commander of the regiment," requesting every able-bodied man in Peoria County liable to do military duty, to appear at the Court House Square, on Saturday, June 6th, to see who were willing to volunteer—not over one hundred men to be received. By a post-script, it was announced that two companies would be received from the Second Brigade of the Fifth Division. Strong appeals were made to the patriotic citizens of Peoria County not to be backward in furnishing her quota.

Unfortunately no account of this meeting has been discovered, but it is a well authenticated fact that a company of volunteers was raised at Peoria, of which William L. May was Captain. Materials for their uniforms were provided, and the ladies of the city and those living in the vicinity volunteered to make their pantaloons and roundabouts. When all was ready the company assembled at Peoria, were duly organized and drew their uniforms. The ladies presented them a flag in front of the Court House, and a steamboat was at the wharf ready to transport them to Alton, where they were expected to join a regiment and be mustered in. But just then an order was received from Governor Ford to disband the company, as the quota of the State was full. Of those who were thus ready to march on a perilous expedition at the call of their country only the following names have been ascertained: Allen L. Falmestock, Kellogg Barnes, John W. Williams, Riley L. Scott, Nebat Hinkle, Alexander Dufield,—all recruited in or near Timber Township by Mr. Falmestock. It has not been ascertained from whom the materials for the uniforms were procured, but the names of the makers have been preserved in an order made by the County Commissioners Court at its September Term, 1846, when it was "Ordered that the Treasurer pay the following persons the sums set opposite their respective names for services rendered in making roundabouts and pantaloons for volunteers." Then followed the names of twenty-seven ladies and four gentlemen (probably tailors), with the number and character of the garments made by each, the amount allowed for each garment being fifty cents, and the number of garments 50 round-abouts and 50 pairs of pantaloons.

Notwithstanding the disappointment suffered by these men who so promptly came forward as volunteers in their country's cause, it must be set down to their credit that it was no fault of theirs that Peoria County was not more fully represented in the Illinois troops in our war with Mexico. There was one, however, (DeWitt C. Frazer) who, unwilling to take the chances of the company from Peoria being accepted, joined a company recruited at Pekin, which was accepted and became Company C, in the Fourth Regiment, commanded by Col. Edward D. Baker.

In the year 1874 it was found that a considerable number of veterans of the Mexican War were residing at and in the vicinity of Peoria, and it was determined to organize them into a permanent society. A meeting for this purpose was held at the Court House on September 8th of that year, at which Samuel O. White presided and DeWitt C. Frazer acted as secretary. A State convention had been called to meet at Bloomington on the 23d and 24th days of the same month, and Harry Heinike, Richard W. Burt, John Drury, Samuel O. White, DeWitt C. Frazer, Thomas Sheppard and Robert Sullivan were appointed delegates. A resolution was adopted to organize a society for further re-unions, for social purposes and to consider their claims upon the Government for pension.

A second meeting was held May 18th, 1876, at which the name of "The Central Illinois Association of Veterans of the Mexican War" was chosen, a constitution was adopted, Samuel O. White was elected President, DeWitt C. Frazer, Recording Secretary, J. W. McKenzie, Corresponding Secretary, and R. W. Burt, Treasurer. R. W. Gilliam, of Chillicothe, was chosen to represent the Association at a National Convention to be held at Philadelphia.

At the Centennial celebration at Peoria, July 4, 1876, the Mexican War Veterans took a prominent part. Before the formation of the grand procession of that day they met at the Chamber of Commerce Building, where they were presented with an elegant United States flag in an address by Mrs. Hattie Milliken, sister of the Secretary, which was happily responded to by Capt. R. W. Burt. They then joined the procession, being conveyed in a wagon drawn by four horses beautifully decorated with American and Mexican flags, mottoes and portraits.

But the most interesting event in the history of the Association was a grand re-union held at Peoria on the 23d day of May, 1878, at which Gen. James Shields, the principal guest, was received by the citizens generally with becoming civil and military honors. The exercises of the day were held at Jefferson Park, where a welcoming address was made by Michael C. Quinn, Esq., which was followed by an historic address by General Leonard F. Ross, of Fulton County, and this by one by General M. S. Barnes of Galesburg. Capt. R. W. Burt then introduced General Shields, who spoke briefly to the audience then present, but, in the evening at Rouse's Hall, he delivered a more extended address.

Since then meetings of the Association have been held at irregular intervals, until the members have become so much reduced by death that the later meetings have assumed the character of social gatherings held at the residences of the members, at which the memories of scenes enacted on the tented field are kept alive. The last of these social gatherings was held January 11, 1901, at the house of Hon. Julius S. Starr, by invitation of Captain R. W. Burt, whose daughter, Mrs. Starr, entertained them with a dinner, which was partaken of by eight of the survivors of the Mexican War—all of them over seventy years of age. Their names and ages are as follows: John Gragg, 70; John Daily, 73; William Schroeder, 75; Thomas Sheppard, 77; William Tamplin, 76; John M. Guill, 77; R. W. Burt, 78; John Wertz, 83. After spending a pleasant afternoon in relating their old army experiences, their photographs were taken in a body.

CHAPTER XXXI.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Upon the organization of Pike county, and down to the time of the organization of Fulton County, the following officers were commissioned: On February 12, 1821, Abram Beek was commissioned as Judge of Probate, but resigned and was succeeded by Nicholas Hanson, who held the office until February 15, 1823. At an election, held April 2, 1821, Leonard Ross, John Shaw and William Ward were elected County Commissioners, Bigelow C. Fenton, Sheriff, and Daniel Whiffle, Coroner. On August 5, 1822, James M. Seeley, David Dalton and Ossian M. Ross were elected Commissioners, Leonard Ross, Sheriff, and Daniel Whiffle, Coroner.

Upon the organization of Fulton County, Hugh R. Coulton was commissioned Judge of Probate, February 15, 1823, and held his office until the organization of Peoria County; John Moffatt, David W. Barnes and Thomas R. Covell were elected County Commissioners, Abner Eads, of Peoria, Sheriff, and William Clark, Coroner. At the election of August 2, 1824, James Gardner, James Barnes and David W. Barnes were elected Commissioners, Ossian M. Ross, Sheriff, and Joseph Moffatt, Coroner. These all held their offices until the organization of Peoria County.

A full list of the County Commissioners by whom the affairs of the county were administered under the first Constitution, having been given in a preceding chapter, it will not be necessary to repeat them here. The first officers to be installed, other than those mentioned, were the Clerk of the County Commissioners Court, the Sheriff, Coroner, Judge of the Probate Court, Clerk of the Circuit Court and County Treasurer. Taking these up in this order, we find that Norman Hyde was appointed first Clerk of the County Commissioners Court, March 8, 1825. This office was continued under the Constitution of 1848, under the name of County Clerk, the incumbent being Clerk of the County Court and Clerk of the Board of Supervisors after that body succeeded to the administration of the affairs of the County, and, although the Constitution of 1870 provides for the election of a Clerk of the County Court, as well as a County Clerk, yet, by statute, these two offices are filled by the same person. This office has, therefore, been a continuous one from the organization of the County, although a part of the duties formerly belonging to the office now devolve upon the Clerk of the Probate Court. It is a remarkable fact that, in three-quarters of a century, it has had only twelve incumbents. The following is the list with the date of service of each:

Andrew M. Hunt, Nov. 10, 1832, to July, 1837.
George B. Parker (P. J. P.) (Office of Judge abolished), Aug., 1837, to Aug., 1839.
Edward Dickanson, (P. J. P.) Aug., 1839, to Aug., 1843.
William H. Fessenden, (P. J. P.), Aug., 1843, to Aug., 1847.
Thomas Bryant, (P. J. P.), Aug., 1847, to Nov., 1849.

At this point the office of Probate Justice of the Peace was abolished and jurisdiction in probate matters was conferred upon the County Courts created by the new Constitution. The Constitution of 1870, provided for the reorganization of Probate Courts in counties having 70,000 population. Peoria County having, in 1860, attained the requisite population, the office of Judge of the Probate Court was revived, the following being the list of incumbents since that period:

JUDGES OF THE CIRCUIT COURT.

Prior to the year 1853 Peoria County had formed part of a much larger Judicial Circuit than after that time. The Sixteenth Judicial Circuit was erected by act of the Legislature at its session of 1853. It embraced the counties of Peoria and Stark, which, thereafter until the years 1877, constituted one circuit. Onslow Peters, of Peoria, was the first Judge of the new Circuit. He opened Court for the first time in Peoria on the second Monday in May, 1853. He was re-elected at the regular election in June, 1855, but died in Washington City on February 28, 1856.

Jacob Gale was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Judge Peters, but, after serving a few months, he was succeeded by Elisha N. Powell in November of the same year.

Judge Powell served until the end of the term and was succeeded, at the June election in 1861, by Amos Lee Merriman. Judge Merriman resigned in the latter part of the year 1863, and was succeeded by Marion Williamson, who filled out the remainder of the term.

Sabin D. Puterbaugh was elected at the regular election in June, 1867, and held the office until March, 1873, when he also resigned. There being less than one year left of the unexpired term, the vacancy was filled by the appointment of Henry B. Hopkins. Judge Hopkins served until the regular election in the month of June following, when he was succeeded by Joseph W. Cochran.

At the same election John Burns, of Lacon, was elected Judge of the adjoining Circuit, composed of the counties of Tazewell, Woodford, Marshall and Putnam. By act of the Legislature of 1877 these two circuits were united and provision was made for an additional Judge. David McCulloch was elected to that office, and, since then, three Judges, under arrangements made among themselves, have held the Circuit Court.

In 1879 Judges Burns and McCulloch were re-elected and Ninian M. Laws succeeded Judge Cochran.

At the election of 1885 Thomas M. Shaw, of Marshall County, Nathaniel W. Green, of Tazewell County, and Samuel S. Page, of Peoria County, were elected. Judge Page resigned in 1890, and was succeeded for the remainder of the term by Lawrence W. James of Peoria.

At the election in June, 1891, Judges Shaw and Green were re-elected, and Nicholas E.

Worthington, of Peoria, succeeded Judge James.

At the election in June, 1897, Judges Shaw and Worthington were re-elected and Leslie D. Puterbaugh, son of Hon. Sabin D. Puterbaugh, succeeded Judge Green.

Judge Thomas Shaw, after faithful service of nearly sixteen years, died on April 15th, 1901, and, at a special election held in the month of August following, Theodore N. Green, son of Hon. Nathaniel W. Green, was elected to fill the vacancy.

The bench is now composed of Nicholas E. Worthington and Leslie D. Puterbaugh, of Peoria County, and Theodore N. Green, of Tazewell County.

STATE'S ATTORNEYS.

Prior to the year 1853, it does not appear that Peoria had any resident State's Attorney. After the formation of the Sixteenth Circuit, and until 1870, the State's Attorney was elected for the entire circuit. Since the adoption of the new Constitution of that year, each county has elected its own. The following is the list of State's Attorneys from 1853 until the present time, all of whom have resided in Peoria:

Elbridge G. Johnson.....	1853-1856
Alexander McCoy.....	1856-1864
Charles P. Taggart (resigned second term).....	1864-1867
George Puterbaugh.....	1867-1872

CHAPTER XXXII.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES - PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY—WEALTH -POPULATION AND POPULAR VOTE.

The great source of wealth to the people of Peoria County lies in its agricultural products. As already observed, the majority of the first settlers were farmers, who had come to Illinois to lay the foundations of their fortunes by taking up and improving the fertile lands with which the State so plentifully abounded. For some years, however, they had to contend against the one great hindrance to their prosperity, their remoteness from a suitable market. This rendered it possible for local dealers and merchants to practice extortion upon them by combinations to keep up the prices of their own commodities, while forcing the farmers to take the very lowest prices for the products of the farm.

To obtain relief from such impositions, attempts were made by the farmers to form combinations among themselves, which to us seem to partake somewhat of the nature of modern trusts, but which in reality were intended to counteract other combinations formed against their interests. An instance of this kind is found in "The Farmers' Exporting Company," a corporation chartered by the Legislature, February 23, 1841, at the head of which were Samuel T. McKean, Joel Hicks, Nathaniel Chapin, William Moffitt and Edwin S. Jones. It was to have a capital stock of $20,000, divided into shares of $25 each, of which no one person could own more than one hundred shares. It was granted power to purchase and export any of the products of the country and to sell the same, to import goods and to sell or otherwise dispose of them, to construct boats, ware-houses and other buildings, and to do all other things necessarily connected with the produce business. It was provided with all the officers, and endowed with all the powers, necessary for the orderly transaction of its business, and had power to increase its capital stock to $50,000. It was to be located on La Salle Prairie, and, when once located, it could not be changed to any other point without the consent of a majority of the stockholders expressed at a regular meeting. Whether or not this project ever took definite form by the organization of the company has not been ascertained. But the fact that the charter was asked for and granted, is indicative of one of the demands of the times.

Two years later, at a place a few miles west of Peoria, a meeting of farmers was held at which resolutions were adopted expressing, in the strongest terms, their indignation at the manner in which they were being treated by the merchants. Those who attended that meeting were strongly in favor of organizing a combination among themselves of a nature which, in more modern times, has taken form in "The Grange."

The farmers of Peoria County also took steps at an early day looking to the furtherance of their own interests by organizing an agricultural society. Competition was stimulated by offering premiums, not only for the best products of the soil, but for the best specimens of domestic animals, and also for the best samples of home manufactured commodities. The Peoria County Agricultural Society was formed in the year 1841 with Smith Dunlap, President, John C. Flanagan, Recording Secretary, Amos Stevens, Corresponding Secretary, and Peter Sweat, Treasurer; the number of members being 15. It held its third fair in the year 1843, the premium list of which is still to be seen. The number of members at that time was 300. The fair was to be held at Kickapoo-Town in the month of October, and, in order that all might have a good opportunity to prepare for the competition, the announcement of the proposed premiums was published in April. The premium for the best acre of wheat or corn was to be $5.00; for the best oats and barley, $3.00; for the best sample of cheese or butter, $2.00; for the best stallion, $5.00; for the best bull, $3.00; for the best boar, $2.00; other horses, neat cattle and hogs to receive lower premiums or certificates of excellence according to grade. In the department of home manufactures, the best specimen of 10 yards of sucker jeans or flannel was to receive $4.00, and a like sample of linsey woolsey, $3.00; the best one pound sample of flax-thread, or of colored woolen yarn, was to receive $2.00; the best one-quarter pound of sewing silk, $4.00; the best pieced quilt or woolen coverlet, $4.00; the best woolen hose, $2.00; the best quick-set hedge, $10.00; the best 25 lbs. sugar, made from corn stalks, $10.00. Premiums of not exceeding $1.00 were to be paid in one year's subscription to the "Prairie Farmer"; of not exceeding $2.00 in one year's subscription and one back volume of said publication; of $3.00 in one year's subscription and two back volumes, but if over $3.00, one year's subscription, two back volumes and the balance in cash.

Of the success attending this fair no information has been obtained. The newspapers were then too full of discussions upon political subjects, such as the tariff, the United States Bank, the prospects of Presidential candidates, Clay, Webster, Silas Wright, Martin Van Buren, James Buchanan and others of equal note, to give much attention to a county fair, held twelve miles from the county-seat. We have every reason, however, to believe it was held according to appointment, for only a few months later William M. Nurse & Sons, in advertising their celebrated fanning-mills, inform us they had had diplomas awarded them at the agricultural fairs held at Peoria and Ottawa.

The Society held its third annual meeting at the Court House on October 23, 1843, at which time William J. Phelps was elected President; John Armstrong and Samuel T. McKean, Vice-Presidents; John C. Flanagan, Recording Secretary; Thomas N. Wells, Corresponding Secretary, and the following named Directors: Daniel Hollis, John T. Eggleston, Amos Stevens, James Higgins, F. S. Kellogg, Jeriel Root, Aaron Oakford, Daniel Sanborn, Edison Harkness, Leonard Blood, Therrygood Smith and Andrew M. Hunt. It was resolved that stated meetings should be held on the first Monday of the March term and on the first Tuesday of the September term of the County Commissioner's Court.

Unfortunately no records of the transactions of this society have been found, and it is not known to the writer for how many years it kept up a continuous existence. There appears, however, to have been a society in the year 1854, having the same name, with Dr. Charles M. Buck as President, E. G. Johnson and A. B. Chambers, Vice Presidents; Thomas J. Pickett, Corresponding Secretary, and Isaac Underhill, Treasurer. About this time the Board of Supervisors began to take steps to purchase a location for county fairs, which finally resulted in the purchase, on March 1, 1855, of 20 acres of the ground now known as Taole Grove Addition to the City of Peoria, and, on October 6, 1856, in the purchase of 2.25 acres adjoining the same. These were fitted up as elsewhere described, and fairs were held there for several years.

In the year 1855, the society was re-organized under the name of the "Peoria County Agricultural and Mechanical Society," under which name it continued to hold fairs until about the year 1872. In 1857 the State Fair took the place of the County Fair. During the war, on account of military occupancy of the grounds and the damage thereby done to the property, no fairs were held. From fragmentary reports rendered to the State Board of Agriculture, it appears that successful fairs were held in 1867 and 1868, and subsequently until 1872. At the fair of 1870 there were 1,200 entries and $4,200 paid in premiums; in 1871, $7,000 were paid in premiums. In 1872 the Society had 300 members, and 200 volumes in its library. A fair was held October 1st to 4th of that year, at which there were 1,302 entries, and $3,970 paid in premiums. At this time the property was valued at $12,000.

On May 4, 1871, the Board of Supervisors had leased the grounds to the society for a period of 60 years upon a nominal rental of $1.00 per year, and as a further consideration, it was to hold one County Fair annually, or a State Fair, except in case of civil war, pestilence or famine or other cause rendering it impracticable or impossible. The fair grounds, on account of their remoteness from railroad stations, the difficulty of access and the scarcity of water, having been found unsuitable for State Fairs, a corporation called the "Peoria Fair Association" was formed in the early part of the year 1873, having in view the procurement of new grounds suitable for fair purposes. It had a capital stock of $50,000, and, soon after its organization, proceeded to purchase a tract of land of irregular shape lying on the easterly side of the Rock Island & Peoria Railroad, in sections 34 and 35 Richwoods, containing about 35 acres, and fitted the same up for the accommodation of the State Fair, as well as for county fairs. State Fairs were held there in the years 1873 and 1874. In 1876 the corporation reported the whole of its stock as having been issued and then held by eighteen shareholders, that it had real estate valued at $75,000 and 180 volumes in its library. At the fair held that year there were 1,840 entries, and $5,035 paid in premiums, besides $3,200 paid on buildings and other improvements. Other fairs are reported as follows: 1877, September 12-14—1,162 entries, $3,301 paid in premiums; 1878—no report as to entries, gate receipts, $4,584, other receipts, $1,670, premiums paid, $3,177, expended on grounds, $1,200; 1879—gate receipts, $8,380, other receipts $5,060, paid in premiums, $10,306. About this time the county fairs were superseded by local fairs held at Dunlap, Elmwood, French Grove and other places, under the auspices of "The Patrons of Husbandry."

Successful State Fairs were held at Peoria at which premiums were paid as follows: At the Old Fair Ground in 1857, premiums, $8,104; 1862, paid on the field trials, $715—no fair having been held on account of military occupation; at the new grounds called Jefferson Park, in 1873, premiums, $10,670; in 1874, premiums, $12,541; in 1881, premiums, $15,563; in 1882, premiums, $15,668; in 1890, premiums, $19,703; in 1891, premiums, $22,000; in 1892, premiums, $21,507. It stands to the credit of Peoria County that, at each and every one of these fairs, the State Department came out with a surplus of receipts over expenditures. Notwithstanding this fact, the Legislature has seen fit to locate the State Fair permanently at the State Capital, where it will, in all probability, have to be aided by appropriations from the State Treasury.

About the year 1873 a new movement called "The Patrons of Husbandry" was inaugurated throughout the country. It consists of a national organization, subordinate State organizations, county organizations and local organizations acting in concert, each lower one owing allegiance to the higher and called "Granges." In 1873 there were seven local or sub-granges organized in Peoria County; in 1874 twelve, and later eight, making twenty-seven in all. In 1874, the County Grange was organized and still maintains its existence. It became incorporated for business purposes, March 12, 1875. For sometime its meetings were held at Peoria, but in a few years they were changed, and since then have been held with the living sub-granges. The principal duty of the County Grange has been to look after the welfare of the sub-granges, especially their co-operative interests; in organizing and conducting, for some years, a grange co-operative store at Peoria; in organizing the County Farmers' Institute; in organizing an insurance company at Alta; in establishing and conducting an annual fair at Dunlap; in causing injunctions to be issued to prevent illegal use of county money, and in organizing united efforts to influence legislation in favor of industrial interests.

Of the original twenty-seven sub-granges, of which there was at least one in every township, only nine survive, namely: Orange, Dunlap, Radnor, Hallock, Alta, Salem, Princeville and Charter Oak. The work of the sub-grange is mainly social, educational and co-operative, the latter consisting in part of the making up of co-operative orders for goods for the supply of its members. Frequent meetings being held, at which measures of public or local importance are discussed, the grange has become the farmers' school, at which its young people are instructed not only in regard to matters affecting the people, but also in the rules of parliamentary law by which business may be transacted in an orderly manner. It is estimated that, since the time of their organization, Orange Grange has held at least 1,000 and Dunlap Grange 750 meetings.

These organizations have entirely superseded the old time agricultural societies with their annual county fairs, and have been instrumental in bringing organized efforts more closely in touch with the people, an object foreshadowed in the "Farmers' Exporting Association" of 1841, and in the resolutions of the public meetings in 1843 before alluded to.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Of the progress made in agricultural industry in Peoria County for the last half century, much can be learned from the following table, which has been compiled from the census of the United States, in decennial periods:

ASSESSED VALUATIONS OF PROPERTY.

The increase in the assessed value of property is shown by the following table compiled from the returns made by local assessors:

1. The figures for 1890 could not be collected without great labor.

2. For 1900 the figures show one-fifth of actual value. This would give a total valuation of $79,821,000. For previous years it would range from, say one-third in 1850, to one-fifth in 1889. For 1901 the total valuation is $89,599,945, one-fifth of which would be $17,919,989.

VALUATIONS BY TOWNSHIPS.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

PHYSICAL FEATURES AND NATURAL HISTORY.

(PREFATORY NOTE BY THE EDITOR.). The contents of this chapter are derived largely from the "History of Peoria County," published by Johnson & Company in the year 1886. It may be proper to state, however, that scientific research has since then been diligently prosecuted by members of "The Peoria Scientific Association," to whom the editor of that work was largely indebted for the matter there presented.

That portion appearing under the sub-title, "Coal Measures," was prepared by William Gifford, of Radnor Township, who, during a long life, had devoted his leisure moments to the study of his favorite science, Geology. He had collected a large number of rare specimens in Mineralogy, as well as in Geology, which he turned over to the Association.

That portion appearing under the sub-title, "Economical Geology," is taken from "The Geological Survey of Illinois," Vol. V, pp. 249-251.

The sub-title, "Flora," was prepared by James T. Stewart, M. D., who carefully revised the same for this work, a few weeks before his death. On that account, as well as for its intrinsic merit, it ought to be highly prized as an historical relic.

That portion appearing under the sub-title, "Fauna," was prepared by Frederick Brendel, M. D., under whose experienced eye the same has been revised for this work, and many corrections in orthography have been made.

The Editor desires to express his high appreciation of the scientific value of these articles.

PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY.

"The physical geography of Peoria County is very simple. It is situated about seventy-five miles north of the center of the State and is bounded on the north by Stark and Marshall Counties; on the east by the Illinois River, on the south by the Illinois River and Fulton County and on the west by Fulton and Knox Counties. It embraces an area of fourteen full townships and seven fractional townships bordering on the Illinois River, or about six hundred and thirty square miles. The Illinois River extends about fifty miles along its eastern and south-eastern borders. Kickapoo creek and its several affluents traverse the central part of the county, and drain the northern and southern portions. Spoon River intersects the northwestern townships for a distance of ten or twelve miles.

"The surface of the county was originally nearly equally divided into timber and prairie. The prairies are usually small, the most extensive ones being those in the western and northern portions of the county and extending over the highest lands between the water courses. There is also a narrow strip of prairie extending along the river from the north-east corner of the county to the outlet of the Kickapoo, having a width varying from one to three miles. This belt of prairie covers a sandy terrace below the river bluffs, and is elevated from thirty to fifty feet above low water level."

GEOLOGY.

"The cretaceous and tertiary periods are not represented in this or adjacent counties. They were probably lost by denudation, together with some of the upper coal veins, during the long and turbulent period.

"The four divisions of the Quaternary are well defined. They rest directly on the upper carboniferous, a coal measure. The alluvial deposits are confined chiefly to the right bank of the Illinois River, forming a terrace of about twenty-four square miles, called LaSalle prairie, one of the best corn-producing sections of Illinois.

COAL MEASURES.

"The great geological feature of Peoria County consists in its coal measures, which are co-extensive with its borders. Only two veins (four and six) are worked to any extent. Coal from vein four is brought to the surface by horizontal tunnels at an expense of one cent per bushel, and half a cent in localities where it can be stripped. At no place in Illinois, or perhaps in the world, can coal be mined and brought to market so cheaply as in this county. It is now delivered to consumers in the city of Peoria for one dollar and fifty cents per ton. The thickness of this vein is from three feet, ten, to four feet, eight inches, and is generally covered with a ferruginous shale and concretions of bi-sulphuret of iron, richly stored with marine fossils, which are eagerly sought for by scientists. Its horizon is thirty-two feet above low water of the Illinois River.

"Coal vein six is also worked with little labor, by horizontal tunnels. It is sixty-two feet above coal vein four, and is a good blacksmith coal, makes a hard vitreous coke, and is exclusively used in Peoria and contiguous cities for making gas. It contains but little pyrite, and in most localities has a good limestone covering. One distinctive mark of this vein is a clay seam, or parting, from one to two inches thick, dividing the coal horizontally into two equal sections. The fossils overlaying this vein are well preserved and the species numerous. Among the most common are Nyalena angulata, Pleurotomania carbonana, Solenomia radiata, and Productus pratteninus.

"Coal vein five has no reliable outcrop in this county, but its horizon is well defined in the towns of Limestone, Jubilee, and Kickapoo by its characteristic fossils—Fusulina ventricosa, Hemphinites crasa, Chonetes messeloba, etc. The horizon of this vein has furnished a number of fossil coal plants, which have been figured and described by Leo Lesquereux, and are now being published by the State of Pennsylvania.

"Coal veins seven, eight and nine are the only other veins represented in this county above the Illinois River, and they are too thin for mining and not easily stripped coal.

"The horizon of coal vein nine in this county has given to paleontologists the most perfect coal-measure fossil found in this State, if not in the world. Coal vein three lies one hundred and thirty-three feet below four, consequently about one hundred and twenty feet below the Illinois River. It is about three feet thick, and is considered a good coal. It is not worked in this county. One hundred and twelve feet below three, a coal vein was reached in Voris' boring—opposite to Peoria—three feet thick, which is considered coal vein one of the Illinois field, and the base of the coal measure resting on the conglomerate, twenty feet above the St. Louis limestone. Coal vein two has not been explored in Peoria County, but crops out on Spoon River in the southwest part of Fulton County.

ECONOMICAL GEOLOGY.

"Sandstone of good quality may be obtained from the beds overlying coal No. 4, which at some points on the Kickapoo, is fully twenty feet in thickness and it outcrops at many points under very favorable conditions for quarrying. The rock is a brown micaceous, and partly ferruginous, sandstone, in massive beds, some of which are two feet or more in thickness. It presents a bold escarpment at many points where it outcrops, indicating a capacity for withstanding well the ordinary influences of the atmosphere. The ferruginous layers harden very much on exposure, and would form the best material for bridge abutments, and for all other purposes where a rock was required to withstand well the influences of frost and moisture.

"On Aiken's and Griswold's land on the south side of the Kickapoo, on section twenty-four (in Limestone township—Ed.) this sandstone has been somewhat extensively quarried, and the bed presents a perpendicular face of solid sandstone fully twenty feet in thickness. It is rather soft when freshly quarried and can be easily dressed, and splits freely into blocks suitable for building and for foundation walls. These quarries are located just above the level of the railroad grade, and very conveniently situated for the transportation of the stone by railroad to the city of Peoria, or wherever else it might be in demand.

"At Lonsdale's quarries, on Section 14, Town 8, N. R. 7 East, the lower part of the limestone affords a durable building stone, though the layers are not usually more than from four to six inches thick. This rock is in common use in this part of the county for foundation walls, and there are several small buildings in this neighborhood constructed of this material. That portion of the beds which affords a building stone is from four to six feet in thickness.

"At Chase's quarries, three miles north-east of Princeville, the limestone is nearly twenty feet in thickness, and though for the most part thin-bedded, yet the greater portion of it can be used for foundation walls, flagging, etc., and is the only building stone available in that portion of the county. The thickest layers are at the bottom of the bed here, as well at Lonsdale's, but the middle and upper portion is more evenly bedded at this point, and may be quarried in thin, even slabs of large size.

"The limestone over coal No. 6 may answer for rough foundation walls where it can be protected from the atmosphere, but is generally too argillaceous to make good building stone.

IRON ORE.

"Concretionary bands of iron ore occur in the shales overlaying coals No. 4 and 7, but not in sufficient quantity to be of any economical importance. In the south part of the county, concretions of iron and clay, the former mostly in the form of the bi-sulphuret, are quite abundant in the roof shales of No. 4 coal. Some of these concretions are two feet or more in diameter.

CLAYS.

"No beds of fire or potter's clay were found in this county in connection with the coal seams that appear to be sufficiently free from foreign matters to be of much value, but excellent brick clays are abundant, the sub-soil clays over a large portion of the uplands throughout the county being used for this purpose, and furnishing an abundant supply of brick of good quality at a moderate cost. The best beds of fire and potter's clay known at the present time in this State, are associated with coal No. 1, of our general section of the Illinois Valley coals, and, should a shaft be sunk to that horizon in this county, good clays may probably be found here, and mined successfully in connection with these lower coals.

SAND.

"The modified drift deposits, forming the terrace upon which the city of Peoria is mainly built, will furnish an inexhaustible supply of sand of various qualities adapted to the varied economical uses to which this material is applicable, and it will also afford an excellent moulder's sand, in quantities sufficient for the supply for all the adjacent region.

GRAVEL.

"An inexhaustible supply of clean gravel may be obtained from the gravel beds forming the bluffs at Peoria, and along the north side of the Kickapoo for a distance of eight or ten miles above the outlet of that stream. All the railroads in the State might obtain here an ample supply of ballast for their road beds, without greatly diminishing the amount of this material to be found in this county.

TIMBER.

"There is an ample supply of timber in this county, the proportion of timber and prairie-land being originally about the same. The timbered land is mostly confined to the ridges and valleys of the streams, though occasionally fine groves are met with on the level land adjacent to the prairie. The growth on the upland is mostly black and white oak, pignut and shell-bark hickory, elm, linden, wild cherry, honey locust, wild plum and crab apple; while on the bottom lands and the slopes of the hills, we find white and sugar maple, black and white walnut, pecan, cottonwood, sycamore, ash, red birch, coffee-nut, hackberry, mockernut, hickory, post-Spanish and swamp-white-oak, red-bud, dogwood, persimmon, mulberry, serviceberry, buckthorn and three or four varieties of willow and box alder.

SOIL AND AGRICULTURE.

"As an agricultural region this county ranks among the best in this part of the State. The western and northern portions of the county are mostly prairie, and generally level or gently rolling. The soil is a dark chocolate-colored loam, rich in organic matters, and producing abundant crops annually of corn, wheat, rye, oats and barley; and, with judicious cultivation, this kind of soil will retain its fertility for an indefinite period of years, without the application of artificial stimulants. On the more broken lands adjacent to the streams, the soil is of a lighter color, but when it is predicated upon the marly beds of the loess, it is still productive, and scarcely inferior to the best prairie soils. Where the soil overlies the yellow drift-clays, the timber is mostly white-oak and hickory; the soil is thin, and would be greatly improved by the annual liberal application of manure. These lands, however, produce fine crops of wheat and oats, and are excellent for fruit orchards and vineyards. The soil on the terrace and bottom lands is a sandy loam, and generally very productive."

1. CHEIROPTERA.—Atalapha Norveboracensis, the red bat; Atalapha cinereus, the hoary bat; Vespertilio subulatus, the little brown bat.

2. PAPACES.—Lynx rufus, the wild cat; Canis occidentalis, the gray wolf; Vulpes virginianus, gray fox; Vulpes fulvus, the common fox, which is here not common; Putorius Norveboracensis the weasel; Putorius zizon, the mink; Lutra canadensis, the otter, now nearly extinct in this vicinity; Mephitis mephitis, the skunk; Procyon lotor, the raccoon; Scalops argentatus, the prairie mole and two shrews, very small mouse-like carnivorous animals; Blarina talpoides and Bl. exillipes.

3. MARSUPIALIA.—Didelphys virginiana, the opossum.

4. RODENTIA.—Sciurus Ludovicianus, the western fox squirrel; Sciurus carolinensis, the gray squirrel; Pteromys volucella, the flying squirrel; Spermophilus Franklinii, the gray prairie squirrel; Spermophilus tridecemlineatus, the striped prairie squirrel; Tamias striatus, the chipmunk or fence mouse; Arctomys monax, the wood-chuck; Fiber zibethicus, the muskrat; Geomys bursarius, the gopher; Talpus Hudsonicus, the jumping mouse; Hesperomys leucopus, the deer mouse; Arvicola riparia, the meadow mouse; Lepus sylvaticus, the gray rabbit. The two most common, the rat and the house mouse, are immigrants.

5. RUMINANTIA.—Cervus virginianus, the deer.

II. BIRDS.

1. RAPTORES.—Aquila canadensis the golden eagle, which is very scarce; Haliaeetus leucocephalus, the bald eagle; Pandion carolinensis, the fish hawk; Falco columbarius, the pigeon hawk; Falco sparverius, the sparrow hawk; Accipiter cooperi, cooper's hawk; Accipi- ter fuscus, the sharp-shinned hawk; Buteo borealis, the red-tailed hawk; Buteo lineatus the red-shouldered hawk; Nauclerus furcatus, the swallow-tailed hawk; Circus hudsonicus, the marsh hawk; Cathartes aura, the turkey buzzard; Bubo virginiana, the great horned owl; Scops asio, the mottled owl; Otus Wilsonianus, the long eared owl; Brachyotus Cassini, the short-eared owl; Syrnium nebulosum, the barred owl; Nyctea nivea, the snowy owl.

2. SCANSORES.—Coccyzus americanus, the yellow-billed cuckoo; Coccyzus erythrophthalmus, the black-billed cuckoo; Hylatomus pileatus, the pileated woodpecker; Picus villosus, the hairy; Picus pubescens, the downy; Sphyrapicus varius, the yellow-bellied; Centurus carolinus, the red-bellied; Melanerpes erythrocephalus, the red-headed, and Colaptes auratus the golden-winged woodpecker.

3. INSESSORES.—Trachilus colubris, the humming bird; Chaetura pelagica, the chimney swallow; Antrostomus vociferus, the whippoorwill; Chordeiles Popetue, the night hawk; Ceryle Alcyon, the kingfisher; Tyrannus carolinensis, the king bird; Myiarchus crinitus, the great crested flycatcher; Sayornis fuscus, the pewee; Cantopus citreus, the wood pewee; Turdus mustelinus, the wood thrush; Turdus fuscescens, Wilson's thrush; Turdus migratorius, the robin; Sialia sialis, the blue bird; Regulus calendula, the ruby-crowned wren; Regulus Satrapa, the golden-crowned wren; Antus ludovicianus, the tit lark; Mniotilta varia, the black and white creeper; Protonotaria citrea the prothonotary warbler; Geothlypis trichas the Maryland yellow throat; Oporornis formosus, the Kentucky warbler; Icteria virens, the yellow-breasted chat; Helmintherus termitorus, the worm-eating warbler; Helminthophaga Pimus, the blue-winged yellow warbler; Helminthophaga peregrina, the Tennessee warbler; Sciurus aurocapillus, the golden-crowned thrush; Sciurus norveboracensis, the water thrush; Dendroica virens, the black-throated green warbler; Dendroica coronata, the yellow-rumped warbler; Dendroica Blackburniae, Blackburnian warbler; Dendroica castanea, the bay-breasted warbler; Dendroica pinus, the pine-creeper warbler; Dendroica pennsylvanica, the chestnut-sided warbler; Dendroica coerules, the blue warbler; Dendroica striata, the black poll warbler; Dendroica aestiva, the yellow warbler; Dendroica palmarum, the yellow red poll; Myiodioctes mitratus, the hooded warbler;

Scotophaga ruticilla, the red start; Pyrranga rubra, the scarlet tanager; Pyrranga aestiva, the summer red-bird; Hirundo horreorum, the barn swallow; Hirundo bicolor, the white-bellied swallow; Cotyle riparia, the bank swallow; Cotyle serripennis, the rough-winged swallow; Progne purpurea, the purple martin; Ampelis garrulus, the wax-wing; Ampelis cedrorum the cedar bird; Collyrio borealis, the butcher bird; Collyrio cuculitoroides, the white-humped shrike; Vireo olivaceus, the red-eyed fly-catcher; Vireo noveboracensis, the white-eyed fly-catcher; Vireo solitarius, the blue-headed fly-catcher; Vireo flavifrons, the yellow-throated fly-catcher; Mimus carolinensis, the cat-bird; Harporhynchus rufus, the brown thrush; Troglodytes Aedon the house wren; Troglodytes hyemalis, the winter wren; Certhia Americana, the American creeper; Sitta carolinensis the white-bellied nuthatch; Sitta canadensis, the red-bellied nuthatch; Poliophtila coerulca, the blue-gray fly-catcher; Lophophanes bicolor, the tufted tit mouse; Parus atricapillus, the black cap tit-mouse; Eremophila cornuta, the sky-lark; Hesperiphona vespertina, the evening grosbeak (only once seen, probably a straggler from the Northwest); Carpodacus purpureus, the purple finch; Chrysomitris tristis, the yellow bird; Plectrophanes nivalis the snow bunting; Chondestes grammaca, the lark finch; Junco hyemalis, the snow bird; Spizella monticola, the tree sparrow; Spizella socialis, the chipping sparrow; Melospiza melodia, the song sparrow; Passerella iliaca, the fox-colored sparrow; Euspiza americana, the black-throated bunting; Guiraca Ludoviciana, the rose-breasted grosbeak; Cyanospiza cyanea, the Indigo bird; Cardinalis virginianus, the cardinal; Pipilo erythrophthalmus, the ground robin; Melothrus pecoris, the cow-bird; Agelaius phoeniceus, the red-winged black bird; Sturnella magna, the meadow lark; Icterus spurius, the orchard oriole; Icterus Baltimore, the Baltimore oriole; Scolecophagus ferrugineus, the rusty black bird; Quiscalus versicolor, the crow black bird; Corvus Americanus, the crow; Cyanura cristata, the blue jay.

4. RASORES—Ectopistes migratoria, the passenger pigeon; Zenaidura carolinensis the common dove; Melcagris gallopavo, the wild turkey; Cupidonia cupido, the prairie chicken; Ortyx virginianus, the quail.

5. GRALLATORES—Grus americanus, the whooping crane; Grus canadensis, the sand-hill crane; Herodias egretta, the white heron; Ardea herodias, the great blue heron; Ardetta ciliaris, the least bittern; Botaurus lentiginosus, the bittern; Butorides virescens, the green heron; Nyctardea gardeni, the night heron; Tantalus loculator, the wood ibis; Ibis ordii, the glossy ibis (both stragglers from the South); Charadrius virginicus, the golden plover; Aegialitis vociferus, the killdeer; Aegialitis semipalmatus, the king plover; Phalaropus wilsonii, Wilson's phalarope; Philohela minor, the woodcock; Gallinago wilsonii, the English snipe; Macrorhamphus griseus, the red-breasted snipe; Macrorhamphus scolopaceus, the gray snipe; Tringa maculata, the jack-snipe; Tringa Wilsonii, the least sand-piper; Ereunetes petrificalus, the semi-palmated sand-piper; Symphemia semipalmata, the willet; Gambetta melanoleuca, the telltale; Gambetta flavipes, the yellow legs; Rhyacophilus solitarius, the solitary sand-piper; Tringoides macularius, the spotted sand-piper; Actiturus Bortramius, the field plover; Limosa fedoa, the marbled god-wit; Numenius longirostris, the long-billed curlew; Rallus elegans, the marsh hen; Rallus virginianus, the Virginia rail; Porzana carolina, the common rail; Fulica americana, the coot.

6. NATATORES—Cygnus buccinator, the trumpeter swan; Anser hyperboreus, the snow goose; Anser gambelii, the white-fronted goose; Pernicla canadensis, the Canada goose; Anas boschas, the mallard; Anas obscura, the dusky duck; Dafila acuta, the sprick-tail; Nettion carolinensis, the green-winged teal; Querquedula discors, the blue-winged teal; Spatula clypeata, the spoon-bill; Chaulelasmus streperus the gad-wall; Marila americana, the widgeon; Aix sponsa, the summer duck; Fulix marila, the big black-head; Fulix affinis, the blue-bill; Fulix collaris, the ring-necked duck; Aythya americana, the red-head; Aythya callisneria, the canvas-back; Bucephala americana, the golden eye; Bucephala albeola, the buffle-head; Mergus americanus, the sheldrake; Mergus serrator, the red-breasted merganser; Lophodytes cucullatus, the hooded merganser; Pelecanus erythrorhynchus, the pelican; Graculus dilophus, the double-crested cormorant; Larus argentatus, the herring gull; Larus delawarensis, the common gull; Sterna regia, the royal tern; Sterna wilsonii, Wilson's tern; Hydrochelidon plumbea, the short-tailed tern; Columbus torquatus, the loon; Podylimbus podiceps, the pied-bill grebe.

In the first volume of Trans. of Ill. Agr. Soc., two lists of Illinois birds were published, one for Cook County, by Robert Kennicott, and one for the southern part of the State by Henry Pratten. From these two lists and that above, which contains 181 species of birds, it appears that in the State of Illinois 239 species have been observed, and that we may add to the Peoria list 21 species which, though not yet noticed, occur as well south as north of Peoria. About 380 is the number of species in the United States east of the Mississippi River, including all the numerous swimming birds, which, partly from far North, visit periodically our coasts.

III. REPTILES.

1. TESTUDINATA—Aspideronectes spinifer, the soft-shell turtle; Chelydra serpentina, the snapping turtle; Aromochelys odoratus, the musk tortoise; Cinosternum pennsylvanicum, the mud tortoise; Pseudemys elegans, the elegant tortoise; Malacoclemmys geographicus, the map turtle; Malacoclemmys pseudo geographicus, another map turtle; Chrysemys picta var marginata, the painted turtle; Chrysemys Bellii, Bell's tortoise.

2. LACETILIA—Cnemidophorus scrlincatus, the lizard, and Ophosaurus ventralis, the glass snake, a snake-like lizard without feet.

3. OPHIDIA—Crotalus horridus, the banded rattlesnake; Caudisona tergemina, the prairie rattlesnake; Ancistrodon contortrix, the copperhead (only these three are poisonous, all the others are harmless and beneficial); Ophibolus eximus, the milk snake; Ophibolus getulus var sayi, the king snake; Chlorosma vernalis, the green snake; Coluber obsoletus, the pilot snake; Pituophis melanoleucus, the bull snake; Bascanion constrictor, the black snake; Euntainia sirtalis and Euntainia proxima, two brown snakes; Storeria occipito maculata, the brown snake; Storeria dekayi, the small brown snake; Tropidonotus sipedon, the water snake, and the Variety erythrogaster; Heterodon platyrhinus, the blowing viper; Coluber vulpinus, the racer.

4. BATRACHIANS—Necturus lateralis, the mud puppy; Amblystoma tigrinum, the tiger triton; Amblystoma punctatum, the newt; Bufo lentiginosus Americanus, the toad; Hyla versicolor, the tree frog; Rana halccina, the leopard frog; Rana catesbiana, the bull frog.

IV. FISHES.

Alvordius maculatus, the blenny darter; Alvordius phoxocephalus, the sharp-nosed darter; Bolcosoma maculatus, the Johnny darter; Pocillithys variatus, the blue darter; Perca

americana, the yellow perch; Stizostethium canadense, the sand pike; Stizostethium vitreum, the glass eye; Micropterus salmoides, the small-mouthed black bass; Chaenobryttus gulosus, the black sunfish; Apomotis cyanellus, the blue-spotted sunfish; Xenotis megalotis, the blue-and-orange sunfish; Eupomotis aurcas, the common sun-fish; Pomoxys nigromaculatus, the grass bass; Pomoxys annularis, the croppie; Haplodonotus grunions, the sheep head; Labidesthes sicculus, the silversides; Zygonectes dispar the striped minnow; Esox lucius, the pike; Esox salmoncus, the pickerel; Hyodon terigisus, the moon-eye; Dorosoma cepedianum, the hickory shad; Pomolobus chrysolucus, the Ohio shad; Campostoma anomalum, the stone lugger; Hyporhyntus notatus, the blunt-nosed minnow; Hybognathus argyritus, the silvery minnow; Alburnops storerianus, Storer's minnow; Alburnops haematurus, Luxilus cornutus, the shiner; Photogenis analostanus, the silver fin; Lythrurus dis-placmuis, the red fin; Notropis atherinoides, the emerald minnow; Notemigonus chrysolucus, the bream; Semotilus corporalis, the horned dace; Myxostoma duquesnii, the red horse; Myxostoma aureolum, the small-headed mullet; Myxostoma telatum, the small-mouthed red-horse; Minytrema melanops, the spotted sucker; Catostomus Com-mersonii, the common sucker; Cycleptus elongatus, the black horse; Carpiodes vilifer, the spear-fish; Ichthyobus bubalus, the brown buffalo; Bubalichthys urus, the black buffalo; Bubalichthys cyanellus, the small-mouthed buffalo; Ichthaclurus punctatus, the blue cat; Amiurus vulgaris, the long-jawed cat; Amiurus catus, the bull head; Amiurus Nanthocephalus, the yellow-headed cat; Pelodichthys olivaris, the mud cat; Noturus flacus, the yellow-stone cat; Noturus sialis, the chubby-stone cat; Anguilla rostrata, the eel; Amia calva, the dogfish; Lepidosteus ossesus, the gar pike; Lepidosteus platystomus, the short-nosed gar; Polyodon folium, the spoon-bill; Aci-penser maculosus, the spotted sturgeon; Schaphi-rynchofs platyrhynchus, the shovel-nosed sturgeon; Ammocoetes argenteus, the silvery lamprey.

The whole number of vertebrates, as far as known, in this country is 304; mammals, 30; birds, 181; reptiles, 28; batrachians, 7; and fishes, 58. There are not included as immigrants the rat, the house-mouse, and the house-sparrow, which was lately introduced, but will soon prove a nuisance.

INVERTEBRATES.

It would fill a volume to enumerate the species of this division of the Animal Kingdom. It will be sufficient to have named the most prominent of each class and family. Insects are very numerous, often more than our farmers and gardeners like. The devastations in agriculture and horticulture are caused by the periodical increase of certain species of grasshoppers, Cicadas, beetles, lepidopterous and dipterous larvae, which, in an epidemic manner, overrun large districts, are often enormous. About the year 1836 nearly all our locust trees, at that time the most general shade tree, were destroyed by the larvae of a black and yellow beetle called Cyllene Robiniae; in 1869 the potato beetle made his appearance and did great damage during several years; in 1873 a bark-louse infested the soft maple and now the larvae of an immigrated white butterfly (Pieris oleracea) ravages the cabbage. Fortunately these enemies of the products of our soil have their enemies also, which diminish their number in a far more efficient way than all our artificial remedies. So their devastations are only periodical.

Of the butterflies and moths may be named as the most showy: Papilio Turnus and its variety glaucus, Troilus, Asterias, Philenor, Thous, Ajax Callidryas, Marcellina, Colias Coesonia, C. Edusa, C. Philodice, Terias Lisa, T. mexicana (properly a straggler from the South), Danaus Archippus, Argynnis Cybele, A. columbina, A. myrina, Melitaea Phaeton, M. Ismeria, M. Tharos, Grapta interrogationis, Vanessa J. album, V. Antiopa, Pyrameis Atalanta, P. cardui, P. huntera, Iononia coenia, Libythea Bachmani, Nymphalis ursula, N. Dissippus, Apatura Celtis, Deilephila lineata, Darapsa myron, Chocrocampa tersa, Philampelus satellitia, P. Achemon, Macrosila carolina, M. quinquemaculata, Sphinx Kalmiuc, Ancrys ello, Ceratonia quadricornis, C. repentinus, Smerinthus myops, S. excoecatus, S. modestus, S. geminatus, Saturnia So., S. Maja, Attacus Cecropia, A. Promethea, A. Luna, A. Polyphemus, Ceratocampa regalis, C. imperialis, and many smaller moths.

Amply represented are the mollusks by the genus Unio in the Illinois River: U. alatus, gracilis, plicatus, multiplicatus, lacrymosus, cornutus, tuberculatus, elegans, securis, occidens, luteolus, crassus, globosus, wardii, donaciformis, triangularis, verrucosus, anadontoides, ellipsis, coccineus, pustulosus, trigonus, zigzag, Margaritana confragosa and Anodonta grandis.

There are land and water snails of the genera Helix, Succinea, Pupa, Planorbis, Physa, Lymnæa, Paludina, Melania.

To follow further down the lower organizations of animal life would not be within the compass of this work.

THE FLORA OF PEORIA AND VICINITY.

The flora of Peoria is varied and rich. Within a compass of five miles from the Court-House may be found almost every species of plant that grows in middle Illinois, middle Indiana, Ohio and Iowa. Probably no spot in the United States represents a greater number of species. The extraordinary fertility and variety of soil which surrounds it is of necessity, prolific of species.

The dry and sandy plateau on which the greater part of the city stands, extending from the bluff to the river and from Kickapoo Creek to the Narrows—a distance of about six miles—has its peculiar flora, and was, when the city was in its infancy, one grand carpet of flowers.

The bluff, with its black prairie loam and clay sub-soil, represents, or did before it was so fully occupied with farms and gardens, the prairie flora, with all the varied forms of vegetation that cover the immense prairies of Illinois.

Beyond, and in some places almost touching the brow of the bluff, is what is characteristically termed "the Barrens." This, as every Western man knows, is not a poor soil but is neither timber nor prairie, being covered with scattering trees, is a firmer soil, containing less loam and more clay, and has quite a different flora.

Beyond the lake is a great body of land which annually overflows, in which are many lakelets and marshes. Here is another flora, and one of unbounded richness. In this vicinity are some peat-bogs, containing many species peculiar to such localities; these in the fall are very beautiful.

Putting up against this bottom, the bold bluffs rise, interspersed with deep mossy glens and covered with forest trees. The same conformation exists on this side of the river above the Narrows and below the city on Kickapoo Creek. In these localities the flora differs widely from any of which we have spoken. And here are found some of the rarest and finest specimens of beauty and elegance the world can produce. We send to the ends of the earth for flowers and regard them as rare beauties, while we have growing wild, almost in sight of our doors, finer and more elegant ones, many of which have been sent abroad and are classed among the finest flowers by the most refined and cultivated men of Europe. Not a florist in Europe but cultivates some of the very flowers and shrubs that grow in this vicinity, prizes them highly and places them among his choicest specimens.

I have only space to name a few, which I do at random—all of which and many more are worthy of a place in our gardens. In early spring the Spring Beauty (Claytonia Caroliniana) pushes its scapes up among the dead leaves, unfolding its clusters of delicate flowers, shaded from white to rose-color and veined with purple; the Blood-root (Sanguinaria Canadensis), snow white with golden anthers; the Liverwort (Hepatica tribola), varying in its hues from whitish to blue, purple, and flesh-color, too elegant to pass by and too pure and beautiful to pluck; the Isopyrum biternatum, falsely called anemone, rising above the rest on smooth, slender, branching stalks, with tiny white flowers; the Blue Bell (Mertensia Virginica); the Columbine (Aquilegia Canadensis); the Larkspur (Delphinium tricorne), with its raceme of azure-blue flowers; the Anemone Caroliniana and Pennsylvanica; the Violets, whitish, blue, and yellow; the Buttercups (Ranunculus fascicularis and repens); the Crane's-bill (Geranium maculatum); the Polemonium (Polemonium reptans), easy of cultivation, with its corymbs of light blue, bell-shaped, nodding flowers; the Phlox (Phlox reptans, pilosa, glaberrima, and virida),—the last is rare here, but is one of the finest of the Phlox family; the Painted Cup or Indian Pink (Castilleja Coccinea), a unique annual and biennial, showy and pretty; the Wild Hyacinth (Scilla Fraseri); the Shooting Star (Dodecatheon Media); the Spiraea arancus and lobata,—the lobata is the Queen of the Prairie and is well named, grows from three to six feet high, bears compound clustered panicles of peach-blossom-colored flowers—very handsome; the yellow, white and purple Lady's Slippers (Cypripedium pubescens, candidum, and spectabile),—the last is a superb flower; the Five-fingered Gentian (Gentiana quinqueflora), an annual; the Lion's Heart (Physostegia Virginiana), annual; the Cardinal Flower (Lobelia cardinalis), annual; the Spiderwort (Tradescantia Virginica); the Prairie and Wood Lilies (Lilium Philadelphicum and superbum).

Our Asters are very abundant and some of them very beautiful. There are more than a dozen species, and varieties without end. Some of our Golden-rods are worthy of cultivation. The Eupatorium ageritoides is an elegant, free-flowering, white, fall flower of the composite order, very hardy, preferring shady places.

Of the ornamental vines we have the Virgin's Bower (Clematis Virginiana); the Moon-seed (Menispermum Canadense); the Bittersweet (Celastrus scandens); the Virginia Creeper (Ampelopsis quinquefolia); the Trumpet Creeper (Tecoma radicans); the Dioscorca villosa, a delicate little vine growing in thickets; the wild Balsam-apple (Achincocystis lobata); and the Star-cucumber (Sicyos angulatus).

Of ornamental shrubs there are, among others, the Wafer Ash (Ptelea trifolia); the Staff-Tree (Staphillea trifolia); the Wahoo (Euonymus atrapurpureus); the Sumach (Rhus glabra and aromatica),—the former is our common sumach, and the latter is quite a pretty shrub, four to five feet high, with aromatic foliage. Our trees are too well known to require notice here.

The Cyperaceae and grasses are well represented. There are as many species of grasses on a mile square here as there are in the entire South (excepting Texas and Arkansas), or the whole of New England.

We are deficient in evergreens, having none but the Red Cedar, and it is rare. The great Ericacia family (of which the Cranberry is a representative), which is so abundant in the East and South, has but one little insignificant representative, the Monotropa uniflora.

The ferns are well represented, there being about twenty species, and among them some of the most delicate and elegant of the family. Other cryptogamous plants, as the Mosses, Lichens and Fungi, are abundant.

Unfortunately, the march of improvement, divorced as it ordinarily is in the West from fine taste and culture, is making sad havoc with our flora. It never seems to enter the minds of men owning hundreds of acres of lands, to enclose a few rods for the protection of our indigenous plants. I can now call to mind but one exception, and that is worthy of honorable mention. The superintendent of Springdale Cemetery has set apart a portion of that lovely place, which associates so much sadness and beauty, for the preservation of nature's own flora.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

OLD SETTLERS' UNION.

In the summer of 1866 a few of the earliest settlers determined to call a meeting for the purpose of organizing an Old Settlers' Association. The meeting was held at the court house on July 4th of that year, John Hamlin acting as chairman and Charles Ballance as secretary. The meeting was well attended and, after a full discussion, Hon. George C. Bestor, Edward F. Nowland and Charles Ballance were appointed a committee to prepare a constitution and by-laws to be submitted at a future meeting. That meeting, which is known as the first annual reunion, was held on the 27th of July, 1867, and was largely attended—John Hamlin again acting as chairman and Charles Ballance secretary. The committee appointed at the former meeting reported a constitution, the preamble of which defines the object of the Association to be as follows:

"For the information to be derived from social intercourse and reminiscences of the settling of this part of the country, we, the undersigned, agree to form ourselves into a society to be called the 'Old Settlers' Union of Peoria and Vicinity' under the following constitution:"

To become a member the constitution required a residence of thirty years in the State of Illinois prior to its date, the last ten of which should have been in Peoria or its vicinity. At the annual meeting on July 4, 1866, it was so amended as to read as follows: "That every person who has resided in the State of Illinois prior to A. D. 1840, who is now a resident of Peoria or its vicinity, shall be entitled to become a member of this Society by signing the constitution and paying initiation fee; and the children of any person who is a member of the Society shall be entitled to membership at any age.

The following names were signed to the constitution at the time of its adoption, together with date of settlement:

John Hamlin.....	1823
Samuel B. King.....	1831
John Todhunter.....	1834
Matthew Taggart	1835
Jacob Hepperly	1831
Edward F. Nowland.....	1835
John C. Flanagan.....	1834
John T. Lindsay.....	1836
Alva Dunlap	1834
Alvin W. Bushnell.....	1837
George W. Fash.....	1835
Charles Ballance	1831
John Waugh	1836
Samuel Tart	1834
Joseph J. Thomas.....	1837
Thomas Mooney, Jr.....	1835
Daniel Trail.....	1834
C. M. Frazier.....	1834
Elihu N. Powell.....	1836
Lyman J. Loomis.....	1834
George W. H. Gilbert.....	1837
Allen L. Fahnestock.....	1837

Over three hundred names of persons who had a residence here in 1840, have been attached to the constitution, but the great majority of them are now deceased. Of the original members John T. Lindsay, George W. H. Gilbert and Allen L. Fahnestock are the only survivors.

At the annual reunion of 1886, the constitution was again so changed as to admit persons to membership who have been residents of Peoria or its vicinity for a period of thirty years. Provision is made for the election annually of a President, two Vice-Presidents, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries and a Treasurer. Annual reunions of a social nature are held at prominent places in the county, most frequently at the county-seat, at which it is the custom to have at least one principal oration, supplemented by shorter addresses of a reminiscent character. In addition to a public table being spread for the accommodation of those not otherwise provided for, the assembly partakes of the nature of a basket-picnic; groups of neighbors and old-time acquaintances being formed at different points on the grounds, where the scenes of by-gone days are recounted, old acquaintances renewed and the rising generation instructed in regard to the thrilling events through which their ancestors have passed.

Annual reunions have been held at the following times and places:

- 1807, July 27, Court House, Peoria.
- 1868, July 4, Basket-picnic, Flanagan's Grove.
- 1869, July 4, Basket-picnic, Flanagan's Grove.
- 1870, September 10, At Parmeley's Hall, on account of rain.
- 1871, September 7, Dinner, with speeches, Central Park.
- 1872, No Meeting.
- 1873, September 10, Basket-picnic, Central Park.
- 1874, September 10, Dinner, with speeches, Central Park.
- 1875, September 10, Usual exercises, Central Park.
- 1876, September 10, Usual exercises, Jefferson Park.
- 1877, September 5, Dinner and speeches, Spring Hill Park.
- 1878, September 5, Dinner and speeches, Spring Hill Park.
- 1879, No reunion this year.
- 1880, September 3, Glendale Park.
- 1881, September 7, Glendale Park.
- 1882, September 14, Glendale Park.
- 1883, September 6, Truitt's Grove, Chillicothe.
- 1884, September 11, Public Square, Elmwood.
- 1885, September 4, Floral Hall, Jefferson Park.
- 1886, September 15, Jefferson Park.
- 1887, September 1, Jefferson Park.
- 1888, September 11, Central Park.

The following are the names of the Presidents and Secretaries of the Union, with their respective terms of service:

Presidents—

John Hamlin, 1866-73.

Alva Dunlap, 1873-75.

Samuel Tart, 1875-82.

John Todhunter, 1882-85.

Henry Detweiler, 1885-1900.

Seth W. Freeman, 1900 —.

Secretaries—

Charles Ballance, 1866-67.

G. W. H. Gilbert, 1867-75.

George L. Bestor, 1875-80.

G. W. H. Gilbert, 1880-90.

Henry P. Day, 1890 —.

Many incidents worth remembering are preserved in the records and among the archives of the Union, only a limited number of which can be mentioned here. The first two out-door reunions (or basket-picnics) were held by invitation of John C. Flanagan, the veteran of Rose Hill, at his grove which commands a view of the entire city.

On the 7th day of May, 1870, upon the invitation of the ladies of the Springdale Soldiers' Monument Association, the Old Settlers' Union attended the unveiling of the Soldiers' Monument in Springdale Cemetery, a full account of which is given elsewhere. At the reunion of 1871, Colonel Peter Menard, the oldest living native of Illinois, son of Lieutenant Governor Pierre Menard, was present. Several prizes were awarded and many ancient relics exhibited.

At the reunion of 1873, John Todhunter read an original poem commemorative of the manners and customs of the olden times, which has become one of the classics of the Union.

At the reunion of 1874, the venerable John Dixon, the first Clerk of the Circuit Court, afterward founder of the city of Dixon, was present and entertained those in attendance with some pleasant reminiscences of the times when the court was held in the little log house on the river bank, and how he was Clerk of the County Commissioners Court, Clerk of the Circuit Court, Justice of the Peace, hotel-keeper (in his log cabin) and farmer, all at the same time.

The reunion of 1875 was signalized by speech-making, the principal address having been delivered by Dr. J. T. Stewart (now recently deceased), the text of which has been preserved in full.

The two meetings at Chillicothe and Elmwood in 1883 and 1884 were exceedingly pleasant, and were enlivened by several good addresses.

In 1885 the meetings began to be held in Jefferson Park, where the buildings erected for the State Fair afforded the best of accommodations in all kinds of weather.

In 1886 the constitution was revised so as to admit to membership all persons who could claim a residence in the State for thirty years.

In 1888 the reunion was again held in Central Park, where "Uncle Mark Aiken" had prepared a surprise in the erection and complete equipment of a genuine log cabin.

From this meeting one of the staunchest members of the Union (Alva Dunlap, the pioneer of Radnor) was, on account of the infirmities of age, necessarily absent. But so strong was his attachment to the old settlers that he invited them to visit him at his home at Dunlap, an invitation of which many were glad to avail themselves. The day set for the visit was September —, 1888, of which we have the following account:

"The day was charming. Uncle Alva was happy as mortal man can be. Two fairly filled coaches of his friends formed part of the Rock Island and Peoria train when it left Peoria, and a few more came on at Alta. Carriages were waiting for those who could not walk easily, and a wagon for the baskets. Very few cared to ride, as the distance was so short. Uncle Alva's home is delightful and capacious, yet too small for such a crowd when pleasant shaded lawns were close at hand. Until dinner-time sociability was rife, everybody seeming eager to shake hands and speak pleasantly to every other. All seemed to have excellent appetites for the good things, that were washed down by the excellent coffee and tea furnished by the Dunlap ladies."

Uncle Alva delivered a brief address, of which the following is the text in full:

"It is with the greatest degree of pleasure I meet so many friends of many years' standing, and many of you I have known for half a century. I hope to take you all by the hand with as good a cheer of welcome and kindness as we would fifty years ago, when the latch-string hung at all times on the outside of the door. Time has been, and is, fast thinning our ranks. Many have gone to those silent realms, or to the realms of lasting bliss, where we all hope to meet if that state of bliss is realized. Peace be to their ashes and a lasting sacredness to their memory. Peoria owes much to the early pioneer for his many sacrifices and privations endured, and God help the women of those days, for I well know the hardness of their toils. May the memory of them be ever sacred and sweet to the coming generations. It makes my heart ache when I think of their toils, privations and never ending work.

"When I look back over the fifty years of which many of us have been acquainted, it seems like a visionary dream; it seems as if such things could hardly have been. I look back over the grain fields, see the men swinging the cradle and laying down the grain, and the man following him with a rake gathering together the prostrate grain, and, selecting from the bunch a handful, he lifts the heap and with a peculiar movement ties it together and casts it aside, grasps his rake, which has been resting on his shoulder, and proceeds. But those days of hard toil brought sweet slumbers, and sparse settlements and our material wants made kind-hearted and true neighbors. Mind you, the latch-string was at all times on the outside of the door.

"And now I see the man going to the field. He follows a machine which drops a twine-bound bundle, which the man gathers in shocks, his back does not ache with swinging cradle or stooping to tie the bundle. Then follows the steam-thresher, which separates the grain from the straw and chaff, and sacks it ready for the mill or market.

"But then we had to prepare a place on the prairie as best we could, lay down our grain, and those who were lucky enough to have horses put them on to tread out the grain for us, and those who had not, swung the flail. Then came 'the tug of war' to clean it for the mill—as for markets, we had none. After all, the memory of those days is sweet and finds a warm place in my heart. All things will become changed. Old settlers will be succeeded by new; new rules will be made, old times will be forgotten, and the men who follow us will never know who broke the prairie and who subdued the virgin soil.

"I believe it to be a duty we owe ourselves and our neighbors to enjoy this life as best we can. Now let us act on that principle, on this neutral ground, and lay by all prejudices, all our political and theological preferences and extend the hand of kindness yet for 'Auld Lang Syne.'

Possibly the most noted event in the history of the Old Settlers' Union was the dedication of the Log Cabin in Glen Oak Park at the annual reunion of 1897. This beautiful park having been opened to the public, the first reunion of the Old Settlers there took place September 17, 1895. The place was found to be so well adapted to the purpose that it was soon afterward determined to make it the permanent place of annual reunions. The reunion of 1896 having been held there, it was suggested that a log cabin, with its usual appurtenances, be erected at some suitable point in the park as a rallying place for the old settlers. Accordingly, at a meeting of the executive committee held on the 16th day of September, 1896, Messrs. Henry Detweiler, G. W. H. Gilbert and Nathan Giles were appointed a committee to attend to it. The plan adopted was for each old settler who so desired, to furnish one log, or, in case he did not care to do so, he might instead of the log contribute one dollar to purchase one. The plan proved to be a popular one, and very soon the requisite number of logs were secured.

There was no laying of a corner-stone for this important structure, for there was no corner-stone to be laid. Instead thereof it was determined to hold a celebration at the time of laying the first course of logs, which took place on the 21st day of April, 1897. The meeting proved to be a highly successful one, and a large number of people, mostly old settlers, assembled to do honor to the occasion. Isaac W. Crandall, who was to build the cabin, was master of ceremonies. Logs were scattered around for seats, as in the olden times, and a barrel of cider was on tap during the exercises, of which the people partook by means of the primitive gourd. Speeches were made by the Hon. M. C. Quinn and Hon. Julius S. Starr, and a song composed for the occasion was sung by Thomas Scholey. A poem entitled "The Old Puncheon Floor" was read by Henry P. Day, Esq., composed by A. M. Laughlin, of Normal, Illinois. Other songs were sung, and short speeches made, after which the first course of logs was placed in position by the following old settlers: Joseph S. Schnelbley, Alexander Forderer, George W. Schnelbley, R. W. Burt, R. S. Ball, Fred M. Hannum, William

M. Kimsey, Gene Crandall, Seth W. Freeman, Dr. J. T. Stewart and R. A. Blanchard.

The cabin is of the usual double-cabin style, with a covered way between. On the lawn outside, and not far from the cabin, is an old-fashioned well-sweep and wooden curb; also a cavity cut in the top of a stump such as hominy used to be pounded in, the pestle attached to a long tree limb swinging on a pivot, and that limb is there too. There is also an old-fashioned ash-hopper in which ashes used to be dumped and the lye extracted from them. The names of those contributing logs or money for the purchase of the same were painted on a tablet, and the same attached to the exterior of the cabin, where all may be read.

The furniture of the cabin is of the simplest and most primitive character. It corresponds so well with that which has already been described as to need no further mention here. It was contributed by members of the Old Settlers' Union.

Elaborate preparations were made for the annual meeting to be held on the 15th day of September, 1897. On that day a large concourse of people assembled upon the grounds at an early hour. A speaker's stand was erected, surrounded by ordinary plank seats sufficient to accommodate a large audience.

In the log cabin were exhibited an old-fashioned organ, a spinning-wheel, old chairs, an old-styled bed all made up, and an old clock over sixty-five years old, made by Eli Terry, the first clock-maker in the country. It had wooden works and a wooden face. There was a barrel of cider on the grounds, dried apples hung from the mantle and catnip from the ceiling. Many people present who had resided in log cabins, recognized the appurtenances which recalled many reminiscences of the days of yore. Elaborate souvenir programs of twenty-eight pages were distributed to the old settlers. These books contained a list of the committees, a history of the Association, a biographical sketch of the past and present officers, the program of the day, extracts from addresses of prior reunions, interesting reminiscences of early days, a list of those who contributed to the log cabin, portraits of past and present officers, and the death roll of the year. President Detweiler presided and introduced the Hon. William E. Phelps, of Elmwood, as the orator of the day, who delivered an elaborate historical address.

After the usual picnic dinner other addresses and exercises followed, interspersed with music by an orchestra and a vocal quartette. Seth W. Freeman made the dedicatory speech, O. B. Champney recited an appropriate poem, after which the cabins were declared officially dedicated. Amusements followed until a late hour in the evening, when only the approaching darkness put an end to the festivities of this memorable occasion.

Long before this time the annual reunions had become so popular that large numbers of the citizens usually gave up one-half the day as a holiday. In 1860 it was estimated there were five thousand; in 1891, five thousand; in 1893, two thousand; in 1894, six to ten thousand, and, in 1895, four thousand in attendance. In later years the attendance of such large crowds has not been encouraged, but the hope has been that the reunions might be rather for the members and their friends, but still the crowds continue to come.

The record of the Old Settlers' Union of Peoria County contains a mine of historical incidents, anecdotes and reminiscences from which, if space permitted, these pages might be greatly enriched. A few extracts therefrom, supplemented by some quotations from kindred sources, must suffice. In attributing the authorship of these extracts to certain individuals it is not to be understood they were all written out by them as here presented, but in some instances they are the reports of impromptu speeches delivered at the reunions and taken down by newspaper reporters.

THE PIONEER WEDDING.

Theodore Sergeant, as elsewhere related, continued to make his home with his friend Barnes until his marriage, which occurred on the 5th day of November, 1824. He married Miss Rachel Brown. This was the first wedding that occurred in what is now Canton township, Fulton County, and was one of the earliest marriages celebrated in that county.

It was an event in the Barnes neighborhood. It occurred in the cabin of Daniel Brown, the father of the bride. All the neighbors were invited, and probably all were assembled in the cabin; still, though small, it was not nearly full. The bride was gorgeously appareled in a checked linsey homespun dress, a three-cornered handkerchief about her neck, and her feet encased in moccasins. The groom also wore moccasins and a full suit of new linsey, colored with butternut bark. The guests were dressed much the same, and were seated on puncheon benches around the sides of the cabin. Captain Barnes, at that time County Commissioner, performed the marriage ceremony with due and becoming dignity. At the conclusion of the ceremony all the gentlemen present "saluted the bride." When this ceremony had been completed, old Mr. Brown produced a "noggin" of whisky and a bran-new tin-cup—then considered a very aristocratic drinking vessel—and passed the customary beverage to all present. All drank from the cup, filling it from the "noggin" when empty, and passing it from hand to hand until again empty. The liquor began to make the guests merry, and jokes and songs were considered to be in order.

HOME-COMING OF A BRIDE IN 1835.

By Mrs. Julia M. Ballance.

"A few weeks later Mr. Ballance and I were married, Uncle Kellar being the officiating clergyman. My gown was of white jaconet, the material for which I had providentially brought from Maryland, and my one bridesmaid was Miss Amelia Boone, one of the family who travelled with us in our journey through Indiana. There were but two carriages in the town, and one of these Mr. Ballance hired for the wedding; but owing to the darkness of the night and the miserable condition of the roads it was thought best to defer the drive into town till morning. Our home-coming was naturally an event of some importance in the little town, and Miss Prudence Ballance had issued invitations for a party in our honor. It proved to be a large gathering and an elegant one for the times, but after all these years I can recall no one who was there but the Grays, Lowrys, Taggarts, Vorises, Picketts and Boones.

"The house where I began my married life, and where my three older children were born, was on the lower side of Water street at the foot of Liberty street, and was considered a superior one for the times. It was near the site of Old Fort Clark, which was built in 1813 and was burned in 1819. The fort had been made of logs standing on end, and the charred remains of these were sometimes found about our garden as long as we remained there. One was in such a state of preservation that we used it for years as a hitching post, until its age and history made it too valuable for that purpose, and, when we moved away, a man by the name of Drown sawed it into walking-sticks which he readily sold for fifty cents a piece. The corner on the south of us had been a powder magazine, but nothing remained of it but a few stones and the hole where the powder had been stored. Below this and a little nearer the river—there were no streets laid out south of this till you reached the ferry, now Bridge street—was the old court house.

"In the rear the house was generally sixty or seventy feet from the river, but, in the spring, it often happened that the water came up to our back steps, and it was not unusual at such times to attach a fishing rod to the back door to catch a fish for the next meal. The front yard was quite barren when I came to the house; the next year we had it fenced in and wandering pigs fenced out, so that I soon had a garden gay with all colors of old-fashioned flowers."

THE WEDDING CAKE—BEFORE FRICTION MATCHES.

By Mrs. R. M. Cole.

"Five miles below Elgin was a small mill for grinding corn and wheat. The meal and flour were very coarse. There was no fine flour to be had in the country for several years. When my eldest sister was married, some years after our arrival, my mother was much worried about the wedding cake. What could she do without fine flour? But Yankee invention came to the rescue. Father made a little hickory hoop to fit in the meal seive. She sewed some fine thin muslin over it and bolted flour for the wedding cookery. It was a great surprise to the guests to see bread and cake made from fine flour. Ever after, until good mills were built, this little bolt did service for all the neighbors for miles around on all extra occasions. In those early days all the people were not provided with the conveniences of starting a fire, as there were no matches then. Father had a tinder-box, so we got along nicely. I well remember one cold morning a neighbor came to get some coals of fire, his fire having gone entirely out the night before. He came through the woods three miles. He had some barks to carry the coals on; when one set burned up he could get a fresh supply."

GOING TO MILL.

John W. Caldwell, of Tazewell, was then introduced. He made a characteristic and interesting speech, alluding to the hardships of his early life here, or what would be considered hardships, at least, by the people of to-day. "Hominy," said the speaker, "was the principal article of food. Our corn was pounded in a mortar or in a hominy block. The fine part of the meal we made into corn bread, and the coarse we made into hominy. There were two mills within twelve or fifteen miles. We would sometimes go to mill with a half-bushel of corn to get it made into meal. Sometimes we would have to wait two days before we could get it ground, so many others being ahead of us. As to flour, that was out of the question for poor people. There was a horse-mill started on the Maskinaw, and we went there also to get our grinding done. We lived in peace, happiness and brotherly love."

THE ADVENT OF THE COOK STOVE.

By Charles S. Clarke, Esq.

"Among the first inventions you will remember was the cooking stove; that banished the fire-places with hanging cranes, its numerous pots and kettles; the warm, cheerful fire, backed by a huge log that would hold its flames for a week. Around this at night the whole family would gather, the smaller boys roasting chestnuts in the hot ashes and baking apples in front of the coals, the larger ones reading Robinson Crusoe, Thaddeus of Warsaw, and other exciting stories by its light, the only candle a tallow-dip, and that was only lighted when grandmother read her Bible, or when the great mug of cider filled to overflowing, and the rounded-up bread tray with pippins and bell-flowers were brought from the capacious cellar. Then some neighbors coming, stories of Indians and Indian wars, of deer and bear-hunting were told, ending up with strange stories of ghosts and spooks until we little ones would get close to father and mother for fear of being carried up the great chimney and away in the darkness to the land of fairies and bogies. No future boy to the end of time will ever see such scenes or hear such marvelous stories. The new cook stove was good for the dear mother, but the fire-place romances of the boys were gone. So sweet are its memories that many to this day keep an open fire to revive them."

STARTING A HOTEL.

By a Reporter.

"Squire Benjamin B. Roe then entertained the audience with one of the best speeches to listen to we have ever heard at a gathering of the kind. It was full of wit and kept the audience in an uproar. He said he hailed from Posey county, Indiana, where beech nuts were a legal tender, and, as the crop failed in 1826, he concluded to take Horace Greeley's advice and go West. He did so, and landed in Peoria County on the Kickapoo. Joshua Aiken, uncle of Mark Aiken, wanted to hire a man with a family, and, as the speaker had a little Yankee wife, he applied for the job. Aiken asked him if he wanted to go into the hotel business, and he said he did not mind if he had a house. Aiken took him down on the bank of the Kickapoo, and pointing to an old log cabin, which had been used as a barn, asked him if that would do if it was cleaned up and white-washed. 'I named it the Traveler's Rest,' said the speaker, 'and was the Col. Deane of the establishment.' The speaker then told how, when Mark Aiken came to live in that vicinity, he went to live with his uncle; not wanting to board at a hotel, he took private lodgings at his uncle's. He said Mark's uncle was afraid Mark would live too high on the luxuries of the land—cucumbers, pumpkins, cabbage, etc.—but Mark used to come around for a feast occasionally. The speaker told a very amusing anecdote about his search for codfish, which his wife, being a Yankee, wanted. He came to Peoria and looked all over town for some. There was only one grocery store and it did not keep it. Mark Aiken told him there was some of it at his uncle's mill, but Joshua Aiken would not give him any, fearing he would not get any more in this country and he concluded to take it. He put a large piece in his hat, a 'bell crown', which he thought was the finest thing he ever owned. It spoiled his hat, and he has always hated codfish and codfish aristocracy ever since."

EARLY DAYS ON THE RIVER.

By Capt. Henry Detweiler.

"It was just about this time of the year when the ice commenced to run out of the river. The people began to discuss what boat would be the first here. There was a romance about the river travel then not present to the prosaic railroad. In those days everything connected with river travel bore an importance greater even than that which now attaches to our railroad systems. Everything hinged on the opening of navigation. As the annual festival approached, passengers for different points began to arrive at the principal ports ready to take passage, the warehouses along the river were stacked full of freight awaiting transportation. The arrival of the first packet was an event looked for by the whole town. There being no telegraph then, or any way of finding out in advance what boat would get here first, gave an excellent chance for betting and a great deal of money often changed hands—betting what steamer would be here first. Take some of the boats, such as the old Boreas, Glaucus and Rosalie, and you could hear their deep exhaust six to eight miles off, which was no sooner heard than it spread like wild-fire that the first boat was coming, and by the time the boat arrived there would be a crowd of people down at the landing anxiously waiting for the steamer to land, then go aboard to meet friends and learn the news from down the river. Many staunch old steam-boats then plied the waters of the Illinois and the bluff old mates and captains who had charge of these boats were the most famous and respected men in the country; and the pilots were also big men dressed in the height of fashion, often wearing white kid gloves while on duty. When there were many ladies aboard it was considered a great thing to get on the good side of a pilot so that he would admit you to a seat in the pilot-house, which was a conspicuous place to view the scenery along the river and making landings at towns. The pilots, generally, were great favorites of the ladies, with whom they took special pains to make the trip pleasant. They were big, whole-souled, jovial fellows, and could tell the most beautiful yarns you ever heard."

OPENING A NEW FERRY.

"In these days of Peoria's commercial prosperity, it is interesting and amusing to look back at the former history of the city; especially to the period when the city was founded. Peoria was laid out in 1831 or 1832. A few years later a rival town named Cleveland (after the man who owned the land) was laid out on the opposite side of the river, on the site now occupied by Voris' cornfield. Three or four houses were erected, and the land surveyed was greater in extent than that laid out for the new town of Peoria. Mr. Cleveland was elated with his prospects of building a great city upon his property, and saw (in fancy) the gold dropping into his pockets from the sale of almost innumerable city lots at good prices. He feared nothing from the rival town across the river, as it was then no larger than the town he had laid out, and had seemingly no better chances of life. In 1836, however, Peoria took a start, and Mr. Cleveland, having spent all his money and finding his scheme a failure, left the country."

Of Mr. Cleveland we have the following humorous account from the pen of Mrs. Ballance:

"One of the most conspicuous, if not as he thought the greatest man of the day, was H. W. Cleveland. Where he came from or what his previous history might have been I do not know, but he suddenly appeared among us in several unexpected roles. Somebody had taken it upon himself to raise a company of militia, though in a spirit of braggadocio they paid it the compliment of calling it a regiment. Cleveland was a candidate for Colonel, and, owing to the unpopularity of the other aspirants, was elected as much to his own surprise as that of others. He immediately appointed a complete line of staff-officers as though it was a full regiment, among whom I recollect Dr. Rouse as medical officer and Mr. Ballance as quartermaster. About the same time the Colonel got a charter for a new ferry across the river which was to be propelled by horse power, and the lucky thought struck him to have a parade of his new regiment and a jubilee over the launching of his new boat at the same time. At length the auspicious day arrived. Horses were scarce, but every officer that could get one was mounted for the parade. The Colonel resided in a frame house on the corner of Madison and Jackson streets; and, in front of his door, he had a table set with wines and all sorts of liquors, and every time the parade went around the town the head of the column stopped at his door for refreshments. The more they refreshed the more foolish they became, and one by one the more dignified dropped out of the parade. There was a character named 'Tig Tom' who, being a little in doubt as to his military duties, hunted up Dr. Rouse for advice. The doctor was a good deal disgusted by this time and growled out, 'if this stuff makes the Colonel sick it's my duty to physic him and yours to wait on him.'

"After much fuss and feathers the parade finally reached the new boat and Col. Cleveland proceeded to make a speech, the opening words of which were remembered and repeated by Peorians for many a day. He said: 'Fellow citizens and countrymen: Let us now proceed to commemorate the memory of the immortal Washington, who has long since been laid in the tomb.'

"The whole thing became so ridiculous that the regiment was never again heard of, and the boat seemed to partake of the general feeling and was soon after sold to a circus company and taken down to St. Louis."

We also have the following description of

THE MILITIA COLONEL.

By Charles S. Clarke, Esq.

"Now, for a boy there never was anything on this earth equal to a general muster of militia in the olden times. As I remember it there were 1,000 privates with muskets, and 10,000 Major Generals, each one with four or five pounds of gold epaulettes on either shoulder, a hat two feet high, crowned with ostrich feathers, drooping and waving with the breeze; an immense sword whose hilt was of pure gold studded with diamonds, and the sheath of burnished leather encased with solid silver, mounted on a horse as black as a raven or white as the driven snow, whose trappings were purple and gold with bits of solid silver and a neck-cloth of red and yellow. Solomon, in all his glory, never rode the valley of Jerusalem attired like this. It was told that one of these majestic men, wishing to have a lady friend see him before the dust of the day had soiled his appearance, rode to her door and, seeing a little girl on the steps, asked her to tell her mother that some one at the door wished to see her for a moment. She ran in and delivered the message. 'Who is it my child?' 'I don't know,' replied the little one, 'but I think it's God.' The world will have to burn up, be rebuilt and repopled before any future boy will witness a scene like this."

Had Mr. Clarke lived to see the Governor's staff during the closing administration of the nineteenth and the opening one of the twentieth century, he most certainly would have changed his views.

Mrs. Ballance also tells of COUNT KLOPISKI.

"Early settlers will have no difficulty in recalling an old Pole named Klopiski, who kept a sort of restaurant for many years on Main street. The boys dubbed him "Old Pork and Beans," and, on ordinary occasions, he was rather addicted to soiled linen and old slippers run down at the heels; but when dressed, he was a noble looking man and every inch a cultivated gentleman. [In personal appearance he resembled Brignoli—Ed.] He came to America during the troublesome times of Poland and professed to have been a nobleman and a military leader. He was very fond of chess, and Mr. Ballance used sometimes to invite him to the house that they might have a game together. Very often the game would be forgotten and the old gentleman would talk for some hours of outrages practiced upon his native country. As I look back I think we did not appreciate him as we should, and, if he was still alive, believe the present generation would be disposed to make a hero of him." [He afterwards kept a restaurant at the crossing of the Peoria and Oquawka and the Illinois Central Rail Roads, and gave the town of El Paso its name—Ed.]

A RETROSPECT.

By E. R. Brown, From an Address at Elmwood.

"Old friends, it does me good to look into your faces here today. You remember the good old lady who knew there must be some personal devil else 'how could they draw his picture so natural?' To look into your eyes confirms my skepticism as to the existence of any such being. Certainly he has left no foot-marks on your open countenances. As we shake you by the hand today, and look on your faces, seamed with hard labor and anxious thought, mellowed and illuminated by the good times gone, the picture of your pioneer life rises vivid and clear before me—a panorama of rugged experiences and struggles, of waiting and triumph. I see the early court of the county held in a $75 court-house; I see Hamlin and others building the first log school-house, 16x18 feet in size, in the very year of my birth, 1825; I see Dr. J. T. Stewart jogging over lonely stretches of prairie, with lance in rest, and saddle-bags well filled with jalap, and salts and calomel; I hear the howl of the wolf and the brisk whirr of the quail and prairie chickens, and the clear and ringing 'poe-e, poe-e,' of the Kickapoo farmer as he calls his stock to their feed; I get a peep into Lyman Coolidge's genuine temperance meeting, where later enthusiasts might learn a useful lesson; I see the strong lawyers of the early days, Purple, and Manning, and Grove, and many another; I hear the mighty and unctuous voice of the wandering circuit preacher, and the squawk of yellow-legged chickens that followed his arrival; I see Moses Pettengill and Mark Aiken working, regardless of salary, on the underground railroad; I see Fount Watkins hiding some of the colored passengers under the puncheon floor of his log-cabin, and fairly laughing the pursuers off the track; I see W. J. Phelps laying out this rural city and steering the Peoria & Oquawka railroad through it; I see Dr. A. S. Wilcox splitting rails in the winter woods, and, as he munches a piece of frozen johnny-cake for his dinner, I hear him exclaim, with a dry laugh, 'I will live well if I die poor.'"

THE PATRIARCH'S BLESSING.

Rev. Richard Haney.

"In the list of old settlers who had departed this life during the past year were mothers, whose sons he had touched in the battle's lines, and whose forms he laid away in the southern clay. Peoria County paid toll on the road to glory.

"'God bless you,' exclaimed Mr. Haney, 'may your descendants stand for civil and religious liberty till the fire in every star languishes and dies.'

"There is only one United States, he declared, and the finest tribute that had ever been paid to it was that of the slave on his knees before the Czar, who said, 'Sire, I want before I die to see a country where every one has plenty to eat, and can choose his own road to heaven.'

"Mr. Haney said he had shaken hands with Mr. Kemp (?) the first Presbyterian minister in Illinois; with Rev. John M. Peck, the first Baptist minister in Illinois; with Geo. Davidson, the first Methodist in Illinois, and uncle of the late W. T. Davidson, editor of the Lewistown Democrat, and with Rev. Asa Turner, the first Congregational minister in Illinois.

"Mr. Haney thought that, in the olden times, there was not such enmity and sombreness as are upon us now. People cheered each other as they worked. Mr. Haney had heard more complaints at recent Methodist conferences than he had heard in sixty years. They had no time to complain in the olden days. For seventeen years he had worked on a salary of $100 a year, and he had to report his presents to the conference. At one time he was stationed at Mineral Point, Mich., which is now the geographical center of Wisconsin.

"Mr. Haney said he would cry and break down if he should speak of the men and women he had met. He thought there was never a greater or grander set of men and women than those who came early to this country. They were sent here to lay the foundation of civil and religious liberty.

"Mr. Haney said he had never had a word with a human being. He had never said a word to wound any one. He owed nothing to anybody but love.

"He expected his hearers to guard the flag, to pray for their country, and to do away with all that is wrong. If alive he would be with them next year. If not, yonder, yonder!

"He thought the Peoria old settlers had the best reunion he had attended."

PART SECOND

CITY OF PEORIA

CHAPTER I.

PEORIA AS A VILLAGE.

The beginning of the City of Peoria was almost contemporaneous with that of the county. On the 7th day of January, 1825, the County Commissioners ordered that William Holland be authorized to employ some suitable person to survey into lots the quarter section upon which the county-seat had been located; the lots to be eighty feet wide and one hundred feet in length, including eight feet to be deducted from each lot for an alley, the street on the shore of the lake to be one hundred and ten feet in width and all other streets one hundred feet.

At the September term, 1825, an order was made, upon the petition of William Holland and others, that a town be laid out as the county-seat of Peoria County having an eye to the present and future convenience of the citizens. This order provided that the streets should be run to the cardinal points; that a square should be three hundred and sixty feet, containing five lots each of seventy-two feet in front; that there should be a public square containing four square blocks; that Water Street should be one hundred and ten feet wide, commencing on the edge or break of the bank and running back one hundred and ten feet.

At the same term of Court William Holland received an order for $4 in specie, or its equivalent in State Bank paper, for running, or causing to be run, the exterior lines of the town of Peoria and making a plat of the same.

A street was laid out commencing at the quarter-section corner near the intersection of Bridge and Adams Streets, running thence north along the west line of the quarter between the old town and what is now Monson & Sanford's Addition, 31 feet east of the present east line of Franklin Street, to the northwest corner of the quarter located on the premises now occupied by Dr. Miller; also a street along the north line of said quarter to the northeast corner between Adams and Jefferson Streets near Eaton, in the lot recently selected for the Assembly Hall. This exterior street stopped at that point probably in anticipation of a street being laid out on the adjoining fractional quarter-section now known as Mill's Addition, running thence south to the river. All the interior streets were laid out parallel with these streets, the same as in Monson & Sanford's and other additions in the western part of the city.

It seems that prior to the location of the county-seat on that quarter, there had been squatters on the same, who were recognized by the County Commissioners' Court as having some rights which ought to be protected from injury caused by the taking of said quarter section for county purposes. It was, therefore, ordered on the 9th day of March, 1826, that, whenever the said land should be entered by the county, the damages to such persons should be ascertained up to the extent of the cost of their improvements, to be deducted out of the price of any lots they might purchase.

At the May term of the County Commissioners' Court, 1826, a sale of lots was ordered to take place on the 10th day of July then next ensuing, the terms of which sale were to be ten per cent. cash, the residue on six, twelve and eighteen months' credit. It was also ordered that the town be re-surveyed so that the streets should run parallel with the river, the lots and blocks to remain the same size they had before been surveyed—and William Holland was authorized to employ suitable persons to plat the same under his superintendence.

On the 10th of July, 1826, it was ordered that Joseph Smith be authorized to employ an auctioneer and to furnish whiskey for the sale of lots in the town of Peoria, also that the Clerk deliver the plat to be recorded. On the same day William S. Hamilton presented a plat of a survey of sixteen blocks, including the Court House Square. The survey commenced at the foot of Fayette Street, running thence to Liberty Street, thence to Madison Street, thence to Fayette Street, thence to Water Street. Three other blocks, not divided into lots, were designated on the upper side of Madison Street, and a portion of Monroe Street is shown on the plat. This plat was recorded as the first and permanent survey of the Town of Peoria.

The street next the river was called Water Street, and those running parallel with it were named after the Presidents of the United States in the order of their succession, except the then incumbent of that office, for whom there was no street to name, and, if there had been, it could not have been done without duplication. No record is left of any reason why the other streets were named as they were, but it will readily appear why Main Street received its name, it being the longest street on the plat except Adams, and the one most eligible for business purposes. Fulton Street may have been named after one of the Fultons who were among the earliest settlers, one of them, Samuel Fulton, being then Sheriff of the County. The name of Liberty Street is wholly arbitrary. Hamilton may have been named after the surveyor, William S. Hamilton, but more probably after his father, the distinguished Alexander Hamilton. Fayette was doubtless named after the Marquis de LaFayette, who had recently visited this country and whose name was on everybody's lips.

On July 11th, that being the day succeeding the sale, it was ordered that the treasurer pay William Clark $3.00 for crying it.

On July 12th, it was ordered that the treasurer pay William Holland $10.50 for services rendered and cash paid by him in surveying the Town of Peoria, and that William S. Hamilton be paid the sum of $58.75 for his services, in full, for surveying the Town of Peoria, for which he had agreed to take two town lots.

The following are the names of the several persons who appear to have purchased lots at the first public sale, as taken from the Sale Book, to-wit:

Isaac Funk purchased lots No. 6 in Block No. 2, price $100.00; No. 8 in Block No. 2, at $66.50; No. 10 in Block No. 2, $55.00; No. 1 in Block No. 7, $38.00; No. 8 in Block No. 3, at $77.00; and No. 1 in Block No. 3, at $52.00;

Hiram Ladd bought Lots No. 5 in Block No. 2, at $52.00, and No. 4 in Block No. 10, at $34.50; John Hamlin, Lots No. 10 in Block No. 3, at $85.00, and No. 9 in Block No. 3, at $52.50;

Samuel Fulton, Lot No. 4 in Block No. 2, at $35.00;

Eli Redman, Lot No. 7 in Block No. 7, at $31.00;

George Sharp, Lot No. 6 in Block No. 7, at $42.00;

Nicholas Hansen, Lots No. 1 in Block No. 6, and No. 2 in Block No. 6, at $85.00;

William Holland, Lot 3 in Block No. 2, at $29.00;

Henry Neely, Lot No. 7 in Block No. 2, at $67.00;

James Latham, Lots No. 7 in Block No. 3, at $79.75, and No. 6 in Block No. 3, at $62.00;

Joseph Ogee, Lots No. 6 and 7 in Block No. 1, at $66.25;

William Wright, Lot No. 5 in Block No. 9, at $25.00;

William S. Hamilton, Lots 8 and 9 in Block No. 1, at $58.75 (his fee for survey);

Joseph Smith, Lots 1 and 2 in Block No. 2, at $51.00;

Hiram Curry, Lot 6 in Block No. 2, at $51.00;

James Scott, Lot No. 5 in Block No. 10, at $50.62½;

Rivers Cormack, Lot No. 10 in Block No. 4, at $85.00.

On the 5th day of September, 1826, it was ordered that a second sale of lots be advertised, to take place on the first Monday in November then next.

At the July special term, 1832, it was ordered that there should be a public sale of lots during the sitting of the Circuit Court commencing on Thursday, the 10th day of March then next, and it was ordered that the Clerk furnish a copy of the notice of the sale to the editors of the "Vandalia Whig," "Illinois Intelligencer," "The Sangamon Journal" and the "Missouri Republican," of St. Louis, Missouri, for publication.

J. M. Lueders

On July 3, 1832, it was ordered that the public ground in front of Water Street should remain public ground, without being built upon until the Town of Peoria should become incorporated.

On March 7, 1833, it was ordered that there should be a public sale of lots during the next term of the Circuit Court of Peoria County.

On the 5th day of March, 1834, it was ordered that the County Surveyor be authorized to establish the exterior lines of Peoria town-fraction according to the requirements of the law; also to lay off into blocks and lots the residue of said fraction. In pursuance of that order, Charles Ballance, then County Surveyor, made a re-survey of the town-plat and laid off the whole quarter-section into lots and blocks, making all the streets one hundred feet in width. This plat was surveyed on the 7th day of May, 1834, and recorded in the Recorder's office, but the Commissioners acknowledged the same as a true plat of said town only as far as Fayette Street, the residue being reserved for the present.

On the 1st day of July, 1834, Charles Ballance, as County Surveyor of Peoria County, replatted that portion of the said quarter-section lying to the northeast of Fayette Street, making the streets, running from the river towards the bluff, eighty feet wide instead of one hundred feet, as they appeared on the former plat, thus shifting the lots and blocks some distance to the southwest, and obtaining a tract of ground in the northeast corner of the quarter-section, which was designated as part of "State Square."

On the 1st day of March, 1831, the Legislature passed an act for the incorporation of towns and cities, but no actual organization of the Village of Peoria took place under it until the 18th day of July, 1835, Dr. Rudolphus Rouse, Chester Hamlin, Rufus P. Burlingame, Charles W. McClallen and Isaac Evans having been, on the 11th of the same month, elected Trustees. Dr. Rouse was chosen President of the Board. On July 23d they met at the store of Rufus P. Burlingame, elected Cyrus Leland Clerk, Mr. Burlingame Treasurer, and passed a resolution that the town should embrace an area of one square mile, having its center at the southwest corner of Main and Madison Streets.

On the 10th day of March, 1834, Abram S. Buxton and Henry Wolford commenced the publication of the first newspaper in Peoria, called "The Illinois Champion and Peoria Herald." From No. 36, dated December 6, 1834, we get a glimpse of the then existing condition of Peoria. The paper is almost totally barren of local news items, the object of the editor seeming to be to keep his readers acquainted with what was going on in the outside world, instead of what was going on at home. In fact there was so little going on at home it was scarcely worth publishing. We must, therefore, look to the advertisements for the information desired.

Messrs. Pettengill & Gale give notice that they keep constantly on hand and for sale Aiken & Little's flour (doubtless ground at Aiken & Little's Mill on the Kickapoo—Ed.); also, that they have just received and offer for sale at the store recently occupied by P. G. Deal, a general assortment of hardware, tin and wooden ware, window-glass, hollow-ware, fire-dogs, card-boxes, sheet-iron backs, tin-plate and cooking-stoves, stove-pipe, etc., etc., together with a few sets of plain and fine harness, boots and shoes, all of eastern manufacture. They had also just received and had for sale seventy-six dozen woolen socks and stockings.

Aquila Wren had just received, and had for sale, 40 barrels Kanawha salt, 20 barrels Conemaugh salt, ten sacks of ground alum (salt); 20 boxes fresh raisins; 1 pipe fourth-proof Cognac brandy; 1 bbl. White Malaga Wine; 1 bbl. Madeira; ½ bbl. Port; ½ bbl. London Particular Teneriffe; 6 boxes Claret; 1 box Muscat; 4 bbls. brown sugar and various other articles in his line, which he would sell cheap for cash. He also kept for sale a quantity of burr millstones of a quality equal to any manufactured in the West.

I. N. & J. Chrisman & Co. give notice that they had just received, and were opening at their store, a new and general assortment of spring and summer goods (this ad. is dated May 3d and had been continued to December 6th—Ed.), consisting of dry-goods, queensware, glass-ware, hardware, &c., for sale for cash or approved country produce.

A. E. Colt, grocer, returns thanks for past favors, but regrets to say that he has to discontinue business for a few weeks for want of room to accommodate his customers, and in hopes of raising a building in a short time where he would be happy to supply them as heretofore.

The foregoing comprise all the mercantile firms appearing in this number of "The Champion."

In other lines of business the people seem to have had their necessities well supplied. Two public houses are advertised, one kept by William Eads at his old stand near the Old Fort (Ft. Clark—Ed.), which would be furnished with the best the country could afford and his stable provided with plenty of provender; the other, "The Peoria House and General Stage Office," kept by A. O. Garrett, corner Main and Washington Streets.

At the office of "The Champion" were kept for sale letter and foolscap paper of eastern manufacture, also writing and printing inks. At the same place there were for rent an ice-house, 12 feet deep 9 feet square, double-lined, with good wheat straw between the lining and batting.

P. A. Westervelt had established himself as a tailor in the second story of the large new building belonging to Mr. Wren on Water Street.

Three physicians offer their professional services to the people of Peoria, namely: Dr. Joseph C. Frye at the residence of Mr. Buxton on Adams Street (now occupied by the Bryan Block—Ed.); Dr. J. M. Russell in the building occupied by Griffin's Store, and Dr. Kellogg at his office on Hamilton Street, formerly occupied by Samuel Lowry. Dr. Augustus Langworthy also practiced medicine in Peoria, but his name does not appear in the paper.

So far as appears from this paper there were but two lawyers then in Peoria: Charles Ballance, who was also County Surveyor, and who gives notice to those who were entitled to pre-emption rights and floating claims, that, by making application to him, they could have their business transacted at the land office at Quincy without the expense of a journey thither; and John L. Bogardus, who gives notice to all persons indebted to him to pay up, and to those whom he owes to send in their accounts and demands—also, to all persons who had borrowed property of any description from him to return the same immediately. Mr. Ballance, in his History of Peoria, says that Lewis Bigelow, another lawyer, was here at that time, but his name does not appear in that character in "The Champion." It does, however, appear in connection with that of Isaac Underhill as proprietor of the ferry, who, together with George De Pre, the ferryman, gives notice to all persons living on the opposite side of the river coming to trade, with merchandise or provisions of any kind—except lumber, wood and coal—that they should have free passage over the ferry.

Capt. O. H. Kellogg had just made a trip from St. Louis to Peoria in his light draft steamer Winnebago, and, so well were his passengers pleased with his treatment, that fifteen of them united in signing a paper for publication wherein they present him with their thanks for his skill and perseverance, as well as for his kindness and hospitality shown them on their voyage. In another place, Capt. Kellogg gives notice that his boat would be fitted up, during the winter, to run between Peoria and St. Louis the next season.

Notice is given that Rev. Leander Walker would preach at the school-house on Sunday, December 4th, at eleven o'clock A. M., and two o'clock P. M., and thereafter every other Sabbath.

William Eads wishes to sell his large unfinished house on Liberty Street, together with some hewn logs for a cabin and the lot on which they were then lying; also the lumber sufficient for the floors and a quantity of other timbers.

Seth Fulton offered a reward for the return of one sorrel horse, which, when last seen, had a bell on buckled with a stirrup leather and was shod all round; also a bay horse with star in the forehead.

Isaac Waters, Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court, gave notice to persons whose notes given for town lots were due, to make payment; also, that on December 26th, a contract would be let to the lowest bidder for the building of a jail for Peoria County, a plan of which might be seen at his office.

A column and a half are taken up with instructions from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to Registers and Receivers respecting pre-emption of public lands.

A notice is given of a meeting to be held, December 6th, at Garrett's Hotel, for the purpose of forming a Lyceum.

Advertisements also appear from Putnam County, from St. Louis and from Louisville, Ky., where Mr. Buxton had formerly lived.

Emigration was now pouring into Peoria and, in the course of three or four years thereafter, the population had increased to 1,200 or 1,600.

In a publication entitled "A Gazetteer of Illinois," published about the same time by Dr. J. M. Peck, there is a glowing description of the beauty of Peoria's situation, after which occurs the following:

"Peoria now has twenty-five stores, two wholesale and five retail groceries, two drug-stores, two hotels and several boarding houses, two free schools and an incorporated academy, two Presbyterian houses of worship and congregations, one Methodist, one Baptist, one Unitarian, and one Episcopal congregation, six lawyers, eight or ten physicians, one brewery, two steam saw-mills, the usual proportion of mechanics, a court-house and a jail, and a population of from fifteen to eighteen hundred, which is rapidly increasing. The 'Peoria Register and North-Western Gazetteer' is issued weekly, by S. M. Davis, Esq. The religious people of this place have contributed no less than about twenty-three thousand dollars, the past year, for philanthropic purposes."

It might be supposed that twenty-five was a large number of stores for a population of 1,000, at which the village was then estimated; but it must be remembered that Peoria then supplied the whole country for many miles around, including Tazewell, Putnam, Knox and Fulton counties, whose aggregate population of 21,303 in 1835, had been largely increased by 1837. The rapid increase in population is vouched for by Mr. Isaac Underbill, an early and highly respected citizen of Peoria who, writing for Drown's Directory of 1844, says that he arrived at Peoria on Christmas Day, 1833, and, being favorably impressed with the place, determined to make it his future home. He then left for the South and, in a few months, returned. During his absence extensive preparations for building had been made and, by the first of September, about forty houses and stores were erected. An examination of the bills presented to the administrators of the estates of several prominent citizens who had died about that time, will show that, counting dealers of every kind as store-keepers, Dr. Peck's enumeration is not far out of the way. From the estate of one well-to-do gentleman we learn that he had bought of A. Meyer, who was a baker and grocer, one barrel of flour for \$10; from John Chrisman dry-goods to the amount of \$91.59; of J. C. Caldwell, lumber to the amount of \$10.80; of W. Orange a curled hair mattress for \$20.00; of Lowry, Wade & Co. dry-goods and groceries to the amount of \$48.37—also, that boarding was from \$2 to \$3 per week, and a patent cork-screw sold for \$2.25. In the autumn of 1836, there must have been either a corner in the coal-market or a strike among the miners: for, on the 12th of October, coal sold for 4 cents per bushel, but on the 22d of the same month it brought 10 cents. We also find that this gentleman had a bed-stead which he had bought of R. Pierce for \$17.50, and that his hall carpet, 13 $\frac{1}{4}$ yards, had cost him 75 cents per yard. Of A. Meyer he had bought sperm oil at \$2 a gallon, ginger-bread at 25 cents per card (size of card not stated), molasses at 80 cents per gallon, currants at 25 cents per pound, bread at 6 $\frac{1}{4}$ cents per loaf, and had paid him 25 cents each for baking two fruit-cakes. To Mr. J. G. Lineback he had paid \$54 for a suit of clothes and \$5.00 for silk shirts; to Job Ross \$9 for $\frac{1}{2}$ barrel of honey with the barrel, and to Thomas Giles \$60 for cutting wood at 75 cents per cord. To A. G. Curtenius he had paid \$32.80 for groceries, among which were 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ lbs. canvassed ham at 14 cents per pound. We also learn that the trousseau of a bride ran as follows: 12 yds. white satin, at \$1.37 $\frac{1}{2}$ —\$16.50; 4 pairs white kid gloves, at \$1.20—\$4.80; 1 pair white silk hose, \$2.50; 1 yard blond lace, \$1.25; 3 yards ditto, \$1.12; 1 bolt ribbon, 63 cents; 6 yards cross-barred muslin, at 75 cents—\$4.50; 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ yards bombazine, \$0.88; 1 leather trunk, \$0.00. These goods were not to be had in Peoria but were ordered for the bride by a leading firm of merchants. Of J. N. & J. Chrisman he had bought cloth, twist, saddle and blanket; of A. Wren, dry-goods; of Henry Pease, Scidlitz powders, lemon-juice and port wine; of J. C. Armstrong & Co., groceries, Mocha coffee at 20 cents and Java at 18 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound. Pettengill & Bartlett dealt in hardware; David Reeder, in bricks, at \$6.50 per thousand; J. A. Neal, in dry-goods; Thomas L. Mayne, in table ware, combs, lamps, and jewelry. We learn also that a gray mare was worth \$100 and two cows \$05. Stage passage from Philadelphia to Pittsburg was \$14, and from that point to Wheeling, Va., \$5; while freight from St. Louis to Peoria was five cents per hundred, and passenger fare \$5. On his trip East he purchased a Franklin stove at Pittsburg and, on his return home, ordered an improved cook-stove he had seen there, which the seller agreed to ship as soon as the waters in the Ohio River would get high enough.

P. A. Westervelt had charged him the following prices for tailoring: Making cloth coat, $7.00, with trimming for same, $3.00; making pants and trimming for same, $2.50; making thin coat, $6.00; thin pants, $2.00. White, Milford & Co. had charged him $8.00 for making a frock-coat. He had paid Stevens & Silliman $15.50 for groceries and Dr. Augustus Langworthy $12 for medical attendance daily from August 20, 1831, to September 2.

On the 7th of April, 1837, Samuel H. Davis commenced the publication of the "Peoria Register and North Western Gazetteer" as successor of "The Champion," two copies of which—one dated January 20, 1838, the other September 22, 1838—are now before us. As newspapers afford the best mirrors of the times in which they are published, no better service can be rendered by the chronicler of events than to gather information from their columns. "The Peoria Register and North Western Gazetteer" was a six-column weekly paper of four pages, published at the corner of Water and Liberty Streets over Mr. Curtenius' warehouse; terms, $3.00 per annum, payable in advance; advertisements, $1.00 per square for first, and 37½ cents for each subsequent insertion. As an inducement to subscribers it is stated in the prospectus, that Peoria is situated 200 miles above St. Louis, with a population of 1,200, two taverns, twenty-five stores with various kinds of mechanics; thus corroborating the statement of Dr. Peck's Gazetteer.

The copy of January 20th is so very much worn and mutilated that very little can be gleaned from it. There is a long communication in it, however, relative to the existing difficulties in the Presbyterian Church.

A notice is given of the meeting of the Lyceum, signed by Chas. M. Reynolds, secretary; one that Metho-list services are held every Sabbath in Mr. Douglas' school-room, A. E. Phelps, minister; one that Rev. Mr. Cranch would preach in the Court House on Sunday, the 21st of January; one that services in the First Presbyterian Church are held every Sabbath, Rev. Isaac Keller, pastor, and one that services in the Main Street Presbyterian Church are held every Sabbath, Rev. John Spaulding, pastor.

On the first page is a notice of Wesley City, situated about three miles below Peoria, on the banks of the Illinois River, in Tazewell County, known and distinguished as the "Old French Trading House" more than half a century since. (Established in 1818—Ed.) It was selected by Bisson, one of the first settlers of the country, as being one of the most centrally located and most easy of access from every quarter, surrounded by an attractive and most beautiful country. There was a good landing at all stages of the water, and the only one on the east side of the river between Pekin and Hennepin, a distance of sixty miles. It would long since have been occupied by a town-site, but for the fact that the title could not be secured until a late act of Congress regulating the pre-emption of Government lands. The advantages of the location in respect to health are highly praised from the fact that, for fifty years, a few families had lived there free from the diseases common to river locations. The town was surveyed in October, 1836, since which time there had been erected one of the finest steam saw-mills in the State, then in operation for nearly a year. During the past season, about forty buildings had been erected, consisting of dwellings, store-houses, shops and warehouses, and a steam grist-mill was then under contract for erection.

According to this statement Wesley City must have been a dangerous rival, in a business point of view, to Peoria. It must then, however, have been in the zenith of its prosperity, as now its glory has entirely departed.

The copy of the same paper, dated September 22, 1838, was issued under peculiarly distressing circumstances. It begins by saying: "Distant correspondents are asked to be patient for answer because the force in the office is diminished by sickness so that the information could not be gathered, and for the same reason the Gazetteer Department contains nothing editorial this week."

Then follows a one-column article upon the internal improvement system of the State then in progress, which was largely engrossing public attention. Another one of the same length was on the advisability of taking possession of Oregon Territory up to 54 degrees and 40 minutes. Then follow several articles on sod-fences, apples, strawberries, watermelons, and other melons which were growing in abundance; also an article showing that the water in the great lakes had risen about four feet above its usual level; one on the Illinois and Michigan Canal; a long description, by Joe Blackburn, of the coronation of Queen Victoria, which had recently taken place; an article on capital punishment, and one on a family of savages in West Jersey.

The second page starts out with a sad catalogue of deaths, the season being a very sickly one, but the people more hopeful that the crisis had passed. The force in the office of the paper had been so reduced that the proprietor had been obliged to set his two sons (one aged sixteen, the other ten) at work on the press in the office. The first day they worked off one side of the en-ture edition consisting of forty-five quires, and the information is given that it is the only paper in the town.

Under the heads of "Mirror of Life and Domestic Compendium" are collected a large number of news items. The most important item on this page is the obituary notice of Dr. Peter Bartlett (father of our esteemed merchant, P. C. Bartlett—Ed.), who died at the age of fifty years, a respected citizen and prominent physician.

Cincinnati markets are quoted up to the 12th of September, New Orleans markets to the 3d of September, and Nashville markets to the 6th of September.

On the third page are several death notices; also notice of services in the Main Street Presbyterian Church every Sabbath by the Rev. John Spaulding, pastor; services by the Rev. Isaac Kellar, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, in the Court House at one o'clock, and services by the Rev. Mr. Huntoon, of the Unitarian Church, in the Court House, at early candle-lighting; also, that the Synod of Illinois would meet, on Wednesday next, at the Main Street Presbyterian Church at six o'clock.

The provision market is quoted as follows: Flour, $2.50 to $3.00 per 100 pounds; Beef, 4 to 6 cents per lb.; Pork, 6 to 7 cents; Mutton, scarce at 8 cents; Lard, none; Butter, 16 to 20 cents; White Beans, $1.00 to $1.25 per bushel; Corn Meal, 75 to 87½ cents; Oats, 25 to 30 cents; Corn, 62 to 75 cents; Potatoes, 37 to 50 cents; Onions, 50 to 63 cents; Eggs, 10 to 12 cents per dozen; Chickens, $1.50 to $1.75 per dozen.

Stages were advertised to run daily to Springfield, and tri-weekly to Galena, Rushville, and Oquawka. The steam-boat, "Frontier," left every day, except Sunday, for Peru, at 8 A. M., passengers arriving in Chicago the next day; fare to Peru, including meals, $3.00, thence to Chicago $8.00.—Frink and Trowbridge contractors. Robert Allen ran the stage line to Springfield, and J. D. Winters the lines to Chicago and Galena.

J. E. Douglas gives notice that he will recommence his school in the Main Street Presbyterian Church on Monday, October 8th.

The Peoria Jockey Club advertised that their fall races would commence on the 15th of October by a match race between Bacchus and Phantom, for $500.00 a side, to be followed by other races every day during the week.

A proclamation issued by the President gives notice that land sales would be held in Danville, on Monday, November 5th, at Chicago, on Monday, November 19th, at Galena, October 15th, and at Quincy, November 5th. Among the lands advertised for sale at Quincy are the fractional townships of Peoria County.

A column is occupied with legal notices. S. Phelps & Co. of Oquawka give notice to "Toway" travelers that they have put into complete operation a ferry at the town of Oquawka, designed for Iowa, Skunk or Flint river countries in the Territory of Iowa; that this route is the best, shortest and easiest of access to this flourishing country; that the road on the west side of the Mississippi river has been opened and all the sloughs bridged, so that there were no obstacles in getting out on the high land.

The following business notices will prove of interest: Merrill Davis says that his family are suffering for want of woman's help; any help which will come to do very light work for eight or ten days, that his women may be relieved from that burden so as to recover from a long illness, would be promptly and most honestly paid.

Dr. Thomas J. Moore, recently from Schoharie County, New York, announces that he has located in Farmington where he expects to open an office for general practice. (Dr. Moore afterwards became a resident of Rosefield Township, Peoria County, where he resided for many years—Ed.)

James Mossman had just received a large and splendid assortment of drugs, medicines, paints, oils, varnishes, window-glass, perfumery, fancy articles, etc., which, in addition to his former supply, comprised in all the largest and most extensive variety in the State of Illinois. His store was on Main Street, a few doors below the Post Office.

Mr. A. Wren announced to travelers and the public generally, that he had his new and fancy steam ferry-boat in complete operation, and that it regularly crossed the Illinois at this place.

Steamboats, "Frontier" for Peru, six times a week, and the steamer "Motto," D. Grant, Master, once a week to St. Louis, are advertised.

Daniel Belcher, on July 21, 1838, advertised that he had opened a public house in the flourishing town of Charlestown, where he was prepared to accommodate travelers and others with the best that the country afforded.

Joseph J. Thomas advertised his cabinet-making business in all its branches, opposite the Presbyterian Church, Main Street.

E. B. Coleman & Co had a nursery at Peoria, where, in addition to the usual fruit-trees, shrubs, etc., kept a nursery, they had the genuine Morus Multicaulis or Chinese Mulberry. The trade in this variety of trees must have been very great, for Mr. C. I. Horsman, of Rockford, had 200,000 of these trees for sale. His advertisement states that, induced by the growing interest manifested in the West in the culture of Mulberry trees, he had located himself at Rockford on Rock River, where he had an extensive nursery and had for sale the following trees: 100,000 Morus Multicaulis, which are warranted to be genuine large-leaved variety, the leaves averaging about 7 to 9 inches, and in moist rich soil, they are sometimes 12 inches wide and 15 inches long; also 100,000 Canton Multicaulis, the leaf of which is not so large as the other, but much thicker. They are both the most approved kind for feeding the silk-worm. He also had for sale 100,000 Morus Multicaulis cuttings of two buds each. A few silk-worm eggs of superior quality were to be supplied gratis to those purchasing trees.

The following professional cards appear in the paper: Lawyers—Powell & Knowlton, office in the Court House; Charles Ballance, location not given; James H. Sanford, in the rear room over the store of Alter & Howell, Main Street; George B. Parker, Probate Justice, office in the Court House; Peters & Gale, Attorneys, office in the Court House; Frisby & Metcalf, Attorneys, office in the Court House.

The following business cards appear: T. L. Mayne, watch-maker and jeweler, Washington Street; A. Meyers, groceries, liquors, wines, cigars, etc., on Water Street; J. C. Armstrong, wholesale grocer, forwarding and commission merchant; A. G. Curtenius, receiving, forwarding and commission merchant, Water and Liberty Streets (at present occupied by C. R. I. & P. Passenger and Freight depot—Ed.); Farrell & Lippincott, wholesale dealers in drugs, medicines, etc., etc., Main Street; Forsythe & Co., general agents, receiving, forwarding and commission merchants, the firm consisting of R. J. Forsythe, Wheeling, Virginia, and Andrew Gray, Peoria; John A. McCoy, dealer in leather of all kinds, boots, shoes, and hats, corner of Fulton and Water Streets; I. & J. Tapping, fashionable tailors, successors to J. G. Linbeck.

CHAPTER II.

FROM VILLAGE TO CITY.

By act of the Legislature of 1843-5, entitled "An Act to Incorporate the City of Peoria," the Village of Peoria became incorporated as a City with the following boundaries: All of fractional sections three, nine and ten, and south half of section four, Township, Eight North, Range Eight East. These dimensions were, from time to time, enlarged until, by act of February 12, 1863, the entire township was taken in. By the revised charter of 1869, the area was fixed as follows: Fractional sections two and three, the south half of section four, the northeast quarter and the south half of the northwest quarter; the southeast quarter and the south half of the southwest quarter of section five; all of section eight, and fractional sections nine, ten, sixteen and seventeen to the middle of the Lake. By the recent annexations of South Peoria, and West Peoria, or No Man's Land, the City has been enlarged by taking in all of section seven lying south of Seventh Avenue; all of section eighteen, the north half and part of the southwest quarter of section nine, and part of the west half of the northwest quarter of section twenty—for a more particular description of which see records.

By the annexation of North Peoria there have been added the north half of the northwest quarter of section four, Township Eight North, Range Eight East; the south half of section thirty-three, the south half of the north half of section thirty-three, the southwest quarter and the south half of the northwest quarter, and so much of the southeast quarter of section thirty-four, Township Nine North, Range Eight East, as lies west of the road to Springdale Cemetery.

The population at the time Peoria became a city was 1,619, according to a census taken in January, 1844. In June, 1855, another census was taken which showed the total number to be 11,858, an increase of over seven fold.

In March, 1851, Simon DeWitt Drown issued a second Directory and Historical View of Peoria, dated as of the year 1850. This was followed by an annual publication under the title of "Peoria City Record and Drown's Statistics," the latest number of which, that has come under our notice, is that of 1857. In the year 1856, Omi E. Root commenced the publication of a series of annual directories, which was continued for many years. In 1856, N. C. Geer, publisher of the "Peoria Transcript," issued a thirty-two page pamphlet giving a descriptive account of the City, its early history, together with a view of its then present business, manufactories, and other industries. From these publications may be learned much of the progress made by the City in population and wealth during the first fifteen years of its corporate existence.

The number of occupations and kinds of business carried on in 1844, as indicated by the preceding chapter, had not materially increased, but the number of persons engaged in them was much greater. Among the new lines of business then carried on, may be mentioned the production of colored daguerreotypes (colored by hand); the enlarged manufacture of threshing machines, horse-powers, reaping machines, corn-threshers and cleaners, the manufacture and sale of leather goods, copper and tin-ware, plows, carriages, brass and iron foundry products; a large increase in the wholesale business in groceries, drugs, hardware, leather goods; also in the business of insurance and in that of forwarding and commission.

By 1854 the log buildings had all disappeared but two; there were then 1,385 frame and 817 brick buildings, making 2,204 in all. Messrs. Walker & Kellogg, dealers in grain, pork and other produce, had just erected, on the river bank extending back 250 feet on Elm street, one of the largest grain and packing-houses in the Illinois Valley. It was 60 feet wide, the first (or basement) story of brick and the superstructure frame. The basement extended back 100 feet from the river, where, on account of the sloping nature of the ground, it met the surface. The main story was sixteen feet high, and the whole covered with a pitched shingle roof, making what Mr. Drown called a one-and-a-half story building. A tram-way was constructed in the basement, for which purpose an excavation was made to the extreme rear end of the building. The grain from the bins on the main floor was let down through spouts into truck wagons on the tram-way, and by them conveyed to the river and loaded in bulk on canal-boats, of which the firm operated a line to Chicago and St. Louis. An inclined way for wagons, partly earthen and partly frame, was constructed from Water Street on which the railroad was then in process of construction, by which the wagons could be taken in at the gable and thence on a plank way, to the river end of the building, where they emerged and reached terra firma over another and much steeper incline constructed entirely of wood. The wagons were driven in according to the order of their arrival, and were unloaded into the bins on the main floor below. Some idea of the immense business coming to Peoria by wagons in those ante-railroad times may be gained from the fact that, on many occasions, not only the immense building from end to end, but the approach thereto and some distance along Water Street, was filled with a solid line of teams and wagons awaiting their turn to unload.

Special mention is made of two extensive marble factories, one carried on by Parkhurst & Pillsbury at the head of Franklin Street, and one by John Jewell at the foot of Fulton Street, employing about twenty workmen and ten or a dozen traveling agents. Their work was met with all over the West.

The exports and imports of the City for the year 1853-4 amounted to $3,123,692.00; the sale of merchandise to $1,855,502.00.

Three banking houses appear to have been doing business at that time: "The Central Bank," of which Robert Arthur Smith was Cashier, on the lower corner of Main and Water Streets; N. B. Curtis & Co., on the corner opposite, and J. P. Hotchkiss & Co., at No. 13 Main Street.

The City Council was not at all niggardly in regard to the privileges asked by railroads about to enter the City. The contract having been let to Messrs. Sheffield & Farnum for the construction of the Peoria and Bureau Valley Railroad, which was expected to be completed by the opening of navigation the next season, the Council, on July 28, 1853, granted it the right of way generally through and along any streets, lanes, avenues and alleys of the City. The first locomotive over the same arrived, November 7, 1854, the first passenger train November 9th, and, for some time, the freight house and ticket office occupied the open air on Water Street from Main to Fayette, there being no building for the purpose.

In No. 7, of "Drown's Record" it is announced that, on and after Thursday, November 22, 1855, the cars on the Eastern Extension would leave Peoria from the east end of the bridge at 7:15 A. M., and 3:15 P. M., leaving Walnut Grove (Eureka) at 9:00 A. M., and 5:00 P. M.; that, on and after the 1st day of December, the trains on the Peoria and Oquawka Railroad west, would leave the station at Peoria daily at 6:30 A. M., and 3:30 P. M.; returning, would leave Brimfield (Oak Hill Station) at 9:00 A. M., and 5:30 P. M.

Notice is taken that the Peoria Gas-Light & Coke Company had just established its plant at the foot of Persimmon Street, and had then 3 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles of pipe laid in the streets. A description is given of the method of making the gas, which was then furnished to business houses, private families, hotels and churches.

Notice is taken of the fact that Messrs. William and Isaac Moore had erected a large flouring mill on North Fayette Street, which had three run of burrs; also, that Messrs. Walker & Kellogg had erected a fine brick building for a warehouse just above the building they had erected last year. (This was the Railroad Station House above mentioned—Ed.) It is also noted that the Peoria & Bureau Valley Railroad had built its freight depot, engine house, blacksmith shop, machine shop and round house at the foot of Evans Street, where they still remain.

In constructing the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad bridge at the foot of Walnut Street, the track had been made about three feet higher than the roadway of the old wagon-road bridge. This, as well as the fact that the railroad was in too close proximity to the wagon-road, rendered some changes necessary. First an inclined crossing was constructed over the railroad; then the bridge proper was raised to correspond and an incline was made at the southeastern end; then the causeway southeast of the bridge was changed so as to place it further from the railroad—all of which required much time and a large expenditure of money. When the railroad was first opened for passenger traffic a small station house was erected at the intersection of the two bridges, to and from which point passengers were conveyed in omnibuses and carriages.

At the time of the issue of "Drown's Record" of 1856, the process of reconstructing the wagon-road bridge was in progress. The bridge had been built in 1848 and on being removed, it was found to be very much decayed with dry rot, it having been built of oak and black walnut. It was being replaced with a structure of pine. At that time the draw was, as now, 292 feet in length. Messrs. Stone, Boomer & Boston were the contractors, and the improvement was to cost between ten and eleven thousand dollars.

Of the business of the past year the following statements are made:

The two warehouses of Walker & Kellogg and Grier & McClure had handled grain as follows: 648,847 bushels of wheat; 1,475,000 bushels of corn; 340,000 bushels of oats; 2,625 bushels of rye; 26,527 bushels of barley; total, in bushels, 2,517,979.

The manufactories of Peoria are estimated in value as follows: Distilleries, $540,000; breweries, $25,000; foundries, $128,000; flouring mills, $500,000; agricultural implements, $150,000; plow factories, $85,000; planing mills, $290,000; cooperage, $138,000; carriages and wagons, $125,000; lightning rods, $120,000; marble and stone-cutting, $39,000; stone and earthenware, $7,300; cabinet furniture, $75,000; saddle and harness, $39,000; tin, copper, brass, etc., $280,000; candle and soap factories, $29,000; fish, $85,000; boat-building, $40,000. Total, $2,251,000, to which must be added as not enumerated, $1,000,000.

The real estate is quoted at $150 to $300 per front foot for first class business property, residence lots from $400 to $3,000 each.

There were four banking houses: N. B. Curtiss & Co.; Goodell, Ellwood & Co.; J. P. Hotchkiss & Co., and S. Pulsifer & Co. There was one insurance company, the Peoria Marine and Fire Insurance Company, No. 30 Main Street, and fourteen agencies in the city. Owen Donley represented four companies, Sweat and Bills eight, and James A. Lee one.

In the Record of 1857 is a description of the railroad bridge across the river as follows: Entire length, 600 feet, crossing the river a little diagonal from Walnut Street, in three spans of 150 feet each, supported by three piers and abutments; the length of the draw the same as the old bridge (292 feet)—the entire bridge about 4,000 feet in length, 300 feet truss, 292 feet draw and 3,300 feet trestle work, ranging from 10 to 25 feet in height. The space between the draws of the two bridges was fenced by piles driven on each side of the channel to keep boats in their proper place ascending or descending, and to prevent their being driven between the two bridges by the wind. The railroad bridge was built by Messrs. Harper & Twidale, the cost being $60,000 for the three spans and draw. The structure was entirely of wood.

The expenditures of the City of Peoria for the year, ending December 31, 1856, were as follows: Engineer's department, $16,050.88; health department, $3,280; fire department, $2,523.62; police department, $1,224.11; miscellaneous (including salaries of the Mayor, $500; City Clerk, $400; City Treasurer, $300; Assessor, $300; City Attorney, $300)—total, $20,000.01. Among these miscellaneous expenditures are found $700.20 for keeping in repair public wells, pumps and building cisterns (there being then no public water works); $400 for celebrating the 4th of July; $140.50 to Henry Grove for attorney's fees; $150 for expense of suits in the United States Court. The fact that the City had suits in the Federal Courts indicates that it was then somewhat involved in the French claim controversy. The amount paid the Peoria Gas-Light & Coke Co. was $4,624.48; to harbor fund, $80.50; cemetery fund, $5.17; the interest on bonds issued to the Peoria and Opawka Railroad being $11,012.41.

The account of Zenas Hotchkiss as Treasurer shows, among other things, the following: To money received from the collection of taxes for 1856, $12,601.57; liquor licenses, $8,688.50; auctioneer licenses, $575; brokers' licenses, $200; dray and wagon licenses, $230; billiard tables, $425; ten-pins, $130; circuses, menageries and other shows, $300; from hay sales, $1,055.38; from James M. Cunningham, Police Magistrate, for fees collected, $935.32; received from Peoria County for taking care of paupers, $1,074.02; total amount received on account of railroad fund, $15,290.79; amount paid out, $11,272.41; receipts from harbor fund, $530.73.

The exports and imports for the years 1856 and 1857 amounted to $9831,010, in the following articles, as near as could be ascertained, viz.:

Root's Directory for 1857 covered about the same period as Drown's Record of the same date. From this publication we learn the following additional facts:

The Peoria and Bureau Valley Railroad was the only one then finished to Peoria. The Peoria and Oquawka road was finished for about twenty miles west and eighteen miles east of Peoria. The Peoria and Bureau Valley Railroad had been leased to the Chicago and Rock Island Company, which was running trains between Peoria and Chicago—the passenger depot being a small wooden building (recently erected) on Water Street between Hamilton and Fayette Streets. A contract had been let for the building of the bridge across the Illinois River for the Peoria and Oquawka Railroad.

The Western Division was opened to Brimfield (Oak Hill Station—Ed.), the passenger station being on Water Street below Chestnut (corner of Elm).

The Business Directory shows the following: Architects, 2; attorneys-at-law, 20; auction and commission, 5; bakeries, 11; banking houses, 3; blacksmithing, 9; boat-yards, 3; boiler-maker, 1; booksellers and stationers, 3; book-binders, 3; manufacturers and dealers in boots and shoes, 20; breweries, 5; carpenters and builders, 21; carpet-dealers, 4; carriage and wagon manufacturers, 7; composition roofers, 2; confectioners, 5; coopers, 9; manufacturers of corn-shellers, 3; dealers in crockery, 3; daguerrean artists, 3; dentists, 2; distilleries, 4; druggists, 13; dry-goods merchants, 24; express offices, 1; fanning-mill manufacturers, 2; dealers in farming machinery, 3; flour and feed stores, 3; forwarding and commission merchants, 12; foundries and machine shops, 3; fruit-dealers, 3; manufacturers and dealers in furniture, 6; groceries, 51; gunsmiths, 5; hardware merchants, 6; manufacturers and dealers in hats and caps, 3; hotels, 18; insurance agents, 4; intelligence offices, 3; land offices, 8; leather and findings, 4; linseed oil manufacturer, 1; liquor dealers, 12; livery stables, 5; lumber merchants, 9; marble dealers, 3; match manufactories, 1; mills, 4; milliners and dressmakers, 18; music stores, 1; nurseries, 2; omnibus lines, 2; oyster dealers, 6; painters and glaziers, 9; physicians, 23; planing mills, 2; plow factories, 3; pork-packers, 4; printing offices, 6; produce and commission merchants, 7; rope-makers, 2; saddle and harness makers, 6; sash, door and blind manufacturers, 4; soap and candle manufacturers, 2; soda-water manufacturer, 1; starch manufacturer, 1; steam-boat agencies, 2; stoneware manufacturer, 1; surveyors, 6; tailor and clothing stores, 23; tanner and currier, 1; dealers in tin, copper, sheet-iron and stoves, 5; dealers in tobacco and cigars, 7; turner, 1; undertakers, 2; upholsterers, 3; wall-paper and hangings, 4; watchmakers and jewelers, 7; yankee notion and variety stores, 7. Owing to the increase in business, as well as in the number and value of buildings, the insurance business was becoming a matter of importance. The Peoria Marine and Fire Insurance Company was transacting business at No. 39 Main Street. Its officers were Isaac Underhill, President; B. L. T. Bourland, Vice-President; Charles Holland, Secretary, who, together with A. G. Tyng, Philo Holland, William E. Mason, William Kellogg, William R. Phelps, William Fenn, of Lacon, William A. Herron, P. R. K. Brotherson, Leonard Holland, and John Reynolds, constituted the Board of Directors. The capital stock was $100,000.

Owen Donlevy, at No. 33 Main Street over the store of A. P. Bartlett, was agent for the Illinois Mutual Fire Insurance Company, the Stephenson County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, Chicago City Fire Marine Insurance Company, Union

Mutual Life Assurance Company, of Boston, and International Life Assurance Company, London, England. Peter Sweat and Roswell Bills were in partnership in the insurance business adjoining the Post Office. They represented the following companies: The Home Insurance Company, New York; Aetna Fire and Marine Insurance Company, Hartford Insurance Company, of Connecticut, Delaware Mutual Insurance Company, of Philadelphia, and the Hartford Fire Insurance Company, of Hartford, Connecticut.

Goodell, Ellwood & Co., bankers, appear instead of the Central Bank, and S. Pulsifer & Co., are added to the number of banking houses.

The following are the newspapers advertised in this issue:

"The Peoria Democratic Press," daily and weekly, office No. 10 Main Street, Peoria; E. P. Sloan proprietor—there being a jobbing department attached.

"The Illinois Banner," a German weekly, of which A. Zetz was editor and proprietor, connected with which was an English and German jobbing office.

"The Morning News," daily, tri-weekly and weekly, of which George W. Raney was proprietor and editor, corner of Main and Water Streets, with jobbing department attached.

"The Republican," daily evening, tri-weekly and weekly, published by S. L. Coulter, third story of Hotelkiss building, on Main Street between Washington and Water.

The "Daily and Weekly Transcript," corner of Water and Fulton Streets, with book and job office attached.

"The Memento," a Journal of Odd Fellowship, was published at the same place—name of the publishers not given, but known to be N. C. Nason.

T. J. Pickett carried on a book and job office at 13 Main Street. This is supposed to have been the same office in which "The Republican" was published. Pickett formerly had been proprietor and editor of "The Republican," but about this time he became a candidate for the office of Circuit Clerk and retired from the editorship, leaving the same in the hands of Campbell C. Waite.

From "The Peoria Transcript's" account of Peoria, published by N. C. Geer in 1859, we gather the following items:

A description is given of Springdale Cemetery, which was then very new, having been organized but three years previous. The officers were: President, William A. Hall; Secretary, Hervey Lightner; Treasurer, Lewis Howell; Superintendent, John D. Hall. The grounds are described as follows: "The natural beauty of these grounds is unsurpassed. The stranger is prepossessed in their favor on entering. As he proceeds, particularly if he is a lover of the grand and picturesque in nature, his pleasure increases, and he ends the circuit of the grand tour not only delighted, but, we may almost say, enchanted. Nature never endowed a lovelier spot for the consecrated ground. Here is the overarching tree, the open green sward, the purling, murmuring rivulet, the gentle slope, the winding road; then the steep acclivity, at the top of which one peeps out through an opening in the trees, on the one hand, and sees the quiet lake on whose bosom the sunbeams lie sleeping, or gazes down a precipitous depth into a wild ravine luxuriant with vegetation, where those sunbeams rarely penetrate.

"The landscape gardener has little to do to cultivate these grounds, except to restrain the luxuriance of nature; to cut away, perhaps a tree here, to let in a little more sunshine, or there, to give more prominence to the view down that dell, or along the road that leads up yonder ravine.

"The tasteful hands of the living testify by their adornments their love and veneration of the dead, and no longer are burial grounds unsightly and repugnant, but pleasing and attractive spots, where we love to wander and muse on life, its hopes, its aims and its ends."

The Peoria County Fair Grounds, now constituting "Table Grove Addition" to the City of Peoria, received the following favorable notice:

"Of the beauty of these grounds and their general applicability to all purposes of an extensive agricultural and mechanical exhibition, the citizens of Peoria County may be justly proud. In these respects they have few equals, and to find their superior we must go beyond the limits of Illinois. The territory occupied comprises 22½ acres of land, tastefully laid out and conveniently arranged for the accommodation of exhibitors and spectators. The avenues and pathways which intersect the grounds are numerous, and are disposed in the best approved style. The buildings are spacious and appropriate, and adequate to any demand. Of trees, there is great abundance for shade and ornament, the larger number consisting of those indigenous to the soil, which form a magnificent grove; but still, notwithstanding the liberality of nature, the Association has made extensive, yet judicious, outlays for rare specimens of trees, which have been nurtured with care and are vigorously thriving. The variety of shrubbery is extensive, and is arranged so as to strike the eye with the full force of its beauty. The grounds are kept in fine order, and at this season of the year, when all nature is rejoicing in the development of beauty, they have a paradisaical appearance, which fills the heart of the observer with delight. No more fitting spot can be found on which to erect shrines to the presiding genius of Agriculture and the Mechanics Arts."

Then follows a description of the manner in which the grounds had been fitted up for fair purposes: "Water is supplied by two wells and a living spring,—is of the best quality, and is sufficiently abundant for all emergencies."

This description is worthy of being perpetuated for the additional reason that, two years later, these grounds were used as the camp of the Seventeenth Illinois Regiment of Volunteers, also by the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry during the fall and winter of that year, while camping at Peoria under command of Colonel R. G. Ingersoll, as also by one or two regiments in the summer of 1892.

The Peoria City Library then had 350 members and contained 3,500 volumes. The price of membership was $1.00, with an annual fee for the use of the Library of $2.00.

The German Library Association, organized August, 1857, then numbered 100 members with 500 volumes in the library. The initiation fee of members was $1.00 with monthly dues of 25 cents.

There were five military companies in the city, two American, two German, and one Irish,—all in a good state of discipline.

There were three lodges of Masons, one Royal Arch Chapter and one Commandery of Knights Templar; three lodges of Odd Fellows and one Encampment, and two lodges of Good Templars.

There was also a Young Men's Christian Association, which held weekly meetings.

The grain trade was at a low ebb in consequence of a failure of crops. The pork-packing business is described as follows:

"The pork-packing business is very important, and has been pretty steadily on the increase. We give the number of hogs packed here for the following years:

1853	23,725
1856	44,781
1857	37,322

"The number of hogs packed last year, was 53,550, or 18,245 more than the previous year."

"The following is a statement of the different houses engaged in packing, and the number packed by each:

Tyng & Brotherson.....	21,000
Reynolds & Co.....	17,150

"Most of the slaughtering was done by Reynolds & Co., who killed 28,512 hogs, and Kellogg & Nowland, who killed some over 10,000. Their slaughter-houses are located on the river bank in the neighborhood of the distilleries. The above statement does not include the retail butchering business of the city."

The lumber trade gets the following notice:

"There are at present sixteen individuals and firms in the lumber trade. Several new ones have entered the business the past year. Although the trade was greatly curtailed by the absence of country demand, we find the sales to have been larger than any previously reported year. The following is a statement of the sales in 1853, '55, '56, and '58:

	Lumber-feet	Shingles-pieces	Lath-pieces
1853	6,256,683	3,602,000	1,107,600
1855	9,715,284	6,815,500	3,102,800
1856	13,960,140
1858	14,768,000	9,281,330	3,411,200

"Nearly all the lumber is sold at retail, but several of our yards are prepared to wholesale to dealers in adjoining towns—on the railroads leading east and west, and on the river below, and elsewhere—on terms as advantageous (freight considered) as can be had in Chicago. The trade for the present year has, thus far, largely increased over the last, and, with a good crop the coming fall, dealers will close the year with a business unexampled in the history of our city."

The population, year by year, and the assessed valuation of property within the city are given as follows:

"Below we give a table of the population and valuation of Peoria for each year since 1844:

One sign of prosperity is said to be that a greater number of buildings was in process of erection than ever known at any one time before,—not insignificant buildings, but substantial and costly structures, 120 of them being enumerated. Among the well known buildings then in process of erection may be mentioned those of the Peoria Marine and Fire Insurance Company and E. N. Powell on Main Street,—still standing and known as the Iron Front Building. Charles Ulrichson was architect, Smith & Morden masons, and Isaac Bushnell the painter. A. J. Hodges was carpenter for the first, and G. L. Ryors for the second.

Two stores on Adams Street by Wm. Reynolds (where Clarke & Co. now are—Ed.), 47 feet front by 100 deep, and three stories high; Charles Ulrichson, architect, Patrick Ward, mason, Wm. Reddick, carpenter—cost, $11,000.

Store on North Adams Street between Main and Hamilton by P. C. Merwin 17 feet front by 85 feet, three stories; Wm. Thompson, mason, Joseph Tyrrell, carpenter.

Store on Main Street, corner of the alley between Water and Washington, by C. W. McClelland, 20 feet by 70 feet, three stories—cost, $4,500; Ulrichson, architect, Perce & Smith, masons, Ryors, carpenter.

Store on the corner of Main and Adams Streets by Dr. Rouse, 22 by 72 feet, three stories—James Leeds, mason; Wm. Leeds, carpenter (now occupied by Central National Bank—Ed.)

Two stores on Washington Street, between Bridge and Walnut Streets, by N. Bergen, 38 by 60 feet, three stories—cost, $5,000; (formerly known as Bergen's Hall—Ed.)

Two stores on Washington between Fulton and Liberty Streets, by Davis & Smith, each 18 by 100 feet; three stories high—cost, $7,000.

Two stores, corner of Washington and Hamilton Streets, by J. K. Cooper and J. E. McClure, 72 feet by 65 feet, three stories—cost between $8,000 and $9,000.

Two stores on Water Street between Fulton and Main Streets, by Samuel Voris, 42 feet by 65 feet, three stories high—cost $10,000.

Two stores on the corner of Fulton and Adams Streets, by John Warner, 54 feet front on Adams Street by 60 feet deep, basement story underneath on Fulton Street (now occupied by Harned, Beigner & Von Maur—Ed.)

Store on South Adams Street by Henry Lammers, 28 feet front by 40 feet deep, three stories high.

Four brick stores on North Adams Street, corner of Hamilton, 12 feet by 72 feet, three stories high, by Eldrick Smith—cost $15,000. (Still known as the Smith Block—Ed.)

Indian Villa on the bluff, by J. L. Griswold; three stories and basement—cost, $18,000; Ulrichson, architect; Ryors, carpenter, (is now known as the Griswold place, now occupied by Eastace Smith as a residence—Ed.)

Two brick dwelling houses, corner of Monroe and Fayette Streets, by John Hamlin, two stories and basement—cost, $2,500; Ulrichson, architect, Ryors, contractor (now owned by Mrs. Harry Van Burskirk—Ed.)

Ornate Gothic Cottage on the bluff, by E. G. Johnson, in the form of an "L," front 32 by 18 feet, wing 24 by 18, with addition in the rear 25 feet square, T. S. Whitby, architect—cost, $4,000. (Still occupied as a dwelling—Ed.)

For further details of the growth and development of the material interests of the City the reader is referred to the chapters which follow.

CHAPTER III.

VILLAGE AND CITY GOVERNMENT AND CITY BUILDINGS.

On July 11, 1835, the first Board of Trustees of the Village of Peoria were elected. They were Dr. Rudolphus Rouse, Chester Hamlin, R. P. Burlingame, Charles W. McClallen and Isaac Evans, but Evans refusing to serve Cyrus Leland was appointed in his place. Dr. Rouse was chosen President; Cyrus Leland, Clerk; R. P. Burlingame, Treasurer, and one Jesse Miles, Supervisor and Collector. They held their first meeting on July 18, 1835.

On July 18, 1836, Henry W. Cleveland, George B. Parker, Chester Hamlin, Thomas Phillips and Jacob D. Shewalter were elected Trustees, George B. Parker was chosen President and J. L. Marsh, Clerk. On February 18, 1837, George C. Bestor took his seat as one of the Trustees, but how or in whose stead he became entitled to the place does not appear. On the same date John H. Lisk was appointed first Town Constable. On March 5th, Elihu N. Powell was appointed Clerk.

On July 31, 1837, James C. Armstrong, John C. Caldwell, Thomas J. Hurd, Samuel H. McCrory, William Frisby, S. S. Veacock, Rudolphus Rouse, Augustus O. Garrett and Cyrus Leland were elected Trustees; Rudolphus Rouse was chosen President; Martin L. Tucker, Clerk; J. C. Armstrong, Treasurer, and Jesse Miles, Street Commissioner, Assessor and Collector. During the year, Charles W. McClallen became a member of the Board of Trustees to fill a vacancy. On January 31, 1838, William C. Terry was chosen Clerk; Lewis Howell, Assessor, and Edward F. Nowland, Collector, Street Commissioner and Town Constable.

On July 30, 1838, Rudolphus Rouse, George B. Parker, James C. Armstrong, Alfred G. Curtenius, J. McClay Smith, James H. Work, Norman H. Purple, Augustus O. Garrett and Cyrus Leland were elected Trustees; Dr. Rouse was chosen President; J. C. Fuller, Treasurer; Russell Blakeley, Street Commissioner and Town Constable, and John McClay Smith, Clerk. On April 30, 1839, Moses Pettengill was chosen Trustee instead of Cyrus Leland, resigned.

On November 25, 1839, Rudolphus Rouse, George B. Parker, Augustus O. Garrett, Moses Pettengill, A. Meyer, James Mossman, George C. Bestor, George F. Metcalfe and J. McClay Smith were elected Trustees; Rudolphus Rouse was chosen President; J. McClay Smith, Clerk and Treasurer; George B. Parker, Street Commissioner, and Lewis Howell, Assessor. Daniel Brestle was subsequently chosen Trustee to fill a vacancy.

On November 30, 1840, Rudolphus Rouse, Amos P. Bartlett, James Taylor, Daniel Brestle, Charles W. McClallen, Benjamin White, Isaac Underhill, George W. Reed and George T. Metcalfe were elected Trustees; Rudolphus Rouse was chosen President; Amos P. Bartlett, Clerk; John McClay Smith, Treasurer; George B. Parker, Street Commissioner; Jacob Silzell, Constable, and J. Grabeill, Superintendent of the burying ground. During this year William M. Dodge was chosen Trustee in place of James Taylor (resigned), H. B. Stillman, Street Commissioner in place of George B. Parker (resigned), and Henry Hahn to the same position in place of H. B. Stillman (resigned).

On November 29, 1841, Rudolphus Rouse, Isaac Evans, Isaac Underhill, Aquila Wren, Peter Sweat, Chester Hamlin, John C. Heyl, Jacob Gale, and Amos P. Bartlett were elected Trustees; Peter Sweat was chosen President; Amos P. Bartlett, Clerk; Jacob Gale, Treasurer; George B. Parker, Police Justice; A. Wren, Assessor; Edward F. Nowland, Street Commissioner, and George Divelbiss, Constable. During the year the following changes took place in the Board: N. H. Purple took the place of Jacob Gale, W.

B. Farrell that of N. H. Purple, A. O. Garrett that of Isaac Evans, Lewis Howell that of A. Wren and John Hamlin that of Chester Hamlin, while George B. Parker became Assessor in place of A. Wren.

On November 28, 1842, George T. Metcalfe, H. B. Stillman, J. W. Caldwell, G. W. Reed, William E. Mason, Lewis Howell, L. O. Hulburt, Daniel Brestle and Amos P. Bartlett were elected Trustees; L. Howell was chosen President; A. P. Bartlett, Clerk; Jacob Guyer, Treasurer; Thomas Bryant, Police Justice; Charles Kettelle, Assessor; Henry Hahn, Street Commissioner and Town Constable. During the year John Hamlin was chosen Trustee in place of G. T. Metcalfe (resigned); A. A. Benjamin, Street Commissioner and Town Constable in place of Henry Hahn (resigned), and William M. Dodge, Clerk in place of A. P. Bartlett (resigned).

On November 27, 1843, Henry B. Stillman, William M. Dodge, William E. Mason, George W. Reed, John King, E. N. Powell, Lewis Howell, L. O. Hulburt and Charles T. Stearns were elected Trustees; John King was chosen President; Lewis Howell, Clerk and Treasurer; George C. Bestor, Assessor; Thomas Bryant, Police Justice, and S. DeWitt Drown, Street Commissioner, Town Surveyor and Town Constable.

In December, 1844, the last Board of Trustees was elected. Its members were Halsey O. Merriman, William M. Dodge, Charles T. Stearns, Charles Cox, George W. Reed, Samuel B. King, John Rankin, Benjamin White and Philip J. Mosher. Halsey O. Merriman was elected President; Charles T. Stearns, Clerk, and Lewis Howell, Treasurer.

The citizens having voted in favor of the adoption of the City Charter, the Board of Trustees held their last meeting on April 29, 1845, at which time they closed up the business, ordered the expenses of the election paid and adjourned to no definite time.

During the period in which Peoria was governed by a Board of Trustees two important questions of jurisdiction arose between that Board and the County Commissioners' Court. It has already been noted that, when the latter body laid out the town plat, all the ground between Water Street and the river was reserved from sale until the village should become incorporated. It was claimed by the Board of Trustees that, when incorporated, not only that ground but the streets, and even the Court House Square, had become the property of the Village. This claim having been asserted, the County Commissioners requested the Board of Trustees to execute to the County a deed of conveyance for the public square. This was at first refused unless the county would yield up all right to the license fees for ferries, dram-shops and the like, as well as all fines imposed for violations of law within the village. The controversy grew very spirited and it does not appear just how it was settled, but sometime thereafter the Trustees did cause a deed to be made to the county for the public square.

The Legislature of 1844-5, passed an act entitled, "An Act to Incorporate the City of Peoria," one of the provisions thereof being that the charter should be submitted to a vote of the people and, if a majority should vote for it, the same should immediately take effect as a law, but, if a majority should be against it, the same should be void. In pursuance of the provisions of this act an election was held at the Court House on April 21, 1845, to decide whether or not the charter should be adopted, at which election the vote stood 102 in favor to 35 against it. An election was held on Monday the 28th of April, for one Mayor and eight Aldermen, at which time William Hale was elected Mayor and Jesse L. Knowlton, Peter Sweat, Charles Kettelle, Clark Cleveland, Chester Hamlin, John Hamlin and Hervey Lightner were elected Aldermen. Jacob Gale and Amos P. Bartlett having each received 168 votes (and being the next highest), there was no choice as to the eighth man. On May 5th, 1845, William Hale was sworn in as Mayor, as were all the Aldermen elected. The first ordinance adopted was one providing that, in case of a tie-vote for alderman, the lot should be cast by the Mayor. No sooner had the ordinance been adopted than the lot was cast by the Mayor and it having turned out in favor of Mr. Bartlett, he was declared duly elected and sworn into office. At the same time, Jesse L. Knowlton was elected City Clerk, and thus was inaugurated the City Government of the City of Peoria.

By several acts of the Legislature thereafter passed, the charter was, from time to time, changed, the boundaries extended and the jurisdiction of the City enlarged. These amendments were, however, all swept away by a general revision of the charter in the year 1860, which was soon followed by a revision of the entire body of ordinances.

The most important change, however, took place in the year 1862, when a vote was taken in pursuance of law upon the question of adopting the provisions of the Revised Statutes relating to the government of cities and villages. Since that time the City of Peoria has been governed by this general law.

The original charter provided that an election for a Mayor and eight Aldermen should be held on the last Monday in April, 1845, the Mayor to hold his office for one year and the Aldermen for two years, but that the terms of the Mayor and one-half of the Aldermen should expire at the next regular election, and thereafter only four Aldermen should be elected each year. The annual elections were to take place on the last Monday in November. The first Mayor and four Aldermen therefore held their respective offices for only seven months.

By an amendment of the charter, passed February 20, 1861 the time for the annual elections was changed to the second Tuesday in March, the first election to take place on the second Tuesday in March, 1862, and the terms of the offices to begin on the third Tuesday of the same month, the incumbents to hold their offices until that time.

There was only one election held under the charter as amended, for, on February 12, 1863, another amendment was adopted fixing the time of the annual election on the second Monday in April, the term of office to commence on the third Monday of that month.

In 1867, another change was made fixing the time of the annual election on the same day as the town-ship election, but only one election was held under that amendment.

The Legislature of 1869 revised the entire charter and fixed the time of the annual election on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, the same day on which the general elections were held, the officers elected to take their seats on the first Tuesday in January ensuing. This continued until the adoption of the general incorporation law, since which time the elections have been held on the third Tuesday in April.

The terms of office specified in the following table must be referred to the above provisions of the charter, where not so specified.

MAYORS—William Hale, April 28, 1845; Charles T. Stearns, November, 1845; William Mitchell, 1846; Jacob Gale, 1848; Dennis Blakeley, 1849; George C. Bestor, 1850; Jonathan K. Cooper, 1851; George C. Bestor, 1852; Charles Ballance, 1854; Gardner T. Barker, 1855; William R. Hamilton, 1857; John D. Arnold, 1859; William A. Willard, 1860; Gardner T. Barker, March 11, 1862, (time changed); Matthew W. McReynolds, April 13, 1863, (time changed);

Jacob Gale, 1864; Henry T. Baldwin, 1865; Philip Bender, 1867; P. R. K. Brotherson, 1868; Gardner T. Barker, November, 1869, (time changed); P. R. K. Brotherson, 1870. (For the years following, the term of office was two years, the elections being held in November of the odd years, but the Mayors elect did not take their seats until January following); P. R. K. Brotherson, 1872; John Warner, 1874; Leslie Robinson, 1876; John Warner, 1878; Frank Hitchcock, 1882; John Warner, 1884; Samuel A. Kinsey, 1886; John Warner, 1888; Charles C. Clarke, 1890; John Warner, April, 1892 (time changed); Philo B. Miles, 1893; William M. Allen, 1895; John Warner, 1897; Henry W. Lynch, 1899; William F. Bryan, 1901.

CITY CLERKS—Jesse L. Knowlton, 1845-6; John A. McCoy, 1846-7; James M. Cunningham, 1848-1856; James S. Barkman, 1856-7; James M. Cunningham, 1857-60; Casper W. Rees, 1860-5; Henry H. Forsythe, 1865-76; Charles T. Luthy, pro tem, 1870-8; Henry H. Forsythe, 1878-86; S. F. Flint, 1886-8; Michael Fay, 1888-93; Frank Lukens, 1893-5; James R. Conway, 1895-7; Robert M. Orr, 1897—.

CITY TREASURERS—Ralph Hamlin, 1845-6; Jonathan K. Cooper, 1846-7; William M. Dodge, 1847-8; Clark B. Stebbins, 1848-50; John T. Lindsay, 1850-2; Zenas Hotchkiss, 1852-3; John King, 1853-5; Zenas Hotchkiss, 1855-6; John King, 1856-7; A. O. Garrett, 1857-8; Owen Dunlevy, 1858-9; Matthew W. Reynolds, 1859-60; Augustus O. Garrett, 1860-2; Philip Bender, 1862-6; Peter Sweat, 1866-7; Tobias S. Bradley (elected in 1867 but soon afterwards died and William Rounseville was chosen for the remainder of the term); John Schwab, 1868-70; Otto Treibel, 1870-2; Barnhart Meals, 1872-6; Philip Bender, 1876-8; Frederick D. Weinette, 1878-83; Henry Detweiler, 1883-4; Charles Jaeger, 1884-6; Henry Detweiler, 1886-8; John W. Brauer, 1888; Charles Ulrich, 1889; Henry Detweiler, 1890-94; Joseph Gillig, 1894-6; Will O. Clark, 1896-7; A. Gerdes (first chosen in 1867, but dying soon afterwards was succeeded by Henry Pothoff, who having resigned, John J. McDonald was chosen for the remainder of the term) 1897-9; Adolph Treizger, 1899; John Thode, 1901.

The official positions above mentioned have had a continued existence from the beginning. In the meantime many offices have been created by charter or by ordinance, some of which still exist, but they have been too numerous to be here mentioned. In 1862, the Council relieved the City Clerk of a portion of his duties by the creation of the office of Comptroller. Since that time there have been appointed to that office the following: Norman K. Smith, 1892-4; Jacob Heim, 1895-6; William D. Meisser, 1897-8; James R. Conway, 1899-1900; James E. Pillsbury, 1901—

There have been three general compilations and revisions of the ordinances of the city. The first was made by James M. Cunningham, City Clerk (being also an attorney), in the year 1869, immediately after the adoption of the Revised Charter. The entire code, as revised, was adopted by a general ordinance, passed October 15 of that year. The original charter and all amendments thereto, the amended charter, all general laws affecting the government of cities, the ordinances as revised, together with a list of all the Mayors and Aldermen, were then published, the book being known as the Revised Ordinances of 1869.

The second revision and compilation was made by John M. Tenny, Michael O. Shaughnessy and William G. Randall, in the year 1884, and was adopted by the Council in a general ordinance, passed October 15 of that year. It is not so comprehensive a work as the former, but in addition to the revised ordinances it contains much useful matter, including a list of Mayors and Aldermen down to that year.

The third revision was made by Wilbert I. Slemmons, Israel C. Pinkney and Daniel F. Raum, in 1892, and was adopted by the Council by general ordinance passed April 16th of that year. This is a comprehensive work embracing, besides the revised ordinances, all ordinances relating to special privileges and grants made by the city, and all general and special laws relating to the government of cities and villages.

CITY BUILDINGS.

The first building erected by the City of Peoria for public use was probably the market, which was situated in the middle of Washington Street between Main and Hamilton Streets. It was of the prevailing style of market-houses of its day, being an open shed with pitched roof supported by upright posts or columns, with the usual appliances of such structures. The general dimensions, the time of its erection and its cost are all unknown to the writer; but, from what is reported, it must have been a structure of very modest dimensions and of moderate cost. For a time it served the double purpose of a market and a shed for the fire engines.

On March 21, 1848, a committee consisting of Lewis Howell, Charles W. McClallen and Dennis Blakeley was appointed to purchase, for $300, lot number 3, in Block 6 (where the Deween Building now stands), for an engine house and City Hall. The building there erected was a two story brick structure with gable looking towards the street. The first floor was used for an engine house, the second for Council Room, Police Magistrate's Office, City Clerk's Office and other purposes appertaining to the City Government—the city prison or calaboose being in the cellar. This building was occupied until the year 1859.

In view of a pressing necessity for enlarged accommodations, the City Council, about the year 1858, purchased the lots (144 feet on Madison Avenue by 171 feet on Fulton Street) and, in March, 1859, passed an ordinance for the erection of a City Hall, to include an engine-house, police office and city prison. The plans of the new building were furnished by Valentine Jobst, architect, and the contract for the erection of the building was let to Joseph Miller—Smith and Murden laying the stone and brick work. It was a brick building, with stone trimmings, two stories, with tower for alarm bell 60 feet in height. It is said to have been of Italian style of architecture, built of pressed brick, fifty-two feet front by sixty feet deep and cost about $10,000. On the first floor were located an engine-room, the police and Mayor's offices, and, in the rear, the city prison. On the second floor were the Council room, the Clerk's office, the City Engineer's office, and apartments for several other officials connected with the administration of city affairs. It continued to be occupied until the year 1898 when it was superseded by the present elegant City Hall.

On the corner of Madison Avenue and Fulton Street and adjoining the City Hall there was erected, about the year 1859, an extensive market-house, costing about $10,000. It was of brick, built in the form of a cross, one story with high roof, the floor paved with brick and the whole divided into stalls which were rented to the market men. This market was never very popular nor productive of much revenue to the city, the citizens being able to purchase at the groceries everything needed.

The present City Hall was erected in the years 1867-8, at a cost of $234,502.00. It has an assembly room for public meetings, a Council Chamber and offices for all departments of the City Government. It is four stories high and is built of pressed brick trimmed with stone from Lake Superior. It is surmounted by a bell tower, in which is hung the old alarm bell formerly used in the tower of the old City Hall. The City Prison, erected at the same time as an adjunct to this building, is located on the same lots.

THE COLISEUM.—The City being in great need of a hall of dimensions suitable for the accommodation of large public meetings, conventions and the like, the City Council, in the year 1900, took steps to erect a large hall, and to that end purchased for $12,000 lots at the corner of Adams and Hancock Streets, upon which "the Coliseum" now stands. The building was partly erected during the fall and winter months of that year, finished about the first of May, 1901. It was inaugurated by holding therein a musical festival lasting several days. It contains one main audience room with stage, galleries on three sides, and suitable ante-rooms, dressing rooms and stair cases.

THE WORK HOUSE.—In the early part of the year 1878, a movement was set on foot for the establishment of a Work House, or House of Correction, for the imprisonment of persons found guilty of violations of the ordinances of the City of Peoria, or of the lower grades of public offenses. On the 8th of May, of that year, a joint meeting of the City Council and of the Board of Supervisors of Peoria County was held, and an agreement entered into, for the erection of such a building at the joint expense of the City and County. A committee of six, three from each body, was appointed to select and purchase grounds and to erect the building. A small tract of land, adjoining the Water Works, part of that formerly known as Plum Point, and embracing six and one-fourth acres, was purchased. A brick building two stories high was erected, the whole cost of which, with the grounds, was about $18,000, of which the county paid $8,000. It was completed and first occupied by Alexander Furst, Superintendent, on the 9th day of April, 1879. Its management is placed under a Board of Inspectors consisting of the Mayor, who is ex-officio President, and three persons appointed by him with the approval of the City Council. Their term of office is three years. Under the joint agreement between City and County, each of these municipalities has a right to send persons there and to have them kept, subject to the rules and regulations prescribed. By entering into an agreement with the Board of Inspectors, the same privileges may be acquired by other municipalities. The inmates are kept at work at some suitable occupations that can be carried on upon the grounds, the occasions having been very rare when they have been set at work outside the prison limits. The beneficial influence of this institution upon the various classes of petty offenders has been of a marked character, and has tended greatly to the lessening of the commission of crimes of the lower order.

CHAPTER IV.

WATER SUPPLY AND FIRE DEPARTMENT.

For all purposes except that of drinking the river was the main water supply of the early settlers. But the water of the Illinois River has never been regarded as very wholesome. In early times there were numerous small springs issuing from the river bank, near the brink, which were utilized by collecting the water into receptacles provided for that purpose. But these were useful only to those living near the river. There were also copious springs issuing from the face of the bluff, one near where Western Avenue now is; one at Spencer Street; one at Main Street; one near the head of Jackson Street and one at Spring Street. There were others of less note, but these were regarded as important, some of them being made the subjects of special reservations in the grants of the land upon which they were located. But for common use they were too far distant from the village. As the population extended back from the river, resort was had mainly to wooden cisterns, the construction of which constituted an important item in the cooper's trade,—every cooper making it known by his advertisements that he was prepared to build cisterns of the most approved pattern and on short notice. They were constructed after the pattern of a common railroad tank and hooped with iron, but set into the ground instead of upon an elevated support. Brick cisterns had not yet come into use. To render the water palatable, ice would be a desideratum, the manner of furnishing which was as primitive as the cisterns. One man, a grocer, advertised September 22, 1838, that he had ice for sale at 1½ cents per pound for the balance of the season, to those calling before seven o'clock in the morning. Four years earlier, the proprietor of the only newspaper in the village had advertised for rent an ice-house 12 feet deep, 9 feet square, double lined, with good wheat straw between the lining and the batting. Ice-houses above ground were probably deemed impracticable. With the water and ice at hand another citizen gave notice that he had just received one pipe fourth-proof Cognac Brandy, one barrel White Malaga Wine, one barrel Madeira, one-half barrel Port, one-half barrel London Particular Teneriffe, six boxes Claret, one box Muscat, four barrels brown sugar, and various other articles (doubtless including lemons) in his line, which he would sell for cash. There were two public houses which were ready to furnish their guests with the best the country could afford. The people were, therefore, not under the necessity of relying wholly upon raw cistern water.

The first attempt to establish a public supply of water was made by Stephen Stillman in 1833. His plan was to utilize the water of a spring near the head of Jackson Street, in front of what is now the new St. Francis Hospital, by conveying it in wooden pipes to the Public Square. The County Commissioners were contemplating the erection of a new Court House, and as there was no adequate supply of water nearer than the river, a contract was entered into with Stillman at the March Term, 1833, granting to him, his heirs and assigns the exclusive right to bring water to the Public Square. His project also contemplated the construction of a tank or reservoir at the southeast corner of the square, but this part of the enterprise does not seem to have been carried out. The pipes consisted of logs bored from end to end by hand, which was the usual way of making pump stocks in those early times.

Soon after the completion of the Court House the County Commissioners entered into a contract with Dr. Rudolphus Rouse to sink a well at the west corner of the square, which was completed and served the public for many years. It has been stated that wells were sunk only in the low grounds below Adams Street because of the impossibility of raising the water by means of suction pumps from the depth required. This is an erroneous statement, as the well mentioned proves. There were also wells as far up as Monroe Street, but those on the higher grounds were operated by means of the rope, windlass and bucket, and not by the pump. These wells were sunk at the public expense and some of them have been maintained by the City until very recently, if not until the present time.

But these early improvements had no reference to protection against fire. As early as August 10th, 1830, the Board of Trustees adopted an ordinance requiring every owner of a building to provide for it two substantial leather fire-buckets, with his or her name inscribed. When a fire would break out, a bell would be rung, at first the bell on the Main Street Church, afterwards that on Tobey & Anderson's Plow Shop, whereupon every person able to carry a bucket was expected to repair to the scene. Two lines would then be formed from the burning building to the river, along one of which buckets filled with water would be passed from hand to hand, and along the other the empty buckets would be returned to be again filled. After the introduction of the fire engines, as nearly every family had a cistern, these were laid under contribution so long as the water in them would last.

By Act of the Legislature of February 1st, 1843, a company called the Peoria Water Company was chartered with power to improve any spring within two miles of the corporate limits. This company excavated about the spring in the northeast corner of Section eight near Spencer Street and improved it with substantial masonry, which still exists. They also conducted the water through leaden pipes into the residence portion of the city, also to some of the business houses in the vicinity of the public square, and extended their pipes as far as Hancock Street between Madison and Monroe. This company still has an existence and probably continues to supply some of its former patrons with water. The spring was subsequently further utilized by Ransom E. Hickey, in the manufacture of soda water, and is still used to supply a bottling establishment of a similar character.

The first movement towards the establishment of a fire department was made on January 8, 1844, when at a meeting of the Trustees of the Town of Peoria, it was resolved that a meeting of the citizens be called to assemble at the Court House for the purpose of devising means to protect property from fire, and that the Clerk be authorized to give notice thereof, and to furnish light, etc., for the meeting and to charge it to the town. Nothing substantial, however, seems to have resulted from that meeting.

By an act of the Legislature of March 3, 1845, the Trustees of the Town were authorized to construct a general system of water works, with power to take any springs within two miles of the corporate limits, which power was to endure to the City if the new charter should be adopted. But nothing seems to have been done under this act. At the March Term, 1846, of the County Commissioners' Court, William H. Fessenden, Peter Sweat and A. P. Bartlett were appointed a committee to superintend the construction of two cisterns in the Public Square to be used in case of fire. On September 10th, of the same year, the City Council appointed Charles W. McClallen, Lewis Howell and Charles T. Stearns (Mayor) to purchase, at the expense of the city, a good fire engine and hose. This was done and on November 23d, of the same year, it resolved that the engine committee be authorized to purchase another of the same pattern, if the same could be obtained by paying $500 down and the balance by November 1, 1847. Both engines were built by Hunneman, were purchased in Boston at a cost of $1,200, and came by water by way of New Orleans. They were for a time lodged in the Market House on Washington Street. This was the origin of the splendid Fire Department we now have.

Within the next few years four fire companies were organized in the city, but just when the first one was formed it is difficult to ascertain. They were at first formed or disbanded at the pleasure of the City Council, but afterwards two of them obtained charters from the Legislature.

The chief supply of water still continued to be the river and, when that was too distant, cisterns would be laid under contribution. Not only the members of the companies were subject to be called upon to do duty in working the engines, but every citizen able to work might be drafted into the service by the Marshal, and if he refused to respond to the call, he might be fined for his refusal. In this way the engines were kept constantly manned.

Independent Fire Company, No. 1, was organized some time in the year 1846, probably about the time of the purchase of the first fire engine.

On March 21, 1848, a committee consisting of Lewis Howell, C. W. McClallen and Dennis Blakely was appointed by the City Council to purchase Lot 3 in Block 6 for $300 for engine house and City Hall. Upon the completion of the City Hall, as elsewhere stated, Company No. 1 was re-organized and took up its quarters there, and continued to occupy the first floor of that building until the completion of the New City Hall on Fulton Street in 1859.

Neptune Fire Company, No. 2, was organized about the month of June, 1847, as Illinois Engine Company, No. 2, with thirty-four members. In 1852 it moved from the old Market House, to what was known as the Central City Hose House on Adams Street between Hamilton and Fayette, now occupied by O'Brien Bros., 229 N. Adams Street. In 1854 they received a new engine and re-organized under their new name. This company was disbanded in 1858. But a new company was organized July 9, 1858, as Young America, No. 4, with 66 members, and were given the old engine No. 1. In the fall of 1858, the City Council gave them the engine of Neptune, No. 2, at which time the name was changed to that of Fire Company, Young America, No. 2, and they were also given the hall formerly occupied by the Neptune. This company continued in existence until October 12, 1865, during which time it many times carried off the broom in tournaments with the fire departments of other cities.

Germania Fire Company, No. 3, was organized in 1853, and received a charter from the Legislature by Act of February 14, 1855. Their first engine was made by Kufferle of St. Louis. In 1860, they received a new engine which in 1867 they donated to the city, and purchased a steam fire engine, a part of the price being paid by the city. They kept their first engine in an old blacksmith shop on Washington Street until 1854, when the city built them an engine house on Liberty Street on the south corner of the alley between Adams and Washington Streets. The hall on the second floor of this building was a rallying place for the Germans for a long time. There August Schultz taught a school by day and there one of their singing societies held forth at night. This company was also the winner of many prizes in tournaments and did most valuable service in the extinguishment of fires.

The Phoenix Hook and Ladder Company, No. 1, was organized February 10, 1856. It had its house on the alley between Washington and Adams Street near Main.

New Peoria Fire Company, No. 4, was organized October 26, 1858, with sixteen men besides the foreman, James Shock, who was also assistant foreman of the Hook and Ladder Company. They were first given the old engine No. 1, but afterwards in 1865 were given the engine of Young America, No. 2, of which they are still in possession. They received a charter by Act of the Legislature of February 18, 1861. This is the only fire company which has survived the changes wrought in the Fire Department by the progress of events. They still have their old hand engine, which is brought out at all public exhibitions of the Fire Department.

Another movement was set on foot in 1857, to provide a general supply of water for the city. A company was chartered under the name of The Peoria City Hydraulic Company, with a capital of $250,000 with power to increase it to $500,000, and with the full and exclusive power and authority to construct water works for the convenience and accommodation of the public for the period of fifty years. It was authorized to conduct the water in leaden, iron or other aqueducts from any point on the Illinois River within two miles of the corporate limits, and to lease water privileges upon such terms as they might agree with property owners as nearly upon equal terms as possible under the circumstances, provided the yearly profits should not exceed fifty per cent of the capital stock paid in. The property of the company was to be free from taxation by the city, in consideration of which the city and the fire companies were to have free use of the water and free access to the hydrants (one of which was required to be placed on each block), in case of fires. The city was to have the right to purchase the works, by paying cost and interest on the money expended at not exceeding 12 per cent. per annum. By another act of the same Legislature the city was given power to issue bonds to the amount of $100,000 in aid of this company. Nothing, however, came of it and the city remained for some years thereafter without a public supply of water.

Steam fire engines came into use in the year 1860, when Joseph J. Thomas was chief of the Fire Department. Steamer Central City was placed in the service May 21, of that year, Hank Seely being engineer, Benjamin Wright, stoker, O. H. Norton, John Waugh and M. Peve, hosemen; the engineer receiving $1000 per month, the hosemen and stoker $4500 per month each. But the latter could continue to work at their trades, they being required to be on duty only in time of fires. The second steam fire engine placed in the service was that of Germania Fire Company, No. 3, in the summer of 1867.

During the war active steps were again set on foot to obtain an adequate supply of water. Disastrous fires having become frequent, it was feared they might have been the work of rebel emissaries in the city. On one or two occasions serious alarm prevailed and citizens turned out to patrol the city in the night time. Whether or not this alarm had anything to do with hastening the action of the City Council does not appear, but on January 19, 1864, a resolution was adopted by that body, to the effect that a committee of three, in connection with the City Engineer and Surveyor, be appointed by the Mayor, to inquire into the expediency of erecting water works for the city, and to report plans and probable cost and all things pertaining to the same at their next regular meeting. (A large task for so short a time). The committee at first consisted of Aldermen Frederick Bohl, P. R. K. Brotherson and Patrick W. Dunne; but before the committee could report Mr. Dunne and Mr. Russell (the engineer) had retired and Isaac Underhill and Michael B. Loughlin had been substituted. That committee on June 21, 1864, reported a plan with estimates of cost and recommended that an amendment of the City Charter be procured at the next session of the Legislature authorizing an issue of bonds to the amount of $300,000. Such an act was passed by the Legislature and, at an election ordered by the Council, and held on the 10th day of April, 1865, (that being the date of the general City election) upon a proposition to issue the bonds, the same was defeated by an overwhelming vote, only 203 out of an entire vote of 2,300 voting for it. This may appear strange to the people of the present day, but it must be remembered that, when that vote was taken, the war was still raging. True it was, that on the night before, the people had been aroused at ten o'clock by the ringing of bells and the firing of cannon over the news of Lee's surrender, but there was still much to be done, and the drain upon the people had already been as heavy as could well be endured. The matter then rested until October, 1867, when another vote was ordered, but, in consequence of three of the wards not having voted, the matter was again dropped until February 4, 1868. In pursuance of a resolution of the Council then adopted, the Mayor appointed a committee consisting of John H. Francis, Enoch Emery and Michael B. Loughlin to consider the matter, to employ a suitable engineer to make plans, surveys and estimates for the work, with authority to visit such places as they might deem necessary to get the requisite information. The committee reported on March 3, 1868, that they had visited Chicago, and St. Louis and made a personal examination of the works in those cities, that they had employed an engineer for the season, and that, from what they could learn from the plans and recommendations of Octave Chanute, Esq., they were nearly what was needed. The committee strongly urged upon the Council the necessity of proceeding at once and reported an Ordinance entitled "An Ordinance establishing a system of Water Works in the City of Peoria," which was passed. At the same time an Ordinance was passed creating a department of the City Government to be called "the Water Works Department," to be under the direction and management of a committee of the City Council consisting of five members to be appointed by the Mayor as soon as might be thereafter, said committee to be renewed on the first Tuesday in May, 1868, and annually thereafter, and to have the general supervision of the construction as well as the control of the Water Works. The committee so appointed consisted of John H. Francis, Enoch Emery, Gardner T. Barker, Larkin B. Day and Samuel A. Kinsey.

About the same time another Ordinance was passed authorizing the Mayor and Clerk to issue bonds to the amount of $300,000, and on April 11, the Mayor was authorized to borrow the money necessary for the purpose intended.

On May 25th, the committee reported that they had engaged Joseph A. Locke, Assistant Engineer of the Water Works at Louisville, Kentucky, to make a survey and estimate of the cost of water works, capable of supplying the city with 2,000,000 gallons of water per day. The estimated cost exclusive of the grounds was $310,059. This estimate included a reservoir to cost $52,250, to be located on the bluff at an elevation of 200 feet from the river.

The committee visited Cincinnati, Cleveland, Pittsburg and Syracuse. During the progress of their investigations their attention was called to a new system known as the Holly System, by which the reservoir could be dispensed with and the water injected directly into the pipes by means of rotary pumps with such force as to take the place of fire engines in the extinguishment of fires, anywhere in the city. The committee did not at first favor this plan, but having visited Lockport and Auburn, where the same was in use, they became satisfied as to its feasibility and that, by that means, nearly $100,000 could be saved to the city. The plan also contemplated an arrangement for filtering the water, by which it could be brought from the river through a large submerged pipe or conduit into a filter bed, excavated to a depth below low-water mark, and there made to pass through the filter before entering the pipes. A new estimate was then made and the entire cost figured at $235,368.31.

The Holly System was then adopted and the water works were, by ordinance dated July 21, 1868, located on a tract of land containing eleven acres situated on the river bank at the foot of what is now Grant street, then the Steam Ferry Road, and lying partly in the northwest quarter of Section 2, partly in the northeast quarter of Section 3. The land belonged to John Birkett, who was offered $2,200 for it, if he would sell for that price, but since the city could not come to an agreement with him, the Mayor was authorized to begin proceedings in court for condemnation thereof. The land was, however, purchased at that price.

The Water Works Committee had been authorized to contract with the Holly Manufacturing Company, to furnish engines, pumps and other machinery necessary for the application of its system to Peoria, at a cost not to exceed $50,000, and, on June 22, 1868, their contract was ratified by ordinance. On August 7, a contract was by ordinance ratified between the City and T. J. Gaylord & Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, for 1,000 tons of iron pipes and castings. The contract for laying the pipes was awarded to Patrick Harmon, and that for the erection of the buildings to Valentine Jobst.

By an act of the Legislature of February 20, 1860, the charter of the City of Peoria was revised and amended so as to embrace all ordinances adopted subsequent to the original charter, which were thought desirable to be retained. The Water Works Department was incorporated into the revised charter, the powers of the Council were enlarged, and authority was given to issue water works bonds to the amount of $500,000, at 7 per cent. By a supplemental act, approved April 18, 1869, authority was given to make $150,000 of these bonds draw interest at 10 per cent. per annum.

By ordinance of April 20, 1869, the Mayor and Clerk were directed to issue $150,000 of said bonds to bear interest at 10 per cent., and on June 30, they were authorized to issue $50,000 in bonds at 6 per cent. On the same day a contract was entered into with William Smith, of Pittsburg for 500 tons of pipe to complete the works. With the $300,000 of bonds previously issued the amount of Water Works bonds issued by the City was one-half million of dollars.

The works were completed during the summer of 1869. On April 15th of that year the City Council passed an ordinance for the regulation and collection of water rates or rents, and on August 1st the same began to be charged up against the takers. Twenty-five and one-fourth miles of water pipe had been laid and 200 double fire hydrants had been set. The total cost was $431,790.45. The amount realized from the sale of bonds had been $423,020.95.

Upon test trial the works proved eminently satisfactory. The contract for pipes had called for a resisting power of 300 pounds to the square inch. The force applied was sufficient to throw a stream perpendicularly 150 feet. The effect upon the firemen was unexpected and in some respects ludicrous. The immense force applied wrenched the nozzles from their hands, and the hose went flopping about the hydrants on the street corners like so many enraged anacondas, to the consternation of the on-lookers and to the serious damage of some sections of the hose.

The introduction of the water works wrought a complete revolution in the fire department of the city. For the period of five years the system worked so satisfactorily that the fire engines were no longer needed, and they were all sold or otherwise disposed of with the exception of that of Germania No. 4.

In 1874 the department consisted of The Fire Alarm Telegraph, introduced in the year 1868, The Central City Hose Company, organized in 1870; The Holly Hose Company, organized in 1872; a Hook and Ladder Company, and the Germania No. 4. During that year a new building had been erected in Block 9, North Adams Street, costing with the lot $3,400.20; also a new hose house on the bluff, on a lot purchased of Barrett White, for $278.75, the whole costing $2,432.50. There were still some public wells kept up at the city's expense.

On March 9, 1875, on motion of Charles H. Kellogg, an ordinance creating a paid Fire Department was adopted, and, at the same meeting, O. H. Norton was elected chief.

During his administration, which continued for three years, several important changes took place. It having been discovered that the supplying of the bluff with water in time of fire could no longer be continued with the Holly pumps without detriment to the service, a new Cameron piston pump, costing $2,500, was added, with special reference to that service. A new Dean piston pump was also added to the general system, at a cost of $5,000. There was also added a chemical engine at the cost of over $2,600. The Bluff Hose Company was organized and equipped with hose-carriages, horses and harness at the cost of over $900. In 1876 another chemical wagon was added, at a cost of over $2,000 and in 1877 Chemical Engine Company No. 2 was formed; a new building for it was erected at a cost of $2,162.20 on a lot which cost $1,000, and horses and harness purchased at a cost of $387.

The first members of the companies were as follows: Jesse Hammett, James Smith, Adam Schneider constituted the Central Hose Company; Henry Schearer, Navier Stultzman, Maurice Lynch, the Holly Hose Company; H. E. Johnson, James Wasson, H. J. Chanson, the Bluff Hose Company; John Vaughn, F. M. Phillips, David Dick, Chemical Engine Company No. 1; Adam Schneider, Charles Upton and Maurice Lynch, Chemical Engine Company No. 2.

New boilers were in 1877 placed in the Water Works at the cost of $5,399.43.

During the years 1878 and 1879 no additions were made except the purchase of some horses and hose. The companies were then located as follows: Central City in a two-story brick, north side of Adams, between Hamilton and Fayette streets; Holly Hose Company in a two-story brick, west side of Sanford, between South Jefferson and First Streets; Bluff Hose Company in a two-story brick, south side Main, between Elizabeth and Douglas Streets; Chemical No. 1 in same building with Central City; Chemical No. 2 in a two-story brick, north side of Adams, between Lindell Street and Plank Road; No. 3 Volunteer Company (Germania No. 4) in two-story brick on Gallatin, between Cedar and Pecan Streets.

In 1885 the entire Holly machinery was sold for $1,750, and a new set of Worthington pumps were substituted at a cost of $15,130. The fire alarm telegraph then consisted of 23 miles of wire strung on 320 poles; 2 striking apparatus, 4 large gongs, 1 small alarm gong and 100 electric jars; the whole arranged into two circuits. The Bell Telephone was then in operation, which brought the business and residence portions of the city into closer touch with the Fire Department.

In 1881 a new hose house was built and horses, truck and harness purchased at an aggregate cost of over $3,000. There was also a new hook and ladder truck purchased, mamed and equipped.

In 1883 it was deemed advisable to supplement the pumps at the water works with a steam fire engine, to reach the out-lying portions of the city, to which the water pipes had not been extended. A lot was, therefore, purchased near South Street, a two-story brick building 25x62 feet was erected and a second sized double Ahrends steam fire engine with horses was placed therein. There was also a lot purchased on North Adams Street, a two-story brick house built thereon and a four wheeled hose carriage placed therein. The cost of the new engine house and lots was $9,850.02.

In 1884 there was added a second sized Clapp & Jones steam fire engine, with horses and harness at a cost of $4,775. There was also erected a two-story brick building, 20x50 feet, adjoining the hook and ladder house, at a cost of $2,000.

In 1886 there was a new fire engine house constructed at the corner of Sanford and West Jefferson Streets, a very large proportion of the work being done by the mechanics of the department without cost to the city. The cash outlays were $4,120.95.

In 1888 one of the most complete fire stations in the country was erected on Jackson between Adams and Jefferson Streets, at a cost of $12,000. It was intended to accommodate a hose-cart, chemical engine and steam fire engine. A first-class Button steam fire engine was also purchased and placed in the hose-house on West Jefferson Street.

By ordinance of July 23, 1889, as finally amended and perfected August 5, 1890, the entire system of water works belonging to the city was sold to John T. Moffatt, Henry C. Hodgkins, John V. Clark and Charles T. Moffatt, doing business under the firm name of Moffatt, Hodgkins & Clark, which ordinance or contract now constitutes the law respecting the government of the water works and defines the relations existing between the city, the Peoria Water Works Company and the people. As a part consideration the purchasers agreed for themselves and their assigns to take up and pay, according to their terms, the remaining $450,000 of water works bonds issued by the city. Messrs Moffatt, Hodgkins & Clark turned the works over to the Peoria Water Company, incorporated.

That company reconstructed the entire system of supply by the erection of new pumping works near the upper bridge and a reservoir situated on the bluff about three miles from the Court House. The source of supply is from a series of wells sunk near the river, from which is obtained an inexhaustible supply of pure water. The system is a combination of reservoir and direct pressure of such construction that, in case of a failure of a supply from the reservoir, a sufficient pressure can be obtained directly from the pumps. There are three Worthington vertical, high duty pumps having a capacity of 7,000,000 gallons each per day. The reservoir capacity is 10,000,000 gallons. The pressure in the business district is from 95 to 120 pounds per square inch. There are 84 miles of main pipe, ranging from 4 inches to 30 inches in diameter.

Water was first supplied from the new station on December 1, 1890, and the enlarged works were completed in May, 1891. Complications of a financial character having arisen, a receiver was appointed January 9, 1894, by whom the works were operated until the year 1898, when they were purchased at a foreclosure sale by a committee of bond-holders, by whom a new company was formed to operate the works called the "Peoria Water Works Company," which company continues to operate them.

The officers of the "Peoria Water Works Company" are Howard Knowles, President; E. D. Usner, Secretary and Treasurer; Henry B. Morgan, Managing Director; Dabney H. Maury, Engineer and Superintendent; Harry Ringness, Assistant Superintendent; D. John Forbes, Cashier.

Since the transfer of the Water Works to the company some additions have been made to the fire department, which are sufficiently indicated by the following statement.

The old names of the companies having been dropped the organization of the Fire Department in 1869 showed the following: Hose Company No. 1, 203 Jackson Street; No. 2, 300 Prairie Street; No. 3, 1515 Main Street; No. 4, 1521 South Adams Street; No. 5, 1325 North Adams Street; No. 6, 1168 South Adams Street; Volunteer Company No. 4, Gallatin Street; Hose Company No. 7, 628 Knoxville Avenue; Chemical No. 1, 201 Jackson Street; Combination Company No. 1, 1525 South Adams Street; Hook and Ladder No. 1, 300 Prairie Street; No. 2, 205 Jackson Street. Force of the Department, 1 Fire Marshal at a salary of $1,400; 1 Assistant at $1,100; 3 engineers, $960; 9 Captains, $840; 28 pipemen, truckmen and stokers and 12 drivers at $780 each. Each company is fully equipped with the apparatus designated by its name, there being in the service six two-horse hose-wagons; 1 two-horse carriage; 1 two-horse double eighty-gallon Champion chemical engine; 1 two-horse combination chemical and hose-wagon; 1 two-horse City service hook and ladder truck; 1 three-horse eighty-five foot extension aerial truck; 1 second size Alrends steam fire engine; 8 portable hand chemicals, and in reserve 2 steam fire engines; 2 two-horse hose carriages. There are 32 horses in the department, 28 in the service and four extras.

New engine houses are in process of erection in the newly acquired territories of South Peoria and North Peoria. The apparatus will consist of chemical combination wagons and hose wagons, the crews to consist of four men each. These additions will give the department nine engine houses in all, served by 65 men.

The chief executive officer of the Fire Department has had different designations at different times, such as Chief Engineer, Fire Marshal, Superintendent, etc.

From the time of the completion of the Water Works until the organization of the paid Fire Department, the Superintendent of the Water Works acted as Chief Engineer. They were Carl Moeller, with William Roth, Assistant, for two years, William McLean, one year, and E. S. Easton, with Patrick Tobin, Assistant, for one year. On March 9, 1875, O. H. Norton was elected the first chief under the paid Fire Department and served for three years. He was succeeded in 1878 by James H. White, who served until 1882, with James Smith as Assistant, and was succeeded for the next two years by O. H. Norton, with Henry Shearer as Assistant. In January, 1884, James Smith was appointed Chief and served two years, with Henry Shearer as Assistant. In January, 1886, O. H. Norton was again appointed and served one year with Henry Shearer as Assistant. In January, 1887, Carl Moeller was appointed as Chief and continued to render the city efficient service until his death, November 25, 1901. On December 26, Arthur R. Tendering, who had been Assistant, was appointed Chief. During Chief Moeller's long and honorable career, which was continued for so many years, irrespective of the political complexion of the city government, he had the following Assistants: Henry Shearer, 1887-8; James Smith, January, 1880, to November 23, 1895, when he was obliged to retire on account of injuries received while in the performance of duty; John A. Warner, December 2, 1895, to September 5, 1899; Thomas N. Worm, September 5, 1899, to June 5, 1901; Arthur R. Tendering, June 5, 1901, to December 26, 1901, when he was promoted to succeed Chief Moeller (deceased), and D. E. Connell was appointed his successor.

To no branch of their public service are the citizens of Peoria more highly indebted than to their paid Fire Department. To their efficient organization and discipline is due that sense of security from the ravages of fire which all enjoy in so eminent a degree, and to them may be attributed the reasonable rates at which property in the city can be insured. Not only at home, but in neighboring towns and cities to which they have been called in cases of emergency, have their services proved of the highest benefit. Particularly was this the case at the time of a recent disastrous fire in the city of Bloomington, when their timely arrival and prompt and efficient action served to arrest the progress of a conflagration which threatened the destruction of the entire business portion of that city.

But it is to their self-sacrificing devotion to their work that is due the highest meed of praise—a devotion rendered at the risk of life or limb for which no salary payable in money is a sufficient compensation. Fortunately but few calamities of this kind have happened, yet all know they are liable to happen at any moment. The first serious accident occurred at the Chamber of Commerce Fire, January 29, 1888, when, by the falling of the roof, James Smith, Fireman, was covered and so burned and otherwise injured as to be unable to resume his duty for eleven months. At the same fire John Becker was severely injured by being struck by the end of a falling timber. On August 21, 1900, Barny Manning was killed by a falling wall at the fire which occurred at the Carroll Ice House. Several others were injured at the same time. These are only examples of what risks the firemen have to undergo.

THE FIREMEN'S PENSION FUND.

In pursuance of the provisions of the statute a "Board of Trustees of the Firemen's Pension Fund" was organized June 24, 1895, with the following members: Jacob Heim, Charles R. Beeler, J. R. Conway, William T. Irwin, Carl Muller, of whom William T. Irwin, City Attorney, was chosen President, Charles R. Beeler, Treasurer, and J. R. Conway, Secretary, with Thomas M. McIlvaine, Physician. The present officers are Henry Mansfield, City Attorney, President; Robert M. Orr, City Clerk, Secretary; John Thode, City Treasurer, Treasurer; the remaining members of the Board being James E. Pillsbury, Comptroller, and Arthur M. Tendering, Chief of the Fire Department. The sources of income are one per cent upon all licenses issued by the city, one per cent of all wages earned by such firemen as become members, to which in the future must be added twenty-five per cent on the license fee assessed upon all foreign insurance companies. In addition to these the firemen give an annual ball, the net proceeds of which are added to the fund, as are also the proceeds of exhibitions of moving pictures of the department in active operation, the control of which the members have secured and successfully exhibited in several neighboring cities; and with marked success at the Corn Carnivals held annually at Peoria. To these must be added numerous voluntary gifts from the citizens. The amount of available funds now on hand in cash and invested in City Improvement bonds, amounts to over $16,000. Six pensioners now reap the benefit of this fund. Three disabled firemen, the widow of the deceased chief, and two orphan children of one who lost his life in the service. The purposes of the fund are for the relief or pensioning of disabled and superannuated and retired members of the Fire Department, their widows and minor children, of which fund the City Treasurer, Clerk, Attorney, Chief of the Fire Department and the Comptroller ex-officio constitute the Board of Trustees. It is a fund which commends itself to the liberality of all citizens of Peoria.

CHAPTER V.

BRIDGES - GAS AND ELECTRIC LIGHT—THE TELEGRAPH —SEWERAGE - PAVING - SIDEWALKS - STREET RAIL- WAYS - THE TELEPHONE

The accessibility of Peoria as a crossing of the river suggested at an early date the feasibility of spanning it with a bridge. Accordingly an act of the Legislature was procured for a charter of "The Peoria Bridge Company" at its session in 1835. By the year 1838, one-half the stock had been subscribed, but the financial crisis then setting in, the bridge then projected was not erected. This was fortunate, for the charter provided for a draw for the passage of boats of only thirty feet in width. The great influx of population, from 1835 onward for some years, rendered the business of keeping a ferry at this point very profitable. At the December term of the County Commissioners' Court, 1835, a license was granted to Henry W. Cleveland to run the first steam ferry at the foot of the lake. At the December term, 1837, Aquila Wren, who had purchased this ferry, was permitted to land the same opposite the foot of Main or Fulton Street. On the opposite side he landed at a point in the bay (since then greatly narrowed) not far from the present limits of the village of East Peoria. A channel was cut through the low ground and a wharf constructed, the last vestige of which was carried away in the great flood of 1842. Cleveland laid out a village on the opposite side which disappeared long ago. (1).

Robert and James Moore also procured a license to run a ferry at Walnut Street. These conflicting interests led to an immense amount of litigation which was finally brought to an end by an act of the Legislature granting to William L. May, who had become the owner of the Bigelow & Underhill ferry at Bridge Street, the right to run a ferry there for the period of fifteen years, in consideration of which he was to pay annually into the treasury of Peoria County the sum of $50, and a like sum to the Town of Peoria, the latter to be expended in keeping up that part of the Peoria and Springfield road lying between the river and the top of the bluff. He was also to give free passage to all citizens of Tazewell County with their horses, wagons, carriages and other property when going to or returning from Peoria for the purpose of trading or consulting a physician or lawyer. The Trustees of Peoria were specially authorized to expend the above sum, and as much more as they might think proper, in improving the said road. And said William L. May was required to expend a like sum of $50 on the same annually.

In 1841 the charter was so changed as to give May the exclusive ferry franchise at that point for fifteen years, for which he was to pay into the treasury of Tazewell County the sum of $300 for the first year and $200 annually thereafter, the same to be expended on the said road from the south side of the river out to the highlands. Under this charter May operated his ferry until the building of the bridge.

By Act of the Legislature of 1845, William L. May and his associates obtained a charter to build a bridge at the same point, the County of Peoria to have the right to purchase the same on payment of the cost with six per cent. interest thereon, and in case of its failure to do so, the Town of Peoria was to have the same privilege.

The following epitome of its history was printed by the authority of the Association for the use of the public, and for years kept hanging in its toll-house:

Rebuilt and widened channel in '52. Span work rebuilt in '56 by Stone & Boomer—cost, $10,000. Trestle work in '57 by Major Hine—cost, $11,000. New cord to span work in 1862. New swing built and opened March 10, '64. New turn-table built by L. G. Baum, winter of '66 and '67—cost, $1,608, including new spider wheel, eight new wheels and axles, and turning twenty-four others, being eight wheels more than old one. Four spans of truss bridge built by L. G. Baum, in January and February, '69, between the end of How's truss and the R. R. crossing. The trestle work rebuilt on piles, cost about $15,000, finished on the 10th of March, 1870. Three spans of How's Truss, with iron improvement, rebuilt from March, and finished in September, 1870, by L. G. Baum, mechanic. Cost about $12,000."

The bridge, with its viaduct on the Tazewell side as originally constructed, measured 2,600 feet, the length of the swing being then 195 feet. In 1852, the center pier was removed and the swing increased one hundred feet in length. About the year 1857, in consequence of the building of the railroad bridge, intersecting it at the Tazewell side of the river, and about three feet higher, the height of the wagon-road bridge from the water was increased by about three feet, and the viaduct was rebuilt and removed further from the railroad.

This bridge was purchased by the City of Peoria on the 3d day of November, 1886, since which time it has been operated as a free bridge and the City has undertaken to keep up the road leading thereto for a distance of 1,980 feet.

About the same time the authorities of Peoria Township undertook the erection of a free bridge at the foot of the Narrows, which, after much litigation, was finally completed and is now in operation and known as the "Upper Free Bridge."

GAS AND ELECTRIC LIGHT.

On February 12, 1853, Peter Sweat, Hugh J. Sweeney, George C. Bestor, William S. Moss and Henry Grove were granted a charter by the Legislature to become an incorporation by the name and style of "The Peoria Gas Light and Coke Company," with full power and authority to manufacture and sell gas, to be made from any or all the substances, or a combination thereof, from which inflammable gas is usually obtained, and to be used for the purpose of lighting the City of Peoria or the streets thereof, and any buildings, manufactories and public places or houses therein contained, and to erect all necessary works and apparatus, and to lay pipes for the purpose of conducting the gas in any of the streets or avenues of said city; the said company to have the exclusive privilege of supplying the city and its inhabitants with gas, for the purpose of affording light, for twenty-five years.

Prior to that time the street lights were poor indeed. It must be borne in mind that neither petroleum nor any of its products had yet come into use as an illuminating agent; the method of producing oil from bituminous coal had not been discovered; lard oil was used in limited quantities for illuminating dwellings and stores, camphine and spirit-gas produced from turpentine and alcohol were used only for private purposes. Street lamps supplied with whale oil were the chief reliance for lighting the streets, and the street lamps served only to point out the directions in which the streets ran, but for the protection of pedestrians they were practically of no use.

The transition from whale oil to an illuminating gas almost equal to the electric lights of the present day, and in marked contrast with the light-giving properties of gas produced from water and naphtha, produced a marked revolution in the social and business affairs of the city.

The company so formed immediately organized and proceeded with the erection of a plant on the river bank at the foot of Persimmon Street, where its works have ever since then been located. On September 15, 1853, the city entered into a contract with the company for the lighting of its streets, which contract provided for fifty lamps, distributed on the principal business streets. Although much dissatisfaction with the rates charged for gas had from time to time been expressed, and although several spasmodic attempts had been made to organize other companies to compete with it, the original company continued to maintain its ground to the exclusion of all others, not only for the twenty-five years provided for in its charter, but for many years thereafter, and not until the organization of the People's Gas and Electric Company did it meet with any serious competition, except in the matter of street lighting.

Electric lights were introduced into the city and began to be used for private purposes about the year 1884. On the eighth day of November, 1883, the City Council granted leave to the "Jenny Electric Light and Power Company" to set poles and to string wires in and along the streets of the city. That company then proceeded to establish its plant and, in due time, began to furnish the citizens with electric light. On the 6th day of November, 1885, a contract was entered into by the city with the "Jenny Electric Light and Power Company" for the lighting of the streets for a period of five years. "The Peoria Gas Light and Coke Company" was immediately notified of this fact and was required to remove its lamps from the streets. This was the end of gas-lights and the beginning of electric lights for the streets of Peoria.

The "Jenny Electric Light and Power Company" filled its five-year contract, at which time the company obtained a second contract for five years, but at the end of two years some new arrangement was made and the name of that company was changed to the "Peoria General Electric Company," which continued to light the streets until the end of the year 1900. The "Peoria Gas and Electric Company" having been formed, now became a bidder for the lighting of the streets, and on November 1, 1900, a contract was entered into with George E. Macomber, of Augusta, Maine, for that purpose, and since that time that contract has been and is now being filled by that company.

The "People's Gas and Electric Company" was incorporated March 21, 1890, under the General Incorporation Law, with a capital stock of $500,000, divided into shares of $100 each, to be located at Peoria and to have a duration of 60 years, of which capital stock Franklin T. Corning subscribed for 100 shares, Charles C. Clarke, 50; Chauncey D. Clarke, 50; George H. Littlewood, 50; Fred. Luthy, 50; Robert D. Clarke, 50; H. Sandmeyer, Sr., 25; B. Warren, Jr., 50; Philo B. Miles, 25; O. J. Bailey, 25; T. J. Miller, 150; Sumner R. Clarke, 4,375. The first Board of Directors were Sumner R. Clarke, Benjamin Warren, Jr., Franklin T. Corning, Oliver J. Bailey, George H. Littlewood, Theodore J. Miller and Philo B. Miles. Immediately after organizing, and having received the usual permit from the City Council, this company proceeded to erect new works and to lay an entirely new system of gas pipes in the streets and alleys in the city. To counteract this movement the "Peoria Gas Light and Coke Company" made large reductions in the price of gas, but the new company, nothing daunted, went on and completed their works and began to deliver gas at still lower figures. Then followed a war in prices until it became manifest that, unless some adjustment could be made, great losses must accrue. The name of the "People's Gas and Electric Company" was on February 13, 1900, changed to that of the "Peoria Gas and Electric Company," under which name it entered into a contract with the city for the lighting of the streets as before stated. The new company seemed to have become a dangerous rival to the old, and the stockholders of the latter began to sell their stock to parties interested in the new. This process of absorption has been going on until now it seems to be almost if not quite complete. Both companies still maintain offices adjoining each other, the former price of gas has been restored, the war has been ended and the people who expected such great things from the formation of the "People's Gas and Electric Company," and who have two sets of gas pipes in their cellars, are wondering what it all means.

In the meantime, certain of the aggrieved ones have caused proceedings to be instituted to inquire by what right or authority all this has been brought about, the outcome of which must be left for some future historian to tell.

THE TELEGRAPH.

Long before the railroad had reached Peoria, the city was in communication with the rest of the world by the magnetic telegraph. Prior to the month of June, 1848, the city of St. Louis had been placed in communication by telegraph with the eastern cities. One Henry O'Reily, of Albany, New York, seems to have been at the head of this great enterprise, and through his efforts lines were being extended through the Northwestern States. The line was completed to Peoria on the 16th day of June, 1848, and at 4 o'clock, P. M. of that day Springfield was called by Mr. R. Chadwick and the response "Aye, Aye" came in the Morse characters. Communication was then solicited with St. Louis, informing them that Peoria was calling. At about 9 o'clock the same evening the Editor of the Peoria Register sent the following dispatch to the Editor of the St. Louis Republican: "Respects of the Peoria Register to the Whig Presses of St. Louis. The prairies are on fire for 'Rough and Ready.' The Illinois boys who stood by 'the old man' at Buena Vista will not desert him on the 7th of November." It is related as one of the marvels of the telegraph that these communications were received by the operator, Mr. Chadwick, from the sound of the magnet without the aid of the register. The next achievement recorded is that, at noon of the day next after the Presidential election of 1848, the result had been communicated fully 2,000 miles in this republic, the vote in Boston being known at Peoria at 11 o'clock A. M. The astounding fact is also mentioned that a message from Philadelphia to St. Louis had outstripped the flight of time by just one hour.

As Peoria has always kept in the front rank in the march of improvements, so on this occasion her citizens took hold of this new and rapid means of communication with the rest of the world. On April 14, 1849, William Mitchell, secretary of the "Illinois and Mississippi Telegraph Company," a corporation then forming at Peoria, presented to the County Commissioners' Court for the purpose of having the same recorded as required by law, the articles of association of said company, in pursuance of an Act of the General Assembly, approved February 9, 1849, entitled an "Act for the Establishment of Telegraphs." As stated in the articles of association, the Company was formed for the purpose of maintaining the following lines of telegraph then established: Commencing at Chicago in the State of Illinois, establishing stations at Lockport, Ottawa, Peru, Peoria, Springfield, Jacksonville, Alton, St. Louis, Missouri, Beardstown, Rushville, Quincy, Hannibal (Missouri); Keokuk, Burlington and Bloomington (now Muscatine), Iowa; Rock Island, Dixon, Dubuque (Iowa) to Galena in the State of Illinois, and to erect, establish and maintain such further lines of telegraph in the State of Illinois, and their connections with such other points and places in said States of Missouri and Iowa, and in the State of Wisconsin and the Territory of Minnesota, and elsewhere as said association and their successors and assigns might deem expedient. The capital of said company was to be $500,000, divided into shares of $50 each, which was held as follows: A. G. Henry, of Springfield, 200 shares; Francis Voris, Peoria, 240; Wm. Hempstead, Galena, 220; Timothy Davis, Dubuque, 240; John Dean Caton, Ottawa, 64; Henry S. Beebe, 140; Gains Jenkins, 60, both of Lockport; C. G. Oshea, Chicago, 210; John McDonald, Beardstown, 100; Henry O'Reily, Albany, for Alton, 200; Sanford J. Smith, St. Louis, 400; G. K. Gunnigal, St. Louis, 20; Hart Fellows, Rushville, 40; Lorenzo Bull, Quincy, 288; Henry N. Starr, Burlington, 240; Sanford J. Smith for Bloomington, 160; same for Hannibal, 200; same for Keokuk, 100; C. G. Oshea for Dixon, 40; same for Davenport, 100; same for Rock Island, 100; same for Morris, 60; Henry O'Reily for Jacksonville, 80; same for Albany for himself and associates and for the patentees, 4,438. Power was also given to increase the capital stock and number of members as they might think proper. The charter was to commence April 11, 1849, and to terminate January 1, 1950. The articles were acknowledged by fifteen of the subscribers to the stock before William Mitchell, Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court, April 11, 1849, and filed for record on the same day. The Company was then organized with Francis Voris as President, and Lewis Howell as Secretary, both of Peoria. All the lines then belonging to the O'Reily system were transferred to this company and Peoria thus became the headquarters of the entire telegraph system of the State.

Two years later the system embraced the following lines: beginning at St. Louis, thence to Alton, to Jacksonville by way of Delhi, Jerseyville, Kane, Carrollton, White Hall, and Manchester; thence east following the railroad to Springfield, a total distance from St. Louis of 131 miles; from Springfield to Peoria by way of Middletown, Delavan, Dillon and Groveland, 169 miles from St. Louis; from Peoria by way of Chillicothe and Henry to Peru, thence to Ottawa, thence by Morris and Lockport, following the canal to Chicago, 160 miles from Peoria and 356 miles from St. Louis. This was the main line. At Jacksonville a branch line started passing through New Lexington to Beardstown, thence through Frederick to Rushville, from Rushville through Ripley to Mt. Sterling, thence through Clayton and Columbus to Quincy, 196 miles from Peoria; from Quincy the line ran north through Ursa, Lima and Warsaw, crossing the Mississippi at Churchville, Missouri, thence to Keokuk and from Keokuk through Montrose and Fort Madison to Burlington; from Burlington to Wapello, the county-seat of Louisa County on the Iowa River; thence to Muscatine, thence to Davenport, where it crossed the river to Rock Island. This was the Southern Branch; the distance from Jacksonville to Rock Island being 269 miles, from St. Louis 365 miles and from Peoria 369 miles. From Quincy a short line of 20 miles ran on the east side of the River to within a mile of Hannibal, where it crossed and terminated at that place. Another branch called the North Branch started at Peru running thence to Dixon and thence by Mt. Carroll and Elizabeth to Galena, thence crossing the River to Dubuque in Iowa, distant from Peru, 122 miles, from Peoria 187 miles and from St. Louis 338 miles; making the aggregate length of the main line and its branches 737 miles. These distances were given by the chronicler, Mr. Drown, to show that Peoria was in the center of a great line of telegraphic communication, connecting three States within its range, and having telegraphic communication with New York, Boston and New Orleans.

The business done in Peoria during the month of May, 1850, amounted to 750 messages sent and received, the gross receipts being $178.94; during the month of June, 697 messages, the gross receipts being $193.02. For the last three months of 1850, the business tabulates as follows:

October, 749 Messages, Gross receipts..	$203.87
November, 874 Messages, Gross receipts..	254.75
December, 767 Messages, Gross receipts..	211.70

In regard to the profits the Democratic Press remarked as follows:

"If the expenses in keeping up the lateral lines were not such a draw-back, the stock of the principal line would pay handsomely. Quincy is a smart sort of place; but we have to support the telegraph for her."

When it is considered that in May, 1846, the latest news relating to the breaking out of the Mexican war was received through New York and New Orleans newspapers, each requiring ten days to reach Peoria, the establishment within two years of connecting lines of two thousand miles in length, and that in two years more Peoria had become the center of a system covering over 700 miles, over which intelligence could be flashed instantaneously, and then consider the marvelous growth of that system during the half century just closed, the mind becomes astounded at this wonderful invention of Professor Morse.

That Peorians were not unappreciative of the benefits of this great invention is demonstrated by their rejoicing over the completion of the first Ocean Telegraph. On August 9, 1858, the announcement was made in the "Peoria Republican" that this great feat, over which the world had been watching with intense interest, had been accomplished. Arrangements were set on foot for a celebration of the event with a grand supper at the Peoria House, which came off according to appointment on the evening of the 31 of September. Brilliant speeches were made and high hopes expressed of the inestimable benefits to be derived from this great enterprise. But in a short time Peorians, with all the civilized world, were destined to disappointment by the failure of the cable, and to have their hopes deferred for a period of eight years.

The office was first opened for business on the second floor of a three-story building, erected by Francis Voris in 1846 and then owned by him, long known as the Farrell drug store, now No. 117 Main Street. The office remained there until the death of Mr. Voris in 1852, after which time Hon. John Dean Caton became President and got control of the line. Although at first the profits were small, yet when it began to be known how great the advantages would be to the railroads resulting from its use, enormous sums were paid by them to the companies having control of the patents. In this way Judge Caton and his associates reaped handsome fortunes. The lines of this company were ultimately leased to the Western Union Company by a perpetual lease paying eight per cent. on the capital stock.

Mr. Chadwick was the first operator. About that time Mr. Voris, having taken a fancy to William Yontz, a bright young lad, son of John Yontz, proprietor of the Clinton House, put him in the telegraph office to become an operator under the tutelage of Mr. Chadwick. The next year John Yontz, being seized with the gold fever, took his family to California where the boy engaged in the telegraph business and eventually became the Superintendent of all the lines of the Western Union Company on the Pacific Coast. "One of the strange things," remarks our informant (Henry T. Baldwin, who was a member of Mr. Voris' family), "in connection with the business which has been marked by vast improvements, is that the glass insulators are substantially the same as those adopted over fifty years ago."

It is not easy to follow with exactness the different movements of the telegraph office for the first few years. It is certain no great amount of room was required, for the entire outfit could have been accommodated on a single desk or table no larger than those now in use at ordinary way stations on a railroad; one operator, and possibly young Yontz as the first messenger boy, at Peoria constituting the entire force.

It is not always an easy matter to assign the chief operator to his proper official position, he being sometimes designated as manager and sometimes as operator. From the Peoria Directory the following facts have been gleaned: In 1850 the office was located on the second floor of a building on the corner of Main and Water Streets, probably on the west corner, the first floor of which was occupied by the Central Bank and the third floor by the "Daily and Weekly News." W. H. Parsons was the manager. In 1857, the office was under the Peoria House adjoining the Post Office. Richmond Smith was operator, Hon. John Dean Caton was President, and the headquarters of the company had been removed to Ottawa, where he then resided. About this time or soon afterwards the manufacture of telegraph apparatus was commenced in that city, but the factory has long since ceased to operate. Lewis Howell was still Secretary. In 1858, the company retained its original name but, in consequence of its connection with other companies, its lines had by this time become known as the Caton Lines. Richmond Smith was then manager. In 1859, the office was located at No. 5, North Adams Street, second floor, where it remained three or four years, James G. Thornton being manager in 1859, and Robert S. Fowler in 1860. In 1863 the office was at No. 27 Main Street, where the drug store of Robert Davis now is, Richmond Smith being operator. About this time, or before, the company was leased to the Western Union, under which name it has gone ever since that time. Although the street numbers had been changed in the directories, yet it is known the company continued to maintain its office in the same building for several years thereafter, during a portion of which time it had offices at other points in the City. During this year Mr. Joseph E. Ranney, formerly manager at Bureau Junction, took control of the office in this City and occupied that position until 1882. When he first took possession the business was done over a single wire. The messages were first sent to Bureau Junction, there re-transmitted to Chicago and thence to other desired points. Mr. Ranney, with one night operator and one messenger boy, did the entire work, and the sum of five to seven dollars a day was considered a fair day's earnings. During the war, however, the business multiplied rapidly; the number of wires increased and improvements in methods of transmission grew with the demands of the times.

When the Board of Trade was organized and became located at its new quarters on the west corner of Fulton and Washington Streets (now the Zell, Hotchkiss & Co. Bank), the Western Union started an office there, and when the Chamber of Commerce was opened it occupied an office in that building, where it still remains. The following managers have succeeded Mr. Ranney: J. McRobie, 1882-1884; B. H. Griffin, 1884-1894; E. Adams, 1894-1899; R. C. Baker, 1899 to the present time.

Rival companies have from time to time been started, but with one exception they have all been absorbed by the Western Union, or finding it an unprofitable field have abandoned it. From 1871 until 1876 the Great Western Telegraph Company maintained an office at the following places: In 1871-2, at No. 25 Main Street, adjoining that of the Western Union; in 1875, at No. 102 Fulton Street and at the Peoria House; in 1876, at No. 102 Fulton Street, B. F. Herrington being manager. In 1877 the Atlantic and Pacific Company appeared to have an office, but the location is not given. In Oct., 1881, the Mutual Union Telegraph Company was granted the right to construct a line from the bridge to Commercial Street, thence to the alley on northeast side of the Chamber of Commerce, thence to Liberty Street, thence along the alley to Main Street, thence to Adams Street. By a subsequent ordinance the route was somewhat changed.

On June 6, 1882, the "Board of Trade Telegraph Company" was granted leave to construct a line from the bridge to the Chamber of Commerce on nearly the same route as the other. On October 3, 1882, the Mutual Union was granted leave to extend its lines southward to the sugar refinery, at or near Sanger Street.

The "American Union Telegraph Company" also seems to have done business in Peoria from 1881 to 1882. All these companies shared the same fate.

The "Bankers' and Merchants' Telegraph Company" commenced business in Peoria probably as early as 1882. On May 6, 1884, it was granted leave to construct a line from Harrison to Main Street on the upper side of Commercial Alley. This was probably only an extension of an already existing line. It became merged in the "Postal Telegraph Company" in 1885. The Postal System is the result of a combination of independent lines reaching all important points in the United States, Canada and British America. It operates four cables of its own to Europe and connects with two more, as well as with two to South America. Its office in Peoria is equipped with the latest devices in telegraphing, having its own dynamo and other up-to-date appliances. It is at present the only rival of the Western Union Company in the city.

SEWERAGE.

The site of the City of Peoria is so well adapted by nature, that little has been needed in the way of grading the public streets. It is not so, however, in respect to sewerage. The streets running parallel with the river maintain an almost perfect level throughout their entire length, while those running from the river towards the bluff rise gradually until the summit of the plateau is reached, about on a line with Monroe Street, if extended through the city. From that point there is a gradual descent towards the foot of the bluff, thus causing a depression or swale between the highest point of the plateau and the foot of the bluffs, increasing in width from the neighborhood of Evans Street to the southern limit of the City. On this account, as well as on account of the difficulty in draining the lands on top of the bluff, deep sewers have become a necessity.

In former times, in seasons of heavy rains or melting snows, the surface waters flowing from the bluffs, as well as those issuing from springs and a small stream running through Frink's Hollow at the head of Jackson Street, found their way into a low place towards the southern limits of the city, familiarly called Goose Lake. When Main Street was graded between Glendale Avenue and the bluff, and the land lying to the northeast of it was filled in, the waters coming from the bluff in that section were diverted from their original course and caused to accumulate to the northeast of Main Street, and sometimes to flow along Hale Street, now Glendale Avenue. This caused trouble. Dr. Mortimer Nevins' Water

Cure building at the foot of the bluff was greatly injured and the city was compelled to pay him damages in the celebrated suit of Nevins against the City of Peoria. This suit was conducted with marked skill and ability by Marion Williamson, Esq., and in it was first established, in this State, the principle that, in improving its streets, the city had no right to divert the flow of water from its natural course so as to injure the property of the adjoining owners.

To avoid further trouble, the city undertook to relieve the property holders in that section of the city by the construction of a culvert at the head of Jackson Street, to bring the water from the bluff in that neighborhood into Hale Street, and thence to the river through a deep cut in Morgan Street. This improvement was accomplished and did good service for many years, but it was still found insufficient to relieve the property holders on Hale Street, and the city was again called upon to answer to a suit brought by Isaac Underhill.

As the western portion of the city increased in population, and as the property there became more valuable, a demand came for the relief of the owners of land overflowed by Goose Lake, and to accomplish this purpose a deep sewer was constructed with lateral branches, having its main outlet at Oak Street. This was the first extensive effort made to relieve that portion of the city of its surplus waters by underground sewers. But this improvement was only local in character, and it afterwards became incorporated into a more general system adapted to the wants of the entire city.

Prior to the adoption of any general system, however, there had been some local sewers constructed, covering that portion of the city lying between Main and Bridge Streets.

A general system of sewers was adopted about the year 1900, and has been steadily pursued until a large portion of the city has been covered. Later, also the villages of South Peoria, West Peoria and North Peoria have been annexed, neither one of which had a general sewerage system.

The city is divided into sewerage districts, the property in each being assessed for the sewers constructed therein. These districts are known by the streets through which the main sewers are constructed, or by the territory intended to be drained. Commencing at the northern limits of the city they are as follows: Caroline Street, Spring Street, Green Street, Jackson Street, Main Street and Walnut Street districts, and the West Bluff district, which has two main outlets, one on Cedar Street and the other at the outlet of the old Goose Lake sewer on Oak Street.

The sewers are constructed mostly of vitrified earthen pipes, of which there are 50.6 miles constructed. There are also circular brick sewers, of which there are 11.5 miles, and egg-shaped brick sewers, of which there are 8.7 miles—making in all about 70.8 miles of sewers already constructed in the city. The vitrified pipes range in diameter from six inches to twenty inches; the circular brick sewers range from twenty-four to eighty-eight inches in diameter; and the egg-shaped brick sewers range from 1 foot 6 inches by 2 feet 3 inches to 4 feet by 5 feet in diameter.

The total area of the city is 5,303 acres, or 8.28 square miles; of which 2,070 acres, or 3.24 square miles (or 39.1 per cent. of the whole area), is provided with sewers. Some of these were laid very deep and required a marked degree of engineering skill. Particularly was this so with the main sewer on Saratoga Street, which affords an outlet to the drainage on the west bluff. The construction of this sewer attracted much attention of engineers from other cities. It is expected that, as the population increases, the system will be extended throughout the entire city.

STREET PAVING.

The ground upon which Peoria is built is principally composed of sand, with a mixture of loam on the surface. In their unimproved state the streets were usually dry, except in the spring of the year, when the frost was coming out, at which season they sometimes became very bad. The citizens of Peoria did not, therefore, realize the necessity of constructing any street pavements, or the covering of them with plank, as was done elsewhere, for many years. When the necessity did arise, experiments of different kinds were tried, with only partial success. Gravel was laid upon some of the streets, but, for want of proper skill in placing it, or the neglect of the city in keeping it clean after being laid, it was a practical failure. Others were covered with broken stone, usually denominated macadam. But with this the city made but little better success than with the gravel. Main Street was one of the principal streets macadamized. White cedar blocks were tried on North Adams Street, but these were soon abandoned for something better. Cobble stones were used on several of the streets leading from the river towards the bluff, but these also have been mostly replaced by pavement of other kinds. It was thought, at one time, that the granite or Belgian block would be the right thing for Peoria, and Washington Street from Main to Locust was improved with that material. It was found, however, to be too rough and unsuited to the tastes and demands of the people doing business on that street. About the year 1885, the first experiment was tried with brick pavement on Hamilton Street, between Adams and Monroe, a length of 1,280 feet, 60 feet wide, and containing a total of 9,226 square yards. This pavement was laid with a double course of common hard-burned brick on a six-inch gravel foundation. Sixteen years of service have demonstrated the utility of this character of pavement under proper usage. Apparent defects have been caused by the opening of the street for the purpose of making gas, water and sewer connections, but latterly the requirements of the city have been such that all these connections must be made before the laying of the pavement, which measure will insure greater durability to the street improvements. Improved qualities of brick have also been adopted.

In 1891 the first asphalt pavement was laid on Moss Avenue, from Elizabeth Street to Malvern Street, a length of 3,624 feet and a width of 30 feet. Since then asphalt has been laid every year, except in 1893 and 1898—the largest amount (53,358 square yards) having been laid in 1896.

A new pavement, composed of broken stone, somewhat in the nature of macadam pavement, and called Novaculite, was first laid in the year 1900 on Dechman Avenue, from Pennsylvania to Nebraska Avenues, a distance of 1,705 feet.

From 1885 to 1888, inclusive, there had been laid 24,302 square yards of cedar blocks, all of which had been taken up and replaced prior to the first day of January, 1901. Some time previous to 1896, there had been laid 28,116 square yards of cobble-stones, of which 12,690 square yards yet remain, the balance having been taken up and replaced by other varieties of paving. Also, prior to 1896, there had been laid 47,378 square yards of stone blocks, of which only 12,690 square yards still remain.

There are short sections of macadam pavements still existing on Adams Street, between Chicago and South Streets, and on Glen-Oak Avenue, northeast of Jackson Street. Stone block pavements still exist on Adams Street, between Cedar and Chicago Streets, on Knoxville Avenue, between Main and Hamilton, and on Spencer Street, between Seventh and Moss Avenues.

Short sections of cobble-stone pavements yet remain on Chestnut Street, between Adams and Washington Streets; on Harrison, between Jefferson and Water Streets; on Oak Street, between Depot and Washington Streets; on Union Street, between Seventh and Moss Avenues, and on Walnut Street, between Adams and Water Streets.

The other principal streets of the city are all paved with either brick or asphalt, the proportions of each being shown by the following table:

The following table shows the amounts and character (in square yards and length in miles-) of paving laid each year upon the streets and alleys of the city, including the right of way of the Central Railway Company.

The paving of alleys commenced about the year 1887. The alleys already paved, with two exceptions, are 18 feet wide, and are all paved with brick, with the exception of five blocks—two between Adams and Washington Streets, two between Monroe and Madison Avenues, and one between Jefferson and Adams. The total length of these alley pavements is over 16,000 feet.

SIDEWALKS.

The first sidewalks laid in the city were generally composed of coal ashes and cinders brought from the various factories. The first brick pavements were laid on Water Street and on Main, between Water and Adams Streets. Board or plank sidewalks were afterwards constructed, extending along the principal streets in the city, but these have been mostly removed. The character and length of the sidewalks in the old city on the first day of January, 1901, are shown by the following table:

Brick.....	181,175	lineal feet or	91.70	miles
Plank.....	11,310	" " "	8.39	" "
Cement.....	15,779	" " "	9.05	" "
Artificial stone....	135	" " "	0.08	" "

Cobblestone.....	575	" " "	0.14	" "
Total.....	608,698	" " "	113.44	" "

No data are at hand from which the amount of sidewalks already constructed in the annexed portions of the city can be estimated. The largest proportion, however, consists of plank, but there are a number of sidewalks constructed of cement and brick.

Prior to the year 1877 there had been no established grade for the City. Every street was graded according to the best judgment of the City Engineer and the City Council then in office. Consequently there was no uniformity. It is true that attempts had been made by one or two of the engineers to establish a uniform grade, but only to be disregarded by their successors. In the year 1877, however, a general survey of the city was made under the direction of a skillful engineer named Chesbrough, in pursuance of which a permanent grade was established for the entire city, which has since been followed. By it all grades of streets and alleys are referred to a datum plane one hundred feet below a fixed point at the top of the fourth flute on the south angle of the Corner Stone of the Court House. From this point the grades of all streets are determined. Low water mark in the Illinois River before the construction of the dam at Copperas Creek, was 22.55 feet above this datum plane, to which must now be added three feet for the additional depth of water caused by the dam, without reference to the additional flow of water from the Chicago Drainage Canal. The several different elevations of the City may be briefly indicated as follows: Following the line of Main Street, as now graded, the elevation in feet of the several streets above the datum plane are as follows: Water Street, 47.50; Washington, 65.50; Adams, 86.00; Jefferson, 96.20; Madison, 102.00; Monroe, 108.50; Perry, 114.00; Glendale, 117.00; Globe, 120.00; Bluff, 137.00; High street, 197.50; while the highest point reached is at the intersection of Knoxville and Illinois Avenues, where it reaches 235.00.

STREET RAILWAYS.

Prior to the year 1870 there were no regular lines of public conveyances for passengers in the City of Peoria. It had long been thought that an omnibus line on Adams Street would be a paying investment, but no one seemed to have the courage to make the venture. At length, in February, 1867, a charter was obtained for a street railway, the company being named the "Central City Street Railway Company." Stock was subscribed and a meeting of stockholders was held, but the project was for the time being abandoned as unprofitable. The first Board of Directors consisted of De Witt C. Farrell, John C. Proctor, John L. Griswold, Horace G. Anderson and Washington Cockle. These having resigned, a new Board was elected on August 7, 1868, of which William R. Bush was made President; Nelson Burnham, Secretary, and Edward H. Jack, Treasurer. Yet nothing was done for another year, when, on October 4, 1869, a new Board consisting of William Reynolds, John L. Griswold, Washington Cockle, Henry R. Woodward, Joseph W. Cochran, Joseph H. Wright and James T. Rogers was elected. William Reynolds was chosen President, Joseph W. Cochran, Secretary, and James T. Rogers, Treasurer. Two days later the City Council granted this company the right to construct its tracks over certain streets, covering a large portion of the city. On October 7, 1869, the Company took steps to build a line two miles in length, commencing at South Street. Edward J. Cowell obtained the contract for building the road and furnishing four horse cars for the sum of $20,000. It was completed on December 31, 1869, and cars began running on January 15, 1870. The enterprise at once began to show signs of profit and, within one month from the day the cars first began to run, it was resolved to continue the line from Main Street to the hollow near the "American Pottery." This was soon completed and the next spring it was extended to the "Central Park," which the Company had in the meantime purchased and fitted up as a place of resort. Subsequently, in 1875, an artesian well was sunk there, bath-houses and natatorium were provided, and it has ever since been maintained as a pleasant place to retire from the heat and vexations of life in a city. This was the only company chartered directly by the Legislature. After 1870 all such corporations had to be organized under the provisions of the general incorporation law. Under this law the Peoria Horse Railway Company was organized. On November 10, 1871, the City Council granted it the right of way for a double track along Washington Street from Persimmon to Main, along Main Street and the Farmington road to Elizabeth Street, along High Street from Main to Elizabeth, and along Elizabeth north to the city limits; also for a single track along Floral Street to Bourland, on Bourland to Hansel, on Hansel Street to city limits; also along North Street from Main to Armstrong Avenue and along Armstrong Avenue and Taylor Street to Bluff Street; also along the Knoxville road from Main Street to the city limits. A glance at the map will show that this grant includes all the tracks on the Center and West Bluffs, the Main Street track and that on Washington Street to the Union Depot.

The Fort Clark Horse Railway Company was organized May 17, 1873, by Jacob Darst, John S. French, John H. Hall, William E. S. Bunn and Jacob Littleton. In anticipation of their doing so, the City Council on August 6, 1872, granted them permission to construct their tracks along certain streets, the initial point being the intersection of Franklin and Second Streets. From that point one line was to follow Franklin and Bridge to Water Street, another to follow Second, Spencer, Smith, McReynolds, South Madison, Howett, Shelby and Lincoln Avenues to the city limits. Another was to follow Franklin, Monroe, Mary and Perry Streets to the city limits. On August 13, 1874, this company was granted leave to extend its tracks from the intersection of Jefferson and Second Streets to Harrison, thence on Harrison to Adams, thence along Adams and Main to Monroe Street, but on Adams and Main Streets they should use the tracks of any other road having tracks on the same, which they should acquire by purchase, by condemnation or other legal means. In attempting to enforce this grant by condemnation this company got into a long litigation with the Central City Company, in which the latter was successful. The two roads, running parallel with each other, a rivalry sprang up between them which was never settled and which finally led to the absorption of the Fort Clark by the Central City Company.

On April 20, 1888, the Central Railway Company was organized to take the place of the Central City Horse Railway Company and the Peoria Horse Railway Company, and to change the motive power from that of horses to electricity. On May 10, 1889, the City Council granted it the right of way over all the streets named in the grants to the two former companies and some others. The Peoria Horse Railway then became consolidated with the Central City under its new name.

On May 18, 1891, the Fort Clark Company was granted the right to use electricity instead of horse or mule power and on March 11, 1892, it changed its name to that of "Fort Clark Street Railway Company."

On December 10, 1891, the Peoria Rapid Transit Company was organized in the interest of the Central Company and laid its tracks on Monroe, Fifth and Sixth Streets as they now are. The Fort Clark Road being thus paralleled on all sides by the tracks of the Central Road in close proximity, was unable to compete longer with that powerful organization and it soon fell into its hands. The Central Railway Company now practically owns and operates all the lines in the city (with the exception of that leading from the intersection of Main Street and Granite Avenue to Prospect Heights), including a line through Averyville and one on lower Adams Street, through what until recently was South Peoria, also a line in Richwoods Township leading from Knoxville Avenue to Cornington Avenue at the race tracks. Its officers are Walter Barber, President; Samuel Woolner, Jr., Vice President; J. B. Greenhut, Second Vice President; J. N. Ward, Secretary: H. J. Woodward, Treasurer: John Finley, General Manager, and Eugene Tetu, Cashier.

The Peoria Heights Street Railway Company was organized October 1, 1892.

The Glen Oak and Prospect Heights Railway Company was organized May 7, 1896. These two companies were doubtless intended for local and temporary purposes in connection with certain new enterprises set on foot in the neighborhood of the present village of Prospect Heights.

The Peoria and Prospect Heights Railway Company was incorporated December 17, 1897. It has in operation a single track road, commencing at the intersection of Main Street and Glendale Avenue and running along several streets until it reaches the old Mount Hawley road at the Alps, and follows the same past Glen Oak Park and Springdale Cemetery to the village of Prospect Heights. Its stock is held largely by the stockholders of the Central City Company, but as yet no consolidation of the two roads has been effected.

There is also an electric road running from Peoria to Pekin, called the "Peoria and Pekin Traction Company." It uses the tracks of the Central Railway Company from Western Avenue to Hamilton Street, making a loop on Fulton Street, Jefferson Avenue and Hamilton Street, reaching the main line again at the corner of Hamilton and Adams.

Several changes in the routes have been made since the lines were originally constructed. From the West Bluff, called the Main Street line, the cars run on Main to Adams, on Adams to Chestnut, on Chestnut to the Union Depot. On Adams Street cars run the whole length of the City. From the East Bluff or Knoxville Avenue line, they run down Main and Adams Street to Oak, thence on Oak and Hurlbut Streets. The Rapid Transit line runs down Main and Washington Streets to the Union Depot. The Monroe Street line runs down Hamilton Street to Jefferson Avenue, thence to the intersection of Second and Sanford Streets, where it branches,—one line running west on Second Street to the city limits, the other on Sanford, Warner, Howett and Lincoln Avenue. For the present the Central Railway Company seems to control the situation and has a practical monopoly of all the street railways in the City.

THE TELEPHONE.

The first telephones came into practical use in the City of Boston in the month of May, 1877. Just two years later they were introduced into the City of Peoria. There were at first two rival inventions, that of Professor Alexander Graham Bell and that of Thomas A. Edison, both of which were introduced here.

On May 15, 1879, Messrs. Charles B. Allaire and Walter S. Reyburn, under the firm name of Allaire & Reyburn, opened an exchange with thirty-six subscribers. It was the Bell system and was located on the third floor of the old Board of Trade building, on the corner of Fulton and Washington Streets, now known as the Zell, Hotchkiss & Co. Bank Building.

In the month of August following the Western Union Telegraph Company, which then controlled the Edison patent, opened an exchange in the Chamber of Commerce, under the name of "The Edison Telephone Company." The rivalry between the two companies became spirited, the Edison Company furnishing instruments at lower rates than its rival, so that by the year 1880 it had 271 instruments in use, while the Allaire & Reyburn had only 183. The latter company then bought out their rival, since which time the Bell has been the only instrument in use in Peoria. In the year 1883 the firm of Allaire & Reyburn was succeeded by "The Central Illinois Telephone Company," of which D. H. Lauderbaugh, of Chicago, was President; Charles B. Allaire, Treasurer, and Walter S. Reyburn, Secretary and Manager. This company continued to operate the system in Peoria until the year 1885, when it was succeeded by the "Central Union Telephone Company," which at that time was made up of several companies operating in the States of Illinois, Iowa, Indiana and Ohio. From that time until the present this company has continued to operate all the telephones in the City without opposition.

The exchange remained in its first quarters until April 1, 1899, when it removed into its new building, at Nos. 308 and 310 Fulton Street. This building was erected and is owned by the Central Union Telephone Company, and is one of the most perfectly equipped of its kind in the country. It has now in use about 3,250 telephones, operated by about 115 employees.

CHAPTER VI.

THE PARKS AND ARTESIAN WELLS.

In its early days Peoria needed no parks embellished by the hands of man. The surroundings of the village, its background of flowering prairie, wooded hills, shaded dells and flowing springs lent a charm to the scene sufficient to gratify the taste of the most fastidious. Fitting names were given to some of the most charming spots, such as Spring Hill to the bluff at Seventh Avenue and Spencer Street, on account of the copious spring issuing from its face; and Rose Hill to the East Bluff from Jackson to Spring Street; while Prospect Hill, four miles north of the city, and rising to an elevation of four hundred feet, received its name from the view it afforded of some of the finest scenery in the State. The small areas or squares, which, in recent years, have been converted into parks, were not originally intended as such. State House Square had no particular designation in the plat of Monson & Sanford's Addition. It may have been so named in expectation that, when the State Capital should be removed to Peoria, the State House would be erected upon it.

Morton Park was a gift to the city, for the use of the poor, by George Morton, one of the proprietors of the addition in which it is located. The gift was, however, to take effect only upon failure of heirs of a particular person, which event having occurred, the city acquired full title.

Lincoln Park was formerly the City Cemetery, but, upon its abandonment for that purpose, was converted into a park. These are the only ones owned by the city.

The discovery of artesian water, which forms an important feature in other parks, was made about the year 1860, by the Messrs. Voris on land now owned by Oliver J. Bailey, near East Peoria. This well, which is over 900 feet in depth, continues to flow.

Spring Hill Park, a tract of five acres, originally constituting a part of the homestead of Captain William A. Hall, was first improved for park purposes by Col. Charles H. Deane, in the year 1875. This was done by sinking an artesian well to the depth of 275 feet, by constructing bath houses and natatorium and by adding other attractive features, all of which combined to make it a popular resort. It is now used for sanitary purposes. (See Medical Profession.)

The County Fair Grounds, now Table Grove Addition, was at one time a popular resort, but, when no longer needed for fairs, passed into private hands and was cut up into blocks and lots.

Jefferson Park was a tract of ground located in the present village of Averyville, purchased by the Peoria Fair Association for the purpose of holding State and County Fairs. It was also used for park purposes, and it was here the "Old Settlers Union" held their annual reunions for several years.

Central Park, in the extreme northerly quarter of the city and adjoining Jefferson Park, contains ten or twelve acres. It was purchased by the Central City Horse Railway Company and is still held in the interest of its successor, the Central Railway Company. It has an artesian well 895 feet deep, which supplies a large bath house and an open-air natatorium with an excellent quality of water for such use. The grounds are well shaded with native forest trees, and a small stream, issuing from Spring Lake Cemetery and flowing near by, adds another charm to the place. Other improvements added by the proprietors made this park, until the improvement of Glen Oak Park, the most popular of any in the city.

Riverside Park, situated between the Peoria and Bureau Valley Railroad and the river, is also held in the interest of the Street Railway Company and is devoted to racing, driving, ball-playing and other popular amusements.

Besides the artesian wells already mentioned there is one, sunk in 1876 by Sidney Pulsifer, on Glen Oak Avenue, between Main Street and Hamilton Boulevard. It has always been used for sanitary purposes. There is another on North Adams Street near the Public Square, owned by David L. Bigham, which supplies an extensive sanitarium with water. There are also connected with it bath rooms and a large natatorium. There is also one at the Stock Yards, sunk by Thomas Neill in 1877, still flowing, and one sunk by the city at the old water works, which has never been put to any practical use. The water of these wells, all obtained from the same stratum of rock, flows from the pipes at a temperature of 65 degrees Fahrenheit, it holds in solution a large per centage of chloride of Sodium, chloride of Potassa, carbonate of Lime, carbonate of Magnesia, and is strongly charged with Sulphuretted Hydrogen. It possesses undoubted sanitary and medicinal properties.

PROSPECT HILL.—The natural beauties of Prospect Hill early attracted attention to it as a place of summer resort. In the beginning of the year 1850, a joint stock company was formed, with a view of erecting a hotel and summer resort on a ten-acre piece of ground in the northwest corner of Section 22, Township 9 North, Range 8 East, close by where the road leading into the river bottom leaves the Mt. Hawley road, the cost of which was to be $5,000. This sum was divided into shares of $50 each. The building, when erected, was a substantial frame, 76 feet front with wings 53 feet deep. It was called "Prospect Hill Pavilion," and, beside usual hotel accommodations, it is said to have had one of the finest ball rooms in the State. It was at first kept by Mason Gass, who afterwards kept a popular hotel in the city. But the high hopes then entertained were doomed to disappointment, for after running for two or three years it was burned to the ground and never rebuilt.

PARK SYSTEM OF PEORIA.

The Park System of Peoria is known as the Pleasure Driveway and Park District of Peoria, Illinois, organized under an act of the General Assembly entitled "An Act to provide for the creation of Pleasure Driveway and Park Districts;" approved June 19, 1893; in force July 1, 1893.

A petition for organization was filed in the County Court February 18, 1894. An election was called for and held on March 13, 1894, for incorporation and organization of a Pleasure Driveway and Park District. The result of this election was as follows:

For organizing, 2,672 votes; against organizing, 1,110 votes. An order was entered March 15, 1894, declaring the Peoria Pleasure Driveway and Park District duly organized, comprising the following described territory: Beginning at the southwest corner of Peoria Township, thence north along the west boundary line of Peoria and Richwoods Townships to the intersection of the north boundary line of section eighteen (18) in Richwoods Township with its west boundary line; thence at right angles east along the north boundary line of section eighteen (18) and other sections to the Illinois River; thence south and southwest along the Illinois River to its intersection with the south boundary line of Peoria Township; thence west along said boundary line to the place of beginning; the same being all of Townships eight (8) and nine (9) North, Range eight (8) East of the Fourth Principal Meridian in the County of Peoria and State of Illinois, except a strip two miles in width off the north end of said Township nine (9) above named.

The usual convention was held, the candidates for the Board of Trustees nominated, and the first election was held May 15, 1894. The following are the members of the first Board of Trustees elected:

President John H. Francis; Trustees, H. H. Fahnestock, William M. Allen, Henry Triebel, John D. McClure, Benjamin F. Cartwright, Henry Seibold.

The following parks were then purchased:

Glen Oak Park, containing 93 acres, at a cost for the land of $88,000.

Madison Park, situated at the intersection of Seventh and Lincoln Avenues, containing 87 acres, at a cost for the land of $45,000.

South Park, situated in extreme southern portion of District, containing 10 acres, at a cost of $7,500.

"Laura Bradley" Park, situated in western part of Peoria Township and containing 140 acres, was donated to the Park District by Mrs. Lydia Bradley.

The first work of improving the Park System was commenced April 22, 1895, at Glen Oak. This park was dedicated and opened to the public with appropriate ceremonies on Labor Day, September 7, 1896.

Wm. B. Hamilton

The other parks have received due attention from the Board until the present time. South Park has been completed and is being used by the public as a park. Laura Bradley Park is being improved each year, and Madison Park is receiving some attention.

The expenditures of the Park System up to June 1, 1900, will be found in the following table;

The law allows the Park Board to levy a six mill tax for park purposes on all property of the District. This provides a fund of about $60,000 each year.

There has been issued $200,000 in bonds running twenty years, bearing 4½ and 3½ per cent interest, for the payment of which a sinking fund of $10,000 each year has been provided.

When the parks have been improved and boulevards constructed to connect them with each other, Peoria will have a park system that any city might be proud of.

The present officers of the Board are:

Eddens J. Darst, President; Samuel A. Kinsey, Benjamin Warren, Jr., R. R. Bourland, Godfrey Wys, P. J. Malec, James G. Kellar, Trustees; B. E. Cartwright, Secretary; O. F. Dubuis, Engineer and Superintendent; W. T. Whiting, Attorney; Frank Treifzger, Treasurer.

CHAPTER VII.

THE POST OFFICE—CUSTOM HOUSE—INTERNAL REVENUE —UNITED STATES COURTS.

No sooner had the citizens of Peoria secured the location of their county-seat than they determined to have a Post Office. This was effected by the appointment, on the 9th day of April, 1825, of James Adams as the first Postmaster at Peoria. It has been heretofore supposed that John Dixon was the first Postmaster, but that supposition is not borne out by the records of the Department.

Little can be learned of Mr. Adams who received the first appointment, his name not appearing either in the assessment list or in the poll-books of that year. His career as Postmaster was short. It is not known where he kept the Post Office, but it is very probable it was in his private house or private office, as, according to tradition, the first quarter's income amounted to only seven or eight dollars.

Peoria has had twenty-three Postmasters, of whom three, Norman Hyde, George C. Bestor and Washington Cockle, received appointments after having been once superseded. The following is the list, twenty-six in all, with dates of appointment:

James Adams.....	April 9, 1825
Norman Hyde.....	Feb. 23, 1826
Stephen Stillman.....	April 9, 1830
Norman Hyde.....	July 12, 1830
John Hamlin.....	August 17, 1832
John L. Bogardus.....	August 21, 1833
William Mitchell.....	May 16, 1834
Giles C. Dana.....	Feb. 23, 1835
Joseph C. Fuller.....	July 12, 1838
George C. Bestor.....	Nov. 3, 1841
William H. Fessenden.....	Oct. 6, 1843
Washington Cockle.....	August 19, 1847
John King.....	May 29, 1849
Peter Sweat.....	March 29, 1853
George W. Raney.....	September 28, 1858
George C. Bestor.....	March 27, 1861
Enoch Emery.....	May 12, 1865
Isaac Underhill.....	August 25, 1866

David W. Magee.....	April 20, 1867
John S. Stevens.....	January 7, 1876
Washington Cockle.....	January 13, 1880
John Warner.....	June 15, 1885
William T. Dowdall.....	May 3, 1886
Alexander Stone.....	December 2, 1889
Henry B. Morgan.....	February 14, 1894
Wm. Edgar Hull.....	March 9, 1898

It is not at all probable that Stephen Stillman ever qualified or served as Postmaster. His appointment is dated April 9, 1830, and his successor's July 12, 1830. Counting the time required for the transmission of his commission and the return of the application for the appointment of his successor, there would be little time left.

Norman Hyde, who had two appointments, was a young man of varied qualifications. He was a school teacher, surveyor, Postmaster, Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court, and Judge of the Probate Court, all within a year.

The names of all the other Postmasters, with the exception of that of Joseph C. Fuller, are well known. John L. Bogardus was a lawyer, hotel-keeper, a speculator in real estate, a ferryman, and it is said that he carried on an extensive business in fishing in the Illinois River, at the same time that he held the office of Postmaster. The business of the Postoffice Department in this section at that time must have been very limited, for it is known that John Dixon, about the year 1827, obtained a contract to carry the mail from Peoria to Galena once every two weeks, and for that purpose it was necessary to open the trail between Peoria and Dixon's ferry on the Rock River.

We do not know certainly at what time the Post Office began to occupy a room or building separate from the dwellings of the Postmasters. It is possible that Bogardus kept the Post Office in his hotel, which was a log cabin not far from the foot of Hamilton Street. Mr. Washington

Cockle, who was Postmaster in 1847, says that one of the Postmasters, whom he erroneously names Dr. Cross, probably meaning Giles C. Dana or some later Postmaster, established the office on Main Street, at the corner of the alley between Adams and Washington Streets, where the stone front building now stands. It appears from Drown's Directory of 1844, that the Post Office was then on Main Street (probably opposite the Court House), the office of Purple & Metcalfe, attorneys, adjoining it, and that of George C. Bestor, dealer in real estate, in the rear; and that there were then two clerks, Washington Brady and William E. Caldwell. Mr. Cockle further says that Wm. H. Fessenden removed the office into a two-story brick building, which he had erected near the corner of Adams and Fulton Streets, where he (Mr. Cockle) found it when he assumed the duties of the office. This building occupied a portion of the ground now occupied by the Cox building on the corner of Adams and Fulton Streets, and adjoined the Clinton House.

Just how long the Post Office remained there has not been ascertained; but in 1850, during the incumbency of John King as Postmaster, it is found to be located in the basement of the Peoria House, near the corner of Adams and Hamilton Streets. The Post Office remained there until 1861, when, upon the appointment of George C. Bestor, he removed it to his own building, now No. 311-313 Main Street, owned by Mr. Volney H. Freeman.

In 1865, upon the appointment of Mr. Enoch Emery, it was removed to the first floor of Rouse's Hall. It remained there until some time during the incumbency of Gen. D. W. Magee, when it was moved to the Puterbaugh building, where the Post Office building now stands.

When it was determined that the Government was to have a building of its own in Peoria, a rivalry sprang up between different locations, and a commission was appointed to decide upon the location, which commission chose the present site. The ground, with the buildings then upon it, cost the Government $52,000. Contracts for the masonry and superstructure were awarded March 1, 1884, and the building was completed in the spring of 1889 at a cost, exclusive of the site, of $251,833.86. While the erection of the new building was in progress, the Post Office was kept in the Grimes building, on the corner of Jefferson and Hamilton Streets, and was moved into the new building January 1, 1889.

A comparison of the above list of Postmasters with the political complexion of the administrations during which their appointments were made, will probably determine the politics of each of them.

In "Peck's Gazetteer" of 1837, it is said, "There are four lines of stages leading from Peoria, viz.: One to Galena, Sundays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, distance 166 miles, fare $12; one to Chicago, same days, distance 160 miles, fare $12; one to Springfield, same days, distance 70 miles, fare $6; and one to Knoxville, on Thursdays, distance 46 miles, fare $4. Some of these are fine Troy post-coaches; others are open wagons, on lifeless springs, which do very well on smooth ground in dry weather."

In the "Peoria Register and North Western Gazetteer," dated January 20, 1838, a portion of a column is given up to a table of towns on the Illinois River with their distances from Peoria, namely: Detroit, six miles, 4 houses; Rome, 18 miles, 25 houses; Allentown, 19 miles, 3 houses; Chillicothe, 21 miles, 30 houses; Lacon, 33 miles, 55 houses; Henry, 45 miles, 5 houses; Webster, 63 miles, 5 houses; Hennepin, 57 miles, population 700—county-seat of Putnam County; Enterprise, 60 miles, 4 houses; Peru, 71 miles, population 150; Rockwell, 74 miles, 8 houses; Utica, 70 miles, 1 house; Ottawa, 60 miles, population 800; Wesley City, 3 miles, 30 houses; Pekin, 10 miles, population 400; Liverpool, 40 miles, 6 houses; Havana, 50 miles, 30 houses. But sparse as the population would seem to have been, the list of advertised letters was very great. The list remaining in the Post Office at Peoria uncalled for, January 31, 1838, occupies nearly two columns (the paper being 24 inches in length), G. C. Dana Postmaster; that from Knoxville, John D. Sanborn Postmaster, occupies nearly one-fourth of a column; while that from Charleston, now Brimfield, L. L. Guyer, Deputy Postmaster, contains twenty names.

From other sources we find that in 1837 the business of the Post Office was done on the credit system. The Government charged from 10 to 25 cents on each letter according to the distance carried, and so much upon each weekly, semi-weekly, monthly, semi-monthly, or bi-monthly publication, payable at the place of delivery. The Postmasters kept regular accounts with the recipients and rendered bills quarterly. Public officials did the same, and one instance is known where the official, who was a physician, rendered an account for medical services and for fees as an officer of the law, all in the same bill.

In the absence of banks or postal orders the matter of making remittances by mail was of serious importance. In order to preserve the evidence of the remittance, the party desiring to send it would take a neighbor with him to the Post Office, and there, in his presence, place in a letter already written and addressed, a certain amount in bank-bills, and place the same in the Post Office, taking at the same time from his neighbor, who might be the Postmaster himself, a written memorandum of the amount sent, the denomination and serial number of the bills, and the name of the bank by which they were issued, together with the name of the party addressed, his post-office address, and the date of the remittance. The Postoffice Department did not assume any responsibility for the remittance, but if payment was ordered to be made by mail, and the letter should be lost or stolen, this would be good evidence of the payment, and the party to whom the remittance was made would be the loser.

In 1844, Peoria had a mail to Springfield and Ottawa, daily except Sunday; to Danville and Burlington three days in the week, and to Rushville two days in the week—all carried by stage coach, the stages departing at three, four and eight o'clock A. M., the mails closing the evening before at 7:00 P. M. Mr. Cockle relates that, during the time he held the office, although mercantile business with St. Louis was mainly transacted by river steamers, yet the mails came by coaches, that being the quickest method. The mails for Chicago went north to Dixon, where one route branched off for Chicago, and another to Galena. There was a daily mail to Springfield by way of Pekin; one to Chillicothe, Lacon, Henry, Hennepin, Granville and Peru; one to Burlington, Kikapoo, Brimfield and Knoxville; three times a week to Monmouth, Picaune and Oquawka; also to Albany, by Mt. Hawley, Wyoming, Toulon, Burns, Geneseo, Erie, Kingsbury, and to Bloomington, Urbana, Canton and Rushville, and two a week to Ottawa, Metamora and Magnolia.

Mr. Cockle's commissions amounted to $600.00 per annum. In his time money was sent by draft, the merchants making their own exchanges. There was no money order or registry system, no bank in the city and no place of deposit. Mr. Cockle kept his official moneys in an old Bank of England specie bag, which he carried home every night and placed it under his pillow. It is also related by others that merchants were in the habit of hiding their money in coffee-sacks and other places of concealment.

In 1850 there were daily mails to Peru and Springfield; daily (except Sunday) to Burlington; tri-weekly to Albany, Urbana and Rushville; semi-weekly to Ottawa by way of Washington, Metamora and Magnolia, with an additional trip to Washington on Wednesdays; and weekly to Smithville, Kingston Mines and Hollis. This was only four years before the advent of the railroads.

Mr. Cockle, in 1884, gave the following comparison of the business of the office: "For the last quarter of 1860, the receipts of the Peoria Post Office were $4,076.00; for the last quarter of 1870, $7,830.00; for the last quarter of 1879, $13,849.00; they are now (1884) about $75,000.00 per annum. We issue money orders in the amount of over $100,000.00 per annum, and pay orders to the amount of over $200,000.00 per annum. During the year we collect 713,000 letters, 237,000 postal cards, 117,000 newspapers; we deliver 852,000 mailed letters, 65,000 drop letters, 276,000 mailed postal cards, 60,000 local postal cards, 5,000 registered letters and 650,000 newspapers. This is a very different business from that transacted thirty-four years ago.

"Last year the expenses of the office were $21,500.00, including salaries and everything. Our present annual rent is $2,500.00. We have nine carriers at $850.00 each; one at $500.00, and two substitutes. We send out about sixty pouches of mail per day. The first money-order ever paid at this office was on the 4th day of November, 1864. It was for the sum of $25.00, and was sent from Springfield by Abner M. Watson and paid to Henry Keener of this city. At that time only 21 orders had been issued at St. Louis; 7 at Chicago; 275 at Philadelphia, and 334 at New York. During that month we only paid about twenty orders, amounting to three or four hundred dollars in all, and now we pay fifty or sixty orders every day, the aggregate for the year being $200,000." This was in 1884.

A free delivery system was established at Peoria, July 7, 1873, when Gen. D. W. Magee was Postmaster. Eight carriers were appointed as follows: John Stillwell, Charles R. Gundlach, Henry Schimpff, E. O. Place, Robert Pfeiffer, Dietrich Kuch, Eugene Rollman and John Onyum. They started with three deliveries daily in the business portion, and two in the residence portion of the city. At the present time (December, 1901) there are thirty-six carriers and clerks, and four substitutes. There are eighteen collections in the business portion of the city daily, and from 1:20 P. M. to 6:50 P. M. a collection is made every thirty minutes in the business portion of the city. There are five deliveries in the business district, commencing at 6:30 A. M., and two in all the resident districts. There is also a sixth delivery to the hotels and newspaper offices at 8:30 P. M.

Since the present Postmaster, Mr. Wm. E. Hull, has had charge of the office, the help has been increased by the appointment of a cashier, four additional clerks, and ten additional carriers. Ten sub-stations have been established in the city and two rural free delivery routes in the country, with two carriers and one substitute. The growth of the business of the office is shown by the following items furnished from official sources:

The gross receipts of the office for the year closing June 30, 1901, from the sale of stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards and money collected on second-class matter and box-rent, amounted to $161,623.18. There was handled during the year 7,894 registered letters and packages.

The officers and employes of the Peoria Post Office at the present time are as follows: Postmaster; one Assistant Postmaster; one Cashier; one Superintendent City Delivery; one Chief Mailing Clerk; one Money-Order Clerk; two General Delivery Clerks; one Stamp Clerk; one Registry Clerk; four Mailing Clerks; four Distributors; three Stampers; one Record; one Stenographer; three Special Delivery Messengers; ten Clerks in charge of sub-stations.

THE CUSTOM HOUSE.

In the early days of railroad construction much of our railroad iron was imported from England. This was the case with the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad. To facilitate the building of that road, an act of Congress was obtained creating Peoria a Port of Entry. William S. Moss was appointed Surveyor of Customs, but his only duties seem to have been limited to collection of the import duties on railroad iron imported for his own use. When the emergency had passed, the port was abolished. Henry S. Austin succeeded William S. Moss as Surveyor and was the incumbent of that office when the port was abolished.

By an act of Congress of September 20, 1899, Peoria was made a Port of Delivery, and A. L. Schimpff was appointed Surveyor of Customs, which position he held until August 15, 1902. His successors have been Philip Smith, until September 10, 1894; James Daugherty, until November 17, 1898, and Richard W. Burt from that date until the present time. S. W. Dodge has been Deputy Surveyor of Customs from March, 1891, to this date.

The total amount of collections to the present time have been $170,433.92.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The Internal Revenue Law was passed by Congress July 1, 1892. The fifth Congressional District, which then embraced the counties of Peoria, Knox, Henry, Bureau, Stark, Marshall and Putnam, was constituted a Collection District and John H. Bryant, of Princeton, was appointed first Collector. By subsequent enactments the District has been greatly enlarged, so that it now embraces the counties of Peoria, Knox, Warren, Henderson, Mercer, Rock Island, Henry, Stark, Bureau, Marshall and Putnam.

The rates, as well as the subjects, of taxation have been greatly changed. The original rate levied on spirits, which constitute the largest source of revenue for the Peoria District, was 50 cents per gallon, which was afterwards increased to $2.00, but later very much reduced. The law at times provided for stamp duties, license fees on many occupations, taxes on liquors and other items not now taxed.

The amount of taxes collected at Peoria afford no sure index of the amount of revenue actually paid by Peoria County into the National Treasury, but, inasmuch as the items of spirits constitute the principal source of revenue at the present time, it may be of interest to give the following tables. The first annual report embraced only the period from the taking effect of the law until June 30, 1863, which was not a full year. The annual collections have been as follows:

THE UNITED STATES COURT.

By act of Congress of March 2, 1887, the Northern District of Illinois was sub-divided and provision was made for the holding of two terms of the Circuit and District Courts, each year, at Peoria. By the terms of the act a Chief Deputy Clerk and a Chief Deputy Marshal were to be appointed to have their respective offices at Peoria. Under this arrangement courts have been held by the successive District Judges; first, by Hon. Henry W. Blodgett, next by Hon. Peter S. Grosscup, and lastly by Hon. Christian C. Kohlsaat, in whose stead Hon. J. Otis Humphreys, of the Southern District of Illinois, held the April and October Terms, 1901.

At the organization of the court Enoch P. Sloan was appointed Chief Deputy Clerk of both courts, and continued to hold that position until his death. He was succeeded, March 20, 1897, as Chief Deputy Clerk of the Circuit Court, by Frank C. Howe, and on February 1, 1899, by Mr. Howe as Chief Deputy Clerk of the District Court, that position having, in the meantime, remained vacant. Mr. Howe continues to fill both positions.

On April 12, 1887, Cyrus L. Berry was appointed Chief Deputy United States Marshal for the Southern Division of the District, to have his office at Peoria. He was duly qualified on the succeeding day and served until January 19, 1890. Haller E. Charles was then appointed to the same position and served until April 24, 1894. He was succeeded by Richard R. Voris, who served until December 31, 1898. On January 1, 1899, Stephen O. Tripp was appointed to the same office, and still continues to discharge the duties thereof to the entire satisfaction of the Court and the public.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE PRESS.

No better mirror of the times can be found than the modern newspaper. In this respect Peoria has been peculiarly fortunate from a very early date in its history. From causes already considered the growth of the village was greatly retarded from the year 1825 until 1834, but no sooner were these causes removed than it began to grow rapidly in population and business enterprise. One of the most important of the business ventures of that period was the starting of a weekly newspaper.

On the 10th day of March, 1834, Abram S. Buxton and Henry Wolford commenced the publication of "The Illinois Champion and Peoria Herald," a weekly paper of four pages 20 by 13½ inches, five columns to the page, well printed and ably edited. Mr. Buxton had been associated with the afterwards celebrated George D. Prentice in the publication of the "Louisville Journal." He was a man of fine literary taste, had a good library, was a clear and forcible writer, and gave evidence of much ability as an editor. Mr. Wolford was a practical printer and did much of the type-setting and presswork with his own hands. Under their joint management the paper soon became one of the most popular and influential in the State. Mr. Buxton's life was, however, cut short by that insidious disease, consumption, his death having occurred on the 1st day of September, 1835. The paper then passed into the hands of James C. Armstrong and Jacob Shewalter, who continued its publication, with Jerome L. Marsh as editor, until the early part of the year 1837, when they sold out to Mr. Samuel H. Davis, formerly publisher of the "Winchester Republican."

The name of the paper was at that time changed to that of the "Peoria Register and North Western Gazetteer," the first number of which was issued on the 7th day of April of that year. It was somewhat larger than its predecessor, it being a four-page paper, 18 by 24 inches, six columns to the page and well printed. Its circulation in September, 1838, is indicated by the fact stated in its columns that, on account of sickness, one side of the whole edition, consisting of forty-five quires, had been worked off by the two sons of Mr. Davis, aged 16 and 10 years, respectively. It appears further that when Mr. Davis took hold of the paper he was in or past middle life; he was an able writer and a man of sterling integrity and great force of character. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a leader in its Sunday School and other church work. He, as well as Mr. Buxton, his predecessor, was an ardent Whig, and while he in no sense favored the doctrines of the Abolitionists, yet, as related elsewhere, he resented with all the force of his intellect and pen the outrage which had been committed upon them in the Main Street Church, and the refusal of the proprietors of the paper to publish their vindication. During the first four years of its publication the paper was neutral in politics; but, in 1840, it openly avowed the principles of the Whig party and supported General Harrison for the Presidency. While Mr. Davis was its proprietor the "Peoria Register and North Western Gazetteer" was universally acknowledged as one of the ablest papers published in the State. On February 20, 1840, Mr. John S. Zieber began the publication of the "Peoria Democratic Press," in the interest of the Democratic party. This was probably the occasion of the action of Mr. Davis in changing his from a neutral to a Whig paper.

The Register. At this period Peoria had, as one of her citizens, a gentleman who afterwards became somewhat noted in the central portions of the State, and who formerly had been foreman in the printing establishment of the well-known firm of Harper Brothers, of New York. This was Mark M. Aiken, and it was doubtless through his influence that two young men who had worked under him there were induced to come to Peoria. They were Samuel and William Henry Butler, twin brothers, to whom Mr. Davis sold his paper some time in the year 1842. They continued the publication of the paper under the name of the "Peoria Register," dropping a part of its former title. Mr. Davis was, however, continued as editor until the time of the anti-abolition riot spoken of in a former part of this work, when in consequence of the attitude assumed by the proprietor in relation to that event, he resigned. During his connection with the paper he had erected on the corner of Printer's Alley, on the lower side of Main Street, a three-story brick building, in the second story of which was his office. In the year 1845, the Messrs. Butler sold out to Mr. Thomas J. Pickett, who continued its publication under the name of the "Weekly Register." On June 28, 1848, Messrs. Pickett & Woodcock issued the first daily paper ever published in Peoria, called "The Daily Register," a very small sheet and very short-lived. Sometime thereafter Mr. Pickett formed a partnership with Mr. Henry Kirk White Davis, son of the former proprietor, and, in connection with "The Register," they commenced the publication of the second daily paper in Peoria, which, in memory of the first paper published there, they named "The Champion," the first number of which was issued December 13, 1849.

Both of these publications were continued until January 26, 1850, when the building in which they were printed and published was wrecked, and the printing materials, presses and other appurtenances were destroyed by an explosion which occurred in the lower part of the building, which had until lately been occupied as a drug store, and in which still remained a quantity of straw and some combustible liquids. In this disaster two men lost their lives—Mr. William Pickett, a brother of the proprietor, and Mr. James Kirkpatrick, publisher of another paper called the "Peoria American," both of whom were crushed to death by the falling walls. Mr. Nathaniel C. Nason, who was employed in the office, and who afterwards became publisher of the "Peoria Transcript" and other periodicals, barely escaped with his life. To give an idea of the paucity of printing facilities in Peoria at that time, it may be stated that Messrs. Pickett & Davis had undertaken to print in pamphlet form an edition of 3,500 or 4,000 of the new Township Organization Law, with notes and forms prepared by Onslow Peters, Esq., the author of the law. They had begun the work and had a few pages printed at the time the building was wrecked. The firm then made arrangements with James J. Langdon, a printer in Chicago, for the use of the type in his office and sent Mr. Nason with another printer to help him to complete the job. Mr. Langdon had not enough of the type wanted and Mr. Nason, who had charge of the work, obtained the use of what more was needed at the office of the "Prairie Farmer," and did part of the work there. The paper upon which it was printed was bought from A. H. & C. Burley, and the press-work was done at the office of John Wentworth, of the "Chicago Democrat," who had the only up-to-date press run by steam in Chicago. The books were completed by March 15, but there being then no railroads, and the canal not having been opened for the season, Mr. Nason was obliged to await that event. In the meantime he found employment in the office of Mr. Langdon and in that of the "Chicago Evening Journal," then published by Geer & Wilson—the first named member of the firm being the same Nathan C. Geer, who, nine years later, became proprietor of the "Peoria Transcript."

About this time the firm of Pickett & Davis was dissolved by the withdrawal of Mr. Pickett and the purchase of his interest by Mr. Davis. The latter then undertook to revive "The Register" and "The Champion," the latter of which he did publish for a short time much reduced in dimensions and printed from old worn out type of large size, which had been used in a job-office. But after several unsuccessful efforts he was forced to abandon the enterprise about the first of May following, when he sold out the material remaining in his office and left the city.

The Republican. Mr. Pickett then purchased a new outfit and, on the first day of June, 1850, began the publication of the "Weekly Republican," Henry Butler, one of the former publishers of "The Register," being his foreman. This was a large, handsomely printed and well-colored paper, intensely Whig in politics until the breaking up of old party lines from 1854 to 1850, when Mr. Pickett became an ardent Republican.

About the year 1852, Bernard Baily, a brother-in-law of Pickett, became associated with him in the publication of the paper, but this partnership only continued a short time, probably not more than a year. On January 17, 1853, Mr. Pickett commenced "The Daily and Tri-Weekly Republican," which continued to be published as long as the Weekly. In 1856 Mr. Pickett became a candidate for the office of Circuit Clerk and the editorial management was (nominally at least) turned over to Campbell C. Waite, who had been, from its inception, employed as a compositor, but who from time to time had done considerable editorial work. Some time in the same year or later the paper was transferred to Samuel L. Coulter, a gentleman of ripe scholarship and an able writer, who endeavored to run it as a Whig paper, but the Whig party rapidly becoming disintegrated, there was no call for its further publication, and in a year or two it went out of existence.

The period covered by the publication of the "Peoria Republican" is a marked one in the newspaper history of Peoria. The paper, first issued as a weekly, was later issued as a daily, tri-weekly and weekly, and so continued until its publication ceased. Mr. Pickett, its founder, was a man of decided ability as a writer and became quite noted as a politician. His father was a Virginian, a soldier in the war of 1812, who after that war moved from his home in Lynchburg to Louisville, Kentucky, where, on the 17th day of March, 1821, his son, Thomas, was born. In 1830, the family moved to St. Louis and, in 1836, to Peoria, where Thomas acquired the art of printing in the office of the "Champion and Herald." In 1844 he and a brother of N. C. Nason published a paper in Pekin, Tazewell County, called "The Palladium," and about a year thereafter he got hold of the "Peoria Register," as already stated. In 1851 he was elected President of the First Illinois Editorial Association, defeating John Wentworth, of Chicago. In 1856, while yet connected with the "Peoria Republican," he was one of the twelve editors who met in Decatur on the 22d of February, which resulted in the call of the first Republican State Convention, at Bloomington, on May 29th of that year, at which time Mr. Lincoln delivered his famous 10st speech. He was also a delegate to the first Republican National Convention, which met in Philadelphia in the month of June of that year, and which nominated John C. Fremont for the Presidency.

Having severed his connection with the "Peoria Republican," Mr. Pickett went to Rock Island, where he became proprietor of the "Rock Island Register," and it was during his residence in that city that he wrote a letter to Mr. Lincoln, suggesting the use of his name in connection with the Presidency, which letter Nicolay & Hay have made historic in their Biography of Lincoln. He was also a delegate from the Rock Island District to the National Convention of 1860, which nominated Lincoln, and in the same year was elected to the State Senate, where he rendered efficient service in support of the measures of the Government. At the outbreak of the war Mr. Lincoln tendered him a commission as Brigadier General of Volunteers, but at the request of Governor Yates, who thought his services would be of more value to the State in organizing troops and attending to legislative duties, he reluctantly declined the honor. At a later date he was instrumental in raising the Sixty-ninth Regiment of Infantry and became its Lieutenant-Colonel, and still later the One Hundred and Thirty-second Regiment of Infantry, of which he was made Colonel. After the war he went to Paducah, Kentucky, where he founded a paper called "The Federal Union," was appointed Postmaster, and later Clerk of the United States District Court. In 1879, having removed to Nebraska, he in connection with his sons founded "The Nebraska City Sun," and a year later "The Capitol," at Lincoln, which he conducted successfully for some time. He next became proprietor of the "Franklin County Guard" (Neb.), which he conducted until it was destroyed by fire in 1890. In April, 1891, he removed to Ashland, where he made his home with his son, Hon. Thomas J. Pickett, Jr., and continued to assist him in the publication of the "Ashland Gazette" until the time of his death, which occurred December 24, 1891.

The Gerrymander. Simeon De Witt Drown, who was at work on "The Register" in the office of the Butler Brothers, having become disgusted with the way in which the Legislature had redistricted the State congressionally, began the publication of a little sheet called "The Gerrymander"—a Whig paper intended to caricature that proceeding—the first number of which was issued on the 22d day of March, 1843, and continued to be issued during the campaign of that year. The character of its contents is given in a former chapter.

F B Hasbrouck

The Peoria American, another Whig paper, was started in July, 1845, by James Kirkpatrick. It is said to have been the first paper in the State to advocate the nomination and election of General Taylor to the Presidency. The paper continued to be published until the death of its founder as herein related.

The Nineteenth Century, a National Reform paper, was started, in 1848, by Messrs. J. R. Watson and David D. Irons, but after a few months it was sold to Mr. Kirkpatrick, who merged it into the "Peoria American."

The foregoing were all Whig papers in their origin, or became so afterwards, and cover the entire period of Whig journalism in Peoria.

The Peoria Democratic Press, the first distinctively political paper in Peoria, was first issued as a weekly on the 20th day of February, 1840, by John S. Zieber, who had published "The People's Press" in the town of Princess Ann, Somerset County, Maryland. Either at that time or soon afterwards he took as a partner Enoch P. Sloan, and the paper was published in the name of Zieber & Sloan. They sold out about June 1, 1846, to Thomas Phillips, who had formerly published the "American Manufacturer," and who continued to publish the paper for about three years, when it was purchased by Washington Cockle. In the fall of 1851, the paper was again sold to Enoch P. Sloan who, during all previous changes, had retained his connection with it as editor or assistant editor. On January 5, 1854, Mr. Sloan commenced the issue of a "Daily" and "Tri-Weekly Press," which continued to be issued until about the time of the starting of the "Democratic Union." He remained proprietor of "The Press" until the fall of 1856, when, having been elected Circuit Clerk, he severed his connection with it and Leonard B. Cornwell, once Sheriff of the county, became its owner, with John McDonald its principal editor. During all of its history up to this time, especially while under the editorial management of Mr. Sloan, "The Press" had maintained a very high character as a political journal. It was well edited and free from the trash which is often retailed to the public through the columns of party papers. Mr. Sloan was a remarkably thoughtful and considerate writer, never descending to that species of low vulgarity commonly called mud-slinging, but always maintained a high order of excellence in all his editorials. During the eight years of his incumbency of the office of Circuit Clerk he devoted a portion of his time to the study of law and was afterwards admitted to the bar. After spending a number of years in a quiet way as the legal adviser of numerous friends, in the examination of land titles, in the preparation of a system of abstracts, unique in its plan, and in writing numerous articles for the newspapers, he was, upon the opening of the United States Circuit and District Courts, at Peoria, in the year 1887, appointed Chief Deputy Clerk thereof, which position he held at the time of his death. During the heated controversy between Douglas and Buchanan, "The Democratic Press" was always found on the side of Douglas, but, after Buchanan's election, the patronage of the administration was thrown in favor of its rival, "The News," which probably led to its becoming merged into the latter paper.

The News was started by George W. Raney as a daily on May 26, 1852, and on July 15th of the same year he commenced issuing the "Weekly and Tri-Weekly News." Raney was what would, in these days, be called a hustler. He knew how money could be made in publishing a newspaper, and he was not slow to avail himself of his knowledge. The paper catered to the tastes of a lower stratum of political influence than did "The Press," and was not at all scrupulous in the use of the party lash. It was the representative of the "Danite" or administration wing of the party, and its editor was rewarded by receiving the appointment as Postmaster at Peoria. In the winter of 1857-8, the office of "The News" was destroyed by fire, and about the same time Mr. Raney bought what remained of "The Democratic Press," and, having united the two, he commenced the publication of "The Democratic Union." The different political elements represented in this paper are not fully known, but it is certain it continued to be the leading Democratic paper during the campaign of 1860 and until the month of September, 1862. But one curious feature connected with its editorial management was that, upon the nomination of Douglas for the Presidency in 1860, Mr. Raney, who still continued to hold the office of Postmaster, retired from the editorial chair, and was succeeded by William Trench, an ardent supporter of Douglas. This arrangement continued until after the election, when Raney resumed the editorial chair and continued in that capacity until the month of September, 1862, when, having accepted a position in the army, the publication of the "Democratic Union" ceased.

The Daily Mail. Soon after the publication of the "Democratic Union" had ceased, the party whose principles it had advocated having been left without an organ, a few of the leaders of that party put their heads together and started an entirely new paper, called "The Mail," a daily and weekly publication, the first issue of which appeared October 16, 1862, Charles H. Wright being the editor. It was at first a morning paper, but was changed to an evening paper May 31, 1864. The names of the proprietors of this paper at its inception and in course of the changes it underwent during its publication, have not been perpetuated in history, and it is probably well they should not be, for in its vindictive and vituperative spirit towards the measures of Mr. Lincoln's administration it was outspoken and offensive. Specimens of the contents of its columns are given in another part of this work. After running about a year "The Mail" was succeeded by "The Star," under William Rounseville, and it by "The Post," under Thomas K. Barrett, both published in the same interest. These publications all died for want of sufficient support, to be succeeded in a short time by a paper representing Democratic principles under an entirely new dispensation.

The National Democrat. Finding himself unable longer to continue the publication of "The Post," Mr. Barrett, in the summer of 1865, sold the entire plant to Colonel William T. Dowdall, who disposed of the old material and put in an entirely new outfit, a caloric engine, new presses and type, and on the 5th day of September, of that year, commenced the publication of "The Daily and Weekly National Democrat." He continued to issue the same as a Democratic paper until the year 1887, at which time, having been appointed Postmaster at Peoria, and his health not justifying a continuance of his labors in connection with the paper, he sold out his interest therein to a joint-stock company.

About the year 1870, Mr. P. W. Sheldon and Mr. Eugene F. Baldwin, under the firm name of Sheldon & Baldwin, started a paper called "The Evening Review." It was independent in politics, but, in the confusion of parties then existing, it became opposed to the re-election of E. C. Ingersoll to Congress. The partnership was soon dissolved and a corporation was formed which carried on the publication for some time, but having become involved in financial difficulties, it was sold by the Sheriff, and Mr. Thomas Cratty became the purchaser. Mr. Cratty associated with himself Mr. Leslie Robinson, and they continued its publication for some time. In 1872, Col. Dowdall purchased that paper and continued to publish it as an evening paper in connection with "The National Democrat," which was a morning paper, until 1887, when he sold both papers to the corporation before mentioned.

The Freeman. On July 28, 1880, a new Democratic paper was started by a corporation called "The Freeman Company" with J. A. Monger as editor. This paper was intensely belligerent in its editorial management. It was published as a Daily and Weekly for four years or more, the last number of the Daily which has come under our notice bearing the date, December 31, 1884; J. A. Monger and J. M. Kinlock being the editors. Several other papers devoted to special subjects have from time to time been started, but their lives being of short duration, it has not been deemed wise to notice them any farther.

The German Press. The Germans were among the first settlers in Peoria. They came here as early as 1834 and founded homes on farms in Woodford and Tazewell Counties on the other side of the river, and many more took up residences in the city. The German population in Peoria and vicinity increased so fast, that they soon felt the necessity of a newspaper printed in their own tongue, to keep them abreast with the time and posted on all important events at home as well as abroad. In 1852 Mr. Alois Zotz came here from St. Louis, and printed the first German newspaper in Peoria and Central Illinois. Its name was "Illinois Banner," and it appeared weekly. About this period two other German papers appeared, "The Volksblatt" and "The Courier," but they were both short lived. In 1858 Mr. Zotz sold his paper to Mr. Edward Rummel, who changed the name of the paper to the "Deutsche Zeitung," and also changed its politics. "The Banner" was Democratic and supported President Pierce and Buchanan, while Mr. Rummel's "Deutsche Zeitung" supported Abraham Lincoln for President. The German Democrats having lost their party organ, induced Mr. Zotz to start a new Democratic paper and, in August, 1860, he began the publication of the "Daily Demokrat," which he continued until 1864, when Mr. Bernard Cremer bought it. It is still edited by himself and published by B. Cremer & Bros. In 1868 Mr. Edward Rummel was elected Secretary of State, and had to take up his residence at the State Capital. The "Deutsche Zeitung" then came under the control of Captain Edward Fresenius. He disposed of the paper in 1871 to Mr. Rudolph Eichenberger, who, in turn, sold it, in 1878, to B. Cremer & Bros., who consolidated it with their "Demokrat."

In the spring of 1879 Messrs. L. Ph. Wolf, Joseph Wolfram and Wm. Brus started a new German daily, "Die Sonne," which is published at present by Mr. L. Ph. Wolf, with a Sunday paper called "Die Glocke." In 1893 Messrs. Wm. A. Rennen and Wm. Brus commenced publishing a Sunday paper, "Die Sontags Post," which has lately been published by Mr. Herman Goldberger, who consolidated the "Sontags Post" with a new daily called "Der Volksfreund," published by Mr. Carl Wolf. There are at the present time three German daily papers in Peoria:—the "Demokrat," "Sonne" and "Volksfreund," to chronicle the news and keep German society alive. They all have a large circulation in the city and country, and are prosperous.

The Transcript. "The Peoria Daily Transcript" was started as an independent paper, the first number of which was issued December 17, 1855, and the first number of "The Peoria Weekly Transcript" on January 1, 1856. In the spring of 1854 William Rounseville, pastor of the Universalist Church of Peoria and Grand Master of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the State, who had had some experience as editor and publisher of certain magazines, induced Mr. Nathaniel C. Nason, who was a practical printer, but then employed in a general mercantile house in Wesley City, to engage in the publication, at Peoria, of a magazine devoted to the interests of Odd Fellowship. Nason purchased the necessary press, type and printing materials, partly on credit, and entered upon the publication of the magazine. In about a year thereafter Rounseville proposed the starting of a daily paper. After considerable hesitancy Nason consented to try the experiment if Rounseville could find a man to furnish money to pay existing indebtedness and make the required purchases, with such additional amounts as might be needed to pay current expenses up to a certain amount named by Nason. Rounseville procured a friend to advance just enough money to induce Nason to contract for the materials in his own name, but who, when the time came for further advances, as promised, failed to do so. Induced, however, by further assurances from Rounseville, Mr. Nason commenced the publication of the paper; but, as was anticipated, the receipts did not meet current expenses, and at the end of the third week the men in the office received nothing. Nason then called a halt and notified Rounseville's man that not another stroke of work should be done until money should be forthcoming sufficient to pay all arrearages of wages—he at the same time offering to turn over the whole concern to any person they might name who would furnish a satisfactory guaranty that all claims should be paid. At the earnest solicitation of Rounseville Mr. Nason agreed to keep the paper running for another week, during which time a purchaser was found in the person of Caleb Whittemore, the veteran locksmith, who took into partnership with himself his brother-in-law, Sanford Moon, under the firm name of C. Wittemore & Co. In this transaction Mr. Nason sacrificed all he was worth to secure his creditors against loss. After running the paper for some time at a loss of four or five thousand dollars, Whittemore notified Rounseville (with whom he had an understanding to turn the paper over to him when Whittemore's advances with interest at two per cent. per month should be paid) that another purchaser must be obtained. Such a purchaser was found in the person of James G. Merrill, a rich farmer of Trivoli, who had a brother, Gilman Merrill, working for wages on a daily paper in Boston, and anxious to obtain a higher position. The paper was purchased in his name, but the real purchaser was James G. Merrill. The result was his financial ruin. After struggling until some time in the year 1850 to make the paper a success, Mr. Merrill sold out to Nathan C. Geer, who had formerly been associated with Charles L. Wilson in the publication of the "Chicago Evening Journal," but latterly engaged in publishing "The Gazette," a paper published in Waukegan.

Rounseville was a Democrat, while Nason was a Whig, with a strong infusion of Americanism, and would never have consented to be identified with a Democratic paper. Rounseville continued to be editor from the commencement of its publication until the sale to Geer, which sale was consummated without his knowledge or consent; and, as soon as Geer had obtained possession, he notified Rounseville that his services would be no longer needed. "The Transcript" then for the first time became a distinctively thorough-going and aggressive Republican paper.

After publishing the paper for about a year, as it is said upon somewhat extravagant views, and having failed to make it a financial success, Mr. Geer, in 1860, sold it to Enoch Emery and Edward A. Andrews, who continued its publication under the firm name of Emery & Andrews until the close of the war, Mr. Emery during all that time being editor-in-chief. Mr. Emery then purchased his partner's interest and ran the paper alone until 1869, when a corporation was formed, entitled "The Peoria Transcript Company," with Mr. Emery at its head as President and General Manager. In January, 1880, a new organization was formed, with Hon. Richard H. Whiting as President and Mr. Emery as editor. In May of that year Mr. Alexander Stone, who had come to Peoria from the State of Iowa, purchased a controlling interest in the paper from Mr. Whiting, and soon afterwards purchased the remainder of the stock. Under this new arrangement Mr. Emery continued to occupy the position of editor until January of the following year, when he withdrew and started a paper called "The Peorian," which, after running for a short time, was sold to the Transcript Company.

While Mr. Emery was its editor "The Transcript" was one of the most influential papers in the State. He was a very positive man, making no compromise with what he believed to be unsound in principle. He was an unswerving Republican, and, when he took hold of the paper, it became a powerful factor in shaping the policy of the great party which, at the next Presidential election, was destined to work a revolution in the political affairs of the country. When the rebellion broke out, and even before that event took place, he threw the whole weight of his influence into the scale of loyalty, and, during the whole period of the rebellion, was a firm supporter of the measures of the Government. After the assassination of the President his counsel was "to have faith in Andrew Johnson," so long as his policy seemed for the best interests of the country; but, when that policy became, as he supposed, recalcitrant to sound principles, he did not hesitate to denounce it, although he then held a lucrative office at the President's hands.

Mr. Stone retained the financial management of the paper until the month of June, 1892. Soon after assuming control he changed the form of the paper from a folio to the more modern quarto, and, from time to time, enlarged it with a view to its improvement, both in mechanical appearance and in the extent, variety and character of its contents. Mr. Emery was succeeded in the editorial chair by Welker Given, of Des Moines, Iowa, who served in that capacity at two different periods; William Hoyne, who after a few months returned to Chicago, and afterwards was chosen to be head of the Law Department of Notre Dame University; Col. E. P. Brooks, of Washington City; Maj. William S. Brackett, of Peoria, and R. M. Hanna, the veteran editor who still wields a vigorous pen in connection with the "Peoria Journal." These all served in succession during the proprietorship of Mr. Stone.

A new company was organized, March 1, 1893, with a paid-up capital of $50,000, the directors of which were J. N. Garver, President and Treasurer; Thomas R. Weddell, Vice-President; James L. Garver, Secretary; A. D. Hosteman and E. S. Kelly, all from the State of Ohio. These gentlemen were prominently connected with the publication of several other newspapers in Ohio and Indiana and, for some time, pushed the publication of "The Transcript" with a considerable degree of enterprise. Mr. Weddell was at first the editor-in-chief; Howard Fuller, City Editor; Willis Evans, Assistant; J. H. Aubere, Telegraph and Society editor; E. F. Younger, Chicago correspondent, and Harry E. Mitchell, legislative correspondent. Mr. Weddell was a young man of varied attainments and of sufficient newspaper experience to have made the paper a success, but it seems the managers had too many irons in the fire elsewhere to give "The Transcript" the attention it required, and after a fitful experience it finally passed into the hands of the proprietors of "The Herald," and the famous "Transcript," which, for so many years, had fought the battles of the Republican party, became merged with one of opposite views.

The Herald Transcript is at present the only Democratic paper printed in the English language in Peoria. From the time of the merging of the "Democratic Press" with "The News," under George W. Raney, until March, 1889, the Democracy did not have an organ which commanded the full confidence and support of the citizens outside the pale of that party. It is true the "National Democrat" had had a long continued career and had met with some degree of financial success, but its support had been drawn very largely from its own party, it being intensely partisan. On March 7, 1889, Mr. Henry M. Pindell, then late from Springfield, Illinois, and the late Senator Andrew J. Bell commenced the publication of a new Democratic paper called "The Herald." This paper took a higher stand, both morally and politically, than the Democratic papers had heretofore occupied, and being edited with ability and fairness to all parties, and its columns being well supplied with the current news of the day, it very soon began to command the respect and support of the entire community. Mr. Bell remained with the paper but a short time, when his interest was purchased by Mr. Pindell, who has had the management of the paper ever since.

From the time that Mr. Emery had left "The Transcript," its fortunes seemed to wane, one cause probably being the lack of financial management, another the fact that it had met with vigorous competition in the "Peoria Journal." "The Herald" now began to invade the field formerly held, almost exclusively, by "The Transcript," and in the course of a few years it was induced to sell out to Mr. Pindell, which purchase was effected on the 28th day of December, 1868. Since that time the paper has been published under the joint title of "The Herald-Transcript," the present year being the thirteenth of the "Herald" and the forty-seventh of the "Transcript." Through a fearless advocacy of that which he believes to be right in politics, of a clean city government, of uprightness in journalism, and of all measures of improvement calculated to advance the best interests of the community, Mr. Pindell has achieved a success far beyond most of his predecessors.

The Peoria Journal, an independent daily with Republican proclivities, was started by Eugene F. Baldwin and Jacob B. Barnes on December 1, 1877, Baldwin being the editor-in-chief and Barnes, business manager. The enterprise promised to be a financial success from the beginning. After running for a period of eight years, a corporation was formed for the purpose of continuing the publication, the entire plant being turned in at a capitalization of $100,000, of which Baldwin took $40,000 in stock, Barnes $40,000, M. N. Snider $10,000 and Charles H. Powell $10,000. These gentlemen constituted the first Board of Directors, Mr. Baldwin being chosen President; Snider, Vice-President; Powell, Treasurer, and Barnes, Secretary. Soon afterwards Snider sold his stock to Powell, who, in turn, dropped out June 9, 1880, and was followed by Baldwin in October, 1891. Before this time, however, Mr. Baldwin's time had become largely engrossed in other business, and Mr.

Barnes had assumed a partial editorial control of the paper. He finally became owner of all the stock, as well as sole editor, and so continued for a period of about twelve years. During the campaign of 1896, the paper advocated a protective tariff and a bi-metallic basis of currency, although in former years it had been an advocate of partial free-trade. It has generally supported the candidates of the Republican party for office. In the year 1900, the paper passed into the hands of Hon. James P. Dawson, of St. Louis, and Charles Carroll, of Peoria, the present manager, at the price of $40,000. It is now conducted as a strictly Republican paper.

The Peoria Star is one of the latest candidates for public favor in the newspaper line of Peoria. It was started on September 27, 1897, by Eugene F. Baldwin and Charles H. Powell, both formerly connected with the "Peoria Journal." It therefore entered the field with no little prestige, not from that fact alone, but because Mr. Baldwin, who had for many years been connected with other newspapers in Peoria, was well known as a pungent and spicy writer, and one who could hew to the line when occasion seemed to require or justify it. The paper, therefore, began with 3,400 subscribers and, from that time, it has steadily increased until now (January, 1902) it has over 20,000. It has had a very prosperous career, it having proved a financial success from the start. It is now run on a three-deck Ostrander & Seymour press and a four-deck Goss perfecting press, which, it is claimed by the proprietors, make it the finest equipment of any paper in the United States in a city of the size of Peoria. It is also provided with the latest improved machinery for type-setting and other necessary mechanical operations for the rapid production of a daily paper. It is published at the Bohl building, north corner of Jefferson Avenue and Fulton Street, where it has secured quarters for twenty years, with an option of twenty years longer. The paper is thoroughly independent in and of everything and of everybody, and hesitates not to speak its mind freely upon all subjects affecting the public interests. While independent in politics, it generally has supported Republican candidates, but, as occasion may seem to require, it lends its support to an independent or one of an opposing party.

The Locomotive Firemen's Magazine is the official publication of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, the first number of which was issued December 1, 1876, by a private printing establishment at Dayton, Ohio, but under the supervision of the Grand Secretary and Treasurer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen. This firm retained charge of the magazine until 1879, at which time the publication was transferred to Galion, Ohio, and Mr. W. N. Sayre, then Grand Secretary and Treasurer of the organization, was also elected editor of the magazine. Mr. Sayre continued to edit the magazine until 1881, at which time Mr. Eugene V. Debs, of Terre Haute, Indiana, was elected editor. At this time the magazine was established at Terre Haute, Indiana, then the home of the Brotherhood, and it continued to be published at that place until January, 1895, at which time the present editor and manager took charge of the publication, and the headquarters of the organization were removed to Peoria, Illinois. The magazine is, as its name indicates, a magazine in form, size of pages, 6x9 inches. The number of pages in its early days was limited to thirty-two; but it has increased to an average of 160 per month. Until 1887 the circulation was maintained by personal subscription of the membership of the Brotherhood, and was about 4,000 copies per month. The present circulation is 44,000 copies per month. The laws of the Brotherhood were so changed, in 1887, that the magazine was, after that, received by all members of the Brotherhood as a part of their benefits of membership.

The Trades and Labor Gazette was established, in 1895, by George Wilson Bills, who, after publishing it for a year or so, sold out to J. R. Austin, but, in the course of a year or less, it was re-purchased by Mr. Bills in company with Bert H. Zarley. After a period of about five months (February 24, 1899), the present publisher, Walter H. Bush, became the owner, and has continued to issue the paper in an eight-page form every Friday morning.

In the meantime, in the month of August, 1897, "The Peoria Woodman" had been established by Frank N. Bush. It was a monthly containing eighteen pages and continued to be published until December 22, 1899, when it was consolidated with "The Trades and Labor Gazette," in which a page each week was devoted to the Woodmen, Frank N. Bush continuing as editor of this department, in which the interests of the Woodmen were voiced. "The Trades and Labor Gazette" contains all the labor news, and all current reform matter. It is the organ of "The Peoria Trade and Labor Assembly," and of the Peoria and Canton Sub-District No. 12, of the United Mine Workers of America. It has a circulation of about 4,000.

The Illinois Teacher. One of the most influential publications ever issued in the State was "The Illinois Teacher," started, as elsewhere related, under the auspices of the "Illinois State Teachers' Association." At the first annual meeting of that organization, held at Peoria, December 26, 1854, it was resolved that a periodical devoted to the educational interests of the State be established, to be entitled "The Illinois Teacher," and a committee of nine members was appointed with full power to make all arrangements for its publication for the ensuing year. The committee accepted the proposition of Merriman & Morris, newspaper publishers in Bloomington, to print and publish the periodical for one year, in pamphlet form, in monthly issues of 32 medium octavo pages each, the committee to provide all matter to be printed. A board of twelve editors was appointed, each of whom was expected to furnish all needed "copy" for "The Teacher" for the month assigned to him. Two of these editors were residents of Bloomington, and, in addition to their editorial work, attended to the business department. The plan adopted was cumbersome and proved unsatisfactory. Some of the editors did their work well, others poorly, and two not at all. The printing was of very low grade in every respect, rendering the work unattractive in appearance and a discredit to the body of which it was the acknowledged organ, and to the State in which it was produced. Judged by its first year, "The Teacher" was not a successful enterprise.

At the second annual meeting of the Institute, held in Springfield, December 26, 1855, Charles E. Hovey, of Peoria, the newly chosen President of the Institute, was elected editor of "The Teacher" for the year 1856, and to him was committed the entire management of the publication. Twelve associate editors also were elected, upon whom he might call for such contributions to the contents of "The Teacher" as he should deem advisable. Mr. Hovey at once entered into negotiations with N. C. Nason, the well known printer and publisher of Peoria, to do the printing of "The Teacher." Mr. Nason expected soon to sever his connection with the printing office he then owned and managed. As soon as the arrangement with Mr. Hovey was completed, he purchased an entirely new outfit of materials and machinery, and took into partnership Mr. H. S. Hill, a skillful printer recently from New York, who had been in his employ for some time.

In due time "The Illinois Teacher" began the second year of its existence. Under the vigorous and able management of Mr. Hovey it at once took rank as the equal in every respect of the best educational journals of the land, and far superior to most of them. Mr. Hovey continued as editor and manager for two years. His successor was Newton Bateman, of Jacksonville. At the close of Mr. Bateman's year of service, the State Teachers' Association, for reasons that seemed sufficient, relinquished its control over the management of "The Teacher." Thenceforth it was continued as a private enterprise, by Nason & Hill, until 1860, and from that time to 1873 by N. C. Nason alone. In January, 1873, it was transferred to the publishers of "The Chicago Schoolmaster," the name of which was then changed to "Illinois Schoolmaster."

The editors who followed Mr. Bateman were: 1859, Charles A. Dupee, of Chicago; 1860 and '61, Dr. Samuel Williard, then of Bloomington; 1862 and '63, Alexander M. Gow, of Rock Island and Dixon; 1864, Samuel A. Briggs, of Chicago; 1865 and '66, Richard Edwards, President State Normal University, Normal; 1867, '68 and '69, William M. Baker, of Springfield and Champaign; 1870 and '71, until August, Samuel H. White, of Peoria; from August, 1871, to 1873, Eliab W. Coy, of Peoria. Each of these was assisted by associate editors, generally for special departments. From the beginning to the close of its existence "The Illinois Teacher" was the medium of official communication of the Department of Public Instruction with the school officers throughout the State.

The Memento. This was a magazine of 32 octavo-pages monthly, devoted to the interests of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and entered upon its career in August, 1854. William Rounseville, who was Grand Master of the I. O. O. F. in Illinois, was editor, and N. C. Nason publisher. In February, 1856, Mr. H. S. Hill became a partner with Mr. Nason in the publishing business, under the firm name of Nason & Hill, this partnership continuing until April, 1860, after which time Mr. Nason conducted the business alone. Mr. Rounseville's connection with the magazine ceased with July, 1856. When the Civil war broke out, in April, 1861, the publication was suspended. Arrangements were in progress for resuming soon after peace was restored, when the "Odd Fellow's Union," a monthly quarto, published in Springfield by Harman G. Reynolds, appeared. As the patronage was not sufficient to support two such papers, revival of "The Memento" was postponed. One year satisfied Mr. Reynolds, and he abandoned the field, kindly turning over his mailing-book to Mr. Nason. Publication of "The Memento" was resumed in April, 1867, the quarto form being adopted, and continued until May, 1870, when, owing to pressure of duties of an official nature, the publisher finally relinquished it. "The Memento" never paid the cost of publication from its direct income, but it brought much printing from all parts of Illinois, and not a little from other States, the profit on which more than balanced the account.

The Christian Sentinel. This was a magazine of 32 octavo-pages monthly, conducted by O. A. Burgess, I. N. Carman and John Lindsey, in the interest of the church styling itself "Christian," but often designated by others as the "Campbellite." It had previously been published elsewhere, and the first issue at Peoria is No. 8 of Vol. III, dated May, 1856. The last was dated June, 1858. It was afterwards published at Eureka for some months. While published in Peoria, it was printed by Nason & Hill.

The Peoria Medical Monthly, a journal devoted to the interests of the medical profession, was founded in the month of May, 1880, by Dr. Thomas M. McHvaine, then a student without his professional degree. The design was to furnish the members of the profession remote from the centers of learning with ready access to current developments in medical science. The first number contained well written articles by Drs. John Murphy, J. S. Miller and John L. Hamilton, of Peoria, and one by Dr. A. R. Small, of Decatur. It was well received by the profession and, during the first volume, gave its readers original articles and clinical reports from the best known men in the country. The first volume had 328 pages, after which it was enlarged to about 500 pages. Its publication continued for about ten years, during which time it had attained such a reputation as to make it sought after by the best medical authorities. It made money from the beginning, but because of the increasing and lucrative practice of the editor and publisher, it was discontinued.

The Directories. In the year 1844, Simon De Witt Drown, a practical printer, issued a small volume of 124 pages entitled "The Peoria Directory for 1844" containing an account of the "Early Discovery of the Country with a History of the Town," which he claims to have been the first book ever printed and published in Peoria. It contains an account of the "early discovery of the country," as related by Marquette, Hennepin and others; a "History of Peoria County"; a "History of Peoria" furnished by C. B. Esq. (presumed to have been Charles Ballance); "Reminiscences of Peoria," furnished by I. U. Esq. (said to have been Isaac Underhill), and by J. H. Esq. (supposed to have been John Hamlin); an article on Lake and River Navigation; Early Records of the Village of Peoria; An Alphabetical list of the Heads of Families, with their places of residence and an account of the organization of the Churches and Secret Societies of the Town, together with numerous business cards of merchants, professional men, manufacturers and others. The book is exceedingly valuable as an historical monument.

In the month of March, 1851, Mr. Drown issued a second volume, entitled "Drown's Record and Historical View of Peoria from the Discovery by the French Jesuit Missionaries in the Seventeenth Century to the Present Time; also an Almanac for 1851, calculated for the Latitude and Longitude of Peoria, Illinois, Latitude 40 degrees 40 minutes North, Longitude 89 degrees 40 minutes West from the Royal Observatory at Greenwich, and 12 degrees 40 minutes West from the City of Washington, to which is added a business Directory of the City, with business cards; Printed by E. O. Woodcock, Main Street, 1850." The contents of the book fully justify the expectations aroused by the title-page. The preface is dated December, 1850, but in the introduction to the "Peoria Business Directory," which occupies the last part of the book, the information is given that, from circumstances over which the publisher had no control, the publication had been delayed far beyond the time intended; that he had with his own hands executed the press-work on an old "Stanbury Press," made in Cincinnati in 1826, equal to the best that Peoria could produce at that time for book-printing. The further information is given that the book was the second bound book to be printed in Peoria. It contains 164 pages of reading matter and business directory, and 48 pages of advertisements or business cards. The Almanac occupies 24 pages, the historical part 128 pages, the remainder being taken up with statistical matter relating to Peoria, the organization of its churches and societies, schools, and a Business Directory.

Mr. Drown was a man of varied attainments, he being not only a printer, but also a surveyor, a writer for the press, a statistician and a man of general information upon all subjects touching the public interests. He was proud of Peoria, and believing that it was destined to become an important city, bent his energies to the preservation, as far as his limited means would permit, of its early history. From the time of the issue of his first Directory until the issue of the second, he had published annually a small statistical sheet under the title of "Peoria Annual Record or Drown's Statistics," none of which prior to 1850 have come under the notice of the writer, but after the issue of the second book this record was enlarged from time to time, and changed in size and form—it having been issued in quarto form until the year 1856, when, for that and the following year, it was issued in the form of an octavo pamphlet. These publications of Mr. Drown, although somewhat lacking in methodical arrangement, and, especially as to the early history, not wholly accurate, are exceedingly valuable for the historical data they furnish. In fact, they entitle Mr. Drown to be called the father of Peoria's History. His statements have been followed to a great extent by all subsequent historians.

Root's Directories. In 1856, Omi E. Root published the first Directory of Peoria, devoted wholly to that purpose. It was a small duodecimo volume of 180 pages, and contained little else than the list of names, to which was added a list of churches and societies. This was the first of a consecutive series of sixteen issues, covering a space of twenty-four years. For six consecutive years they were issued annually, but at times thereafter the intervals between issues would be two or three years. These directories, besides the list of names and business cards, contained much valuable historical and statistical matter. The last issue was for the year 1879.

Other Directories were issued during the same period as follows: In 1859, J. F. Beatty issued one, and in 1868 and 1869, J. M. Cartwright issued one in each year. These followed the general plan adopted by Mr. Root. In 1876, Richard Edwards issued a "Census Report and Historical and Statistical Review," combined with a City Directory. This publication was issued for the purpose of correcting errors in and supplying omissions from the Government Census. It contains much valuable historical and statistical matter.

In 1878, Messrs. Ebert & Clark, of Hannibal, Missouri, published a directory of Peoria, following the plan of that of Richard Edwards, but not so comprehensive. It also is of historic value.

David B. Gould issued the first number of his series of directories for the year 1880-81, and continued the publication through a series of eight annual issues, the last being for the year 1887. For the year 1887, he issued a special business directory in addition to the regular issues. In the year 1886 Mrs. S. E. Allen, wife of Dr. Melville V. Allen, the business manager in Peoria of Mr. Gould, issued a select Directory, entitled, "Allen's Blue-Book and Avenue Guide for the City of Peoria," which contained also a "Purchasers' Guide of the most Prominent Business Houses in the City." The purpose of this unique publication was "to give as complete an epitome of the Business and Social Interests of the City as possible." In addition to a selected list of four or five thousand names, it contains a complete Street Directory and the best Church and Society Directory ever published in Peoria. It also contains a department of Etiquette. The book was intended especially for the use of ladies, but its publication ceased with the first volume.

For the year 1886-87, Messrs. J. W. Franks & Sons issued a Directory in the same style as that of Gould, so that, for that year, there were two rival directories. The same happened in the year 1890-91, when Mr. A. E. Ayer issued a directory of the city, which was printed by the "Transcript Publishing Company." In the meantime the Gould and Franks interests had been combined in the formation of a corporation under the name of "Gould's Peoria City Directory Company" of which David B. Gould was President, and Gerald B. Franks, Vice-President, but the Directory was published as "Franks' Peoria City Directory." In a short time the name of the company was changed to that of "Franks Peoria City Directory Company," under which name it has continued to publish the directory annually until the present time. It therefore dates its first issue back to that of David B. Gould, in 1881, the last one issued under date of August 1, 1901, being its twentieth volume. These directories are a great improvement over any previously published, they being provided with the patent marginal index and a numerical street directory, in both of which improvements they are the pioneers among publishers of City Directories.

HOTELS.

[NOTE.—At the solicitation of the publishers of Johnson's History of Peoria County, published in 1880, Colonel Charles H. Deane, a gentleman of larger hotel experience than any other in Peoria County, furnished an article from which the following, somewhat modified and abridged, is taken. Parts added are included in brackets. Editor.]

"In collecting data for an article on the hotels of Peoria, I have been very materially assisted by several of our oldest citizens, in regard to early hotels, notably by Mr. Mark M. Aiken, an animated encyclopedist whose wonderful memory enables him to speak of matters current a half century ago, with more apparent certainty than the average citizen tells of what transpired last year. From him I learn that the first tavern—for the French term 'hotel' had not yet been so universally incorporated into our vocabulary—was the 'Traveler's Rest,' certainly a very suggestive and appropriate name, opened in 1825 by John L. Bogardus. It was a double log-house, located on the bank of the river between Main and Hamilton Streets. In one end of the house the family lived and slept, and there the cooking was done and the table spread. In the other end was the inevitable bar, and the bunks for lodgers who were expected to furnish their own blankets. The cuisine of the house was, as a matter of course, very simple, plain 'hog and hominy' being the principal dish. Fresh meat, except game, was a rarity, and bread made from wheat-flour was a luxury hard to be obtained and very seldom indulged in. The bar, which was the most popular department of the house, was supplied with one kind of liquor only—whisky—but its more fastidious patrons were served with 'black strap,' i. e., whisky and molasses.

"Mr. Bogardus continued to run 'the only first class house in Peoria' until 1827, when Seth Fulton opened 'Fulton's Tavern,' also on Water Street above North Fayette [now Eaton]. He had a larger house and a better bar, for he had added brandy and gin to his stock in trade, and his house was better furnished, for he had three 'boughten' bedsteads, and a set of 'boughten' chairs, made in St. Louis and received by boat. As is always the case, superior accommodations and attractions won. Fulton's Tavern was creme de la creme, and the Traveler's Rest was only fit rest for renegade whites and a few vagabond Indians who hung about the village for 'fire-water.' Fulton continued his public house until about 1834, when it was closed as a tavern.

"In 1829 William Eads built a two-story frame house on Water street, in the middle of the block bounded by Fulton and Liberty Streets, and opened it to the public as 'Eads' Tavern.' It was by far the most pretentious house in town, having four rooms up stairs, exclusively sleeping rooms, and a bar-room by itself; but we are unable to learn any particulars in regard to its management. In 1834 Mr. Eads sold out to Jacob Slough—and the house was then called 'Slough's Tavern' (1). Mr. Slough was blessed with a buxom, good-looking wife, of rare executive ability, who gave every detail of the business, out of doors as well as in, her personal supervision, and left 'Jakey,' as Mr. Slough was familiarly called, but little to do except to entertain guests and attend the bar. Under his excellent management quite an extensive addition was built to the house, and a 1 There may be some inaccuracies in this statement, for on November 25, 1837, Mr. Slough caused the following notice to be published in the "Peoria Register and Northwestern Gazetteer:"

"VALUABLE TAVERN FOR SALE.

"Being desirous of removing to my farm in the country, I offer for sale my tavern house and lot in Peoria. It is situated in the south part of Water Street, fronting the steamboat landing, is in all respects as perfect an establishment as any in town, and has hitherto had as large a share of patronage. No house in the Military Tract sustains a higher reputation. The lot is 72 feet front and 171 deep, with all convenient out-buildings, the stable accommodating 24 horses. The Tavern was built two years ago, is in perfect repair and is the Stage House for the Springfield and St. Louis stages. Having realized an independence from the business, I am disposed to give way to some one else and retire to the country. The terms will be made easy to the purchaser. JACOB SLOUGH."

THE NATIONAL HOTEL.

large stable added, and the house became noted, far and wide, for its liquors, bounteous board, and as the only house in town that gave its guests white bread and real coffee every day. In 1845 Mr. Slough sold the furniture, and rented the house to Savage & Lawrence—and they the next year sold to Captain Patterson, an old steamboat man. The Captain had an interesting family of girls, and until they were married off, the house was the popular rendezvous of the young people of the place. In 1849 Captain Patterson sold the furniture, closed the house, and went west, and the building was subdivided into shops, and finally, a few years ago, burned down.

“About 1834 John Hamlin moved a large frame stable from a lot up at the head of Main Street to the lot on the corner of Main and Washington Streets, built quite an extensive addition to it, and rented it to Colonel A. O. Garrett, who furnished it and opened it as the ‘Peoria Hotel,’ which is the first record we have of the use of the term ‘hotel’ in this place. The Peoria Hotel had about sixteen sleeping rooms up stairs, a bar-room which was used also for office, a ladies’ parlor, dining-room and kitchen on the ground floor. It was a ‘toney’ house for its day and age, and Colonel Garrett made money there so rapidly that, in 1838, he commenced the erection of what is now known as the ‘Peoria House,’ which he completed and opened in the fall of 1840, as the ‘Planters’ House.’ This hotel, when first built, was the largest and best hotel building in the State. In size it was about eighty feet square, three stories and a basement high, and it contained thirty-seven sleeping rooms and all necessary public rooms. For a long time it was noted as the leading hotel of Illinois, and is now (1880), and always has been, the largest in Peoria.” [The “Peoria House” was located at the northeast corner of Hamilton and Adams Streets, but was demolished a few years ago.]

[An incident connected with the history of this hotel well illustrates the customs of the times. It having been learned that Martin Van Buren was on a visit to his political friends in Springfield, an invitation was extended to him to visit Peoria. This having been accepted, and June 25, 1842, having been designated, a committee of our most distinguished citizens was appointed to carry out the program. On the day named the steamer “Mermaid” was chartered and about seventy of the élite proceeded down the river to meet the “Glaucus,” on which the ex-President was expected to arrive. They were disappointed in meeting the “Glaucus” at Pekin, and, there being no telegraphs, Captain Lusk concluded to proceed down the river on a hunt for the distinguished visitor. Taking on board a relay of Democratic patriots, the “Mermaid” continued its cruise until about nightfall, when, passing a curve, the “Glaucus” suddenly hove in sight. Immediately cannon belched forth their thunders from both boats, and cheer after cheer rent the gloom, after which patriotic airs were heard from a band on board the “Glaucus;” the “Mermaid” rounded to in fine style, and amid the roar of cannon and the cheers of the crowd, the ex-President was conducted on board and introduced to the Peorians. Side by side the two steamers plowed through the darkness, which was here and there relieved by bonfires on the shore, while the cheers of the wondering Suckers were responded to by the loud bellowings of the cannon. At Pekin a landing was made, where, in true Jeffersonian simplicity, the ex-President walked the gang-plank, took the Celestials by the hand and kissed their babies. The company of admirers having been further re-inforced, the two boats again set out for Peoria. Arriving at the mouth of the Kickapoo, two guns were fired, which were answered by two from the wharf. Then followed salute after salute, until the landing was reached.

Mr. Garrett was the possessor of an elegant coach and two dappled greys—too gay for a funeral and too toney for common use. So they were reserved for weddings and other state occasions. This was one of the times when they could be used to advantage, and so the ex-President was driven in style to the Planter’s House, which was then almost new. There a short reception was held, but it being past midnight on a Saturday night, public decorum must be observed by an early retirement.

On the Sabbath, Mr. Van Buren attended divine service twice—the first time at the Court House, where Rev. Isaac Kellar preached; the second time in the afternoon at the Methodist Church, where services were conducted by Rev. N. P. Cunningham, of that denomination.

On Monday morning a public reception took place at the Planter’s House. The people began assembling by hundreds as early as nine o’clock, and at ten a welcoming address was made by Hon. Norman H. Purple, to which the ex-President responded in that felicitous vein for which he was so much noted. Instead, however, of holding a reception at the Planters' House, he was only too glad to be received by the admiring populace in the Court House Square. Two lines, composed of seven or eight hundred men, were formed, and little Van, bare-headed, smiling and bowing, passed between them, taking each one by the hand as he passed. Thence he was conducted to the ball-room of the hotel, where a large number of ladies were in waiting to pay him their respects.

The hour of departure having arrived, the ex-President again exhibited his Jeffersonian simplicity by walking to the wharf to take the steamer "Frontier," then on its way from St. Louis to Peru. (No special transportation for magnates in those days). Hundreds of people followed him and assembled on the levee to cheer him as the boat should take its departure.

Many other incidents of an interesting nature might be related of this noted hostelry did space permit. Peoria being on the great highway between the Lake Region and the South, many noted personages found under its roof a hospitable shelter.]

"After Mr. Garrett had opened the Planters', the Peoria Hotel was discontinued, and the building was afterwards used for stores. Colonel Garrett remained proprietor of the Planters' House until about 1840, when, being harrassed by suits at law with Mr. Stevenson, one of the contractors who built the house, he transferred the proprietorship to his brother-in-law, John Tuttle, who conducted the house with but indifferent success for about a year, when the property was sold to Messrs. Smith & Hurlburt, who came here from St. Louis. They gave the house its present name, 'Peoria House,' and conducted it very acceptably and profitably for about four years, when Mr. Smith sold his interest to Mr. Warren Hall. Messrs. Hall & Hurlburt made quite a number of improvements in the hotel, and built a large addition on the lower side of it. They also introduced dinner bills of fare, an article which had not before that time been used in Peoria.

"In 1858, Hall & Hurlburt sold to P. B. Roberts, who failed to make any money in the house, and after a few months sold to John King, who had previously made an excellent record as proprietor of the Clinton House. Mr. King very soon took in his son-in-law, Alfred Freeman, as a partner, under the name of King & Freeman. In 1861, John King sold his interest to his son, Henry C. King, and the firm name was changed to Freeman & King. This firm abolished the old-time gong, which had been used since the first opening of the house, to awaken its guests and summon them to meals; and announced on their room rules: 'Meals prompt; no gong sounded.' In 1862, Mr. Freeman bought the interest of H. C. King, and was sole proprietor of the house until March 1, 1867, when he sold to Colonel Charles H. Deane, who had previously opened and run the Metropolitan, of which mention will be made hereafter. Colonel Deane made very extensive alterations and improvements in the interior of the house, leveling up and relaying all the floors, putting gas pipes through the entire house, abolishing the rows of room bells which graced (?) the office, and putting in their stead the first electric annunciator used in the West. He also cut transoms over all the room doors, laid a tile floor in the office, and built a large addition on the Adams Street front. He conducted it very profitably until March 1, 1879, a period of twelve years, very much longer than any previous proprietor had held it, when he sold to Q. A. Graves and Mary A. Van Est, who, under the firm name of Graves & Van Est, managed the house for about eight months, when they sold to J. Q. Perley, the present proprietor.

[After much litigation, in his efforts to foreclose certain mortgages, this property finally passed into the hands of Jacob Darst, now deceased, by whose legal representatives the building was razed, and the site is now unoccupied by buildings of any kind.]

"In 1837, John R. Caldwell built a very nice three-story brick hotel on the corner of Adams and Fulton Streets, and leased it to John King, who opened it to the public as the Clinton House. Mr. King made an excellent reputation for the house and a considerable amount of money. He sold it, in 1846, to John Yontz, who was proprietor for about two years, when he sold to Mr. Hardy, and in the spring of 1849, Hardy sold to John B. Warner, father of Colonel Warner, our worthy Mayor, and the Warner family of Peoria. Mr. Warner had a powerful ally in his wife, who will be remembered not only as a most excellent lady, but as an indefatigable worker, and as one of the best cooks Peoria ever possessed. To her, more than to any one else, the house owed its prosperity, which continued up to the time of its destruction by fire, in 1853."

[A few days before Van Buren's visit to Pe-

oria, alluded to elsewhere, the Clinton House was honored by having as its guest a scion of nobility, in the person of Lord Morpeth, who was then making a tour of the United States.]

"About 1838, Mrs. Lindsay, mother of J. T. Lindsay, opened a public house in a two-story frame building on the lower side of Main Street, above the alley between Adams and Washington Streets, and called it the 'Franklin House.' The house was rather small, and we can not learn many particulars in regard to it, save that it was conducted very acceptably for a number of years, and, in 1846, was sold to Clark Cleveland, and he, in 1847, sold to John B. Warner.

"In 1849, Mr. Warner, having purchased the Clinton House, sold the Franklin House to Sam Crouse, who was its last proprietor, as in the succeeding years it was altered, subdivided into stores, and used for commercial purposes.

"About 1849, A. P. Loucks, father of Hon. W. Loucks, opened a large two-story frame building that stood on the lower corner of Main and Water Streets, as the 'Farmers' Hotel,' and he succeeded in keeping it crowded with that class of custom. His specialty was 'pork and beans, and low prices.' The house was very successful, but in 1852 it was torn down to make way for a large brick block, the lower floor of which was first used by the Central Bank.

"About 1846, William Mitchell added to and improved his residence, which stood on the corner of Jefferson and Fulton Streets, and opened it as the 'Mitchell House.' After running it for a short time with poor success, he leased the premises to the Methodist Episcopal Church, who essayed to establish a female seminary. That proving a failure, it was again opened as a hotel by Captain Phillips, who soon found that it would not pay, and sold out to D. D. Irons and Seth Griffin. Irons & Griffin made quite extensive alterations on the house, added a considerable amount of new furniture, and christened it 'The Arctic.' The name proved too much for it; the new firm were soon frozen out, when C. H. Ruggles took hold, renamed it 'The Massasoit,' and for a time it enjoyed a good run of business. About 1853, Ruggles took in Thomas Dobbins as a partner, and a few months later Dobbins bought out Ruggles, and was sole proprietor. He very soon after got tired of the business, sold to George N. Remington, who gave the house his own name, 'The Remington House,' and, as such, it was moderately successful until 1856, when James L. Fash became proprietor. In 1858, Mr. Fash sold to George Wilson, who again changed the name of the house to 'Fulton House.' The next year Wilson sold to a man by the name of Miller. He soon sold to Halstead, and in 1860 Halstead sold to George C. McFadden, who had previously kept the house known as the Central House. Mr. McFadden, by curtailing expenses as much as possible, and ignoring all attempts at style, made the house yield himself and family a living, and, in 1864, sold to one Haskins, who was its proprietor until it was burned, in 1866."

[Mr. James McFadden, who owned and operated the "Old Red Mill" on the river bank at Harrison Street, had also purchased the corner lot on the upper side of Water Street, where the Armour & Co. building now stands. In an evil hour he also purchased a worthless French claim covering the same ground, and gave a mortgage upon the whole to secure the purchase money. There had formerly been a foundry on the same lot, operated as early as 1844 by one William R. Hopkins. Prior to the year 1853, McFadden had erected a grain ware-house on the corner. About that year, he bought the old Methodist Church, moved it down Harrison Street, placed it on the walls of the old foundry, attached it to his grain ware-house, and converted the whole into a hotel. This he leased to Seymour Decker, who opened it as the "Farmers' House." About three years later it passed into the hands of George C. McFadden, a brother-in-law of the proprietor, who operated it successfully until 1860, when he sold out to good advantage to Mr. John E. Phillips, who also bought the realty, changed the name to the "Central House," and built quite a large brick addition thereto. Mr. Phillips continued in charge of the house until the time of his death. In the meantime, suit had been begun to foreclose the French mortgage, which was followed by the foreclosure of another which McFadden had subsequently placed upon the property. After a determined but unsuccessful fight, the heirs of Mr. Phillips lost their title, the building, after being rented to some irresponsible parties for a time, became untenable, and had to be removed; the portion of the brick addition standing on an adjoining lot still remaining the property of the Phillips heirs, but it has long since ceased to be used as a hotel.]

[For some years prior to 1860, William Brady had owned and operated a hotel with an extensive wagon yard at the south corner of Adams and Bridge Streets, which was known as the Buckeye House. Brady was successful in this enterprise, and about 1860 built the house known as the "City Hotel," and opened it as the "New Buckeye House." "After many vicissitudes, it was finally closed as a hotel, and remained so until after the war, when it was leased, furnished and opened by General Otto Funk, as 'Funk's Hotel.' General Funk did not make the enterprise pay, and, in 1867, sold to Louis Furst, and he again, in 1874, sold to H. S. DeVries, who was much more successful, and continued its proprietor until the fall of 1879, when W. E. Lowrey, the present proprietor, took charge." [This hotel has long since been closed, and the site converted into a business property.]

"In 1865, there stood on the upper corner of Fulton and Water Streets an unoccupied three-story brick block. Hon. Isaac Underhill purchased the property, and converted it into a very cozy hotel of about one hundred rooms, and leased it to Colonel Charles H. Deane, who furnished it in an elegant manner, and opened it to the public in the following May, as 'The Metropolitan.' Everything about the house being bright, fresh and new, it naturally attracted the best trade, and did a heavy business all summer. In September of that year, Colonel Deane sold a half interest in the house to J. B. Peckham, from Utica, Illinois, and the house was conducted by Deane & Peckham until February 1, 1867, when Colonel Deane, having bought into the Peoria House, sold his interest to Mr. Underhill. Peckham & Underhill ran the house for about three months, when Mr. Peckham sold his interest to Messrs. Clarkson, Lang and Blakeslee, who, under the firm name of Underhill & Co., conducted the house until February 1, 1868, when they sold to A. Look, who came from Havana, Illinois; on the 28th of the same month, the greater part of the house was destroyed by fire. In 1872, Mr. Spurek, who had become the owner of the property, partly rebuilt the hotel, and leased it to J. L. Pendleton, who opened it as the 'Pacific Hotel,' and continued its proprietor until some two years ago, when Thomas Conaghan, the present proprietor, bought the furniture, and again changed its name to 'Conaghan's Hotel.'" [The site of this hotel is now occupied by J. W. Franks & Sons' printing establishment.]

of stores, making a very commodious hotel of about sixty rooms. Messrs. Clark & Sons having successfully conducted the house during a five-years' lease, have quite recently taken a new lease for three years more." [This hotel still exists, and is known as "The Leland."]

"The 'Ingersoll,' at the north corner of Court House Square, is the latest candidate for public favor. It was built some years ago by Hon. Washington Cockle for a private residence, at a cost of over $50,000, and in its day was the largest and finest residence in the city. Mr. Cockle sold the property to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, and Colonel Ingersoll, after removing to Washington, D. C., sold to Colonel Charles H. Deane, who, in November last (1879), opened the house, and is now conducting it as a hotel for the better class of family trade and such transient business as may come to him." [After some years this building was removed to the adjoining lot, in order to make room for the National Hotel.]

"In reviewing and closing this scrap of hotel history, which I give with but little comment, I am forced to the conclusion that, as an article of barter, the average hotel of Peoria largely discounts jack-knives or horses, and, like the average horse-jockey, hotel proprietors here all have large fortunes—to get. The life of a hotel keeper is one of great activity and excitement, a grand kaleidoscope, changing every hour. Each train bears away guests, that a few hours' intercourse with has drawn you towards, as towards an old friend, and you are loth to part with them, not from a money consideration, but because you have found them pleasant, affable, companionable. The returning train brings a new set of faces, but with the same general characteristics and wants, and you are again happy, in catering, and being able to satisfy those wants.

"Again, hotel men may be likened to an echo, or a mirror, giving smile for smile, returning good word for good, but my experience is that they rarely turn the left cheek, when smitten on the right, but are just as apt to resent churlish, ungentlemanly conduct as are other men. The hotel is the wayfarer's home, and shelters alike the highest in the land as well as the most humble—the good in heart, as well as the vile, the learned, and the simple. And a retrospective glance over fourteen years of hotel life brings to mind many reminiscences of persons, noted and obscure, which time and space will not allow me to mention."

[Had Colonel Deane filled out his sketch with personal reminiscences of scenes he had witnessed in the several hotels with which he had been connected, it would doubtless have given us much more that was worth reading. As it is, no better account of the hotels of Peoria has ever been written. It would be an agreeable task to fill out the sketch he has left us with an equally meritorious one of all the hotels of Peoria at the present day, but only the leading ones can be mentioned.

As already stated, the building formerly known as "The Ingersoll" was removed to the adjoining lot, where it still stands, and is occupied by Lewis, the tobacconist. On its site the National Hotel was erected by a joint-stock company called "The National Hotel Company." It was organized early in the year 1887, and proceeded at once to the erection of the hotel, which was opened for business and dedicated on October 30, 1887. It occupies almost the whole of two lots, was originally five stories in height, and equipped in all respects as a first class hotel. In 1893, it was partially burned, but was repaired with little change in appearance. In 1896, a sixth story was added, and the whole refurnished in a style that made it the best hotel in the State outside of Chicago. The sixth story is used as a club-room by the "Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks," whose well-furnished rooms make it a pleasant place of resort. The directors of the Hotel Company are, Martin Kingman, Madison C. Horton, W. M. Benton, Mathias Huffman and W. B. Kingman. The officers are Martin Kingman, President; W. H. Rich, Vice-President; Madison C. Horton, Treasurer; and W. B. Kingman, Secretary. Messrs. Montrose & McHugh are the proprietors.

In the year 1885, David Fey erected a large business block on the east corner of Liberty and Adams Streets. Although at first devoted exclusively to business purposes, it had been built with reference to its future conversion into a hotel, when the time should appear propitious. That time having arrived, the building was changed into a hotel in the year 1892. Its dimensions are 72 feet front on Adams Street by 171 on Liberty Street, five stories high, and containing for hotel purposes 100 rooms, a capacious dining-room, lobby, two central rooms and double parlors. There are in front two rooms occupied for business purposes—that on the corner by the National Bank of Illinois, the other by Fey Brothers, jewelers. Between these two rooms is the main entrance leading to the reception room or office, from which easy access is had to the other parts of the hotel. Mr. S. O. Spring is the present proprietor.

On the opposite corner there was erected some years ago a hotel of modest dimensions, called Frederick's Hotel, which, by additions, has grown to be a building of fairly good size. It has from the beginning been operated upon the European plan, and has enjoyed a good patronage. It is now called "The Grant," and is operated by Charles Prochazka & Sons, in whose hands its former popularity has been well sustained.

"The New Peoria House" is a new hotel erected on the east corner of Adams and Walnut Streets. These four hotels just mentioned may be called the leading hotels of the present day, although there are others of little less note. Peoria is now better supplied with hotel accommodations than at any previous time in her history.]

CHAPTER X.

BANKS AND BANKING: BY OLIVER J. BAILEY.

The banking history of Peoria dates from near the middle of the last century. Previous to that date, although Peoria had been an incorporated town for some twenty years, and had a population of nearly 6,000 souls, with a large river commerce, no financial institutions of this character had been established here. The history of State banking began with the establishment of the "Bank of Illinois," at Shawneetown, by the Territorial Legislature, in 1816, which was continued under the State Government after the adoption of the first Constitution, in 1818. The first bank at Shawneetown had branches at Edwardsville and Kaskaskia, and, under a revised act passed in 1820, branches were established at Edwardsville and Brownsville, in Jackson County. In 1835, a central "Bank of Illinois" was established at Springfield, with branches at Vandalia and Chicago—the latter being the first banking enterprise in the metropolis of the Northwest. Two years later, the late George Smith, who died in London about two years ago, became an important factor in connection with banking interests in the Northwest, first as one of the founders of the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance Company, at Milwaukee, but, in 1830, as the owner of a private bank in Chicago, through which, in after years, he promoted the circulation in the North of certain banks in Georgia, of which he had obtained control by the purchase of their charters. These issues, at a later period, went by the popular name of "wild-cat money." The financial reverses following the panic of 1837, and the collapse of the "internal improvement scheme," of the same year, was attended with disastrous results to the State banks, and the next ten years were occupied largely in winding up their affairs.

In October, 1847, William R. Phelps and B.

L. T. Bourland, who had established themselves here as land agents and dealers, began receiving deposits and selling exchange in a private way, and also made commercial loans to some extent. They subsequently formed a partnership with Gideon H. Rupert, James Haines and Thomas N. Gill, of Pekin, and greatly extended their business, starting a banking house there under the firm name of G. H. Rupert & Co., the name of the Peoria branch being Phelps, Bourland & Co. At a later date, these two firms organized the Central Bank of Peoria, under the old State bank system, with Mr. Rupert as President, and Robert Arthur Smith as Cashier. The banking house used by the firm was built by Messrs. Phelps and Bourland, and was located at the lower corner of Main and Water Streets. The stock and fixtures of the Central Bank were afterward sold to Governor Joel A. Matteson and his son-in-law, R. E. Goodell, Messrs. Phelps and Bourland and the Pekin parties retiring. Three or four years later, the Central Bank went into liquidation, and ceased to exist. The banking firm of G. H. Rupert & Co., however, continued in business for some years at Pekin, and always maintained a high standard of business integrity.

Messrs. N. B. Curtiss & Co established themselves in a distinctive banking business here in 1851, locating at the upper corner of Main and Water Streets, and for many years conducted a large and prosperous business. For a time this concern seems to have had some connection with George Smith, the noted financier of Chicago, as they are reputed to have put in circulation large amounts of the notes of the Marine and Fire Insurance Company, of Milwaukee, and of Georgia banks (chiefly the issues of the Cherokee Bank, of Dalton, Georgia), in which Mr. Smith was interested. This bank prospered for a time, but suspended during the panic year of 1857. Out of this enterprise, however, grew the First National Bank of Peoria, the first National banking institution in the city.

Other early banking enterprises were those of J. P. Hotchkiss, established by Joshua P. Hotchkiss in the fall of 1852, which has since developed into the Second National Bank of Peoria; and of S. Pulsifer & Co., which was started about 1855 by Messrs. Sidney Pulsifer, B. L. T. Bourland and George F. Harding (the latter now of Chicago), under the management of Mr. Bourland, their office being on the east corner of Main and Adams Streets. Mr. Bourland sold out his interest, in 1857, to Erastus D. Hardin, who, in conjunction with Mr. Pulsifer, carried on a large and profitable business for many years. This enterprise ended in failure, in consequence of immense but unfortunate advances made to distillers, although this temporary disaster, in a general way, resulted advantageously to the city, in the fact that it placed upon the market a large amount of undivided real estate now comprised within the most beautiful portion of the "middle bluff" district. While some of the depositors lost heavily, others, by buying up the bank's obligations at a discount, realized the full amount of their claims.

No business interest is more important to a city, or furnishes a more infallible guide by which its standing in the commercial world is to be judged, than its banks. The clearing-house is the pulsating point by which the healthful activity of business enterprise is determined; and by this test, as well as by every other, Peoria has gained a merited reputation as one of the best, most conservative and enterprising cities of its class. A noteworthy feature of its bank history consists in the extent to which enterprises of this character have been under the management of its local business men. This, while giving evidence of a development growing out of the actual demands of the business situation, has had the effect to exclude enterprises of a mere speculative character based largely upon foreign capital and of doubtful legitimacy, thus tending to the more complete security of the business public. Thus it has happened that capital has not at any time exceeded the public demand, and has been well employed under the direction of men of character, uniformly faithful to their trusts and responsibilities, thereby insuring such community of interest between banker and depositor that the latter has been accommodated at most conservative interest rates, and, in return, has received upon his deposit balances corresponding favors. As a consequence, no city of its wealth and population has suffered so little loss, through bank-failures since the establishment of the first bank within its limits, as has the city of Peoria.

While our bankers have been among the progressive and enterprising men of the city, in aiding its philanthropy and advancing its commerce, in respect to distinctive bank buildings Peoria has scarcely kept pace with most Western cities of its size. A very conservative judgment has prevailed with reference to the investment of capital in buildings of this character. While these financial institutions have been uniformly well housed, with few exceptions it has been in rented offices. In the earlier history of the city, its bank buildings were more pretentious, in comparison with their surroundings, than now. The iron-front on Main Street and the corners of that thoroughfare and Washington Street were, when erected, models of beauty and convenience, and were themselves an advertisement for the occupants. While yet serving well their purpose, it is in modest and retiring appearance, under the shadow of towering business blocks, erected at a later date and a more advanced period in business architecture. The demand for more room and more convenient locations, to meet the changes of our rapidly growing city, gives assurance that, in the near future, our bank buildings will be models of architectural taste and adaptability. Already plans are in contemplation for the partial accomplishment of this end, which promises an ultimate realization of all that can be desired in this direction.

A few figures will indicate the growth of the banking interests of Peoria within a little more than twenty years—although there is a dearth of statistics at hand for instituting a complete comparison. The three National Banks in existence in Peoria in 1880, with a capital stock of $100,000 each (a total of $300,000), have grown, in 1901, to seven in number, with an aggregate capital of $1,400,000 and surplus of $505,000. Statements to the Comptroller of the Currency and State Auditor of seven National and two State banks for December 10, 1901, show resources amounting to $16,480,038 14, of which $10,170,815 43 was in loans and discounts, $2,250,800 in United States bonds, and $3,581,949 58 in cash and dues from other banks. The same banks held deposits (individual, banks and certificates) aggregating $11,418,730.92 and United States deposits of $1,575,798.84. These figures do not include two savings and one private bank which publish no statements. A conservative estimate of present deposits in Peoria banks places the sum at not less than $14,500,000.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK.

Chronologically considered, the oldest existing banking institution in Peoria, in its present organization, was the outgrowth of conditions existing in the first years of the Civil War, and the enactment of the National Banking Act by Congress in 1863. In 1851, Nathaniel B. Curtiss and his brother, Pliny Curtiss (under the firm name of N. B. Curtiss & Co.), opened up a private banking business at the upper corner of Main and Water Streets, and for a time did a large business, during which they appear to have put in circulation large amounts of the issues of the Marine and Fire Insurance Company, of Milwaukee, and the Cherokee Bank, of Georgia, for the redemption of which Mr. Curtiss made himself responsible. About 1857, Curtiss & Co. removed to the building now occupied by the First National Bank of Peoria, at No. 200 Main Street, which had been erected in the interim by Mr. Curtiss. Owing to the panic of the latter year, a run was made upon the Curtiss bank, which resulted in its suspension for a time, though it appears to have re-opened at a later date for a short period. About 1858 or 1859, Marshall P. Stone and Thaddeus S. Ely appear to have been doing business as bankers at the location of the Curtiss Bank, though it evidently continued for only a short time, as we find in 1860 that Marshall P. Stone, William F. Bryan and George H. Stone commenced a banking business under the firm name of M. P. Stone & Co., in the Curtiss building. Three years later the last-named firm sold out to the First National Bank of Peoria, which was organized under the National Banking Law on November 23, 1863, with a capital of $150,000, owned by forty-two stockholders. The largest individual stockholders in the original organization were Tobias S. Bradley, Nathaniel B. Curtiss and Richard Gregg, of Peoria, and James H. McCall, of Canton, Fulton county. Mr. Bradley held 270 shares of stock, and the other three 200 shares each. The first Board of Directors, elected November 25, consisted of Tobias S. Bradley, Richard Gregg, Nathaniel B. Curtiss, Hervey Lightner, John L. Griswold, John C. Proctor, Louis Green, Thomas S. Dobbins and Robert A. Smith, and a few days later Mr. Bradley was chosen President, and Mr. Curtiss, Cashier. The bank opened its doors for business, January 6, 1864, and has been in operation ever since. In June, 1864, the capital stock was increased to $200,000; was reduced, in 1875, to $100,000, but again increased, in 1884, to $150,000, at which sum it still remains. The original charter having expired in 1883, a new charter was secured, running for twenty years, which expires in 1903. The first Board of Directors consisted of nine members; in 1870 the number was reduced to seven, and, in 1875, to five. Mr. Bradley occupied the office of President continuously until his death, which occurred May 4, 1867. He was succeeded by the late Washington Cackle, who continued in office until 1875, when he was succeeded by Hervey Lightner. The latter held office only a few weeks, when he gave place to Mr. John C. Proctor, who has been re-elected at each subsequent election since that time. A noteworthy feature in the history of the First National, indicating its conservative and substantial character, consists in the few changes that have occurred in the Board of Directors and its officers—the record showing, with few exceptions, “no change” in either since 1885. From 1875 to the present time (1902), Mrs. Lydia Bradley, the widow of the first President, has been continuously a member of the Board of Directors—one of the few instances in which a woman has held this position in a leading banking institution. In 1895, occurred the death of William E. Stone, Sr., who had been identified with the bank from its organization in 1863, first as bookkeeper and later as its Cashier, being succeeded by his son, William E. Stone, Jr. The present Board of Directors (1902) consists of John C. Proctor, Lydia Bradley, Charles R. Wheeler, Mathew Henebery and William E. Stone; with Mr. Proctor as President, Mr. Henebery as First Vice-President, Mr. Wheeler, Second Vice-President, and Mr. Stone, Cashier. The last official statement of the condition of the First National Bank of Peoria, made to the Comptroller of the Currency, under date of December 10, 1901, shows that it then had a capital stock of $150,000, with a surplus of $250,000, and $147,900 in circulation, secured by $150,000 in United States bonds on deposit in the United States Treasury; deposits

Wm. H. Hutton

(individual and other) to the amount of $2,103,724.13, $107,095.80 in real estate, $147,900 circulation, and an aggregate of $1,865,868.53 in loans and discounts, besides $530,382.41 in cash and dues from other banks.

PEORIA NATIONAL BANK.

The history of the Peoria National Bank dates back to 1852, when the banking firm of J. P. Hotchkiss & Co. was organized, with Lewis Howell as Cashier and manager. The bank was first located in a narrow room at the west corner of Main Street and Commercial Alley, but in November, 1855, was removed to the present site of the Peoria National. Joshua P. Hotchkiss, the head of the firm, died in 1856, by his will leaving Mr. Howell in charge of the bank for the benefit of the heirs. In January, 1860, the name of the firm was changed to L. Howell & Co., the company being composed of Mr. Howell, J. Boyd Smith and J. B. Headley, and, on January 1, 1863, Lorin G. Pratt succeeded to the interest of Mr. Headley, Mr. Howell continuing as manager. On January 1, 1864, another change occurred in the chartering of the bank under the National Banking Law, under the name of the Second National Bank of Peoria, with a capital of $200,000, and with L. Howell as its first President, L. G. Pratt, Vice President, and J. B. Smith, Cashier. In January, 1874, George H. McIlvaine succeeded to the Vice-Presidency, and Thomas G. McCulloch, Jr., became Cashier. Four years later (1878) Charles P. King was chosen Vice-President, and George H. McIlvaine Cashier. May 24, 1880, Vice-President King was advanced to the Presidency as successor of Mr. Howell, deceased. The first charter of the Second National having expired in February, 1883, the bank was reorganized under the name of the Peoria National Bank, Mr. King and Mr. McIlvaine continuing in their positions as President and Cashier, respectively. The Board of Directors, at this second organization, were Charles P. King, George H. McIlvaine, Calvin C. Lines, Charles B. Day, Philip Zell, Charles H. Kellogg and William Jack. The Directorship for 1889 remained unchanged, except that Newton C. Dougherty and Leonard F. Houghton entered the Board as successors to Charles B. Day and Charles H. Kellogg. At the same time Mr. McIlvaine became Vice-President, Richard A. Culter succeeding him in the office of Cashier. In January, 1893, Mr. Culter became a Director, as successor to Leonard F. Houghton, and, in March following, Mr. King having died after a service of ten years, George H. McIlvaine was chosen President, to fill the vacancy. In 1897, Philip Zell succeeded to the Presidency, in place of Mr. McIlvaine, deceased, and, on April 18, 1900, Mr. Zell having died, Newton C. Dougherty was chosen to succeed him. The present Board of Directors (1902) consists of Newton C. Dougherty, Leonard F. Houghton, Calvin C. Lines, William Jack, William H. Rich, Mathias Huffman, and William H. Miller, with Mr. Dougherty as President, Mr. Houghton, Cashier, and Mr. Lines, Assistant Cashier. The report of the condition of the Peoria National, for December 10, 1901, shows that, in addition to its capital of $200,000, the bank then had a surplus of $40,000, with an outstanding circulation of $150,000, secured by United States bonds to an equal amount in the United States Treasury. The deposits (Government and individual), at the same time, were $1,065,142.34, and the aggregate of loans and discounts $820,200.31, with cash and dues from National and State Banks of $256,782.78. The Peoria National is a Government depository.

MERCHANTS' NATIONAL BANK.

The Merchants' National Bank of Peoria is the successor of the Mechanics' National Bank, which was organized and opened for business May 20, 1865, with Isaac Underhill as President, and Samuel Coskery, Cashier. A radical change took place in the Directorate in 1866, and Horatio N. Wheeler became President, and J. Boyd Smith, Cashier. In 1880 the bank had a paid-up capital of $100,000, and a reserve of $70,000—its executive officers remaining unchanged. In 1884, the Mechanics' National reorganized as the Merchants' National, the capital stock being increased to $200,000. The first Board of Directors of the new organization consisted of Horatio N. Wheeler, Ezekiel A. Proctor, John C. Yates, Charles T. Luthy, John D. McClure, William F. Bryan and John B. Smith. H. N. Wheeler, who had been President of the Mechanics' National during most of its history, was elected the first President of the new institution, and J. B. Smith, Cashier. E. A. Proctor was elected President in 1885, continuing in office, by repeated re-elections, until 1888, when he resigned, and was succeeded by Andrew J. Hodges, his period of service continuing until 1893. A new element came into the Merchants' National, in 1896, in the absorption of the Bank of Commerce, which had been organized in 1891, under the State Banking Law, with a capital stock of $100,000, which was increased two years later to $200,000. The first Board of Directors included the names of Henry H. Fahnestock, Charles R. Wheeler, A. G. Danforth, H. B. Steward, George Emerson, B. F. Rhodelhamel, C. A. Davis, James M. Morse and Fred H. Smith, with Mr. Fahnestock as President, C. R. Wheeler, Vice-President, and Homer W. McCoy, Cashier. The bank conducted a successful business, the Board of Officers, in the meantime, remaining unchanged until the fall of 1896, when it was merged into the Merchants' National Bank of Peoria, the stockholders realizing 103 per cent. on their capital stock. After the retirement of Mr. Hodges from the Presidency of the Merchants' National, in 1893, Ferdinand Luthy became President, and has so continued up to the present time (1902). The terms of other officers have been as follows: John D. McClure, Vice-President, 1885-92; Henry Sandmeyer, Vice-President, 1893-1901; Homer W. McCoy, Second Vice-President, 1897-99; John B. Smith, Cashier, 1884-89 (resigned); George H. Littlewood, Assistant Cashier, 1888-89, and Cashier from 1889 to present date; Thaddeus S. Ely, Assistant Cashier, 1885-88, succeeded in turn by Mr. Littlewood, who, in 1889, gave place to Fillmore Millard, the latter resigning in 1894; W. T. Murray, Assistant Cashier, 1894-96 (resigned); Walter L. Wiley, Assistant Cashier, up to 1901. The present officers (1902) are Ferdinand Luthy, President; Henry Sandmeyer, Vice-President; George H. Littlewood, Cashier, and Walter L. Wiley, Assistant Cashier, with Messrs. Luthy, Sandmeyer, Littlewood, Wiley, Sumner R. Clark, Frederick H. Smith and George T. Page, members of the Board of Directors. Others who have held positions upon the Board of Directors, in addition to those already named, include B. Cremer, A. J. Hodges, C. S. Clarke, C. C. Clarke, Adolph Woolner, J. B. Greenhut, Samuel Woolner, Jr., and Homer W. McCoy. On May 30, 1886, a crisis occurred in the affairs of the bank in consequence of the discovery of the embezzlement of its funds by a book-keeper, to the amount of $183,000. The bank went into the hands of the National Bank authorities, and, for a month, remained closed; but, its capital having been restored by an assessment of fifty per cent. upon the stockholders, it finally reopened for business. Besides an unimpaired capital of $200,000, it now has a surplus of $100,000, and, for the past two years, has paid quarterly dividends of three per cent., making a total paid to its stockholders, since 1887, of $254,000. The statement of December 10, 1901, shows a total of loans and discounts on its books amounting to $1,028,996.28, with $1,236,166.95 in individual deposits, besides $125,615.80 in Government deposits, and an outstanding circulation of $100,000. Its resources include cash and dues from banks aggregating $413,657.40 and $270,000 in U. S. bonds.

GERMAN-AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK.

The German-American National Bank of Peoria is the outgrowth of the German Banking Company, a co-partnership banking concern, organized during the great panic in the fall of 1873. The latter opened its doors for business at the corner of Bridge and Washington Streets, on November 1, 1873, with Michael Pfeifer as its President. The following were the original partners: Michael Pfeifer, Louis Green, Bernard Cremer, Ferdinand Welte, Joseph Huber, Andrew Hepler, Erhard Kramm, William Oberhauser, Joseph Miller, Valentine Jobst and Jacob Mueller. At a later date some of the partners disposed of their interests, and Valentine Ulrich, having become a member of the Company, was elected its President. The original partnership was formed for a period of ten years, and, on the expiration of this period, steps were taken to organize the German-American National Bank of Peoria, which was granted its charter (No. 3070) on October 31, 1883, and the new concern opened up its business at the old stand of the German Banking Company, at the corner of Bridge and Washington Streets, January 1, 1884, with a capital stock of $100,000. Valentine Ulrich, Samuel Woolner, Sabin D. Pinterbaugh, Michael Pfeifer, Charles Gehrman, A. L. Schimpff and James Miller constituted the first Board of Directors, with Valentine Ulrich as the first President, Michael Pfeifer, Vice-President, and William Oberhauser, Cashier. The following changes in the capital stock have been made since the original organization: August, 1885, increased to $105,000; April, 1886, increased to $150,000; August, 1891, occurred a still further increase to $300,000—at which the stock (1902) now stands. On December 8, 1884, Mr. Oberhauser resigned the position of Cashier, and was succeeded, in January following, by Weston Arnold. In April, 1888, the bank qualified as a Government Depository. In March, 1892, Mr. Ulrich resigned the Presidency, and was succeeded in June following, by Bernard Cremer, who still retains the position. There has been but one death among the officers of the bank in the history of the institution—that of Judge Sabin D. Puterbaugh, then Vice-President, which occurred September 25, 1892. Since its organization, the bank has made two removals: In January, 1884, to No. 203 Main Street, and in January, 1891, to 208 South Adams Street, its present location. The present Board of Directors (1902) includes the following names: Leslie D. Puterbaugh, J. B. Greenhut, Joseph Miller, Samuel Woolner, A. L. Schimpff, Bernard Cremer, and Weston Arnold, with Mr. Cremer in the position of President; Mr. Woolner, Vice-President; Mr. Schimpff, Second Vice-President; Mr. Arnold, Cashier; and Peter Anicker, Assistant Cashier. The German-American also does a savings bank business by the payment of interest on time deposits, deals largely in foreign exchange, and makes a specialty of ocean steamship tickets. On December 10, 1901—the date of the last statement to the Comptroller of the Currency—the German-American, in addition to its capital stock of $300,000, had a surplus of $60,000, an outstanding bank-note circulation of $150,000, and individual deposits amounting to $1,472,855.10, besides $162,500 in Government funds. The aggregate of loans and discounts, at the same time, was $1,212,340.42, cash on hand and dues from National and State Banks and approved reserve agents, $528,182.74, besides a premium account of $14,000. The bank is the owner of $51,354.40 in real estate, and has $350,000 in bonds on deposit in the United States Treasury as security for circulation and Government deposits.

COMMERCIAL NATIONAL BANK.

The Commercial National Bank of Peoria is a reorganization of the private banking firm of Callender, Ayres & Co., which began business March 12, 1881, with a capital of $75,000, the members of the firm being Columbus R. Cummings (now of Chicago), the late Gardner T. Barker, Walter Barker, Eliot Callender and the late Henry P. Ayres. The reorganized institution, under its present name, was opened for business January 13, 1885, with a capital stock of $200,000, the first officers being Eliot Callender, President, and Henry P. Ayres,

Vice-President and Cashier. Two weeks later, Gardner T. Barker was elected Vice-President, Mr. Ayres remaining in the position of Cashier until April 1st of the same year, when he resigned, giving place to Henry B. Dox, who continued in office until his death, in September, 1899. Homer W. McCoy was then chosen to fill the vacancy. In October, 1894, by the death of Gardner T. Barker, who had occupied the position of President, a vacancy was created in that office, which was filled by the promotion of his son, Walter Barker, then Vice-President, to the place, John L. Flinn being chosen to the vacant Vice-Presidency. In May, 1901, Homer W. McCoy having resigned the place of Cashier, Elwood A. Cole was elected his successor, William Hazzard becoming the successor of Mr. Cole as Assistant Cashier. The members of the Board of Directors, at the present time (1902), are Walter Barker, John L. Flinn, Warren R. Buckley, J. N. Ward, Johnson L. Cole, Frank P. Lewis, John Wilson, Homer W. McCoy, and John Finley, with Mr. Barker as President; Mr. Flinn, Vice-President; Mr. McCoy, Second Vice-President; Mr. Cole, Cashier; and Mr. Hazzard, Assistant Cashier. The capital stock with which the bank began business, in 1885, remains unchanged, while the institution has a surplus of $100,000, and net profits of $38,436.75. According to the statement to the Comptroller for December 10, 1901, the bank-note circulation aggregated $150,000, and the deposits $1,866,466.01. At the same time, the amount of loans and discounts was $1,337,270.71, and of cash and sight exchange, $514,220.74. Its resources also include $450,000 in Government bonds, and $10,000 in premium accounts.

CENTRAL NATIONAL BANK.

The Central National Bank of Peoria dates its organization from the year 1884, when it began business with a paid-up capital of $200,000, as the successor of the Farmers' Bank, which had been conducting a successful business at 211 Main Street. The latter institution was a partnership concern, organized in 1870, by Messrs. Martin Kingman, Benjamin F. Blossom and Frederick E. Leonard, the transition from a private bank to a National organization being in recognition of changed financial conditions and a desire to accommodate the business public of Peoria to better advantage. The first Board of Directors of the new institution were Hervey Lightner, Richard H. Whiting, Martin Kingman, Benjamin F. Blossom, Isaac Taylor, Frederick E. Leonard and Oliver J. Bailey. At the first election of officers by the Board of Directors (1884), Mr. Kingman was chosen President; Mr. Bailey, Vice-President; Mr. Blossom, Cashier, and Mr. Leonard, Assistant Cashier. Changes which have since occurred in the Directorship and management of the Central National include the following: In 1886, Samuel W. Sessions, of the Lamson & Sessions Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, was chosen a Director, in place of Richard H. Whiting; Richard W. Kempshall was elected a Director in 1889, to succeed Frederick E. Leonard, who had resigned his position as Assistant Cashier the previous year, and was succeeded, in 1890, by Frederick F. Blossom; Hervey Lightner became President, by election of the Board of Directors, in January, 1891, as successor to Martin Kingman, retaining the position until his death, in March, 1896, when the vacancy was filled by the election of Oliver J. Bailey—Richard W. Kempshall succeeding Mr. Bailey as Vice-President. At the same time, Jacob P. Schnellbacher entered the Board of Directors, as successor to Mr. Lightner, and, in 1890, Frederick F. Blossom became a Director, in place of Mr. Kingman, retired. At the stockholders' annual meeting, in January, 1902, the following Board of Directors was chosen for the ensuing year: Richard W. Kempshall, Benjamin F. Blossom, Isaac Taylor, Jacob P. Schnellbacher, Henry W. Lynch, Frederick F. Blossom and Oliver J. Bailey. The officers chosen by this Board, and now in control of the affairs of the bank, are: Oliver J. Bailey, President; Richard W. Kempshall, Vice-President; Benjamin F. Blossom, Second Vice-President, and Frederick F. Blossom, Cashier. In 1893, the Central National, finding the offices which it then occupied inadequate to the needs of its growing business, removed to its present location, at the corner of Main and Adams Streets, opposite the southeast corner of the Court House Square. The statement to the Comptroller of the Currency of the bank's condition at the close of business, on December 10, 1901, shows a surplus of $40,000, in addition to the capital of $200,000, with which the bank began business in 1884. The total of deposits, at the same time, were $1,130,708.68, while the loans and discounts aggregated $1,230,454.22, with $313,724.62 in cash and dues from other banks. The circulation, for the same date, was $50,000, secured by a like amount in U. S. bonds.

ILLINOIS NATIONAL BANK.

The youngest of the National Banks of Peoria is the Illinois National, chartered on May 21, 1900, and which began business under its new charter, June 1, 1901. It was based upon the foundation of the old "Bank of Illinois," which had been chartered under State law, February 21, 1891, under the name of the "Peoria Savings, Loan and Trust Company," in the year 1899, taking the name of the "Bank of Illinois." The officers of the earlier bank, at its organization, were Martin Kingman, President; A. S. Oakford, Vice-President; C. T. Heald, Cashier, and Rudolph Pasquay, Assistant Cashier; and this organization has been continued with little change to the present time. In 1897 Mr. Heald and Mr. Pasquay resigned their positions, Frank Trefzger being elected Cashier and William C. White, his Assistant. In 1899 Ira D. Buck was chosen Second Vice-President, and these officers were continued under the organization of the new corporation in 1901. The capital stock of the Illinois National Bank of Peoria, at its organization, was $150,000, and before the close of the year it had accumulated a surplus of $5,000 with undivided profits amounting to $5,311.55. The Board of Directors for the year 1902 embrace the following names: Martin Kingman, A. S. Oakford, G. H. Schimpff, E. C. Heidrich, John Wilson, W. B. Kingman, Ben Warren, Jr., C. C. Miles and Ira D. Buck. The officers for the same year are: Martin Kingman, President; A. S. Oakford, First Vice-President; Frank Trefzger, Cashier; and William C. White, Assistant Cashier. The statement to the Comptroller of the Currency for December 10, 1901, shows a total of $668,327.73 in loans and discounts, $950,000 in U. S. bonds, $1,355,536.93 in Government and individual deposits, and outstanding circulation amounting to $150,000 secured by a like amount in United States bonds. The capital stock still stands at $150,000, as at the date of organization.

SAVINGS BANK OF PEORIA.

The Savings Bank of Peoria, the pioneer institution of its kind in Peoria, was organized as a co-partnership for banking purposes, February 1, 1868, by John Hamlin, William A. Herron, Charles P. King, Philip Zell, Lorin G. Pratt, Lewis Howell, Zenas N. Hotchkiss and Thomas C. Moore, and continued to do business on this basis until July 1, 1894. At the latter date the partnership was dissolved and the bank was incorporated under the State law, with a paid-up capital stock of $150,000 and a surplus of the same amount. Mr. Zell was the first officer, being elected "Secretary" of the partnership association on its organization, and held office until September 1, 1870, when he resigned and Mr. Herron was elected President and Manager. On February 1, 1872, H. Hedrich was elected Cashier, and both he and Mr. Herron continued in the discharge of their respective offices until the reorganization in 1894. The first Directors of the new corporation were William A. Herron, Philip Zell, William M. Benton, Henry Hedrich and William Jack, and the first officers W. A. Herron, President; Philip Zell, Vice-President, and H. Hedrich, Cashier, all of whom have continued in office until the present time except Mr. Zell, who died April 11, 1900, when Madison C. Horton was chosen his successor. The location of the bank is 200 Main Street. The report of the State Auditor for December 11, 1901, shows resources amounting to $1,919,022.49, of which $1,460,938.70 consisted of loans and investments and $447,183.79 of cash and dues from other banks. The deposits at the same date were $1,530,660.24, with a surplus of $150,000 and undivided profits (less expenses and taxes) amounting to $88,353.25.

ZELL, HOTCHKISS & CO. (PRIVATE BANKERS.)

The banking house of Zell, Hotchkiss & Co. was organized as a partnership concern to do a private banking business in 1870, the partners being Philip Zell, Walter B. Hotchkiss and Henry C. Fursman. On the death of Mr. Hotchkiss, which occurred November 21, 1874, Mr. Zell acquired the interest of both Hotchkiss and Fursman, thereby becoming sole owner, and so continued until his death, April 11, 1900. Mr. Homer C. Lines occupied the position of Cashier continuously for a period of twenty-six years (1873-1899). The bank is at present operated as a co-partnership composed of the heirs of Mr. Zell (Mrs. Catherine Z. Horton, Elizabeth V. Rich and Edith S. Zell), with the same responsibilities as existed during Mr. Zell's life-time—the concern during all this time retaining its original name of Zell, Hotchkiss & Co. The present owners have, by power of attorney, entrusted the position of Cashier to William E. M. Cole, who has been identified with the bank for eighteen years. The place of business of Zell, Hotchkiss & Co. is at 201 South Washington Street.

Another private banking concern was that of J. B. Hogue & Co., established May 1, 1867, by James B. Hogue and Thomas L. Davis, with a capital of $50,000. On account of ill-health, Mr. Davis retired in May, 1874, Mr. Hogue becoming sole owner. In March, 1880, the concern was compelled to suspend in consequence of heavy losses resulting from the failure of a local business concern, but subsequently paid all liabilities in full.

Mr. William Oberhauser started a private bank here in 1885, which continued in operation about eight years, going into liquidation in 1893. It was at first located at the corner of Washington and Bridge Streets, but afterwards removed to Adams Street at the head of Bridge Street.

DIME SAVINGS BANK.

The Dime Savings Bank of Peoria, intended for the accommodation of small depositors, as well as others doing a savings bank business, was organized December 7, 1886, and began business January 17, 1887—the original copartners being Eliot Callender, Henry P. Ayres, Seth W. Freeman, Frank Meyer and Oliver J. Bailey. The first Board of Officers was composed of Eliot Callender, President; Oliver J. Bailey, Vice-President; Henry P. Ayres, Treasurer, and Rudolph Pfeiffer, Cashier, which has remained unchanged except by the death of Mr. Ayres in 1894. Mr. Freeman retired from the partnership, February 15, 1888, his interest being purchased by the remaining partners. The same result followed on the death of Mr. Ayres in August, 1894—the present partners consisting of Messrs. Callender, Meyer and Bailey. The bank commenced business in the old Bartlett home-stead, but almost immediately commenced the erection of a bank building on the adjoining ground (100 Jefferson Avenue), of which it took possession in the fall of 1887, and which it now occupies. The bank owns its own building, which is modern and distinctive, having been designed and constructed with reference to a Savings Bank business, and is provided with safety steel-lined vaults suited to a safety deposit business. Since its organization it has adhered strictly to its original rule to lend money only on real estate security, makes no commercial loans but has been favored with a liberal share of the savings business including both large and small deposits.

PEOPLE'S SAVINGS BANK.

The People's Savings Bank of Peoria was organized on a co-partnership basis by Messrs. Martin Kingman, Charles A. Jamison, Rudolph Frey and E. C. Heidrich, and began business March 11, 1889, at 1329 South Adams Street, its present location. The original stock was $10,000, which was subsequently increased to $12,500. At the outset Rudolph Frey served as the active Manager and Cashier, but in April, 1890, sold his one-quarter interest to Martin Kingman, and was succeeded in the position of Cashier by George W. Zinser, whose connection in the same capacity has been continued ever since. In July, 1890, all the partners sold out their entire interest to Jacob Woolner, who then became and still continues the sole owner. The People's Savings Bank successfully passed the terrible strain of the panic of 1893 and the years of business depression which followed, and, since the restoration of public confidence and improved business conditions, in common with other institutions of like character, has felt the effect in the increase of its deposits and the number of its depositors. The offices occupied at the corner of Cedar and Adams Streets are located in a substantial three-story and basement brick and stone structure having a frontage of 50 feet on Adams Street and 100 on Cedar Street, and are handsomely fitted up with all necessary conveniences for the transaction of a banking business, including an ample steel-lined vault for the security of deposits and valuable papers. While the principal business of the bank has been in connection with the savings department, it also transacts a general banking business.

HOME SAVINGS & STATE BANK.

The prime mover in the organization of the Home Savings and State Bank of Peoria was Mr. Valentine Ulrich, who had been for many years President of the German-American National Bank, and who, in 1892, in connection with twenty-nine other stockholders, obtained a charter from the State of Illinois, under which they began doing business on June 2d of that year. Mr. Ulrich brought into the concern with him Mr. Frank Trefzger, who up to that time had been Assistant Cashier of the German-American National, as well as his son Charles, a member of the law firm of Ulrich & Ulrich, who had been doing a real-estate brokerage business. The original stockholders were all residents of Peoria, except Mr. Fred E. Harding, President of the Second National Bank of Monmouth, and the capital stock was $120,000, at which sum it still remains. At the first meeting of stockholders, held June 13, 1892, the following Board of Directors were elected: Frederick L. Block, C. Gehrmann, Fritz Leuder, Frank Trefzger, Valentine Ulrich, Charles E. Ulrich and Charles Zimmerman. Mr. Val. Ulrich was chosen President; Charles E. Ulrich, Vice-President, and Frank Trefzger, Cashier. In 1895 Mr. Gehrmann moved to New York City and Robert Strehlow was chosen to succeed him as Director. Mr. Frank Trefzger having resigned his position in April, 1897, to accept the cashiership of another bank, Henry E. Ulrich was chosen to succeed him as both Director and Cashier. No other changes in the Directory or Board of Officers has since been made. Although the bank has always done a savings bank business, at the beginning of its career it catered largely to the demands of a commercial banking business. One of the special features in 1892 was the introduction of an Auxiliary Savings Bank for the accommodation of customers and as an encouragement to saving. While still doing a commercial business on a conservative basis, savings accounts have of late been made a specialty, interest being paid on all deposits of one dollar and upward in this department. The resources of this bank on December 11, 1901, aggregated $926,084.80, of which $628,970.67 was in the form of loans and investments and $262,988.57 in cash and dues from other banks. The deposits (individual and other) at the same date were $785,399.14. During the last year the bank changed its location from 317 to 325 South Adams Street.

ANTHONY LOAN & TRUST CO.

This company, whose principal business is loaning money on farm property and dealing in real-estate mortgages, is the outgrowth of a business first established in Washington, Tazewell County, by Charles E. Anthony, about the year 1866. The business was for a time carried on in connection with that of the banking firm of Anthony & Denhart of that place, but in 1874 a branch house was established at Chatsworth, Illinois, under the name of Anthony, Denhart & Wilson, and placed in charge of Clifford M. Anthony. The field of operations in farm loans was much enlarged and the business grew rapidly. In 1877, Clifford M. Anthony returned to Washington as a partner in the firm. In 1882, the firm was appointed financial correspondent of the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company for the State of Illinois.

About this time G. W. Curtiss, who had been engaged in the banking business at Urbana, Illinois, entered the employment of the firm in connection with the loan business. Early in 1885, the Anthony Brothers severed their connection with the house of Anthony & Denhart, retaining the farm loan business, and, removing to Peoria, formed the co-partnership of C. E. & C. M. Anthony, in which Mr. Curtiss became a partner in 1888. In 1891 the firm was incorporated under the name of the "Anthony Loan & Trust Company," with C. E. Anthony, President; C. M. Anthony, Vice-President, and G. W. Curtiss, Secretary and Treasurer. In 1898, Charles E. Anthony having retired from active participation in the management of the business, C. M. Anthony was chosen President, C. E. Anthony, Vice-President, Mr. Curtiss retaining the office of Secretary and Treasurer until 1890, when he became one of the Vice-Presidents. The paid up capital stock of the company is $164,000, its surplus $20,300, and its undivided profits $16,000. Offices are maintained at Peoria, Illinois, and Omaha, Nebraska. The loans made by this company are regarded in financial circles as safe and conservative.

In connection with their other business the members of this company have organized another under the name of "Peoria Safe Deposit Company," and have erected in their place of business a fire and burglar-proof steel vault fitted up with all suitable appliances for the safe keeping of securities and other valuables.

TITLE & TRUST CO.

Though not strictly a banking institution the Title & Trust Company of Peoria has an intimate relation to the financial interests of the city, and is deserving of mention in this connection. It was incorporated in 1890 by leading capitalists of the city, and, while its chief business is the investigation and furnishing of abstracts of title to real-estate, and the issuing of guaranty certificates for the protection of owners and mortgagees from loss by reason of defective titles to real-estate in Peoria County, it also conducts a loan department for the purpose of making investments in real-estate (both farms and city property), dealing in mortgages, collecting interest on loans, etc. It is empowered by its charter to act as Executor or Administrator of estates; as Guardian, Receiver, Assignee or in any other capacity assumed by a trustee in taking charge of estates. The company has a capital of $100,000, with $50,000 deposited with the State Auditor for the security of all trust obligations. The Board of Directors is composed largely of stockholders of different banks, including Eliot Callender, of the Dime Savings Bank; Newton C. Dougherty, of the Peoria National; Oliver J. Bailey, of the Central National; William Jack, Esq., and John E. Keene, Manager of the Aetna Life Insurance Company. The officers for the present year (1902) are: Oliver J. Bailey, President; John E. Keene, First Vice-President; Horace R. Dougherty, Second Vice-President; Joseph P. Durkin, Secretary, and Eliot Callender, Treasurer.

PEORIA CLEARING HOUSE ASSOCIATION.

On April 27, 1886, at a meeting of representatives of leading banks of Peoria, a Bankers' Association was formed to facilitate exchange and settlement of daily balances between the several banks represented. The charter members included the First, the Second and the Mechanics' National, the German Banking Company, Kingman, Blossom & Co., and Zell, Hotchkiss & Co. The first officers elected were George H. McIlvaine, President, and Benjamin F. Blossom, Secretary. In 1884 Henry Hedrich was elected Secretary, and, President McIlvaine having died in 1897, was succeeded by Philip Zell, who died in 1901, the position then being filled by Leonard F. Houghton.

In January, 1902, a re-organization was effected under the name of the "Peoria Clearing House Association," a new constitution and by-laws adopted, and an entirely new system of making local exchanges inaugurated. Under this arrangement, all balances are settled through one bank, known as the "Clearing House Agent," to whom all debit balances must be paid by 1:30 p. m. daily, and by whom all credit accounts must be paid between 2:30 and 3:00 p. m. of the same day. The officers (1902) are Leonard F. Houghton, President, and Henry Hedrich, Secretary, with Messrs. Houghton, Charles R. Wheeler and Benjamin F. Blossom as Clearing House Committee.

The total clearings in the past ten years (1892 to 1901 inclusive) amounted to $906,130,454, of which $88,957,505 was for the year 1892, and $123,315,075 for 1901—an increase in ten years of $34,358,570.

CHAPTER XI.

MANUFACTURES: BY MARTIN KINGMAN.

There was comparatively little manufacturing in Peoria prior to 1850. We note, however, in "Drown's Record of Peoria," issued in 1844, mention of flouring mills as early as 1830, to which reference will be made under the proper heading. At the present time Peoria ranks first in many industries, and, as a whole, is second in the State. The attempt will be made in this article to give, as near as possible, a classified history of all manufacturing industries from the beginning to the present time. The data available for this purpose as to early history are rather meager, being compiled, for the most part, from "Drown's Directory" of 1844 and 1851. The issue of that publication for 1844 is quite complete, and notes all of the industries of that time. The issue of 1851 is not so complete, however, mentioning only the industries which advertised in that issue, embracing only a small portion, according to census returns and tabulated data.

Early in 1851, Mr. Mark M. Aiken furnished to the "Peoria Republican" what he called a list of the manufactures exported from Peoria during the year 1850, which was as follows:

Product	Quantity	Value per package	Total
Flour	33,753 barrels	$4.50	$151,888.50
Whiskey	5,085 barrels	10.00	50,850.00
Brooms	1,300 dozen	2.00	2,600.00
Cooperage			17,185.00
Plows, Laminating-Mills, Corn-Shellers, Sash, Doors and Blinds, Stone and Marble Products and Chemicals			100,000.00
Total			$358,523.50

Only a small portion of these industries are mentioned in "Drown's Directory" of 1851. The report of the Illinois State Census of 1855 presented a list of the leading manufactories of Peoria, with the value of their output for the year ending July 1, 1855, as follows:

4 Flouring mills	$ 650,000.00
3 Distilleries	502,800.00

5 Sash, door and blind, saw and planing mills	296,300.00
9 Cooper and barrel factories	137,620.00
7 Wagon and carriage factories	103,536.00
2 Potteries	8,200.00
3 Foundries	75,000.00
4 Furniture factories	67,500.00
3 Plow manufactories	60,600.00
4 Fanning-mill and corn-sheller factories	28,000.00
16 Boot and shoe factories	36,514.00
5 Harness factories	36,000.00
3 Cut stone and monument factories	29,800.00
5 Tin, copper and sheet iron factories	28,000.00
3 Bar soap and candle factories	26,300.00
5 Breweries	24,900.00
5 Brick yards	20,750.00
1 Fish oil factory	13,500.00
6 Cigar and tobacco factories	12,550.00
1 Lightning rod factory	10,500.00
1 Lucifer match factory	7,500.00
2 Agricultural and threshing machine factories	7,000.00
2 Merchant tailoring factories	6,500.00
3 Hat and cap factories	3,500.00
Miscellaneous, not enumerated	9,300.00
Total	$2,221,470.00

From this it will be seen that Peoria was even then quite a manufacturing point, although no itemized data is presented as to the owners or operators of each individual plant or industry. Root's City Directory for the year 1856 was very complete, giving the names of proprietors, their location and kinds of industries, but it does not furnish any data as to capacity, number of employees, etc. The next source of information is a special edition of "The Peoria Transcript," issued January 1, 1850, which notes the larger industries. The remainder of our information has been obtained from individuals who resided here, and were actively engaged in the manufacturing business in Peoria in the early '60s.

We are under obligations to the following gentlemen for valuable information and data furnished: Mr. Barnhart Meals, Judge David McCulloch, Mr. Stacy B. Hart, Mr. Alban B. Fink, Mr. August Hesler, Mr. Nathan Giles, Mr. Leslie Robinson, Mr. Johnson, L. Cole, Mr. Horace Clark, Sr., Mr. William G. Murray, Mr. Horace G. Anderson, Mr. John C. Proctor, Mr. William P. Lazell, Mr. William H. Sammis, and to Mr. E. B. Rhea for great assistance in getting together and compiling material for this article.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.

The manufacture of implements for agricultural purposes in Peoria began very early, and has continued to be one of the leading industries of the city. Among the early manufactures the first appears to have been fanning-mills, which really belong to implements, although at this time used chiefly by seed and grain dealers. The first concern to manufacture fanning-mills in Peoria was established in 1837, by William M. Nurse & Son, being located, at that time, about the upper end of Main Street, near the foot of the bluff. The next was established in 1844 on Hale Street, near Main, by Ezekiel A. and John C. Proctor. Both of these gentlemen are still living, the former having retired, while the latter is still actively engaged in business, being, at the present time, President of the First National Bank, and of the lumber firm of J. C. Proctor & Co. In early days fanning-mills were largely used, and, in addition to the above concerns, there were several other shops where they were manufactured. This continued up to the time of the perfection of the combined grain-thresher, separator and cleaner, and since then the fanning-mill has been made only in limited quantities, for grain and seed dealers. During the same period, the manufacture of wire-screens, used quite extensively in agricultural pursuits, was carried on here to a considerable extent.

The manufacture of steel plows was also one of our early industries, and we find that Tobey & Anderson were the first in this line, commencing in 1843, on Water Street between Liberty and Fulton. In those early days, everything was made by hand. This firm started then with one forge, and their product, at first 200 plows per annum, eventually reached 10,000 per annum. The mould-boards and shares, at that time, were all made of what was known to the trade as Bessemer steel, and these parts were cut out on the anvil with a chisel and sledge. The holes were drilled by hand, and the mould-boards and shares shaped by hand on an anvil, as also was the plating of the shares and shovels. The wood parts came in plank, and were cut out by hand. The plows were ground and polished by horse power, and both Messrs. Tobey and Anderson took turns in holding the plows to the grind-stones. In those days, the farmer paid from $15.00 to $20.00 for an ordinary walking plow, which, at this time, can be bought for from one-half to two-thirds of that amount. This concern continued in business at the above stand for a number of years. A great deal of the information which we have obtained in reference to this firm was furnished by Mr. Barnhart Meals, who started with them as an employe in 1854, and afterwards became one of the partners of the concern. Mr. Meals is still living in Peoria, and is quite active, being President of the Board of Education, and also President of the People's Loan and Homestead Association. The firm of Tobey & Anderson was dissolved in 1892, and a new organization formed, consisting of William Tobey, Lorin Grant Pratt and Barnhart Meals, under the name of William Tobey & Co., their copartnership continuing for five years. Their business continued to grow, and at the end of five years, Mr. Tobey having withdrawn, the firm became L. G. Pratt & Co., being composed of L. G. Pratt, Barnhart Meals and James Duff. Later another copartnership was formed, by taking in Eugene Pierce, and joining with Plant Brothers, of St. Louis, when the style of the firm became Plant Brothers, Pratt & Co. They erected a large and commodious factory at the corner of Water and Walnut Streets, equipped with all the latest machinery, and established a branch house in Kansas City to distribute their output. This business was continued for several years, and was quite successful; but when the hard times came, they were compelled to make an assignment, and the plant and equipment were bought in by the Second National Bank of Peoria, which made an arrangement with Messrs. Meals and Pierce to work up the stock on hand. In this they were engaged for several years, when the Peoria Steel Plow Company was organized by Messrs. James Seery, Barnhart Meals and Pierce—the last two as managers. Mr. Seery soon withdrew, but the concern was continued by Mr. Meals and Mr. Pierce until 1886, when their establishment was destroyed by fire. Having repaired the buildings and machinery, they resumed business, continuing until 1888, under the name of the Peoria Steel Plow Co. In 1890 they sold out to Milliken, Cisle & Co., who ran the plant for a few years, but not successfully, and finally the business was closed out. Their building still stands, and is occupied as a stamped tin-ware factory. There were several other plow factories in existence in early days, among which may be noted Thomas & Lazell, established in 1850 by Elias Thomas and William Penn Lazell, at No. 12-14 Bridge Street. Mr. Thomas soon retired and removed to California, but the business was continued for twenty-two years by Mr. Lazell, who is still residing in this city, having lived continuously in the same place since 1848. Mr. Lazell is still quite active, but takes no part in any business, except the management of his large land interests.

There was also a plow factory established in 1856, by M. Durfee, who manufactured plows in a small way, his output being about 500 per annum. No data have been found showing the exact location of his factory, or who was Mr. Durfee's successor. The old plant of Tobey & Anderson, after lying idle for a number of years, was started up in 1870 by Buckley, Hanny, Estes & Co., and did quite an extensive business, employing from twenty-five to thirty men, and manufacturing from 3,000 to 5,000 plows per annum. This business was continued until 1876, when the firm was dissolved. Mr. Buckley is still living, and runs a small establishment, manufacturing plows for local trade at 515 South Washington Street.

There seem to have been a great many small plow-making establishments in Peoria in early days, of which it is now impossible to obtain full details as to their history or magnitude. Among these, however, may be mentioned that of Mr. Allison, who was an extensive vehicle manufacturer, and commenced the manufacture of plows in 1859. He made a failure in this branch of his business, but there will be occasion to speak of him more fully in connection with the manufacture of buggies and carriages.

Among other manufacturers of agricultural implements in those early days, we may note William E. Hopkins, who ran a foundry on Water Street, between Harrison and Liberty, and about 1843 began the manufacture of threshing machines. (Hopkins' concern will be mentioned more fully under the head of "Foundries.") From an advertisement in Drown's Record, May 1, 1844, we find that he had ready to put together eighteen 4-horse power, and eight 2-horse power threshing machines, the prices quoted for 4-horse power machines being $150, and for 2-horse power, $100. This business soon died out on account of the combined threshing machine, separator and cleaner being placed upon the market. William Peters, who ran a foundry and machine shop at the corner of Water and Walnut Streets, established in 1850, also manufactured threshing machines, horse-powers and corn-shellers. Charles Denton also ran a foundry and machine shop, started in 1850, at the corner of Harrison and Water Streets where he manufactured threshing machines, horse-powers and corn-shellers, as well as clover-hullers and reapers. The writer remembers Mr. Denton well, and was personally acquainted with him. He afterwards became associated with A. J. Hodges, who established a header factory at Pekin, Illinois. Mr. Denton was Superintendent and Master Mechanic, and to his inventive genius is largely due the invention of the Hodges header.

From Drown's Record of 1856, it appears that the output of steel plows for Peoria, for that year, amounted to about 8,500; their value $82,000; capital employed, $40,000; men employed, 65. In addition to the above, other implements not enumerated were manufactured in the same year, swelling the total to $235,000.

About the year 1856, Robinson & Dunham manufactured, in a small way, on Washington Street, between Fulton and Liberty, corn-shellers and horse-powers, their output amounting to about $0,000 per annum.

In 1857, James Selby came to Peoria and began the manufacture of grain-drills, in which he had been previously engaged at Lancaster, Ohio, at first locating on the river bank, just below the Union Depot. A year later he formed a partnership with George W. Jones and Isaac G. Lombard (the latter now of Chicago), which lasted two or three years, having, in the meantime, added the manufacture of a corn-planter to the product of his factory. He remained at his first location only about one year, when he moved to the corner of Washington and Oak Streets, which continued to be the location of the factory up to 1899. M. D. Spurek was associated with Mr. Selby for many years, under the firm name of James Selby & Co., until 1896, when Selby sold out his interest to the Messrs. Spurek, who organized the Union Corn-Planter Company, which is still in operation. The company did a large business for many years, turning out 1,500 to 3,000 corn-planters per year, according to "Balance's" History of Peoria (1879), doing the largest business in this line in Peoria.

We also find that Hearst, Dunn & Co. established a corn-planter factory, in 1864, at the corner of Washington and Oak Streets. Their business was quite extensive, as they sold their output all over the Western States where corn was grown. They continued in business until 1866.

In 1879, S. B. Hart & Co. commenced the manufacture of grain-drills on Washington Street, just west of Oak, the copartnership consisting of Stacy B. Hart and Frank Hitchcock. In 1880, they moved to the corner of Washington and Chestnut Streets, into the building known as the Voris foundry, which was destroyed by fire in 1881. They then incorporated as Hart, Hitchcock & Co., with a capital of $105,000. The officers were Frank Hitchcock, President; S. B. Hart, Vice-President and Manager; and Alban B. Fink, Secretary and Treasurer. They manufactured grain-drills, broad-cast seeders, stalk-cutters, sulky hay-rakes, hay stackers and sweep rakes. This business grew to be one of the leading industries of our city, and continued until July, 1884, when they sold out to Selby, Starr & Co., of whom further mention will be made later on.

At the present writing, Peoria has come to be one of the largest centers for the manufacture of agricultural implements in the world, and almost everything in the implement line is now being made in this city. In the following pages some of these large industries will be described in detail.

ACME HARVESTER COMPANY.

The Acme Harvester Company, if not the largest, is one of the largest, manufacturing establishments in the world, being employed exclusively in the manufacture of hay and grain harvesting machinery. This concern was established in Peoria in 1881, being operated at first in a small way on Liberty Street, between Water and Washington Streets, by John E. Kirk, now deceased. Mr. Kirk was born near Richmond, Missouri, in 1850. When about twenty-six years of age he became interested in the subject of hay-harvesting machinery, and commenced, in a small way, manufacturing haying machinery at Salisbury, Missouri, and gradually established a large trade. In 1881, he removed to Peoria, and started manufacturing, as stated above, on Liberty Street, making nothing, at that time, but hay-stackers and hay-rakes. In 1884, William E. Stone, at that time Cashier of the First National Bank, but now deceased, became interested with Mr. Kirk, as also did Henry Binnian, one of Peoria's early merchants. Business increased, and, in 1890, this concern bought out the Hodges Header Works, at Pekin, Illinois, and removed to that point, where they began manufacturing on a large scale the Acme haying machines, Hodges headers, mowers, etc. Later, Mr. Kirk disposed of his interest to Messrs. Stone and Binnian, and the management was assumed by William H. Binnian, son of Henry Binnian, and, in 1895, Harry C. Stone, son of William E. Stone—at that time a young man just from college—went into the office as an assistant of Mr. Binnian. Since that time, under the able management of these two gentlemen, their business has become one of the largest in the country.

During the last year (1901), they found that they would have to increase their manufacturing capacity to take care of their increased trade, and they concluded to remove to Peoria, where they purchased in the south end of the city, on the east side of the Peoria & Pekin Union and the Peoria & Pekin Terminal Railroads, along the banks of the river, 50 acres of ground, where they have erected a large and commodious factory, including lumber yards, sheds and other appurtenances. The main buildings are three stories high and consist of the following departments:

Machine shop	70x220 feet
Wood shop	70x220 feet
Tool room	50x100 feet
Engine room	40x100 feet
Bolt room	40x100 feet

The remainder of the buildings, being one story in height, are as follows:

Foundry No. 1	80x300 feet
Foundry No. 2	80x 85 feet
Core room	50x 80 feet
Grinding room	80x 82 feet
Wheel and forging room	60x310 feet

Pattern room	50x 80 feet
Boiler room	50x 80 feet
Iron and steel storage	50x562 feet
Box factory	50x 40 feet
Planing mill	50x 60 feet
Storage warehouse for manufac- tured goods	300x384 feet

In addition to the above, they have an elegant office building, two stories high, 65x80 feet. This factory is reached by four side tracks and is equipped with all the latest and most improved modern machinery. The present officers of the concern are:

William H. Binnian, President.
 Harry C. Stone, Vice-President.
 Oliver J. Hastings, Secretary and Treasurer.
 Frederick W. Stith, Manager of Sales.
 Herbert E. Hardin, Superintendent.
 The Capital Stock is $500,000.00.

The concern gives employment—including travelers, office men and shop men—to 1,000 people, continually the year round. The factory consumes annually 1,000 car-loads of material, producing 20,000 of the various kinds of machines, equal to 700 car-loads. The value of their annual production amounts to over $2,000,000. Their products are sold all over the world wherever grass or grain grows, and at least one-third of the entire output is shipped abroad, largely to Continental Europe, Australia, Russia and South America. They manufacture almost everything used in harvesting hay and grain, including headers, binders, mowers, sulky hay-rakes, sweep rakes, hay-stackers, etc. The company have branch houses and distributing agencies all over the United States, including the following cities: Kansas City, Missouri; Portland, Oregon; Huron, South Dakota; Des Moines, Iowa; Fargo, North Dakota; Minneapolis, Minnesota; Wichita, Kansas; Aberdeen, South Dakota; Spokane, Washington. They also have distributing points at Omaha, Nebraska; Denver, Colorado; St. Louis, Missouri; San Francisco and Los Angeles, California; Dallas, Texas; Salt Lake City, Utah; Walla Walla, Washington; Madison, Wisconsin; Winnipeg, Manitoba; Sioux City, Iowa; Sioux Falls, South Dakota; Lincoln, Nebraska; Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Their European representative is George N. Silcox, at Brussels, Belgium.

THE AVERY MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

This business was established in 1882, by Robert H. and Cyrus M. Avery, who moved to Peoria from Galesburg, where they had already been in the manufacturing business. They bought ten acres of land just within the upper city limits, below Adams Street, and running to the river. Here they erected a three-story brick building, foundry, blacksmith shop, etc., and brought with them a few car-loads of machinery, and began the manufacture of corn-planters, check-rows and stalk-cutters, to which they gradually added cultivators and small tools. In 1883, the firm name was changed to the Avery Planter Company, a stock company having been formed, with a capital of $200,000. In 1893, the company was re-organized under the name of the Avery Manufacturing Company, with a capital of $300,000. In a period of less than twenty years, its business, originally amounting to $200,000 annually and employing 150 men, has grown to about $1,250,000 annually and giving employment to over 700 men, and from the manufacture of small tools to that of a full line of threshing machinery, consisting of traction-engines from twelve to thirty horse-power, together with eleven different styles of separators, as well as wind-stackers, self-feeders, water-tanks, etc. At the present time the factory is turning out more than a train-load of goods each week, and, for each working day, a separator every two hours, a self-feeder every three hours, a wind-stacker every four hours, and a traction-engine every five hours. The number of employes, at this time, is 752.

The company have branch houses at Omaha, Nebraska; Des Moines, Iowa; Kansas City, Missouri; Indianapolis, Indiana; Minneapolis, Minnesota, and St. Louis, Missouri. The present officers are:

C. M. Avery, President.
 J. B. Bartholomew, Vice-President.
 G. F. Carson, Secretary.
 Frederick R. Avery, Treasurer.
 W. P. Sisson, Superintendent.
 F. P. Kinsey, Assistant Superintendent.
 H. C. Roberts, Manager of Sales Department.
 W. C. Mage, Manager of Collection Department.

The annual pay-roll of the concern amounts to $250,000.

The main factory consists of a building 143 x183 feet, three stories high, and in the form of a square. In addition to the main factory is a separator-erecting shop and warehouse, three stories in height, in dimensions 67x238 feet; a foundry, 70x354 feet; a blacksmith shop and iron-working department, 44x388 feet, with ells, 44x 236 feet; a separator warehouse, 28x533 feet; an engine erecting shop, 66x140 feet, with storage sheds for engines and separators (one story), 28x480 feet,—the whole making a grand total of floor-space occupied by the concern amounting to 227,000 square feet, and making it one of the largest manufactories in the world.

In addition to the trade enjoyed by the Avery Manufacturing Company throughout the United States, its manufactures are constantly being shipped to many foreign countries, including South America, South Africa, Russia, and other countries in both hemispheres. The business is managed by young and progressive men, and is increasing rapidly. If the history of the manufacturing industries of Peoria shall be written fifty years hence, it is safe to say that the volume of business at present conducted by this concern, vast as it now is, will appear small in comparison with what it is destined to be, as the result of the development of another half century.

HART GRAIN-WEIGHER COMPANY.

This concern was established in 1888, with a capital stock of $25,000, with S. B. Hart, President; D. S. Lee, Vice-President; W. C. Hanna, Secretary and Treasurer. In 1899, the capital stock was increased to $150,000, with the following officers, who are continued to the present time:

Stacy B. Hart, President.

Walter B. Wilde, Vice-President.

David S. Lee, Secretary and Treasurer.

The factory was first located at 218-220 South Water Street, but the Company have recently taken possession of a new building at the corner of Eaton and Water Streets, specially erected for this purpose, and in which the factory is now located. The building is four stories in height (above basement), 135x145 feet, containing a floor-space of 75,000 square feet, and is equipped with all the latest appliances for the manufacture of their goods, as well as the most modern conveniences.

This concern manufactures exclusively automatic grain-weighers for threshing machines. They employ from 150 to 200 hands, and manufacture 5,000 machines per annum, which are sold almost exclusively to threshing-machine manufacturers, who make them a part of the threshing-machine equipment, and are shipped all over the world. This firm controls a great number of valuable patents for grain-weighing machinery.

KINGMAN FLOW COMPANY.

This company is one of the leading industrial enterprises of Peoria, as well as the State of Illinois. It is practically a new concern, situated in the village of Averyville, east of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, at the corner of Fairholm Street. The ground was broken for the erection of the first building of the new plant on April 7, 1899, and manufacturing was commenced in October of the same year.

The site upon which the factory is located consists of thirteen acres of ground, and the following buildings compose the plant at the present time, which it is the intention to gradually increase as fast as it is possible to do so:

One-story brick building, 160x50 feet, for the storage of bar steel and steel shapes.

One-story brick building, 128x40 feet, used for the storage of malleable iron, castings, bolts, etc.

The above buildings are reached by a side track running their entire length. Between these two buildings are the power plant, 78x70 feet; machine shop, 50x30 feet; pattern shop, 50x47 feet.

The manufacturing part of the plant consists of the following buildings:

One-story, monitor-roof building, 440x80 feet, which contains the blacksmith department, the fitting department, the grinding and polishing department, the wood department, the erecting department and foundry. It is of steel construction, and is without columns or posts throughout its entire length.

The next building to this is a two-story, slow-burning construction, with automatic sprinkler throughout, 306x80 feet; the upper floor being used for offices and paint-shop, and the lower floor for the storage of goods.

Next to the last is a storage warehouse, four stories, 306x80 feet, reached by a side-track with a capacity of eight cars. It is used exclusively for loading out goods in car lots.

Other extensive additions are in contemplation.

The machinery is driven by a 300 horse-power Corliss engine, the plant being lighted throughout with electric lights, driven with an eighty-horse-power automatic engine and dynamo. The steam for the power plant is furnished by three 150-horse power boilers, equipped with the latest smoke-consuming devices. The entire plant is equipped with full system of water-works for protection against fire—high-pressure connected with the city water-works, and low-pressure connected with a 30,000-gallon storage tank.

In this connection, a brief description of the mode of manufacturing plows at this time, compared with that of early days, will not be out of place. The Kingman Plow Company's plant is one of the most modern in the country. Material is received into the storage sheds without any elevating whatever, and goes into each department of manufacture with as little handling as possible, all being on the same level. The blacksmith shop is equipped with the most modern trip-hammers, drop-hammers, welding machines, automatic grinders, bull-dozers for bending beams and frames for plows, cultivators, etc. The process of hardening plows is also quite different from that in use in early days. This plant is equipped with one of the most modern furnaces for heating the steel, and, for cooling the tempering brine, they have a 30-horse power refrigerating plant. The plow-erecting plant is so complete that all parts are duplicated. In the grinding of plows, they use large, massive grindstones, driven by shafting from overhead, and the dust from these stones is taken away by exhaust fans and stored in a pit intended for that purpose. Another novel feature of this department is, that the stones are brought into this department from the grind-stone yard on an overhead trolley system, which is a large step in advance of rolling them in, as a great many do. The plant is equipped throughout with an overhead trolley system for moving manufactured goods from the blacksmith shop and the erecting department into the paint-shop, and the articles remain on this trolley until they are painted, striped and varnished, and finally bundled away ready for storage, when they are run up on the trolley into the storage warehouse, thereby saving a great many handlings.

The capital stock of this concern is $400,000, which will soon be increased to $1,000,000. The present officers are:

Martin Kingman, President.
 Louis S. Kingman, Vice-President.
 Gustavus H. Schimpff, Secretary.
 Walter B. Kingman, Treasurer.
 George E. Evans, Superintendent.

At the present time they employ from 260 to 300 hands, and manufacture annually about 30,000 complete implements of different kinds, such as walking-plows; lister-plows with drill attachments—both walking and riding; riding-plows, both single and gang; drag harrows, and a great variety of corn cultivators. Their trade extends over the Middle and Western States, and is handled by branch houses at the following points: Peoria, Illinois; St. Louis and Kansas City, Missouri; Omaha, Nebraska; Des Moines, Iowa; Minneapolis, Minnesota; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Dallas, Texas. At these several points they employ some 350 men.

In addition to the domestic trade, the company have considerable foreign trade, and, at this writing, have an order booked for several hundred plows to be shipped to Vladivostok, Siberia.

RHEA-THELENS IMPLEMENT COMPANY.

This is the name of a corporation organized in 1894, with Robert L. Rhea, President; Alexis B. Theilens, Secretary and Treasurer. Originally the projectors were wholesale manufacturers' agents for various lines of agricultural implements. In 1895, they erected a commodious warehouse at the corner of Chestnut and Water Streets, 170x60 feet, four stories high, with basement. They have gradually increased the capacity of their establishment, until, at the present time, they have over 80,000 square feet of floor-space, in addition to yard room for the storage of lumber, etc. Their buildings are reached by side-tracks, and they have every convenience for the quick handling of goods. They commenced the manufacturing department in 1899, during that year making a limited number of force-feed end-gate seeders, and during the year 1900, brought out and began the manufacture of corn-planters. They are now making end-gate force-feed seeders to the extent of 4,500 annually, as well as corn-planters, and the indications are that this will prove to be one of the leading manufactories of Peoria in the not distant future.

SELBY, STARR & COMPANY.

This company was first organized as a copartnership in 1885, succeeding Hart & Hitchcock, then located at the corner of Washington and Chestnut Streets. This firm consisted of Messrs. James Selby, Julius S. Starr and Alban B. Fink. During the same year the factory was destroyed by fire, when the concern removed to what is known as Glendale Park, in Averyville, erecting there a large and commodious factory, which covers a large area of ground, and where it is now located. In 1889, the company was incorporated under the firm name of Selby, Starr & Co., with the following officers:

James Selby, President.

Julius S. Starr, Vice-President and Treasurer.

Alban B. Fink, Secretary.

This corporation continued until 1898, when Mr. Starr bought out the interests of Mr. Selby and Mr. Fink, and has continued its management since that time. They are large manufacturers of corn-drills, broad-cast seeders, hay-rakes, drag-harrows, etc., etc. The concern employs from 100 to 125 men, their trade extending all over the Western as well as the Middle States. They have one of the best equipped and most modern plants in the State for the manufacture of agricultural implements, and enjoy a large and growing trade.

UNION CORN PLANTER COMPANY.

This is a corporation consisting of Charles J. Spureck, George A. Spureck, Walter L. Spureck and Edmond L. Spureck, and is the outgrowth of the firm of James Selby & Co., which began business in Peoria in 1857. In 1896, Mr. Selby retired, when the present corporation was formed. Three years later the concern removed to the corner of Water and Hamilton Streets, where it is still engaged in the manufacture of corn-planters.

ARCHITECTURAL IRON-WORKS.

This business was established in 1857, by Mr. Adam Lucas, in a small shop on Liberty Street, between Washington and Adams, making, at that time, vault-doors and locks. In 1859, he removed to Washington Street, between Fulton and Liberty; in 1863, to 207 Fulton Street, and in 1866, to 211 Fulton Street. In 1880, Mr. Lucas took into partnership his sons, Emil and Hugo, and the firm name was changed to A. Lucas & Sons. The factory was enlarged, and they commenced the manufacture of architectural iron, structural iron, ornamental iron, etc. Their business greatly increased, and, in 1897, the firm was incorporated, with A. Lucas, President; Emil Lucas, Vice-President; and Hugo Lucas, Secretary and Treasurer. In that year, they removed to their present location, at corner of Washington and Cedar Streets, erecting large and commodious buildings, which enabled them to increase their capacity four-fold. The firm, at present, employs 75 men, and, in addition to the above, manufacture iron bridges, besides designing and manufacturing steel-frame buildings as well as erecting them. A large stock of structural steel shapes is carried on hand. At the present time, Mr. Adam Lucas does not take an active part in the business, being retired. The business is in the hands of the two sons, who are progressive and wide-awake business men.

ART GLASS.

This business was established in 1900, at 500 Main Street. Mr. U. C. Grooms was formerly a dealer in plate and window glass, paints, oils, etc. In 1900, he commenced the manufacture of art glass, and his business increased so that, in 1901, he had to seek larger quarters. He purchased a two-story brick building at Nos. 3118 to 3122 North Adams Street, where he is engaged in the manufacture of art glass exclusively, employing from 10 to 15 men. His product is shipped all over the country.

ARTIFICIAL ICE AND COLD STORAGE.

The Peoria Artificial Ice Company, Charles Monniger, Treasurer and Manager, is located at 920 to 924 South Washington Street. The manufacture of artificial ice was commenced by this concern in 1897, when they erected a complete new plant, which is of the most modern type, having a capacity of 75 tons of ice per day, with a cold-storage capacity for 75 car-loads. The capital stock is $80,000, and, during the selling season of ice, they employ 35 men. This is just a beginning of this business in Peoria, and the indications are that artificial ice will rapidly displace the natural product, as it is made from pure distilled water, perfectly free from foreign matter of any kind. We predict a large increase of this industry in the next few years.

AWNINGS AND TENTS.

This business was carried on in a small way as early as 1870, and, at this writing, is quite an extensive industry, especially in the manufacture of awnings. The following firms are now in the business:

Peoria Tent and Awning Company, 100 Main Street; Edward N. Woodruff, Proprietor; Ralph O. Kunkle, Manager.

Western Awning Company, 117 Main Street.

NL Tent & Awning Company, 124 Main Street.

BICYCLES.

At one time Peoria was one of the large manufacturing points for bicycles in the United States. Rouse, Hazard & Co, first began the business, in 1893, at the corner of Adams and Harrison Streets. This was in a limited way, but, in 1895, they built a large and commodious factory at Peoria Heights, which still stands, being utilized for other industries. Owing to the decline in the demand for this modern vehicle, Rouse, Hazard & Co. discontinued the manufacture in 1898. In the year 1896, this factory employed as high as 350 men, and manufactured 7,500 bicycles.

The Idle Mfg. Company commenced manufacturing bicycles in 1894, in the building known as the Watch Factory building, continuing the business successfully until 1899. They employed 300 men, and made 2,000 bicycles annually. Their machine was of the highest grade, and one of the highest priced on the market.

The Peoria Rubber and Manufacturing Company, organized in 1896, erected a large brick building at Peoria Heights, where they employed 600 men, and manufactured 10,000 bicycles and 25,000 pairs of bicycle tires annually. In 1899, they sold out to the American Bicycle Company, who closed this factory. The building is now occupied as a vehicle factory.

The Patee Bicycle Company was organized in 1899, and located on Main Street, between Water and Washington Streets. It employed from 40 to 50 hands, and made over 5,000 bicycles annually. In 1900, they removed to Indianapolis, Indiana.

Luthy & Co. started a bicycle factory in 1895, at 606-608 South Washington Street. This factory prospered during the next three years, when bicycles were in demand, employing from 25 to 30 men, and making from 1,000 to 2,000 machines annually.

BINDER-TWINE.

The Peoria Cordage Company, No. 1502-1504 South Washington Street, Martin Kingman, President; E. C. Heidrich, Vice-President and Manager; G. H. Schimpff, Treasurer; E. C. Heidrich, Jr., Secretary, is one of our most important industries in Peoria. It was organized in 1888, by Kingman & Company and E. C. Heidrich, the latter removing here from Miamisburg, Ohio, where he had been interested in the manufacture of rope prior to the invention of the twine binder. The first factory (a small building erected for the purpose) contained a small number of spindles, but the demand for Peoria twine has so largely increased since then, it has been found necessary to enlarge the plant from time to time, and this mill has probably been operated more hours during its existence than any other mill in the United States.

Their factory building is a three-story brick, having a frontage of 220 feet by 346 feet deep, is equipped with modern machinery, and reached by commodious side tracks for the quick handling of goods, and contains over 400 spindles. The value of the raw material consumed during the year is $400,000. The concern employs 225 hands, and turns out an annual product of 700 tons, valued at $520,000.

Under this heading, a few words in regard to what binding twine is made from will not be out of place. The mechanism of a self-binder is such that the twine has to be evenly spun and of even tensile strength of about 75 pounds to the strand; hence hard fiber is especially adapted to the manufacture of binding twine. The hard fiber hems used are Manila and Sisal. There are a number of other hard fiber hems that have been tested and found very good, yet the volume of production has not been sufficient to bring them into commercial use.

One of the chief industries of the Philippine Islands is the production and exportation of manila hemp. This hemp is especially valuable in the manufacture of all kinds of rope, from the heaviest hawser to the finest of twine, as well as binder twine. The manila tree belongs to the banana family, and grows best in volcanic soils, where the ground is dry and the moisture overhead, the most productive plantations being among the hills in volcanic countries. The trees are planted from shoots, require little cultivation, and grow to the height of from eight to ten feet, and from five to seven inches in diameter. When the tree is from three to five years old, it is considered sufficiently mature to be cut and stripped of its fiber. This stripping is a difficult process. The native cleaners who live in the valley go up into the hills and camp out during the season, their experienced eyes being able to tell at a glance whether the tree is old enough for cutting or not. The law and custom in the island is, before stripping the fiber from the tree cut down, to plant a shoot in close proximity to the spot where the former tree grew, thus providing a new tree to take the place of the old one.

Rev. W. H. Henshaw

The operation of gathering the fiber is, first to strip off the leaves, and when this is done, the bare stalk, some eight or ten feet in length and five to seven inches in diameter, is ready to be worked upon. The operator strips off the extreme outer skin, when the real work commences. In the center of the stalk is a stout pith, around which grow alternate layers of the fiber and a sappy vegetable matter. This fiber must be carefully stripped off at once to prevent the sap from rotting the same. After the fiber has been taken out, it is spread on the ground to dry. One tree will yield about a pound of fiber. The Filipino who does this work is not very industrious, and it takes him about a week to get fifty pounds of fiber, which he ties up, straps upon his back, and carries to market, where he disposes of it to what is called a "middle man." The "middle man" packs it in small bales and ships it to the coast, where it is sold to the European or American buyer, who grades and rebundles it. The grade depends upon the color, coarseness and length of fiber, and the product is sold on the market accordingly. The annual shipment of manila hemp from the Philippines amounts to from 600,000 to 800,000 bales, averaging about 270 pounds to the bale, at an average of ten cents per pound, having a money value of $16,000,000 to $20,000,000.

Sisal hemp is grown mostly in the province of Northern Yucatan, and in a small way in portions of Southern Mexico. This plant grows wild in Yucatan. On the discovery of that country by Cortez, it was found that sisal was used by the natives for all kinds of purposes for which leather is used at the present time. There are two varieties of sisal—the Zacci, a white hemp, and Yaxai, a green hemp, the first being considered the best. The sisal plant resembles the century plant—the leaves being from three to five feet long, two to three inches thick, and dark green in color. The plants are set out on a plantation from eight to ten feet apart, and when four or five years old, are ready for harvesting, the operation being quite simple. The natives use a large knife, similar to our corn-cutter, knock the thorns off the leaves, and then cut the leaves from the stalks and throw them into piles, whence they are taken to grinding mills, which resemble our cane-mills. These press the pulp and juice out of the leaves, leaving the fiber, which is then hung on strands of wire and dried in the sun. When thoroughly dry, they are taken down and pressed into bales of about 500 pounds each, and are then ready for market and shipment to this or any other country. Many plantations in Yucatan produce as many as 1,500 bales per month. In 1898, the total amount of hemp shipped was 243,968 bales, while the estimated production for this year will be about 500,000 bales, having a market value, at present prices, of about $20,000,000.

BOATS.

Boat building in the city of Peoria was, at one time, quite an extensive industry, but there are no data as to the builders. We find in "Drown's Record" for 1851, a list of boats in the Illinois River trade, and note the following were Peoria built:

"Kingston"—a tow-boat, built in 1849, tonnage 145 tons.

"Avalanche"—a regular packet, built in 1848, tonnage 220 tons.

The first record we find of boat-builders was in 1856, when there were three firms engaged in the boat-building trade here, viz.; Joshua Barnes & Co., Deputy & Schlachter, and J. L. Simpson & Co. In 1856, Deputy and Schlachter built boats to the value of $20,000, employing 40 hands. During the same year, J. L. Simpson & Co. built the steamer "Lacon," but no data have been preserved showing the value of this boat, or the number of hands they employed. In 1857, D. Wiley was engaged in the boat-building trade, employing 40 hands. Barnes' boat-yard was on the river bank just above where the gas works now are, that of Deputy & Schlachter being in the same vicinity. The above concerns continued in business during the early '60s, and boat-building was a thriving industry until pushed aside by the rapid increase of steam railways. Within the last few years, Henry M. Rehder had a boat-yard just across the river from the gas works.

BOOK-BINDERS AND PRINTERS.

It is believed that the first book-binder in Peoria was one Davis, a brother of Samuel H. Davis, who was editor of the "Peoria Register and Northwestern Gazetteer" about 1837. The first-named Davis had built for himself a small one-story shop on the lower corner of Liberty and Washington Streets, which, in order to render it more conspicuous, he attempted to have painted of different colors on the several sides, but ended by having one side white and another black, which obtained for it the name of "the speckled building." A copy of a book bound by Mr. Davis, in 1839, is still in existence in this city, the cover being a very common blue paste-board, with a back of ordinary sheepskin, and corners protected by the same.

There is some doubt whether any book was printed here previous to 1844, when Drown's Peoria Directory (under date of May 1st, of that year) was issued by S. DeWitt Drown. Drown was his own printer, publisher and binder, doing all the work himself. It will be seen that Davis' book-binding antedated the appearance of Drown's work by five years. In Drown's Directory, of the year mentioned, appear the following advertisements of concerns engaged in printing and book-binding at that time:

Samuel H. Davis, corner Main Street and Printers' Alley.

Thomas J. Pickett, corner Main Street and Printers' Alley.

Printers' Alley of that time was the alley between Water and Washington Streets, and received its name on account of the printing houses adjacent thereto.

We also find an advertisement of Zieber & Sloan, who were located at the corner of Main and Washington Streets. Later, Benjamin Foster ran a book-bindery on Main Street. In 1856, C. Chapin was doing business as a "book-binder and book-maker" at No. 4 Fulton Street. So much for the early history of this industry, which, at the present time, is quite large in the city of Peoria.

We note the following concerns in operation at the present time:

J. W. Franks & Sons, who are located at the corner of Fulton and Water Streets, in a large and commodious brick building, built especially for their business, which consists of printing, lithographing and book-binding. This is an incorporated company, with a capital stock of $55,000. The present officers are Gerald B. Franks, President; Samuel D. Reynolds, Secretary and Treasurer. It was first established in 1872, at 211 Main Street (up stairs), whence they removed across the street, to 210, and again to 206 South Jefferson Street, and thence to their present location. They consume raw materials per annum to the amount of $25,000, employ 86 hands, who earn, approximately, $1,000 per week. The total value of their annual product is $100,000.

The B. Frank Brown Company, located at 110 South Washington Street, has for its officers B. Frank Brown, President; E. H. Zarley, Secretary; and M. B. Cook, Treasurer. This concern does job printing, and also manufactures blank books. It is an incorporation, with capital of $13,000; value of plant, $10,000. It has been in operation since 1890, and has increased from a very small beginning to an annual output of $35,000. The company employ about 35 hands, whose wages amount to a total of $225 per week.

Messrs. Rodney Mitchell & Co., 204 South Washington Street, manufacture blank books exclusively. The value of their output amounts to $20,000 per annum, employing 15 hands.

Edward Hine & Co., 400-402 South Adams Street. This concern is engaged mostly in commercial printing, but does some book-binding. The value of their product is about $35,000 per annum, employing 25 hands, with an annual payroll of $15,000.

BREWERIES.

Owing to the necessity of a low temperature in the brewing process, all beer made in Peoria, at an early day, was made in the winter months and stored in caves or cellars which were dug along the brow of the bluffs. Later when the business of harvesting and storing ice began to be prosecuted on a large scale, brewing was continued through the entire year, the product being kept cool in ice-houses. At a still later period the introduction of the artificial ice-machine displaced the natural ice, and a well equipped brewery now-a-days manufactures its own ice, the machinery for that purpose having become a large part of the modern brewery. The first brewery of which any account appears on record was that of Frederick Müller, established as early as 1840—probably earlier, as the newspapers of 1838, show that he was advertising for barley during the latter year. His establishment was located on the corner of Water and Hudson (now Bridge) Streets, which is believed to have been the same ground now occupied by the present Gipps Brewing Company, and which has been so occupied from the beginning.

The next brewery established was located at the corner of Water and Irving Streets by Huber, Raush & Kolb in 1849, and this location has been occupied as a brewery continuously since that time. It has changed hands many times since then, coming into possession of the present owners in 1884. The Leisy Brewing Company who now conduct that concern is an incorporation, with a capital of $250,000, Edward C. Leisy being the President, Albert E. Leisy, Secretary and Treasurer, and John W. Leisy, Vice-President. This brewery is the largest in the State outside of Chicago, employing 110 hands and having a capacity of 150,000 barrels of beer per annum. It is run continuously the year round, night and day. The main building is five stories in height with a frontage on Water Street of 400 feet and 134 feet on Irving Street. It has boilers of 450 horse-power capacity, engines of 150 horse-power, and a refrigerating plant of 150 tons capacity for every 24 hours.

According to Drown's Record of 1856 there were at that time in Peoria five breweries with an annual output valued at $25,000.

The next brewery we find an account of was established in 1858 on Washington Street below Cedar, by Weber, Lutz & Co., who were succeeded by Lutz & Lincoln. This place has changed hands many times since its original establishment, coming into possession of the present owners, the Union Brewing Company, in 1885. The last named Company was incorporated with a capital of $200,000. The present officers are Jacob Woolner, President; S. J. Woolner, Vice-President; E. H. Woolner, Treasurer; K. S. Woolner, Secretary. Soon after coming into possession of this brewery the present proprietors built large additions to it and have since added a malt-house, bottling works and boiler-house. At the present time they occupy numbers 1701 to 1709 South Washington Street, and have one of the best equipped and largest plants in Central Illinois, having an annual capacity of $115,000 valuation, employing 30 hands with an annual pay-roll of $17,000, and consuming raw material of the value of $38,000 per annum.

BRICK.

It has been difficult to find any data as to the early manufacture of brick in Peoria, but as there were brick-masons and brick-houses here as early as 1840, the probabilities are that there were brick-yards at that early date. In fact, there is evidence that brick was manufactured in 1834-35 for the first brick Court House erected during those years—the yard being at the foot of the bluff just east of Knoxville Avenue. The first record of any yard in any of the directories or records appears in 1863, when Sidney Pulsifer conducted a yard here. This appears to have been about the site of that used for the manufacture of brick for the Court House in 1834-35.

This yard was continued as late as 1870. Later, in 1867 we find that J. R. Miller had a yard on Elizabeth Street, just north of High Street, also A. Hepler, on Main Street, just east of Elizabeth. There is no doubt that yards were scattered all over the bluff from a very early date.

The present manufacturers of brick in Peoria include the following: Albert E. Giles, corner of Gale Avenue and Broadway. This concern was established in 1860 by Mr. J. B. Pierce, whom Mr. Giles succeeded in 1868. Mr. Giles employs twelve men, and his annual output is about 1,800,000 brick.

E. R. Carter, East Peoria, Ill. This business was established in 1860 by the Spurek's Street Paving Brick Company, who operated it until 1890, Mr. Carter at that time succeeding. Mr. Carter manufactures building and paving brick, and the yard has a capacity of from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 brick per annum.

We also note the following manufacturers who have been asked to furnish data as to their plants for this work, but from whom no replies have been received: Jos. B. Pierce, Hamlin Avenue near Gordon Avenue; John Madigan, Seventh Avenue near Sterling Avenue; Kanne Bros. & Co., Aiken Avenue near Sterling Avenue; William Fox, 1011 North Elizabeth Street; J. H. Flannigan, Hamlin Avenue near Gale Avenue.

BROOMS.

Although no data are accessible as to the early manufacture of brooms in Peoria, we find in Drown's Record for 1850 that there were shipped from this city in that year 1,300 dozen brooms. The first broom factory of which any mention has been found in any of the old directories was operated in 1859 by Bowen & Childs, No. 264 South Adams Street. In 1863 we note the following factories in this line:

A. S. Conover, on High Street, near Main.

Edwin Storey, 21 Fulton Street.

Henry R. Van Epps, 52 South Water Street.

Adam J. Neill, 269 Hamlin Street.

The two last named continued in business for a number of years. Mr. Van Epps still lives in Peoria and conducts a wire factory, and Mr. Neill is still engaged in the manufacture of brooms at 317 North Street.

It has been impossible to get any exact information as to what these industries amounted to. The following concerns, not already mentioned, are engaged in this line of manufacture at the present time: George C. Brooks, 1007 East Nebraska Avenue; John Kirkman & Son, 102 North Bourland Street; William J. Heath, 424 New York Avenue.

Some time prior to 1860 an entire quarter-section of land, on the bluff west of Western Avenue was planted in broom corn. An experiment was tried by Messrs. Moss, Bradley & Co. in the manufacture of whisky from the seed, which was measurably successful, but the product was nauseating to the taste, which rendered it unfit for use as a beverage and the experiment was not repeated. The manufacture of brooms here about that time was quite extensive.

CEREAL FOODS.

The Cereal Food Company (Incorporated), of which Normand K. Smith is President and Wyllys K. Smith, Secretary, is located at 300 North Water Street and has a capital stock of $20,000. Their business was established in 1896, and was first located at 202 South Water Street, afterwards removed to 415 South Washington, and thence to the present location where they have large and commodious manufacturing facilities. They consume raw material to the value of $35,000 per annum, and their annual product is about $85,000, which has gradually increased from a beginning of $16,000. The company employs 75 people and has an annual pay-roll of about $10,000. They manufacture lye hominy, which is put up in cans ready for table use.

The firm of Steward & Merriam is a co-partnership concern, originally composed of H. B. Steward (now deceased) and F. G. Merriam. Its works are located at 519 North Water Street, the capital invested being $150,000. The value of the plant is about $100,000, which consists of a large brick building equipped with the latest modern machinery. This business was first established in 1872 at Akron, Ohio, and later removed to Peoria. They employ 20 people in the manufacture of oat-meal and rolled-oats, which they put up in bulk and also in cartons, and in which they have an extensive trade.

PHARMACEUTICAL CHEMISTS

The Allaire-Woodward Company is an incorporated concern with a capital stock of $150,000, located at 110 Main Street. Its present officers are: James A. Smith, President; H. J. Woodward, Vice-President; J. N. Ward, Secretary;

Eliot Callender, Treasurer. The business was established in 1873 at the corner of Water and Hamilton Streets and later removed to its present location. The company manufacture fluid and solid-fluid medical extracts, sugar-coated pills, and grind, powder and press all kinds of staple botanic products. Their goods are shipped to Europe, Australia and to every State and Territory in the Union. About 400,000 pounds of roots and herbs are manipulated annually. Their sales aggregate $70,000 annually. They employ 90 persons. The domestic roots and other raw products employed in their manufacture come principally from the Southern States, a great portion being from North Carolina. The business of the concern has increased gradually from the beginning.

CIGARS.

Peoria is one of the leading producers of cigars in the State. One of the early manufacturers prior to 1844 was Geo. W. Hickey, located on Main Street between Washington and Adams. Later (in 1856) Justus B. Fleck had an establishment at 13 Main Street. In 1858 John R. Day was engaged in the business at 29 Hamilton Street, and in 1859 Callender & Day were located at 39 Hamilton Street. Many changes in this industry have taken place since that time, of which it is not necessary to make mention here. At the present time we find the following concerns in operation: Chas. B. Hoffman, 411 South Adams; Jacob Hoffman, 217 South Washington; Frank P. Lewis, 207 North Jefferson. The latter is the largest cigar factory in Peoria, and was established in 1885 at 226 Main Street. Later Mr. Lewis purchased the building once occupied as a residence by the late Robert G. Ingersoll, and converted it into one of the most modern and hygienic cigar factories in the world. The building stands by itself and has light from the four sides; is also equipped with reading and waiting rooms for the employes, lavatories and every convenience. The concern employs 125 hands and consumes annually 150,000 pounds of tobacco, the product amounting to 5,500,000 cigars per annum, which is sold all over the Middle, Southern and Western States. Mr. Lewis also conducts a retail store at 323 Main Street. He was the originator of the process of packing cigars in tin-foil packages, in which he now has many imitators.

Another large factory is that of Springer

Bros., located at 114-116 North Washington Street. This is a co-partnership concern, consisting of Joseph Springer and William H. Springer, having a capital invested of $12,000. Their business was established in 1885 in block 1400 South Adams—later removed to its present location. They employ 47 hands, consume raw material per annum amounting to $21,000, with an annual product of $55,000. Their business has increased from a few thousand dollars per annum and from a force of nine hands to its present capacity.

COOPERAGE.

Among the early coopers of Peoria prior to 1844, we note Elijah M. Applegate on Adams at the head of Gay Street, Uriah Shook on Jefferson Street, between Fulton and Liberty, and James Soles on Madison Street between Main and Fulton. There is reason to believe that the product of these early concerns was confined chiefly to the manufacture of wooden cisterns, flour-barrels, wash-tubs, horse and well-buckets and other articles of domestic use. At a later period, when distilleries began to be established and multiply, distillers, as a matter of economy in their business, soon began to manufacture barrels for their own use, and thus large coopering establishments grew up and have now become a leading industry. The value of barrels manufactured here in 1856 was estimated at $130,000.

The first steam barrel factory of which mention is made was established in 1856 under the name of the Billings Barrel Factory, and it is noted by Drown that the proprietor had one of Trapper's famous barrel machines, which had a capacity of 100 barrels per day. Of course this is small compared to the output of the factories of the present day, of which we note the following:

MADIGAN & WALSH Co., a corporation, with Peter Casey, President and Treasurer; T. H. Wentworth, Secretary, and J. E. Murphy, Manager; located on Chicago Street between Washington and Water Streets; capital invested, $150,000; value of plant, $120,000. This business was established in 1884 at the rear of No. 110 Elliott Street, and has increased from 40 barrels per day to 1,500 barrels per day at the present time. They consume raw material per annum to the amount of $500,000, and employ 125 hands with an approximate pay-roll of $70,000, and turn out an annual product valued at $600,000. They manufacture all kinds of cooperage, which they sell largely to the distilleries of this city.

THE EMPIRE COOPERAGE COMPANY (incorporated), located at South and Water Streets; M. H. Ritzwoller, President, and Adolph Raffman, Secretary and Manager. This concern manufactures what is known to the trade as "slack barrels." Their capital stock is $9,000. They have recently installed machinery by which they manufacture barrels by steam, and now have a capacity of 1,000 barrels per day.

NATIONAL COOPERAGE & WOODEN WARE COMPANY. Its main shop, formerly known as the Hutchinson, is located on Washington Street, extending from Apple to Warren; also operates what was formerly known as the Peoria Cooperage Company works, located on Cedar Street between Washington and Water. This concern is incorporated with a capital stock of $500,000, being organized in 1898. The present officers are: J. B. Greenhut, President; Adolph Woolner, First Vice-President; Max Rosenow, Second Vice-President; Max H. Ritzwoller, Secretary; E. J. Kahn, Treasurer.

This is, no doubt, the largest cooperage concern in the world, having a daily capacity of 2,000 whisky, 3,000 glucose and 1,000 oil barrels, besides a large quantity of lard tierces, small buckets, etc., for jelly, glucose and like products. The company employ at Peoria 650 hands, and their annual product is valued at $2,000,000. In addition to their cooperage plant located at Peoria, they own their own stave plants, which are located in Arkansas and Missouri.

CRACKERS AND CONFECTIONERY.

This industry was of early date in Peoria. As early as 1844 G. A. Besemen, located on Water Street between Main and Hamilton, made Boston and water-crackers for the retail trade. At the same date, George Kagee, located on Main Street between Washington and Adams, manufactured all kinds of crackers and confectionery. The first steam bakery was established in 1850 at 8 South Water Street by William J. Ferren, who manufactured a full line of crackers for the wholesale trade. James Stewart was also a manufacturer of crackers and confectionery in the early '50s, being located at 42 Main Street. The first large steam cracker and confectionery factory in Peoria was established in 1858 by Frank Field & Co. at the corner of Sixth and Franklin Streets. The business was continued by Field, who will be well remembered as a live, progressive citizen of Peoria from that time forward. He was succeeded in 1876 by Kellogg & Davis. Their factory was three stories high, built of brick and had the latest improved machinery. It consumed 30 barrels of flour per day and 15 barrels of sugar, producing in the same time 60 barrels of crackers and 1,500 pounds of confectionery. They employed an average of 30 hands with three traveling men, their annual business amounting to $150,000. The business was continued by the same firm for several years at this location, but later removed to Washington Street, and was finally sold to the National Biscuit Company. In 1865, M. J. Lathrop conducted a wholesale cracker and confectionery business at 19 South Washington Street. Mr. Lathrop will be remembered by many of the early settlers as a wide-awake business man. He continued in business for a number of years, until his decease, when the concern was closed out. In 1867 Harsch Bros. engaged in this business at the corner of Franklin and Adams Streets, and later removed to 310-312 South Washington Street. This grew to be quite an extensive concern, manufacturing 60 barrels of crackers per day, besides a large amount of confectionery.

The following are the principal concerns engaged in this line of industry at the present time:

National Biscuit Company, located at 408-410 South Washington Street, is a branch of the National Biscuit Company, of New York. They consume 60 barrels of flour per day and 1,500 pounds of sugar, manufacturing 500 boxes of crackers and 2,000 pounds of confectionery. They employ on an average 150 hands and 10 traveling men.

William P. Gauss, confectioner, 112-114 Liberty Street, has a capital of $30,000 invested in his business, which was established in 1895 at the present location. This concern consumes raw material to the amount of $25,000 per annum. It employs an average of 40 people, with an approximate pay-roll of $32,500 per annum and an annual product of $75,000.

Thomas & Clark, a co-partnership, consisting of Albert V. Thomas and Robert B. Clark, at 306-312 South Washington Street, is engaged in the manufacture of crackers only. This concern has adopted as its "slogan," "Not in the Trust." It enjoys a large trade throughout the Middle and Western States, and is represented on the road by six traveling men and employs an average of 85 people. It consumes 60 barrels of flour per day in the manufacture of 500 boxes of crackers. Messrs. Thomas & Clark manufacture all kinds of crackers, fancy biscuit and sweet goods, comprising some 155 varieties.

CELLULOSE.

The Marsden Company, whose main office is at 850 Drexel Building, Philadelphia, with E. G. Bruckner, President, and A. G. Winter, General Manager, is the representative of this new and important industry in Peoria. Besides their Peoria factory, they have plants at Owensboro, Ky., West Point, Va., and Linden, Ind. The Peoria plant, of which T. S. Ayers is the Superintendent, is the largest of the several plants owned by the company. It is located midway between Peoria and Pekin, in other words, in South Bartonville, a suburb of Peoria. The company have half a mile of siding connected with both the Peoria & Pekin Union and the Peoria & Pekin Terminal Railroads, which gives them access to all railways entering Peoria. This concern has for its object the utilization of cornstalks—chiefly the pith—in the manufacture of various products for mechanical and commercial purposes, which will be explained more fully later on in this article.

The plant occupies 36 acres, nearly one-half of which is already covered with buildings so arranged that they can be enlarged as the business requires. The cornstalks received at this plant are shipped from Midway and Lincoln, Illinois, in enormous freight cars, owned by the Marsden Company, which, by the way, are the largest freight cars in existence. Peoria was chosen for the location of the plant on account of the superior railroad facilities and the cheapness and close proximity of the coal supply—mines being located at each end of the property and within 500 yards of the engine room.

It is with no small degree of pleasure—in fact, with much pride—that the author of this article calls attention to the above mentioned enterprise. It can be pointed to as an enterprise which has developed a new line of industry and opened up a new source of profit to the agricultural industries of the country. The investment of $200,000 capital in this city and the employment of a large number of men in an entirely new industry, in addition to enhancing the value of corn land, and increasing the value of the corn crop with little additional outlay and very little additional labor to the farmer, are important considerations. This has been made possible by Mr. Mark Marsden, who, some years ago, after a long series of experiments, demonstrated that cornstalks, by various processes, could be made into a dozen or more products, the principal one of which was Cellulose, which could be put upon the market with a wide margin of profit, after prices had been paid for the raw material which seemed ridiculously high.

The mechanical equipment of this plant is something remarkable, being made up almost wholly of inventions of the Marsden Company. The most gifted scientists and inventive geniuses of the world have been employed, with the result that the process has been so perfected that, from the time the stalks are placed into the gigantic cutter at one end of the works, they are never again touched by workmen until a dozen or more products are turned out in almost as many different parts of the factory ready for shipment. The Cellulose proper is carried into a deep receptacle and is there pressed with a 72-ton hydraulic press, which is over 600 feet from the original cutter, without having been handled by any other agency than this machinery. This enables the Marsden Company to operate a very large plant with not over fifty men.

A brief description of the manner in which Cellulose is made will be of interest here. The stalks are received in the factory tied into bundles as large as a man can handle. They are next thrown upon a carrier by which they are conveyed to the cutting machine, wherein they are chopped into pieces half an inch long, the leaves and husks passing through without being pulverized. All the stalk is cut up, and in the cutting process a considerable portion of the outside shell is torn from the pith. The mass then passes up an elevator and is discharged into large revolving reels, covered with mesh-cloth of sufficient size to permit the pith and shell and smaller particles of leaf and husks to pass through: the coarser portion of the husks and leaves, passing over the reel and tailing from its end, are caught up by an exhaust-fan and conveyed through pipes to another part of the works, where they are shredded and baled as cattle food.

The material passing through the meshes of these reels is again elevated and thrown into another pair of reels, which are covered with wire and revolving at a high rate of speed. The flat pieces of shell, leaf and husks escape between them, thus bringing about the second cleaning of the pith, which falls into a hopper under the reels, and this material is drawn up by exhaust fans and carried to the attrition mills and is there ground to a fine meal, making the new corn product.

The principal product obtained from this process is Cellulose, which is the pith of the stalk, and which, after being chemically treated for fire-proofing, is sold almost entirely to the Government for packing coffer-dams of war ships, to prevent them from sinking when pierced by shells. Not only has it been adopted by our own Government, but by the Italian, English, Russian and the French Governments also, after exhaustive tests of its merits. The Marsden Company, at the present time, is far behind its orders for the product, and is placing all it can turn out with these Governments. The United States Government keeps an inspector continually at the works, who takes samples of the material, places it in an iron pan with perforated bottom and drops into it an iron rivet heated to 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit. If the Cellulose simply chars without blazing, it is then passed as satisfactory. It then goes to the packing department, where it is pressed by means of a 72-ton hydraulic press into six-inch cubes, weighing from 12 to 17 ounces. Each cube is packed into a pasteboard box and the boxes, having been packed into water-proof cases, are then ready for shipment. The reason for placing in water-proof cases is, that if one of these six-inch cubes should come in contact with water, it will swell to twenty-five times its original bulk. This will explain how the packing of the hull of a war ship with Cellulose will prevent the vessel from sinking when pierced by a shell.

The following are a few of the by-products, which are made from cornstalks, in addition to Cellulose:

1. Pyroxylin varnish, or Cellulose in liquid form—An article which greatly improves the quality of every article manufactured from wood-pulp, and may also be applied as a coating for all exterior surfaces and used for many other purposes.

2. Cellulose used for nitrating purposes—especially for smokeless powder and high explosives: The pith, after being treated with a diluted alkali, is easily nitrated into all the various forms of material made from cotton, and at far less cost. Its especial advantage for these explosives is its perfect keeping properties.

3. Cellulose for packing—this being the most perfect non-conductor of heat or electricity, as well as protector from jars or blows.

4. Paper pulp and various forms of paper made therefrom—the shells or shives of cornstalks, under proper treatment, yield a pulp that can be used either as a base or alone in the manufacture of fine grade paper.

5. Stock food—made from the ground outer shell or shives of the cornstalks, and also from the nodes and joints. The leaves and tassels also furnish a shredded or baled fodder for stock.

6. Mixed food for stock—containing fine ground shells or shives as a base and, in addition thereto, nitrogenous meals, concentrated food substances, similar in character to distillery glucose refuse, sugar-beet pulp, apple pomice and other by-products.

7. Poultry foods of two types—namely: Type 1, containing nutriment for laying hens; and type 2, containing nutriment for fattening purposes.

DISTILLERIES.

The distilling interest of Peoria has long been one of the largest industries of the city, and, at this time, Peoria produces more spirits and high wines than any other city in the world. Ten years before the advent of railroads this branch of industry was started, and has since been the basis of a number of large fortunes. About the year 1843, Almiran S. Cole, a merchant doing business on Water Street, between Main and Fulton, built the first distillery—a 200-bushel house. This distillery was located on the river bank where the Peoria & Pekin Union Railroad freight house now stands, and was operated by Mr. Cole for two years, when he sold out to Sylvanus Thompson, the latter to Richard Gregg, and Mr. Gregg to Charles R. Carroll. Johnson L. Cole, a son of A. S. Cole, states that there was a placard on this distillery in 1844, which read as follows: "10 cents for white corn, 12½ for yellow corn." At the present time (January, 1902) the market price for corn in Peoria is 60 to 62 cents, and there is little doubt that the price of corn in the Peoria market has been enhanced to some extent by the demand for distilling purposes. From this time on the distilling business has more than kept pace with the growth of Peoria. Mr. Cole entered into the distilling business a second time in 1850, erecting a new building which, at that time, was the largest building in the Mississippi Valley. The location of this building was at the foot of Cedar Street where the charcoal works now are. Its cost was $128,000, and the establishment had a capacity of 1,000 bushels of corn daily, making 4,000 gallons of high wines. The capital invested was $200,000 and value of annual product $600,000. In 1859 it is estimated that two-thirds of $1,000,000 was invested in the distilling business in Peoria. There were then six distilleries in operation, besides two alcohol works. Moss, Bradley & Co. were probably the largest operators, having an investment of $144,000 in the business. For the year ending April 30, 1859, their statement shows a consumption of 294,623 bushels of grain. They employed thirty-eight men. Several of the distilleries of that period have been burned and some were never rebuilt. The manufacture of high wines and spirits in 1878 was the largest in the history of Peoria up to that date, and was considered something phenomenal as to the consumption of grain and aggregate product. In that year, there were fourteen distilleries in Peoria of the following capacities: Union No. 7 (Woolner Bros.), 2,201 bushels; Zell Schwabacher & Co., 4,222; Clarke Bros., 1,538; Great Western, 6,200; Peoria Distilling Company, 5,000; Manhattan, 2,150; G. T. Barker, 3,330; Fermenich Manufacturing Company, 1,500; J. W. Johnson, 2,000; Woolner Bros., No. 8, 5,932; Monarch, 8,000; Bush & Brown, 2,300; Great Eastern, 3,000; Standard Distilling Company, 1,200; total, 48,569. The Monarch, which at that time had a capacity of only two-thirds of what the Great Western now has, was considered the greatest distillery in the world. It is not to be inferred that these distilleries were at any time all running to their full capacity, otherwise the product would have greatly exceeded the demand. Since then, by the combination of capital into fewer hands, and by the erection of larger plants and fewer of them, the production can be more readily confined within the demands of the trade. These combinations are frequently called "Trusts."

At the present time (January, 1902), there are in operation in Peoria the following distilleries: The Great Western, capacity, 12,000 bushels daily; Monarch, 5,000 bushels capacity daily; Manhattan, 3,000 bushels capacity daily. These concerns are all controlled by the American Spirits Manufacturing Company. The Atlas Distillery, with a capacity of 8,000 bushels daily, is controlled by the Standard Distilling and Distributing Company. Both of these concerns are members of what is known as the "Whisky Trust." In addition to these trust houses, one of the largest concerns is that of Clarke Brothers & Co., with a capacity of 3,000 bushels daily, located in Lower Peoria, capital stock, $500,000, with Charles D. Clarke, President; Chauncey D. Clarke, Vice-President; William S. Parry, Secretary and Treasurer; Robert D. Clarke, Manager. Their business was established in 1809, and at present employs 100 hands. Clarke Brothers & Co. also have a rectifying house at the foot of Johnson Street, where they rectify whiskies, gins, and manufacture a large variety of cordials. Mr. William E. Hull is the general manager of this part of the business. The concern of Corning & Co., at the foot of Sanger Street, has a daily capacity of 6,000 bushels. These are independent industries, and have no connection with the Whisky Trust.

The Great Western, already mentioned, with its capacity of 12,000 bushels per day, is the largest distillery in the world. Figuring the cost of corn at the present market price, it consumes $7,200 worth of corn daily, producing 60,000 gallons of high wines, on which the Government receives a revenue of $1.10 per gallon, making $66,000 paid to the Government daily as tax on the production of this one distillery alone.

ELECTRIC METERS.

The Diamond Meter Company is a corporation organized and established in business in 1807, for the manufacture of Electric Meters and Transformers, based on a capital stock of $50,000. The value of the plant is estimated at $30,000, and the amount of the first year's business at $50,000. The present officers of the company are E. H. Conch, President; A. B. Fink, Secretary and Manager, and W. F. Heyle, Treasurer, and the present location of the factory, 926 South Adams Street. The concern employs an average of 100 hands, receiving approximately $35,000 in wages per annum. The estimated value of the raw material used during the past twelve months is $50,000, while the output for the same time has amounted to $120,000.

ENGRAVERS AND ELECTROTYPERS.

This business was first established in Peoria in 1856 by J. T. Shoaff at 41 Main Street, who continued in business for a number of years. At the present time there is the Peoria Electrotype Company, located at 109 Main Street.

FLOURING MILLS.

According to Drown's Record of Peoria, published in 1850, the first flouring mill in this vicinity was erected in 1830 by John Hamlin and John Sharp on the Kickapoo Creek, about three miles west of the Court House, being the first mill in this section of the State. This mill had two runs of stone, manufacturing about fifty barrels of flour per day of twenty-four hours. A large amount of this flour was sent by flat-boats to the New Orleans market, commanding in that market $1.37½ and $1.50 per barrel. This was the only mill in this section until 1838, when Hale Brothers erected what was then considered a large mill about two miles above the Hamlin & Sharp mill, on the same stream, which, according to Mr. Drown, had two runs of burrs for wheat and one for corn. It continued to run until about the year 1867, when it was converted into a distillery and, not long afterwards, was burned. There was soon afterwards another mill erected on the Kickapoo some distance lower down, known in later years as Monroe's Mill, which continued to be operated by James Monroe until 1865 or later.

The first mill erected in the city was that familiarly known as the "Red Mill," afterwards called the "Central City," and still later "Fort Clark Mill," at the foot of Harrison Street, where the Transfer Company now is. It was built by Orin Hamlin about 1844, passed into the hands of John Hamlin in 1846, and about 1850-51 into the hands of James McFadden, who operated it at the rate of 150 barrels per day for several years. He was succeeded in 1855 by the firm of William A. Thrush & Co., the partners being Joseph P. McClanahan and Charles Raymond. Thrush retiring in 1850, the firm became McClanahan & Co., who were succeeded in 1863 by James T. Robinson and George Field, under the firm name of Robinson & Co., who operated it for many years.

Soon after the erection of the "Red Mill," John Rankin and his two nephews, John H. and James Rankin, erected a mill on the east corner of Washington and Fayette Streets, long known as the "Farmers' Mill." The Rankins were succeeded in 1853 by Elias C. and John Hinzey, who in 1856 sold to George Field and Thaxter Shaw, who in 1861 sold to Peterson & Wood.

About the year 1853 or 1854 a neat little brick mill was erected by Charles P. Billon on the northeasterly side of Hamilton Street, below Washington. In 1855 it passed into the hands of George Wilmot, and was for some time operated by the firm of Wilmot, Dudley & Stone, consisting of George Wilmot, D. P. Dudley and Samuel W. Stone. In the course of two or three years it was burned and never re-built.

About 1857 or 1858, a mill was erected on Water Street, between Gay and Clay Streets, by a corporation under the name of the "Peoria City Flour Company," of which little is known for the first few years. About 1865 it passed into the hands of George Field and James T. Robinson, under the firm name of George Field & Co., by whom it continued to be operated for several years. It was known as the "City Mill."

About the year 1865 Frank Field and George H. McClallen erected quite a large mill on the north corner of Washington and Hamilton Streets, which they named the "Diamond Mill." The firm was subsequently changed to Field, Russell & Co., and later to Field, Maynard & Co. It continued to be operated for several years.

Sometime prior to 1870 Henry I. Chase, E. D. Chase and P. F. Chase erected a custom mill on the corner of Adams and Elm Streets, which continued to do business for several years, but the building has long since been converted into other uses.

Of the mills existing here prior to 1870 the Globe Mill, the Fayette Mill (now the Vienna Mills), and the Home Mill (now known as the custom mill of Horace Clark and Sons) are the only ones still running. The first of these (the Globe Roller Mills), located at the corner of Main and Globe Streets, was built in 1856 by Burnham & Gregg, who ran it for several years. About 1862 they sold out to Frank Field, who used it to make flour for his hardtack bakery—he having at that time a contract for supplying the Government with hardtack for the army. From about 1865 to 1879 this mill was practically idle. In 1879 it was purchased by the present owners, J. W. Gift & Co., and, in 1881, was thoroughly remodeled, changing it from the mill-stone to the roller process, making it the first roller-mill to grind winter wheat in the United States. It has been run steadily since.

Mr. J. W. Gift is a born miller, his father and grandfather preceding him in the business, locating as early as 1840 in Marion County, Ohio. Mr. Gift has associated with him his sons, F. H. and C. H. Gift. Their product is almost exclusively white flour. They have a capital invested of $50,000, employ an average of fifteen hands, and are represented on the road by three traveling salesmen.

About the year 1856 William C. Moore erected a mill on the present site of the Vienna Mill on Eaton Street, which was, for many years, known as the "Fayette Mill." A year later, Isaac Moore became a partner. This firm was succeeded in 1859 by Willard M. Randall, in 1860 by Randall & Hughes, in 1867 by Randall & Potter. The mill a short time before this (being a frame-building) had been burned down, but was replaced by the present brick structure. Randall & Potter operated it for several years, then sold out to Phelps & Co., who, in 1879, sold to Cox, Bruner & Co., from whom it was purchased in 1882 by the present proprietors, Donmeyer, Gardner & Co. It is now known as the Vienna Mills. Its present capacity is 200 bushels per day. It is equipped with all the latest improvements in machinery and employs 15 hands, besides two traveling men.

The Clark Mill, built as the "Home Mill" in 1864, at the head of Walnut Street by Clark Hanna & Co., was run successfully for some years when, having been burned down, it was rebuilt on a somewhat smaller scale. It has been operated for many years by Horace Clark & Sons as the "Custom Mill," also doing a large jobbing business in Minnesota flour.

For twenty years, dating from 1850, milling was one of the principal branches of business carried on in the city. In 1865 the product was 33 753 barrels of flour, averaging $4.50 per barrel. The mills named were all in operation as late as the year 1870, but in consequence of the opening up of the great wheat fields of the Northwest and the erection of the immense mills on the Upper Mississippi and elsewhere, the milling business soon afterwards began to decline, until as it is said only one, "The Home Mill," remained in Peoria.

In addition to the foregoing, the distilleries for some time carried on the milling business in connection with the production of spirits and many of them were known as mills. At first the great distillery of Moss, Bradley & Co. was simply an addition to a flouring mill located on the same spot.

FOUNDRIES.

The pioneer foundryman of Peoria was William R. Hopkins, who started in business in 1840, his location being on Water Street between Liberty and Harrison. He made all kinds of farm machinery and plow-castings, as well as castings for threshing machines; also manufactured hollow ware, cooking and cannon stoves, etc. The next foundry was established in 1845 by William Peters, who was located at the corner of Water and Walnut Streets. In connection with his foundry he manufactured steam engine, mill machinery, distilling machinery, horse powers and threshing machines. He had a capital of $21,000 invested, and employed fifteen hands, the value of his annual product being about $18,000. This business was conducted for a number of years, and finally came into the possession of Nicol, Burr & Co., who greatly enlarged the plant, and, for a number of years after the Civil War, were doing a foundry business, being the largest of its kind in the State. They employed from forty-five to fifty men, their yearly output amounting to from $75,000 to $100,000. This business was continued until about 1866, when the firm dissolved, the building now being used for a threshing machine storehouse, and sickle and knife factory.

Another of the early foundries and machine shops was Moore, Springer & Co., established about 1850 at the corner of Adams and Eaton Streets. This firm was succeeded about 1863 by Messrs. Moore & Anderson, later the business being managed by Mr. H. G. Anderson, who continued it until about 1870, when it was closed out. Sometime before the Civil War, the Voris family erected a very fine foundry and machine shop on the corner of Washington and Chestnut Streets, where the Central Railway power-house now is. The premises afterwards passed into the hands of Hart, Hitchcock & Co., who added an extensive factory of farming implements. This concern is noticed more fully under the head of "Agricultural Implements."

At the present time, in addition to the foundries running in connection with the various other manufacturing concerns, we have the following individual foundries: Excelsior Foundry Company, 101-105 Pecan Street; Washington Foundry, M. O'Rourke, proprietor, 2317-2323 South Washington Street; Peoria Foundry Company, 1306-1312 South Washington Street.

A branch of the foundry business is the manufacture of brass castings, which was one of the early industries of Peoria, being carried on usually in connection with iron foundries. As early as 1844 Henry Hahn made to order and supplied all kinds of brass castings. His shop was on Water Street above Main. At the present time we have in Peoria an industry of this class that would be a credit to any city. Reference is had to the Kinsey & Mahler Company, located at the corner of Adams and Harrison Streets. They have warehouses on Water Street in block 200 South. This company is incorporated with a capital of $100,000, the present officers being Samuel A. Kinsey, President; Mrs. Emma Mahler Wilson, Treasurer, and Warren Kinsey, Secretary. The concern employs 80 hands and pays wages to the amount of $30,000 annually. This business was established in 1850 by Loker, Seiler & Company, and Messrs. Kinsey & Mahler became the sole owners in 1866. Their location was at 83 to 85 South Washington Street until 1872, when they removed to their present location. They were incorporated in 1884. They manufacture all kinds of brass castings as well as plumbers' supplies for water, steam and gas; also build and install stills, etc., for breweries and distilleries, having equipped many of the largest distilleries in this country and in Mexico.

.. FURNITURE.

At one time Peoria was one of the largest producers of furniture in the Middle West, but owing to the concentration of the industry near the base of supplies—such as suitable timber—the business at this time is limited. Among the early factories here prior to 1844, was that of James Beck, located on Washington Street between Main and Fulton, and that of Conrad Boelling, on Washington Street, between Fulton and Liberty. The latter advertised that he had a horse-power turning lathe attached to his establishment. William L. Evans was located at the corner of Liberty and Printers' Alley. In 1845, furniture manufacturing began to be carried on on a larger scale. The first large factory was that of Fridly & Lincoln, located on the river front where the Union Freight Depot now is. This concern at that time had a capital of $30,- 000, employing fifty hands, and producing annually furniture to the value of $40,000. Later, Dredge, Hester & Keyes established a large factory at the corner of Water and Liberty Streets, and about 1858 the two last named factories appear to have been merged into one under the name of Dredge & Lincoln, who erected a new factory, 120x30 feet, employed steam power, and had a sales-room at the corner of Fulton and Washington Streets. About this time Hesler & Tjaden had a factory on Main Street in Block 100, using steam for power and employing fifteen men. The "Peoria Transcript," of January 1, 1850, among other items made mention of the fact that the furniture manufactories of Peoria were among the best—manufacturing furniture from mahogany, rosewood, black walnut and cherry—and that their furniture would rank with any in the country, as elegant as could be found in the parlors of the most wealthy and aristocratic families of the East.

At the present time Peoria has only one furniture factory—the Peoria Lounge and Mattress Company, located at the corner of Fayette and Eaton Streets. It has a capital of $15,000, with officers as follows: J. S. Heffner, President; C. L. Doty, Vice-President; R. M. Blair, Secretary and Treasurer. They manufacture upholstered furniture and mattresses. The business was established in 1892 and, from a very small beginning, they at this time produce annually manufactured goods to the value of $42,000, consuming raw material of the value of $25,000, employing 25 hands with an annual pay-roll of $10,000.

GLUCOSE.

Another industry of modern invention in which Peoria is largely engaged, is the manufacture of glucose and its products from corn. This invention was first perfected at Buffalo, New York, about the year 1864. About 1870 two competing companies were organized at Peoria, attracted hither by the superior quality of water, abundance of cheap fuel and nearness to the great corn-producing belt of the Middle West. On June 29, 1879, the "Peoria Sugar Refining Company" was chartered with a capital of $150,000, for the manufacture of sugar, syrups, starch and glucose, with William T. Jebb and Thomas Jebb, of Buffalo, as subscribers to one-half the stock, the other half being taken by business men of Peoria. William T. Jebb, Thomas Jebb, James M. Quinn and E. S. Easton were made Directors. Their factory was erected where the Glucose Works now are, but, although the land seems to have been purchased and the buildings erected by that company, yet for most of the time it has been operated in the name of the "American Glucose Company," of which Cicero J. Hamlin was President and William Hamlin Secretary, with other members of the Hamlin family, all of whom had come from Buffalo, holding subordinate positions. It is now operated in the name of the "Glucose Sugar Refining Company," which seems to be a foreign corporation, of which W. B. Evans is the agent. The main building, located at Sanger Street and Monarch Avenue, is 104x196 feet and six stories in height. It has a capacity of 30,000 bushels per day and consumes, approximately, 23,000 bushels, yielding 1,200 barrels of glucose and employing 700 hands. For reasons best known to the parties interested, the Jebbs went to Iowa and established another factory in that State.

On October 13, 1879, the "Peoria Grape Sugar Company" was incorporated for the manufacture of grape sugar and glucose, with a capital stock of $50,000, which was taken principally by the Woolner brothers, of Peoria, E. F. Drake, of Buffalo, Jacob Dans and E. Meyer. A large factory was erected at the corner of Water and North Fayette (now Eaton) Streets, with a large warehouse between the railroad and the river. The capital stock was shortly afterwards increased to $100,000. This plant was successfully and largely operated for many years; but, owing to disastrous fires which destroyed first the warehouse and afterwards the main factory, it ceased to operate only a few years ago.

HARNESS AND SADDLERY.

This business was established at an early day in Peoria, Thomas Hardesty, located at the corner of Water and Fulton Streets, and David W. Hage, on Main Street between Washington and Adams, being among the earliest manufacturers in this line. In 1850, Bender & Frederick was the leading firm in this branch, their place of business being on Washington Street between Main and Fulton. This establishment is still in existence, although it has changed hands several times in the past fifty years. It is now located at 324 South Adams Street, with a collar factory attached in the rear and running through to Washington Street. The style of the firm is H. N. Frederick & Sons. The business is now successfully conducted by the sons, William D. and Edward J. Frederick. There are also the following factories which manufacture, as well as wholesale, this class of goods; Ducker & Foster, 213 Main Street; Rehfus Brothers, 227 Main Street, and Case & Kroenlein, 112 South Washington Street.

MILL-WRIGHTS.

Among the early mill-wrights of Peoria were Anson Durst, who was a burr millstone maker, and William Greenwood and Augustine Greenwood—the shop of the latter being located near Spring Hill, which the inhabitants of the present day know as Hickey's Hill. Later, Isaac G. Reynolds established himself at 124 North Adams Street, manufacturing grain separators and flour packers. At the present time Hagerty, Graber & Co. carry on this business successfully at 915-917 South Washington Street, and are contractors for flour mills, elevators and distilleries.

MONUMENTS.

The first record we find of monument manufactures in Peoria is in 1850, when Kent & Jewell established this business on Hamilton Street between Washington and Adams. This firm was succeeded by J. Jewell, and in 1856 R. Campbell carried on the business on Fulton Street between Adams and Washington, as also did A. N. Parkhurst, at the corner of Perry and Franklin Streets. In 1854 Otto Triebel established a monument business at the corner of First and Franklin Streets, and this concern is still in existence under the name Triebel & Sons—a partnership consisting of Henry Triebel and William H. Triebel. Their salesrooms are located at 124 North Adams Street, and their yards at Perry and Caroline Streets. The firm have a capital invested of $30,000. Also at the present time, John Merkle & Sons, a partnership consisting of John H. Merkle and Charles F. Merkle, are doing business in the same line at 216-218 Bridge Street. The capital of the last named concern is $25,000, the business having been established in 1854 by John Merkle. Their annual sales amount to $40,000.

OVERALLS.

Truefit Manufacturing Company (incorporated), with William Goodheart, President; H. T. Bloom, Secretary and Treasurer, located at 222-224 South Adams Street, manufactures a full line of shirts, overalls and pants—capital invested, $50,000, established in 1889, at 115-117 Washington Street. The business has increased gradually from the original establishment to the present time. The concern employs 125 hands, with an annual pay-roll of $27,500. Also, C. J. Scranton & Co., 230 South Washington Street, a co-partnership consisting of Charles J. Scranton and Vincent F. Sheldon, are engaged in the same line. J. N. Ward & Co. (incorporated)—officers, J. N. Ward, President; Wesley S. Dowe, Treasurer; W. C. Juelg, Secretary; located at 316-318 South Adams Street—manufacture the Royal Brand of pantaloons, overalls and jackets, shirts, etc. They have capital invested amounting to $100,000. Their business has increased from its establishment in 1880 to the present time, their annual product now amounting to $250,000. They employ 370 hands, with an annual pay-roll of $50,000 to $60,000.

PARLOR GAME BOARDS.

The Archarena Company was organized in 1806 for the manufacture of Parlor Game Boards, of which three styles have been put upon the market. It was located at No. 100-106 Main Street under the management of E. L. Williams, President, with a capital stock of $50,000, the value of the plant estimated at $6,000. The value of the output, at first small, has increased rapidly, the cost of the raw material consumed during the past year being estimated at $45,000 in the manufacture of $175,000 worth of goods. The average number of hands employed during the year is reported at 75, to whom wages approximating $26,000 were paid. A part of the last year's product was manufactured at South Bend, Ind., to which place the factory was removed near the close of the year.

POTTERIES.

Among the early potters prior to 1844, we find Samuel B. King, who was doing business on Monroe Street between Fayette and Jackson. He made all kinds of stone and earthen ware, as well as flower pots, both plain and fancy. In 1856 Loudon & Long ran a pottery on upper Grove Street, their product for that year amounting to $7,000. In 1850 the American Pottery Company was established on North Adams Street above

Caroline Street. The company was composed of Decius W. Clarke, Christ W. Fenton, Thomas W. Johnson, George W. Lascell, Amos M. Johnson and William Barker. Later, the name of the company was changed to the Peoria Pottery Company, and at one time it was a very flourishing industry, employing fifty hands. At the present time they are manufacturing almost exclusively table or white ware, both plain and decorated. Their product is of the very best grade. This concern has recently changed hands and, at the present writing, the new organization has not been completed.

PAPER BOXES.

The pioneer manufacturer in this line was Benjamin Foster, who was located for a great many years at 111 Main Street. He was later succeeded by his son, Edgar Foster, who finally became interested in a strawboard mill, and closed out the paper box business. The present manufactory is the Peoria Paper Box Factory, located at 207 Livingston Street.

PEANUT ROASTERS.

Peoria is the home of one of the largest factories of this character in the world. Its machines are sold in the principal towns and cities throughout the entire United States, besides being exported to other countries, the output being equal to that of all other factories of this kind combined. This concern is the Bartholomew Company, composed of J. B. Bartholomew, President; C. A. Bartholomew, Vice-President; O. Y. Bartholomew, Treasurer, and E. M. Voorhees, Secretary. The factory is located at 117 Fredonia Avenue, with branch houses at Des Moines, Iowa; Cincinnati, Ohio, and Philadelphia. In addition to peanut roasters, the concern manufactures coffee-roasters, both small and large; automatic corn-poppers, waffle machines, etc. They have a capital invested of $60,000. The concern was established in 1883, its first year's business amounting to $1,000, since when it has increased to the present time to almost $100,000. The firm employs about sixty hands, with an annual pay-roll of $25,000.

PLANING-MILLS, SASH, DOORS AND BLINDS.

We find manufactories in existence here under this head as early as 1844. Among the first was the firm of Aiken & Sutton, who were located at the head of the quay on Water Street. They manufactured patent shingles. The first door, sash and blind factory of which there is any record, was established about 1850, under the name of the Peoria Sash Factory, superintended by a Mr. Piper. About this time Charles S. Paine also established a factory on Water Street. In 1856, we find Bramble & Barr in business on Washington Street, between Hamilton and Fayette; Charles Ulrichson, on Water Street, between Walnut and Chestnut; and William Truesdale, on Water Street, at the foot of Fayette. Mr. Truesdale continued in business for a number of years, the concern later being known as the Truesdale Manufacturing Company, which, at that time, was one of the principal mills in this line in Central Illinois. At the present time, we note the following concerns doing business: Bush Brothers Manufacturing Company, 1717 South Washington Street; The Garside Manufacturing Company, Washington, at the corner of Oak Street; Todhunter & Alfs, 210 Walnut Street; and the Wahlfeld Manufacturing Company, 1101-1109 South Washington Street.

PACKERS, BEEF AND PORK.

The beef and pork-packing business was regularly established in Peoria in 1837 by Mr. E. F. Nowland, who later (in 1830) erected a new packing-house and was the first to introduce steam appliances for packing in this city. His establishment was located on the river where the present Clarke Brothers rectifying house stands, and had a capacity of 600 hogs per day. In 1841 John Reynolds began the slaughtering and packing trade, killing 350 hogs per season. From that time until the present there have been many changes in the packing business in the city of Peoria, and at present we note the following: Peoria Packing and Provision Company (a corporation), John Wilson, President; F. S. Wilson, Vice-President; W. C. Bush, Secretary and Treasurer, located at the foot of South Street, packers of beef and pork, producers of packing-house products; capital invested $300,000, employ about seventy-five hands. E. Godel & Sons (incorporated), Frank G. Godel, President; Mrs. Elizabeth Godel, Vice-President; D. H. Teessen, Secretary and Treasurer; located at the foot of South Street, packers of beef and pork, and producers of packing-house products, capital stock, $50,000; employ 50 hands.

STOVES AND RANGES.

Under this head mention must be made of William R. Hopkins, early foundryman, already noticed under the head of foundries, who also manufactured heating and cooking stoves, and was probably the pioneer in this line. At this time we have the Culter & Proctor Company, located at Water and Fayette Streets. This concern has been established for a number of years, and manufactures a full line of stoves and ranges of the very best quality. Another manufactory is the Western Stove Works, incorporated, located at 102-108 Commercial Street; Otto Hofer, President; Joseph F. Ossenbeck, Vice-President; Jacob H. Ossenbeck, Secretary and Treasurer; capital stock, $30,000. They manufacture a full line of heating stoves and ranges, amounting to 1,600 annually, valued at $30,000, and employ 25 hands.

SICKLE MANUFACTORIES.

This business was first established in Peoria, in 1857, by H. Dunn & Co., on Water Street, between Fulton and Liberty. At the present time, we have one of the largest manufactories in this line in the country—the R. Herschel Manufacturing Company—factory located on Walnut Street, between Water and Washington, with salesrooms at 314-320 South Washington Street. This business was established, in a small way, in the rear of 400 South Adams Street, by H. R. Herschel, and from this small beginning it has grown to the present proportions. In addition to the manufacture of sickles, knives, sections, etc., the concern are jobbers in agricultural implement supplies. They have branch houses at Minneapolis, Minnesota; Omaha, Nebraska; Kansas City, Missouri; and Wilmington, Delaware, selling their products throughout the United States, as well as exporting to foreign countries. The present officers are Robert H. Herschel, President; Paul E. Herschel, Manager; John I. Black, Secretary.

SOAP.

Under this head, we note that John B. Bender as early as 1844 conducted a factory on Fayette Street. Later, Carpenter & Whittlesey were engaged in the same line at No. 3 Fulton Street. Next we note, in 1856, Woodruff & Wilson, at lower Grove Street, and, in 1857, J. C. Armstrong, at Armstrong Avenue, on the East Bluff. Hughes & Bunch, on Bridge Street, near Water, in the year 1856, manufactured soap, candles and similar products, valued at $26,600. At the present time, we have but one manufactory in this line, The Mexican Amole Soap Company, engaged in the manufacture of toilet soaps, at 117-121 South Water Street. The officers are A. Brayshaw, President and General Manager; William Brayshaw, Vice-President; and B. W. Brayshaw, Secretary and Treasurer. They have a capital of $40,000 invested. The concern, originally established in 1884, now do an annual business of $100,000, consuming $50,000 worth of raw material during the year, and employ 42 hands, with an annual pay-roll of $22,500.

STARCH.

At the present time, Peoria is without a starch factory, although at one time this was a leading industry. As early as 1856, Tucker, Mansfield & Co. established a starch factory near the Dobbins and Gregg distilleries, which, for those days, was very extensive—the main building being 248 x 66 feet, and three stories high, costing $40,000. Power was furnished by a 100-horse-power engine, the establishment having a capacity of 6,000 pounds of starch per day, and employing 40 hands. The officers consisted of H. Mansfield, President, and N. S. Tucker, Secretary, both of whom will be remembered as prominent citizens of Peoria. Later, the Peoria Starch Company was established, and began active operations in the fall of 1865, with George F. Harding, President, and E. S. Wilson, Superintendent and Manager. This factory was located near the river, about two miles south of the Court House. It had a capacity of 150 bushels of corn per day, which was later increased to 600 bushels per day, turning out 6,000 pounds of starch daily. Their factory was consumed by fire in November, 1870, but immediately rebuilt on a larger scale—the new factory having a capacity of 1,500 bushels of corn per day, and employing 100 hands. At that time, Peoria starch was known throughout the United States and parts of Europe. This factory having been again destroyed by fire, was never rebuilt. At this time, there are no manufactories in Peoria under this head.

STEAM BOILERS.

The manufacture of boilers is first noted in

Root's City Directory for 1856. In that year, William Mendenhall established himself in the business on Liberty Street, near Water. Later (in 1858) William G. Ashdown opened a shop on Water Street, below Chestnut; the same year John Fitzpatrick also opened a shop on Water Street, near the P. & O. Depot. These were all small shops, each having a capacity of about one boiler per day. We find that, in the year 1850, William Phelan started a shop at 410 South Adams Street, but later removed to 339-341 South Water Street, where John Kelly became associated with him. This shop became the largest of its kind in the city, and, in fact, about the only one. Mr. Phelan continued in business for a great many years, having numerous partners. As early as 1870, this business had become quite extensive (there being, at that time, as many as five shops), and has continued to grow up to the present time. While there are not so many shops at this time as in earlier days, the volume of the output is much larger. We note the following shops at this time:

McAleenan Boiler Company, at the corner of South Washington and Cherry Streets, is an incorporated company, with William McAleenan, President, and M. A. McAleenan, Secretary and Treasurer; capital stock, $25,000. Their business was established in 1877, under the name of McAleenan & Cody, on Water Street, between Oak and Chestnut, afterwards removing to the present location, where they built a large and commodious plant, in which they employ 75 hands, and manufacture a large line of boilers and tanks. They do a great deal of contract work, such as erecting tanks for the storage of petroleum, their business in this department extending as far west as California and as far south as Texas.

Joseph Cody & Son, located on Oak and Washington Streets, also do a local business in the same line.

STONE.

According to Drown's "Peoria City Record" for 1853, there were two marble factories here at that date—one operated by Parkhurst & Pillsbury, at the head of Franklin Street and the junction of Seventh and Perry Streets, and that of J. Jewell, at the foot of Fulton Street. It was estimated that these furnished employment to 20 workmen, besides ten or a dozen traveling agents. At the present time, Peoria has the following concerns connected with the stone industry:

Central City Stone Company—Charles F. Jaus, President; John H. Merkle, Secretary and Treasurer; works located at the foot of Green Street; capital invested, $12,000; established in 1892, in which year they did a business of $5,000, which has increased, to the present time, to about $14,000. They manufacture building stone of all descriptions, and employ eight hands, with an annual pay-roll of $5,400. The Peoria Steam Marble Works—H. Sandmeyer, Sr., President; August Pfeiffer, Secretary and Treasurer; H. Triebel, Vice-President; Charles H. Iscle, Superintendent; located at 1800-1818 North Adams Street. They manufacture a full line of cut-stone and marble for interior work; capital stock, $30,000; value of plant, $200,000; business established in 1884, in which year they did a business of $30,000, which has since increased to $150,000 per annum. The plant has been enlarged four times since starting; they consume about $50,000 worth of raw material per annum, and employ fifty hands, with an annual pay-roll of $40,000. Their business extends all over the United States, embracing a large amount of interior marble-work.

STRAW BOARD.

Under this head, at the present time, we have the Peoria Straw Board Company—William H. Binnian, President; E. C. Foster, Secretary; W. E. Stone, Treasurer; location, Averyville on North Adams Street. The company manufacture all kinds of plain and mill-line straw board. The capital stock is $300,000, and the value of the plant, $250,000. The business was established in 1890, the output for that year amounting to $250,000, which has since increased to $300,000 per annum. The consumption of raw material per annum amounts to $175,000, furnishing employment for an average of 100 hands, on an annual pay-roll of $80,000.

VINEGAR.

The Lion Vinegar Works, located at 1202-1208 Garden Street, is the only concern distinctively engaged in this line in Peoria. They manufacture vinegar and bitters, and have a capital invested of $8,000. Their annual product amounts to $10,000, employing five to six hands, with an annual pay-roll of $2,500.

WAGONS AND CARRIAGES.

In early times, wagons were manufactured to order only, and, while Peoria was not a large producer, it had a large number of wagon-makers. Among those here prior to 1844, we note the following: Allan Collings, corner of Adams and Fulton Streets; P. C. Merwin, Washington Street, fronting Market; and Gideon W. Smith, whom we shall have occasion to mention among the manufacturers of buggies and carriages. In fact, in these early days shops manufactured all kinds of vehicles, including wagons, buggies and carriages. At the present time we have the Peoria Wagon Manufacturing Company, which is owned and controlled by the Avery Manufacturing Company, who are noticed more fully under the head of "Agricultural Implements." The business of this concern was established in 1888 under the style of the Hanna Wagon Company, by E. B. Rhea, President; M. E. W. Wheeler, Secretary and Treasurer, and W. A. Hanna, Superintendent—the business being removed to Peoria from Henry, Illinois. Later it came into the possession of the present owners, and is one of our leading industries. They manufacture a full line of farm wagons of various sizes to the extent of 3,000 per annum, employing 80 hands.

John Johnston

Among those distinctively engaged in the manufacture of buggies and carriages in Peoria, it is believed that Gideon W. Smith was the earliest, his establishment being located on Fulton Street, between Adams and Jefferson, where the business is still conducted under the name of G. W. Smith's Sons. In early days this concern did a large business, manufacturing fine buggies, carriages, wagons, etc., but at this time they confine their business to repairing buggies and carriages and the manufacture of delivery wagons to order. Perhaps the pioneer exclusive carriage builder in Peoria was Alexander Allison, who commenced business in 1847 and continued for 25 years at the same location on Washington Street, between Main and Hamilton. His manufacture was of a high grade, and no doubt some of his handiwork is still in existence in the city of Peoria. He was succeeded in 1882 by David L. Bigham, who continued in the same location until 1894, when he retired. Mr. Bigham was a worthy successor to Mr. Allison and kept up the high standard of his product equal to any and surpassed by none. There were a great many small factories about this time which made a varied line of buggies, carriages, etc. Among these we note in 1856 that of Philip Rohman & Co., and in 1857, O. C. Parmely, who afterwards, for a great many years, conducted a stage and omnibus line. At this time there is no exclusive manufacturer in this city except the Peoria Buggy Manufacturing Company, who manufacture medium and high-grade buggies, surreys, etc., for the wholesale trade. It is an incorporated company with J. P. Brownlee, President and General Manager, and J. C. Firth, Secretary and Treasurer. They have a capital stock of $100,000, and were originally located at 900 South Washington Street, where their first year's business amounted to $86,000. In 1900 their growing business compelled them to seek larger quarters, and they removed to Peoria Heights, where they occupied a building which had been erected for the Peoria Rubber & Manufacturing Company, to which reference has been made under the head of "Bicycles." This building was remodeled and new and modern machinery for the manufacture of buggies was installed. The company are in a prosperous condition, employing about 100 hands, with an annual pay-roll amounting to $30,000 and an annual product of $450,000.

WHITE LEAD.

The Bunn White Lead Company, at 1822 South Washington Street, with William E. Bunn, President, and Charles H. Bunn, Secretary and Treasurer, is engaged in the manufacture by a new process of white lead for painters' use.

WIRE FENCE.

The Keystone Woven-Wire Fence Company, located at South Bartonville, with Peter Sommer, President, and P. W. Sommer, Secretary and Treasurer, has a capital invested of $150,000. The business was established in 1889, and consists in the manufacture of a full line of woven wire fence of all descriptions. The concern employs 90 hands, turning out an annual product of the value of $400,000.

CHAPTER XII.

TRADE AND COMMERCE: BY ROBERT C. GRIER.

In common with every other considerable city of the country, the progress of Peoria has been due to its advantages as a business center, and its growth in wealth and population has kept pace with the development of its trade and commerce. While it would probably be impossible to give the names of its earliest traders, it is well known that, from the earliest period, even before Chicago had an existence, it was a favorite point for trading with the Indians, scarcely second to those places which were, at that time, regarded as the principal centers of the early French settlements. This was due not only to the fact that it was the center of one of the most numerous Indian tribes in the Illinois country, but to its location on the main water-way connecting the Lakes and the Mississippi River—offering almost the only facilities for travel and transportation over long distances at that period, and while its rivals of those days have either been wiped out of existence or relegated to obscurity by the progress of events, Peoria has ever held to the advantages which it then possessed, and, since its occupation by a population in harmony with American civilization, has gone on steadily developing in all those industries and branches of business tending to make it a prosperous manufacturing and commercial city. Fortunate in its geographical situation and surroundings, it bids fair to maintain these advantages in the future as it has in the past.

In all those elements which go to build up a commercially prosperous community, the position of Peoria is unexcelled by that of any other interior city of the country. It not only possesses the advantages of natural and artificial lines of communication and transportation, bringing it in prompt and close connection with all the principal markets of the country, but lies in the very heart of the grain and mineral producing regions so essential to the development of the whole. The effect of this is seen in the unexampled growth of some of the great manufacturing industries of the city, which promise not only to be supplemented by others, but to go on expanding with the increasing demands for purposes of consumption—a result due to the existence, in its immediate vicinity, of exhaustless supplies of fuel for the creation of power, with all the different varieties of raw material most needed in the successful and economical prosecution of enterprises of this character.

This part of the subject has already been treated of with considerable fullness in this volume under the head of "Manufactures"—a branch of industry whose influence upon the general business of the city and its progress in wealth and population cannot be overestimated. The volume of trade brought to Peoria by its vast agricultural implement manufactures, its distilling and brewing interests, its glucose works, its foundries and furniture manufactures, and various other enterprises now in process of development, is already manifest, and has given to the city a reputation for manufacturing enterprise which is recognized, not only at home but throughout the commercial world. The banking interests, another most potent factor in the growth of every commercial city—since it serves as the heart of the business organism and furnishes the arteries through which circulates the life-giving medium between its different members—has also been treated under its appropriate head. In addition to these are many branches of business which, if not directly connected with, or in some way dependent upon those just mentioned, are just as important to the prosperity and progress of the city as a whole.

These include mercantile establishments of various grades and classes—the dry-goods houses, clothing establishments, groceries, boot and shoe stores, provision stores, drug houses, hardware stores, besides commission firms, lumber yards, packing houses, and various small dealers, manufacturers and tradesmen, which form an essential part of every well organized community.

The intimate relationship existing between the mercantile and shipping interests is well illustrated by the methods employed for the marketing of commodities in the early days of Peoria. The steamboat was ready to carry the products of the farm to market and to bring back goods in return. But few merchants were able to carry large stocks of goods or to pay cash for grain and wait for re-imbursement until after it had been sold. And as there were no banks to keep in circulation a sufficient amount of ready money to carry on the business, other means had to be employed. Hence a system of trade sprang up, conducted by forwarding and commission merchants, who would receive from the producer his products, forward them to a correspondent at St. Louis or elsewhere, possibly make an advance upon them, and, upon receipt of the proceeds, would account for the same to the producer, less their advances, interest and commission, and a commission to the correspondent making the sale.

The retail trade was conducted largely upon the credit system. Stocks of goods were therefore necessarily small. Bills were paid only when grain or pork or other products were sold and the price realized. Merchants ordered their goods in small lots to be sent by steamboat, and when one arrived with new stocks of spring or winter goods, the rush was similar to that of a bargain-sale-day of our own times. As early as 1838 there were two of these forwarding and commission houses at Peoria, that of Alfred G. Curtenius, who was afterward the senior partner in the wholesale establishment of Curtenius & Griswold, and that of Forsythe & Co., consisting of J. W. Forsythe, of Wheeling, Virginia, and Andrew Gray, of Peoria.

By this time the wholesale trade was beginning to loom up into considerable proportions, and Peoria was about to demonstrate its eligibility as a distributing as well as shipping point for the surrounding country. James C. Armstrong and George J. Gallaher, under the firm name of Armstrong & Gallaher, were engaged in the business of wholesale grocers. Parker & McCrory were wholesalers of dry-goods, groceries, hardware and cutlery. Both firms also carried on the commission business, the latter giving notice they would make liberal advances on merchandise consigned to them for sale. The stock of goods advertised by these firms show they were in reality, and not in name only, wholesale dealers. William B. Farrell, of Peoria, and Jesse Lippincott, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, as partners under the firm name of Farrell & Lippincott, were carrying on the wholesale drug business as successors of William B. Farrell.

From the wholesale trade thus early established, Peoria has never receded, but has steadily advanced until the present proportions have been attained. Of those who have been leaders in the wholesale grocery trade may be mentioned the following: Curtenius & Griswold, consisting of Alfred G. Curtenius and John L. Griswold, located on the river bank where the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad station now is; Jesse L. Knowlton, on Water Street nearly opposite the same station; Brotherson & McReynolds, consisting of P. R. K. Brotherson and Matthew W. McReynolds, located on the upper side of Liberty near Water Street; Peter O. Loucks, located on the lower side of Washington near Main Street; Levi B. Gibson, afterward at the same place; McCoy & Straut (George), predecessors of the present firm of James McCoy & Co.; Samuel H. Thompson, located at first on the upper side of Main Street between Washington and Water, afterward on Washington below Liberty. These firms laid the foundations of that immense trade, amounting to millions of dollars annually, and now enjoyed by Oakford & Fahnestock; James McCoy & Co.; The Wilson Grocery Company; Charles J. Off & Co.; Jobst, Bethard & Co.; William P. Gauss and others.

The leading wholesale drug houses were Farrell & Lippincott, already mentioned; Dr. James Mossman, who was succeeded about the year 1844 by William A. Herron, located on the corner of Main Street and Printer's Alley, afterward on the corner of Main and Washington Streets, where Robert L. Davis now is, which, for fully one-half century, has been occupied as a drug store. Others were Tucker & Mansfield, on the upper side of Main Street between Washington and Water; Charles Fisher, corner of Water and Fulton Streets, whose sons are still in the business; Farrell (D. W. C.) & Cox, on the Herron corner; William H. Davis, corner of Main and Adams Streets, now McDougal's; Peter S. Shelly, on Water Street. All of these did more or less of a wholesale business. This trade, supplemented as it is with the manufacturing establishments of Allaire, Woodward & Co., elsewhere noticed, has become one of the marked industries of Peoria, being now represented by the extensive wholesale houses of Colburn, Birks & Co.; Barker, Wheeler & Co.; Hiram G. Farrell (at his old stand of fifty-five years ago); Charles Fisher & Co., and Sutliff & Case Co., whose aggregate sales amount to immense sums.

The business of wholesaling dry-goods and boots and shoes was once a feature of the mercantile interests of Peoria, but the sales in these particular lines have, of late years, become eclipsed by those of the immense department store of Schipper & Block; by the wholesale departments of Harned & Von Maur, Clarke & Co., The Fitzgerald Dry Goods Company and Joseph Szold & Son in the dry-goods line, and by R. M. Berger & Co. and Crofoot & Parmenter, wholesalers, and Jacob P. Schnellbacher, The H. Thielbar Shoe Company, J. C. Wynd & Co., and others, retailers, in the line of boots and shoes.

The hardware business was at first associated with other kinds of merchandise in the general stores. Isaac Walker and Hervey Lightner, under the firm name of Walker & Lightner, on the upper side of Main Street between Washington and Water, seem to have been the first to start an exclusive hardware establishment. This firm, under several changes of name, has developed into the present extensive wholesale establishment of the Isaac Walker Hardware Company. Other early dealers were Moses Pettengill, Hotchkiss (Z. N.) & Hansel (John W.), Albert Pothoff & Co., and Charles Proebsting & Co. The wholesale trade is now represented by the extensive houses of The Isaac Walker Hardware Company; Clark, Quien & Morse; Hunter & Strehlow; H. Sandmeyer & Co.; by the house of Cummings & Emerson, who deal exclusively in iron, and by the F. Meyer & Brothers Company, extensive dealers in hardware and manufacturers of the Wear Hot Air Furnace.

These several interests, and others that might be mentioned, sustain a close relationship to and tend greatly to augment the general commercial prosperity of the city, their immense stocks in trade being first brought to the city and then distributed to the consumers throughout a large portion of the Mississippi Valley.

As population grew and business increased the different classes of merchandise formerly handled in the general stores—dry-goods, groceries, hardware, boots and shoes, hats and caps—on the one hand, and the products of the farm on the other, began to separate themselves from each other and to constitute separate branches of business. It was not many years until the buying, selling and shipping of grain became a separate and one of the principal branches of business in Peoria. Owing to the combination of different branches of trade in the hands of a single firm, it is difficult, if not quite impossible, to tell who was the pioneer in this line. About the year 1851 William Kellogg erected a large grain warehouse on the river bank between Harrison & Bridge Streets, from which boats could be loaded at all stages of water. His business having increased rapidly, he erected an immense warehouse at the foot of Elm Street, which is elsewhere described. About the year 1850 or 1851 John Reynolds erected a warehouse, very similar to Kellogg's first one, on the same block. Having entered into partnership with Mr. John C. Grier, under the firm name of Reynolds & Grier, that firm also did a large business in grain, pork and general produce. Not long afterward Mr. Reynolds, having erected a packing-house on the river bank between Walnut and Chestnut Streets, retired from the grain business and Mr. Grier became associated in business with Mr. Josiah E. McClure, under the firm name of Grier & McClure, and added lumber to their other business. About the same time John McKenzie also became engaged in the grain business and carried it on quite extensively on Water Street near Main. Alexander G. Tyng erected a grain warehouse at the corner of Water and Walnut Streets, where he did a large business in grain and general produce, but his warehouse having been burned, he rebuilt one square further down, and associated with himself Mr. P. R. K. Brotherson. When the Peoria and Oquawka Railroad was in process of building this firm established purchasing agencies at its successive terminals, first at Edwards' Mill near the present village of Edwards; next at the Brimfield Station, now Oak Hill; next at Elmwood, then an incipient village of only a few houses. When the road had reached Oak Hill a long delay occurred, during which time the firm of Tyng & Brotherson established a large trade with the western part of Peoria and the eastern part of Knox counties. (See Railroads—Rosefield). In the year 1857, about which time the dealers in grain were organizing a Board of Trade, the following firms were engaged in dealing in grain, country produce and lumber, one or all: Grier

Alvan Kidder

& McClure, on the levee, foot of Harrison Street; Tyng & Brotherson, corner of Water and Chestnut; Morrison & Co. (consisting of Ephraim Morrison, of Peoria, and Charles H. Walker, of Chicago), in Kellogg's first warehouse; William C. Boilvin & Co., No. 3 South Water Street; Alexander Hawthorne, on Water Street between Walnut and Chestnut; Adam and Matthew Staunton, as Staunton Brothers, Water Street above North Fayette (now Eaton); Garrett Trant, No. 50 Water Street; Joseph True, No. 44 Fayette Street. The mills, distilleries, breweries and starch factories bought their grain on the street or wherever they could.

TRANSPORTATION.

Before the era of steamboats and the later period of the introduction of railroads, the methods of communication between Peoria and the surrounding country was confined almost entirely to private vehicles for the transportation of goods or produce by land, and to canoes, skiffs and keel or flatboats by water. From the days of Joliet and LaSalle, the Illinois River had been a favorite thoroughfare, well known to the French voyageurs, traders and explorers in their journeys from the Great Lakes to the Mississippi, and continued to be so to their successors after the Illinois country came into the possession of the latter. The first lines of public conveyance were the primitive stage-coach, although the uses of these were limited almost solely to the transportation of the mails and passengers with a limited amount of baggage.

According to the most trustworthy authorities available, the first steamboat to reach the city of Peoria was the "Liberty," which arrived in December, 1829. This was followed in the spring of 1830 by the "S. B. Triton," which had been chartered by John Hamlin, an early merchant, to bring to Peoria a stock of goods which he had purchased at St. Louis. In 1832 the steamer "Fairy" made a trip up the Illinois, touching at Peoria, and Mr. Hamlin entered into a contract for the purchase of a half-interest in the vessel upon delivery here, but it was lost near the mouth of the Missouri on its return trip. During 1833 it is said that there were four steamers making at least occasional trips up the Illinois as far as Peoria—the "Exchange," the "Utility," the "Peoria" and the "Friendship." The last of these had been built at Brownsville, Pennsylvania, was brought into the Illinois in 1832, and having been purchased by Captain Hamlin, Henry Stillman and Peter Menard—the latter the son of Pierre Menard, Illinois' first Lieutenant-Governor—is said to have been the first new steamer to make regular trips up the Illinois River. Of course, these steamers were all small and primitive affairs in comparison with the packets which, at a later date, were accustomed to ply upon the Mississippi and the Illinois. The "Exchange" was familiarly known as the "Shingle Weaver," so called from the fact of her carrying upon her hurricane deck a machine for cutting shingles, which was operated by the machinery of the boat, cutting whenever the boat was in motion. Shingle timber would be obtained at the wood-yards along the river, and market found for the manufactured goods either at St. Louis or Peoria. ("Canton," by A. M. Swan). She was a great favorite of the people of Canton, and commanded most of their trade and travel by river.

Under the impulse brought about by the increased immigration, and the arrival here of men of enterprise from the older States, about 1834, there was a marked increase in the magnitude of the river commerce. During that year the "Express," "Herald," "Argus" and "Winnebago" were added to the list of boats making more or less regular trips up the Illinois, while the "Jo Davies" joined the Illinois line of steamers in 1835. The latter was owned by Capt. William A. Hall,—who had been the pilot on the "Friendship," two or three years before—and his brother, David Hall, of Peoria. It was sunk at the head of Grand Island near the mouth of Spoon River, a few months later. During the next five years (1835 to 1840) Mississippi River steamers began to ascend the Illinois as far as Lacon, especially in times of high water, returning loaded with pork and grain for the New Orleans market. The number of steamers making trips up the Illinois from St. Louis (some of them at irregular intervals) had increased in 1840 to forty; and, by 1844, to 150, of which seventeen were regular packets. A number of Peoria people are reputed to have been part or sole owners of several of these vessels. In 1848 Capt. W. S. Moss, then a prominent business man of Peoria—but afterward a resident of California, where he died some years since—having purchased the hull of the "Avalanche," which had been burned at St. Louis, had it towed to Peoria and the vessel completely rebuilt by Peoria workmen in time to engage in the fall trade the same year. "Drown's Directory" of 1851 reports 50 steamers engaged in the Illinois River trade as far as Peoria, during the previous year, and the number of arrivals at the Peoria landing 1,236—this being exclusive of canal boats, of which there was a large number.

Prior to May 24, 1848, the river traffic came and went by way of the south. Merchandise from the East came by New Orleans and the Mississippi River, or across the mountains by Conestoga wagons or the Pennsylvania Canal, and thence to Peoria by the Ohio, the Mississippi and the Illinois Rivers. Lumber came down the Mississippi to Grafton or St. Louis, and was thence towed to Peoria or brought by boat. One instance may be mentioned to illustrate the difficulties attending this trade. A company was organized at Peoria to get out and raft lumber from the pineries on the Wisconsin River, by way of the Mississippi, to Grafton, whence the raft was to be towed to Peoria. When the raft was about completed a freshet occurred on the Wisconsin and disrupted it, so that much of the lumber went floating down the river. Having repaired the damage as far as possible, the owners started in pursuit of the straggling pieces and gathered them up, one by one, as they floated down the big river, but many of them were never recovered, and the company suffered considerable pecuniary loss in the enterprise.

For a decade and more the people of Peoria had been hoping to see the day when the Illinois and Michigan Canal should be completed, and they should be brought into commercial relations with the East by way of the Great Lakes. They had witnessed the sudden rise and the disastrous fall of the great internal improvement bubble; they had seen their darling scheme of a canal to connect the river and the lakes come to a stand-still, once and again, for lack of funds; they had seen it pass into the hands of trustees of foreign capitalists, whose only hope was to realize on their own investments, whether the people were to be benefited or not, and now all were in anxious expectancy of the completion of the then great waterway.

At length, on the 22d day of May, 1848, there came up the river the first canal-boat ever seen on the Illinois. It was named the "General Shields," built at Rochester, New York, had come by way of Buffalo, thence by the Erie and Ohio Canals into the Ohio River, down it to the Mississippi, and up the Mississippi and Illinois to Peoria. It had come all that distance to help celebrate the opening of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, which was to take place two days later. Says Mr. Drown: "The 24th of May, 1848, we chronicle as a day of rejoicing and triumph in Peoria, at the first arrival of a canal-boat from Lake Michigan; a day which our citizens had longed to see, and was heralded as the harbinger of a 'good time coming,' and many in waiting for the construction of this canal had passed from the prime of manhood to old age." He further states that, "At the opening of this canal, great quantities of pine and cedar lumber were brought into this market, and, on the 1st of June, 1848, it was selling for one-half the price it had been from the St. Louis and Pittsburg markets the year before. This one article of pine lumber made a great and visible difference in the number and state of our buildings, as building lumber had been both scarce and dear." Mention is also made of the products of the Eastern States being brought into the interior of what was then the Far West, by means of this canal.

Instantly upon the completion of the canal the tide of commerce began to turn in the direction of Chicago; an active rivalry began between the two cities, and the steamboat interests found it necessary to redouble their energies to retain their trade. Steam canal-boats were tried upon the canal, but without any marked success. The boats were towed up and down the canal by horses and mules; but, upon arriving upon the navigable waters of the river, they were taken in tow by steam tow-boats and transported to their destination. These tow-boats were stoutly built side-wheel steamers, propelled by powerful engines and having just cabin room enough to accommodate their crews. Canal-boats, barges, scows, flat-boats and other craft, numbering from two to fifteen or more, would be lashed together side by side or lengthwise, often covering acres in extent, and the fleet so formed, moving slowly up or down the river, presented a unique appearance to the beholder.

In those days an immense trade in ice was carried on between the Illinois River and the cities of the lower Mississippi—St. Louis, Memphis, Vicksburgh and New Orleans. Immense barges, capable of carrying one to three thousand tons each, would be anchored, late in the fall, at Peru and points lower down, and loaded with ice during the winter. At the proper season fleets, numbering from five to ten of these, would be formed and towed to their destination by these powerful tugs.

In 1851 there was a line of packet boats called the "Illinois River Express Line," making weekly trips from St. Louis to La Salle, one leaving St. Louis every day in the week except Sunday. They consisted of the "Ocean Wave," F. Deviney, Master; the "Connecticut," H. Price, Master; the "Gladiator," A. R. Dewitt, Master; the "Avalanche," John Russell, Master; the "Prairie State," S. Ryder, Master; the "Prairie Bird," O. H. Pratt, Master. These boats made a specialty of the passenger traffic, but carried also large amounts of freight. Besides these there were twenty-seven tow-boats making regular trips, and many other steamers making only occasional trips up this river, some of them being Lower Mississippi boats of large tonnage.

There was also the "Lucy Bertram," Thomas Baldwin, Master, making regular trips between St. Louis and La Salle. Captain Baldwin afterwards built and commanded the "Aunt Letty," so named after his wife Letitia, who was familiarly called by that name. He also commanded some others of the finest boats on the river, all of which were very popular with the people of Peoria. Captain Baldwin was a highly respected and influential citizen of Peoria, having his residence where the new St. Francis Hospital now stands on the East Bluff. At the outbreak of the Rebellion he entered the United States Navy and was placed in command of the Gunboat Romeo, where he served with distinguished bravery.

Upon the opening of the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad as far as La Salle in 1853, the through travel from St. Louis and the Southwest was turned to the Illinois instead of the Ohio River. Competing lines of boats were established, and the time of trips was reduced to five days. The time from La Salle to Peoria was nine hours; from Peoria to St. Louis about twenty-four hours, and from St. Louis to New York, three days.

Another line then running was composed of the following boats: The "Amazonia," Deviney, Master; the "Prairie State," Ryder, Master; the "Belle Gould," Roger, Master; the "Cata-ract," Able, Master; and the "Hibernia," Price, Master.

For some years competition for the passenger traffic ran high, first-class boats were put on the river and every possible inducement was held out to the public. Upon the completion of the railroad to Peoria, in November, 1854, passenger boats ceased running any further than this point. But this traffic was destined to yield to the more expeditious method of travel afforded by the railroads, and travel by the river dwindled down to almost nothing.

In 1858, according to Johnson's "History," the Illinois River Packet Company was formed, D. H. Hancock being President of the company and Franklin L. Rhoads, G. N. Walker, Rollin Clark and J. M. Mortimer, Directors. The steamboats-composing the stock of the company were the "Sam Gaty," "Louisville," "F. X. Aubry," "Sam Young," "Altoona," "Americus" and "Brazil," to which were added the "Polar Star" and the "Challenge," by purchase, and the "LaSalle," "Lacon," "Schuyler," "City of Pekin," "City of Peoria," "Illinois" and "Beardstown," besides numerous barges, built by the company. This is believed to have been the strongest company ever engaged in the Illinois River trade. Their boats made regular trips from St. Louis to Peoria, and some of them as far north as LaSalle, the head of navigation. The commerce of the Illinois River was largely controlled by this company until it sold out, in 1867, to the St. Louis and Illinois River Packet Company, of which F. S. Rodgers was President. Among the commanders of these boats appear the names of Captains Rhoads, Stackpole, Hicks, Scott, Adams, Lowry and Bassett. Captain Rhoads enlisted as a soldier at the beginning of the War of the Rebellion, entering the Eighth Regiment, Illinois Volunteers (Col. R. J. Oglesby's), with the rank of Captain; was soon commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, and, on the promotion of his superior officer, to Brigadier-General, was advanced to the colonelcy of the regiment. He afterward located at Shawneetown, dying near that city in 1879.

The methods of receiving and discharging cargoes by river steamers of that period was very different from that in vogue at the present time. Instead of receiving grain in bulk directly from warehouses and elevators as now, all grain was placed in sacks to be handled by the deckhands or stevedores, the loading of a large steamer sometimes requiring days in place of hours.

The advent of the railroads in this region, some of them running parallel with the river, and the growing importance of the element of speed in getting products to market, have wrought an entire change in the river traffic. Except for the purpose of communication between a few river points and the transportation of commodities not requiring promptness of delivery, the river steamer has been almost entirely eliminated as an element of traffic between river towns. The completion of the Chicago Drainage Canal, however, has much improved the navigation possibilities of the Illinois River, affording a water-route to New Orleans and other southern markets at all seasons of the year, which is likely to give a renewed stimulus to river commerce and result in advantage to the city of Peoria. At the present time there are three packet lines engaged in the Illinois River trade to Peoria, viz.: The Dixon, the Eagle and the LaSalle & Peoria Companies.

As the center of railway traffic, the position of the Peoria of to-day is conspicuous. Of the fourteen different lines of railroad converging here, Peoria is the initial or terminal point of each—a fact which can scarcely be stated of any other city of its size in the country, and which gives it an immense advantage in trade with other sections. The railways centering at this point at the present time are:

The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway. (Eastern terminals, Chicago and Peoria.)

The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. (Eastern terminals, Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis.)

The Iowa Central Railway. (Eastern terminal, Peoria.)

The Rock Island & Peoria Railroad.

The Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway. (Under control of the Pennsylvania Company.)

The Lake Erie & Western Railroad. (Under Lake Shore and Michigan Southern control and ownership.)

The Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway. (Vanderbilt system.)

The Vandavia Line—Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad. (Under control of Pennsylvania Railroad Company.)

The Illinois Central Railroad. (Peoria, Decatur and Evansville Division.)

The Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad.

The Chicago & Alton Railway.

The Chicago & Northwestern Railway.

The Peoria & Pekin Union Railway. (Terminal line.)

The Peoria & Pekin Terminal Railway.

GRAIN ELEVATORS.

Next to the steamboat and (later) the railroad, there has been no more important factor in the development of the grain trade than the grain elevator. In fact, the elevator has been the "connecting link" between the producer, the local dealer and the carrier, on the one hand, and the manufacturer and the shipper on the other. It has been essential to the success of each, and neither could have prospered as they have done without the facilities it has furnished for handling grain in large quantities and in a speedy manner.

The history of elevators in Peoria began in 1866 with the erection of the "Central Elevator," by Messrs. Grier & Co., a firm consisting of R. C. and D. P. Grier, on the river side of Water Street between Liberty and Harrison, near where the Peoria Electric Light plant is now located. Previous to this time the traffic in grain had been limited chiefly to a retail business, the grain being for the most part purchased from farmers who brought their produce to market in their wagons. Before it could be shipped (with the exception of limited quantities shipped by canal-boats) it had to be put into sacks in the warehouses. The "Central Elevator" was completed in November, 1866, and opened for business in January following, and had an immediate effect in stimulating into a more vigorous vitality the grain trade of Peoria.

In the fall of 1869 Messrs. William J. Dobbins, John E. McClure and Henry W. McFadden, under the firm name of Dobbins & Co., commenced the erection, on the corner of Washington and Maple Streets, of a second elevator, which they called the "Central City," having a capacity of 90,000 bushels. It was opened for business in March, 1870.

A year later, it having become evident that the elevator facilities were still insufficient for the transaction of the rapidly growing grain business of the city, "The Union Elevator Company" was organized, and proceeded to erect the elevator for some years known as "Union Elevator No. 1," with a capacity of 150,000 bushels, on the lower side of the C. B. & Q. Railroad near the foot of Cedar Street. In 1876 its capacity was increased to 400,000 bushels.

In April, 1872, the "Central City Elevator" was destroyed by fire and two new elevators were erected—one known as "Elevator A" by the "Peoria Elevator Company," situated on the river bank at the foot of Oak Street, near where the Peoria & Pekin Union Railroad freight houses now are, and having a capacity of 350,000 bushels; the other by Messrs. Tyng & Brotherson, known as "Elevator B," situated near the foot of Cedar Street and having a capacity of 100,000 to 150,000 bushels. In 1875-6 Messrs. Easton, Rugg & Co. built an elevator on the site of the old "Central City Elevator," having a capacity of 150,000 bushels, which they named "The Phoenix." During the year 1877 both "Elevator B" and the "Central" (the earliest elevator), and a year later "The Phoenix," were destroyed by fire. In 1879 Messrs. Arthur H. Rugg, George Bryan and Frank Murden erected an elevator on the site of the former "Central City" and "The Phoenix," which they called "The Advance."

In the year 1880 there were three principal elevators in the city—"The Union," "The Advance" and "Elevator A"—having an aggregate capacity estimated at 1,000,000 bushels. None of these are now standing, "Elevator A" and "The Advance" having been burned, and "The Union" some years afterward having been removed to make room for railroad yards.

About the year 1882 to '83, and while "The Union No. 1" was still standing, "The Union Elevator Company" erected another of much larger capacity adjoining the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, at Russell Street, which was at first known as "Union No. 2," now "The Burlington."

About this time, also, "The Central City Elevator Company" erected an elevator adjoining the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, at Morgan Street, now known as "The Central City." About the year 1885-86 "The Iowa Elevator," situated at Lower Peoria, adjoining the Iowa Central Railroad, was erected.

Three other small elevators were fitted up, from time to time, as follows: "The Fort Clark," near Fort Clark Mills, operated by Bannister & Co., about 1881; "The Commercial" on Water Street between Harrison and Bridge, about 1883, operated by Harris & Comstock, and "The Walker Elevator," about 1884-85, by G. N. Walker & Co., on Water Street between Main and Fulton.

All have now gone out of existence except three. At the present time (1902) there are three principal elevators in existence in the city under the following names:

The Burlington, capacity.....	500,000 bushels.
The Iowa, capacity.....	1,000,000 bushels.
The Central City, capacity....	250,000 bushels.
Total	1,750,000 bushels.

The capacity of the Iowa Elevator has been doubled during the past year, and that of the Burlington will likely soon be enlarged in the same proportion, which will give the Peoria elevators a total capacity of 2,250,000 bushels.

The transfer capacity of these elevators is estimated at 550 cars daily.

BOARD OF TRADE.

Prior to the year 1857 no formal organization of business men existed in Peoria, having for its object the promotion of the mercantile and general business interests of the city. During the month of April of that year an association was formed, in accordance with an act of the Legislature, approved and in force February 8, 1849, authorizing the incorporation of Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce in cities of the State. The new organization, composed of some fifty prominent citizens and business men of Peoria, adopted the name "Peoria Board of Trade," and chose officers and directors as follows:

President.....	John C. Grier.
Vice-President.....	Alexander G. Tyng.
Secretary.....	John M. Cowell.
Treasurer.....	Lewis Howell.

Directors.

Hervey Lightner,	Amos P. Bartlett,
Roswell Bills,	William Moore,
Moses Pettengill,	Louis M. Doup,
C. W. McClallen,	John T. Lindsay,
John W. Hansel,	Horace G. Anderson,
Henry I. Rugg,	Richard Gregg.

Standing Committee.

B. L. T. Bourland,	David McKinney,
Charles Holland,	Pliny Curtiss.
T. C. Moore,	T. S. Bradley,
	P. R. K. Brotherson.

The present survivors (1902) of the original members of the Board are six in number, embracing the following names: J. W. Hansel, Richard Cox, David McKinney, D. C. Farrell, B. L. T. Bourland and John T. Lindsay. Two meetings of the Board per year were provided for by the constitution, but there are no records accessible showing whether such meetings were held or the work actually accomplished.

On February 15, 1865, a new association was created by special charter granted by the State Legislature, approved by Gov. R. J. Oglesby, under the title of "The Peoria Mercantile Library," though not properly named for the reason that the charter included a commercial organization to be known as "The Peoria Merchants' Exchange." The attachment of a commercial title was for the purpose of enlisting the interest of the business men of Peoria—the merchants, manufacturers and others identified with business affairs—and, through this class, of obtaining a financial foothold that would result in securing means for the purchase of a permanent home for a Mercantile Library. This was, in a certain sense, in imitation of the plan of the then famous "Mercantile Library" of St. Louis. The object of the association, as stated in section second of the charter, was "to establish and maintain a Public Library, Merchants' Exchange and Reading Room." The plan to a certain extent proved successful, as the valuable property known as the home of John L. Griswold, on the southwest corner of Main Street and Jefferson Avenue, was purchased at a cost of $10,000.

Out of this movement grew a sort of double-headed organization, the "Merchants' Exchange" branch being organized April 4, 1865, with the following board of directors: Lewis Howell, John L. Griswold, D. C. Farrell, H. G. Anderson, A. P. Bartlett, Philip Zell, L. G. Pratt—Mr. Howell being chosen President. Two days later (April 6) the "Mercantile Library" branch organized with the following Board of officers: Tobias S. Bradley, President; William A. Willard, Vice-President; H. N. Wheeler, Treasurer; George H. McIlvaine, Secretary; and A. G. Tyng, Corresponding Secretary. The "Merchants' Exchange" was allotted a small room on the first floor of the old Griswold residence, where it was suggested business men, who might be so inclined, could meet and discuss business affairs and read the local and Chicago morning papers, which then arrived in the evening.

Beyond the impulse given by this association to what is now the Peoria Public Library (which see), little was accomplished, under this charter, towards developing a strictly business men's organization. Accordingly, in the latter part of the year 1860, a third movement was inaugurated, which resulted in the organization of the "Peoria Board of Trade" as it exists to-day. The primary object of the organization was to foster and maintain trade in grain, although it has had a strong influence upon traffic in other products, and has proved an important factor in the development of railway enterprises and in general city improvements. After its organization in December, 1860, the Board held its meetings, for some months, in a room on the second floor of a building on South Washington Street, opposite the present Chamber of Commerce building (now occupied by the Board), but afterward removed to more commodious quarters at the corner of Fulton and Washington Streets, which it first occupied November 10, 1870. Here it remained until 1875, when the Chamber of Commerce building was erected, of which fuller notice will be taken hereafter.

At its original organization the Board included in its roll of membership men engaged in various branches of business, as well as those connected with the professions. The original fee for membership was $10; but, in 1873, it was increased to $50 with dues of $40 per year from each member. This had the effect of practically limiting the membership to those engaged in the grain, distilling or packing business—the enrollment for that year being 93. In 1876 there was a further increase of the membership fee to $250, while the annual dues have been gradually reduced to $25. The membership fee is now (1902) $100, certificates of membership being transferable upon the books of the Board under certain conditions. Owing to this latter feature there has been little change in the aggregate membership in recent years—the number at the present time being 100.

The former officers of the Board have been as follows:

Presidents—Horace Clark, 1870-71; R. C. Grier, 1872; Jonathan Hancock, 1873; David McKinney, 1874; David P. Grier, 1875; G. T. Barker, 1876; E. S. Easton, 1877; B. H. Morgan, 1878; William R. Bush, 1879; Joseph Elder, 1880; A. H. Rugg, 1881; S. C. Bartlett, 1882; Philo B. Miles, 1883; Adolph Woolner, 1884; B. Warren, Jr., 1885; W. H. Bartlett, 1886; J. B. Greenhut, 1887; Frank Hall, 1888; C. C. Miles, 1889; Alex. G. Tyng, Jr., 1890; J. Wachenheimer, 1891; B. F. Rhodehamel, 1892; E. D. McDougal, 1893; Samuel Woolner, 1894; Daniel Mowat, 1895; W. F. Bryan, Jr., 1896; J. M. Quinn, 1897; Samuel Woolner, Jr., 1898; Frank Baker, 1899; Peter Casey, 1900; W. R. Buckley, 1901.

Vice-Presidents (First and Second)—D. C. Farrell, G. N. Walker, 1870; R. C. Grier, E. S. Willcox, 1871; C. S. Clark, A. G. Tyng, 1872; A. G. Tyng, J. Warner, 1873; E. S. Willcox, Eliot Callender, 1874; E. S. Willcox, J. H. Francis, 1875; B. H. Morgan, A. H. Rugg, 1876; Joseph Elder, A. J. Boylan, 1877; Joseph Elder, W. R. Bush, 1878; Joseph Elder, A. H. Rugg, 1879; A. H. Rugg, A. J. Boylan, 1880; C. F. Hitchcock, A. Woolner, 1881; A. Woolner, W. R. Buckley, 1882; R. M. Campbell, W. H. Minor, 1883; A. G. Tyng, J. M. Quinn, 1884; Samuel

Martin Kingman

Woolner, W. H. Mills, 1885; G. L. Bradbury, J. B. Greenhut, 1886; T. B. Burnett, J. W. Gift, 1887; J. W. Gift, A. G. Tyng, Jr., 1888-89; B. F. Rhodehamel, T. A. Grier, 1890; I. W. Donmeyer, T. A. Grier, 1891; T. A. Grier, Rollin Wiley, 1892-93; D. Mowat, J. M. Quinn, 1894; J. M. Quinn, James Bannister, 1895; H. F. Velde, J. M. Quinn, 1896; H. F. Velde, Fred. H. Smith, 1897; H. M. Griggs, W. H. Mills, 1898; H. M. Griggs, W. R. Buckley, 1899; W. R. Buckley, R. W. Van Tassell, 1900; F. T. Corning, M. A. Wheeler, 1901.

Secretaries—P. F. Chase, 1870; F. Cantelo, 1871-73; S. Wilkinson, 1874-85; A. H. Rugg, 1886-90; R. C. Grier, 1890-1901.

Treasurers—J. B. Hogue, 1870-72; L. Howell, 1873-80; J. B. Smith, 1881-89; B. F. Blossom, 1889-1901.

The officers for 1902 are: J. W. Gift, President; J. S. Talbot and Adolph Woolner, Jr., Vice-Presidents; R. C. Grier, Secretary; Walter Barker, Treasurer, with Messrs. A. G. Tyng, B. Warren, Jr., J. Wachenheimer, W. R. Buckley, Frank Hall, T. A. Grier, J. M. Quinn, C. C. Miles, F. M. Cole and R. A. Whitney constituting the Board of Directors. Besides various Standing Committees composed of members of the Board of Directors, Committees on Arbitration and Appeals, composed of members of the Board of Trade, are appointed each year for the settlement of questions affecting the inspection of grain and other disputed matters growing out of business upon the Board.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

On January 30, 1875, the "Peoria Chamber of Commerce Association" was organized under the general incorporation laws of the State, for the purpose of "providing suitable grounds and the erection and furnishing a suitable building in said city of Peoria, to be known as a Chamber of Commerce." The object was to provide a suitable home for the Peoria Board of Trade, which had been organized five years previous. The original incorporators were Lewis Howell, Robert C. Grier and Jonathan Hancock, the stock being placed at $75,000, held by some eighty prominent business men of the city. At a meeting of the stockholders held soon after the incorporation the following Board of Directors was elected: Jonathan Hancock, David McKinney, E. S. Easton, Thomas Cratty, William Steinseifer, Lewis Howell, L. L. Day, S. H. Thompson and David

P. Grier—E. S. Easton being chosen the first President; David McKinney, Secretary, and Lewis Howell, Treasurer. Steps were immediately taken for the erection of the building in contemplation on the organization of the company; on February 13, 1875, a site on the northeast corner of Washington and Harrison Streets was purchased at a cost of about $10,000, and plans for a building, prepared by B. Wadskier, a Chicago architect, having been adopted, on April 25, following, a contract for its construction was awarded to William P. Caverly, of Toulon, Illinois, and Hiram H. Pierce, of Peoria, for $69,900. Ground was broken on May 1st, and on June 2d the corner-stone was laid with imposing ceremonies. The building was completed and accepted by the Chamber of Commerce Association on December 15, 1875, and, on the same day, it was taken possession of by the Board of Trade and appropriately dedicated. Among the invited guests from abroad present on the occasion were Gov. John L. Beveridge and representatives of various Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade from principal Eastern and Western cities. The total cost of the building, including heating apparatus and other extras, was approximately $90,000—the excess of cost over the paid-up capital of $75,000 being obtained by loan. On January 20, 1888, about the time the loan had been paid off, the building was partly demolished by fire, but was rebuilt within the next few months on a somewhat modified plan. The amount of insurance being insufficient to cover the entire loss, the Association was compelled to assume a new indebtedness, which has now been nearly paid off. Of the 750 shares of stock issued, 381½ are held by the Peoria Board of Trade, the remaining 368½ shares being held by individual stockholders, upon which they receive semi-annual dividends. The present officers of the Association are: R. C. Grier, President; David McKinney, Secretary, and C. R. Wheeler, Treasurer.

The building covers an area of 65 feet front on South Washington Street by 145 feet on Harrison, and is four stories in height, the outer walls above the stone foundation being constructed of brick, with blue Amherst cut-stone trimmings. Besides the Board of Trade exchange and office rooms of the Board, on the third floor, the remainder of the building is occupied for office purposes by various business concerns, including the Western Union and Postal Telegraph Companies on the first floor. Several railway companies and commission firms also have offices in the building.

GRAIN INSPECTION.

An essential feature of the grain trade, as conducted upon the Board, is the inspection of all grain, either for storage in elevators or sale upon the Board of Trade, and its inspection out for the purpose of shipment. This is conducted under the direction of the Board of Trade, through its Directors, who, on the third Monday of January of each year, or at any other meeting of their body, are empowered to "appoint a registrar and such samplers, inspectors, gaugers, weighers, measurers and other officers or servants as, in their opinion, shall be for the best interests of the Association, and shall establish such rules for the government of such appointees as they may deem proper." It has been the custom of the Board of Directors to appoint the Secretary of the Board of Trade to the office of Grain Registrar, as the record of receipts and shipments of grain is kept in his office. At the present time the Board of Directors have in their employment five samplers and three inspectors. It is the duty of an inspector, with the aid of a "sampler" or "helper," to procure and examine a sample of each car-load or lot of grain arriving for sale on the Board of Trade or for shipment, for the purpose of fixing the grade before it is placed upon the market. The grades of the different varieties of grain are substantially the same as those fixed by the Railroad and Warehouse Commission for the government of the Grain Inspection Department in Chicago. In case of disagreement between the shipper and consignee in reference to the grading of grain, the question is referred to the Standing Committee on Inspection, composed of expert grain judges, who have power to decide the point at issue.

GRAIN RECEIPTS AND SHIPMENTS.

The aggregate receipts and shipments of grain at Peoria, as shown by the reports of the Board of Trade, for each tenth year since its organization in 1870, with those of 1901, have been as follows:

YEAR.	RECEIPTS.	SHIPMENTS.
1870	6,591,210	3,853,720
1880	24,070,980	19,723,240
1890	32,066,650	26,767,074
1900	32,588,600	18,028,425
1901	36,609,466	20,953,136

The statement for 1901 does not include flour, of which the receipts amounted to 940,197 barrels, and the shipments to 1,032,275 barrels.

The receipts and shipments of different classes of grain (in bushels) for 1901 have been as follows:

KIND OF GRAIN.	RECEIPTS.	SHIPMENTS.
Wheat (bushels)	1,716,750	690,746
Corn (bushels)	19,604,566	5,755,100
Oats (bushels)	12,689,400	12,641,200
Rye (bushels)	221,200	39,400
Barley (bushels)	2,377,550	1,626,690
Total	36,609,466	20,953,136

The record breaking year, both as to receipts and shipments, was 1896—the receipts for that year being 40,723,150 bushels, and the shipments 20,914,310 bushels. The importance of Peoria as a corn and oats market is indicated by the fact that, in 1900, as regards both these cereals, it stood third among Central Western distributing markets, being surpassed only by Chicago and St. Louis.

The following extracts from the Thirty-first Annual Report of the Board of Trade, for the year ending December 31, 1900, have a pertinent application to this subject, as well as to Peoria's importance as a manufacturing center:

"An analysis of the receipts and shipments prove Peoria one of the centers whose activities are influenced by the location of manufacturers based upon the abundant supply of the raw materials of agriculture. The most notable examples are the manufactures of distilled spirits, and industries dependent upon the corn supply. Located in the heart of the corn belt, the demands of these local industries act favorably upon farm prices, and greatly influence the course of trade by the conversion of raw materials into a far less bulky but far more valuable form of commodity. The importance of these industries in relation to the commerce of this city is indicated by the comparison of corn receipts and shipments and of distilled spirits and other products of corn received and shipped, all of which go to show the part that local industries have in the conversion of heavy freight into light freight, and lower values into higher values per unit of bulk.

"The manufacturing interests of Peoria are increasing and developing continuously. Peoria is noted as an implement distributing center, and it is asserted by representatives of manufacturers to be the most prominent not only in Illinois, but outranking other localities in the Western States. This is owing to central locality and the unusual facilities of distribution. Ten or twelve branch houses, representing the most prominent implement manufactories of the United States, with their own storage warehouses, are located here."

PORK PACKING

Once a leading factor in the business industries of Peoria, pork packing has been materially modified by the increased facilities of railroad transportation in later years, tending to concentrate the packing industries at certain great centers, especially (for this region) at Chicago. The pioneer in this business in Peoria was E. F. Nowland, who opened a packing-house here in 1837, later introducing steam appliances in connection with his business. In 1849 his establishment is said to have had a capacity of 600 hogs per day. In 1841 John Reynolds began a slaughtering and packing business, followed a year later by Voris & Co. and Curtenius & Griswold. In 1848 Mr. Nowland established the first regular slaughtering house, on the river bank near where the Union Depot now stands. Messrs. Voris & Co. and Curtenius & Griswold withdrew from the business in 1850, Kellogg & Co. entering upon it the same year. About 1852 Tyng & Brotherson erected a packing-house, and, with Reynolds & Co. and Kellogg & Co., had virtual control of the packing industry for several years—Kellogg & Co. retiring in 1858. In 1857 Reynolds & Co. erected a large slaughtering establishment as an addition to their packing house. Cockle & Davis were engaged in the business between 1868 and 1876. Pinger & Son entered into the business in 1873, and Tyng & Brotherson retired in 1877. In the earlier part of this period animals for the packing-houses were received by wagon or on foot from the surrounding country, or by boat from points along the river, and later chiefly by railroad and the river. At the present time the local business in this line is in the hands of the Peoria Packing and Provision Company and E. Godel

& Sons, although the large packing establishments of Chicago maintain branch houses here for the sale of their products. (See "Manufactures"—"Packers, Beef and Pork.")

UNION STOCK YARDS.

The Peoria Union Stock Yards, now under the management of J. F. Vincent & Co., at the foot of South Street, were opened about 1875 or '76 by Thomas Neill, of the firm of Neill, McGrew & Co., who operated them for a number of years, when they passed into the hands of the First National Bank, being under the control for some time of a Mr. James Johnson. They have been operated for fourteen years by Messrs. Vincent & Co., who have offices in the Exchange Building. Mr. J. F. Vincent, the head of the firm, having been connected with the management for twenty-five years. The grounds occupy an area approximating twenty-five acres, the yards located thereon being equipped with all modern conveniences for the handling of stock, including horse-barns, cattle-pens, sheds, water-troughs, etc., besides side-tracks for receiving and shipping stock by the several railroad lines. The yards are supplied with a constant flow of water from the city water-works, besides having use, in case of emergency, of an artesian well upon the premises. The horse-barns have a capacity of 300 head; the cattle-pens, 3,000 head, and the enclosures for sheep and hogs, 8,000 head. The daily receipts of horses and mules range from 25 to 50 head—this being a feature of the business added at the beginning of the present year (1902)—those of cattle average about 100 per day, while the hog receipts run from 500 to 3,000 head daily, according to the season. The local packers obtain their supplies through the Stock Yards, while the surplus goes to various Eastern packers, who buy at the yards. The officers of the company are J. F. Vincent, General Manager; E. Wescott, Superintendent; J. F. Todd, General Railroad Agent; and J. A. Timan, Weighmaster.

CHAPTER XIII.

CHURCHES — METHODIST CHURCHES.

THE FIRST METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH is the oldest Protestant Church in Peoria. It did not have the first church edifice, but it can rightfully claim to have had a continued organization for a longer period than any other. Its history, from the date of its organization (1834) until the erection of its first house of worship (1839), has been traced in a former part of this work. Having passed its pioneer state, and having acquired a home of its own, its history thenceforward belongs to the City of Peoria.

The growth of the congregation soon rendered their first house of worship—which was a frame building 31x46 feet—too small for the purposes intended, and, about the year 1843, it was enlarged by tearing out the rear end and extending it fourteen feet. By the year 1847, the church building having again become too small for the congregation, steps were taken to erect a more commodious one; which enterprise was consummated in the month of September, 1849, when the new edifice, erected on the site of the old one, was dedicated. It was a large, plain brick building 60x90 feet, the auditorium occupying nearly the entire second story, the first or basement story being occupied by a lecture room 42x60 feet, four class-rooms, a hall and stairway. It was intended to have a spire, as represented in a cut appearing in "Drown's Record and Historical View of Peoria," but only the frame-work of the lower section was ever erected. This was sided up and roofed over with the purpose in view of completing it at a future day, which day never arrived. In the same year a school for girls, known as the "Peoria Female Institute," was formed under the auspices of the Methodists, which, for a time, occupied the lecture room in the basement of this church, but it was of short duration. This room, as well as one or two of the class-rooms, was subsequently used for a school room until about the time of the establishment of the public schools. This building cost about $6,000.

In 1882 this building and lot were sold with the intention of erecting a new one. This new church was dedicated, October, 1888, the congregation having continued to worship in the old one during its erection. It is located on the corner of Sixth and Franklin Streets. Its original cost was about $25,000, exclusive of the site, but the needs of the church soon demanded an enlargement, which was effected by extending the building to the southward, and by supplying the interior with spacious galleries.

In the years 1841 and 1842, Rev. Nathaniel P. Cunningham was pastor. In the first year of his pastorate, Asahel Hale made the church a donation of 52 feet on Fulton Street by 72 feet deep, as an addition to the church lot. Mr. Cunningham was succeeded in 1843 by Rev. Chauncey Hobart, a preacher of unusual oratorical ability, as well as a hard working and energetic pastor. Having in later years removed to the State of Minnesota, he there became Chaplain in one of the regiments from that State in the Civil War, and later Chaplain of the House of Representatives. He was succeeded in 1843 by Rev. Richard Haney, who, after long and faithful service as a minister of the Gospel, has but recently died. Rev. John Chandler then became pastor for the two succeeding years. During the first year of his ministry the congregation became incorporated, the first Board of Trustees being James Hazzard, George Wilkerson, Samuel S. King, Jesse L. Knowlton, Asahel Hale, Joseph J. Thomas and John Easton. In 1846, Rev. Francis A. McNeal was pastor and, in 1847, Rev. Nathaniel P. Heath was appointed, but he having been sent east to solicit funds for the erection of a new church, Rev. McNeal again served as pastor. During the next two years Rev. Silas Bolles was pastor, and in 1850 he was succeeded by Rev. J. C. Parks, who, without having served out his term, was succeeded by Rev. C. C. Best. It was during his pastorate "The Wesleyan Seminary of Peoria" was established by the church. The Mitchell House—a large brick-building on the corner of Fulton and Jefferson Streets, where the "Peoria Star" is now published—which had been erected by William Mitchell for a hotel, was purchased, and a preparatory school was begun in the basement of the church conducted by William P. Jones. In about two years the project was abandoned for want of support. Mr. Best continued as pastor during the succeeding year (1851). He was succeeded in 1852 by Rev. J. W. Flowers, during whose pastorate of two years a branch church called Moffatt's Church, was established in the lower part of the city. Rev. Caleb Foster was then pastor for one year, after whom, for the ensuing two years, came Rev. William H. Hunter, the veteran who has but recently died. (See Biographical Sketch.) It was during his pastorate that a church called the Second Charge was organized by Rev. Milton L. Haney, who had been appointed to a mission in the city. This second charge occupied a small frame-building, erected for its use on lots owned by William E. Robinson at the corner of Monroe and Eaton Streets.

In 1856 the Annual Conference was held in the First Church presided over by Bishop James.

The following named pastors then succeeded to the pastorate of this church: 1857, Rev. R. C. Bolles; 1858, Rev. R. C. Rowley; 1859, Rev. Samuel G. J. Worthington, who was pastor for some time during the Rebellion. His father had been a slave-holder in Virginia, but he was a pronounced anti-slavery man, and did much to encourage the suppression of the rebellion. His son, Judge Nicholas E. Worthington, has for many years occupied a prominent position as member of Congress and Judge of the Circuit and Appellate Courts. In 1862, Rev. J. S. Cummings succeeded Mr. Worthington. During this year an organ was first introduced into the worship. During the second year of his pastorate the first camp meeting was held at Oak Hill, which has been continued annually ever since. In 1864, Rev. Richard Haney again became pastor and was succeeded the following year by Rev. C. C. Knowlton. It was during the winter of the following year there was one of the greatest revivals ever known in Peoria, beginning in December and continuing until April when 150 members joined this church alone. Mr. Knowlton was again appointed in 1865, but having resigned in February, 1866, his place was supplied for the remainder of the year by Rev. ——— Tubbs. Then followed Rev. A. McGee for two years, and in 1869 Rev. J. P. Brooks for one year. In 1869, Rev. J. S. Cummings again became pastor and continued for three years. Since that time the following ministers have served the congregation as pastors: 1875, Rev. A. R. Morgan, three years; 1878, Rev. Selah W. Brown, two years; 1880, Rev. James McFarland, with Rev. William H. Hunter as assistant, for two years; 1882, Rev. John E. Keene, two years; 1884, Rev. George W. Gue, three years; 1887, Rev. George C. Willing, one year; 1888, Rev. P. A. Cool, two years; 1890, Rev. H. D. Clark, three years; 1892, Rev. Thomas W. McVety, three years; 1897, Rev. Nelson G. Lyons, three years; 1900, Rev. R. E. Buckley, who is still pastor.

The first building was sold to the German Reformed Church and by them to James McFadden, who made of it an addition to another building on the corner of Harrison and Water Streets, which he converted into a hotel. The second church building came into the hands of Henry Mansfield, who converted it into a public hall, in which character it continued until a few years ago, when having become unsafe, the second story was removed and the first or basement story was converted into business property, and is still so used. This church has a membership of about 600, a Sunday School of nearly 400, an Epworth League of 150, and a Junior League of about 100.

THE MADISON AVENUE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH grew out of a mission started by the First Church in 1856, over which Rev. Milton L. Haney was placed about the year 1857. A class of eighteen went from the First Church, who formed the members of this Second Charge. Shortly after that time—the date of which has not been ascertained—a small frame house of worship was erected at the south corner of Monroe and Eaton Streets, on a lot then owned by William E. Robinson, a prominent member of the church. In a few years thereafter it was removed to the west corner of Perry and Eaton Streets, from which location it was afterwards moved to North Jefferson Avenue, thence to Madison Avenue (south side), thence across the street to the site of the present church building, of which it forms a part.

The original Board of Trustees were Samuel

Tart, William Goldsborough, H. B. McFall, William Thompson and Nelson Green. According to the custom of that denomination the pastorate has been frequently changed, there having been over thirty pastors, none of whom have served over two years, except Rev. J. W. Frizelle from 1882 to 1885, and Alexander Smith from 1885 to 1888. It was during the pastorate of the two last named, that the church attained its highest degree of prosperity, up to that time; and it was during the pastorate of Mr. Smith that the congregation erected a neat frame house of worship at a cost of about $10,000. The church maintains a Sunday School of about 125 members, of which W. B. Dimmick is Superintendent. It also has an Epworth League of over thirty members.

HALE MEMORIAL METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. In 1840 Asahel Hale, who had as early as 1831 become a resident of Peoria, and who had early become possessed of a tract of land situated on the brow of the bluff near Main Street, became a member of the First Methodist Church. On November 26, 1861, he made his will, devising the lot on which this church now stands for church purposes, and one-half of his entire estate for the erection of a church edifice thereon. The Trustees named in the will were William Giles, Ira Benton and Columbus Dunham, to whom after his death there was turned over the sum of $11,530.54, which was used for the erection of a church. The contract was let to James Hazzard & Sons in May, 1868; the corner-stone was laid June 23d, and the first service was held therein on November 1st of the same year.

The church was fully organized, November 8, 1868, with the following Official Board: Rev. William A. Spencer, the first pastor, with Daniel B. Allen, J. G. Sansom, R. B. Van Patten, Isaac Evans, Joseph F. Hazzard, W. Behymer and Jonathan Healy. The church has been served by a regular succession of pastors—fifteen in all—Rev. A. W. Lowther being the present incumbent. The congregation having outgrown the capacity of their house of worship, it was determined to erect a new one of more modern style. The first building was of brick, forty feet front on High Street by seventy feet deep. It was built in the prevailing style of the times with apartments for lecture-room and class-rooms in the first or basement story, in which the Sunday School was also held, and the main auditorium on the second floor. It had a cupola in which was a clock, the spire reaching to the height of ninety-four feet. The new church building is of stone fronting on both streets, elegant in style and fitted up with all modern conveniences. Its cost was about $22,000. It was erected during the pastorate of the present pastor; the corner-stone was laid by Bishop Ninde, September 20, 1900, assisted by Bishop Hartzell and Rev. William A. Spencer, D. D., the first pastor, and dedicated June 13, 1901.

During its existence this church has been instrumental in the organization of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church of North Peoria, now within the city limits. It maintains a Sunday School which dates back to two years before the building of the church, the first few meetings of which were held in a building on the corner of Elizabeth and Main Streets—later in a plow-shop on Elizabeth Street south of Main Street. Daniel B. Allen was Superintendent and Ira E. Benton, Secretary. Upon removal to the church building at its completion, the school numbered 125. It now has about 110, with Prof. J. B. Garner, Ph. D., as Superintendent. The Church has a membership of nearly three hundred, an Epworth League of 80, and a Junior League of about 50 members.

THE GERMAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH was organized in September, 1851, by Rev. H. F. Koendike with sixteen members. Three years afterwards, a church erected on the corner of Monson and Fifth Streets was dedicated, the dedication sermon being preached by Rev. G. L. Mulfinger. The first officers were Peter C. Shelly, Daniel Bristol, J. Buchner, M. Oechsle and William Venneman. A Sunday School was organized in 1852. In 1867 it was found necessary, in order to meet the needs of the rapidly growing congregation, to erect a larger house of worship, which they did on Chestnut Street near the corner of Adams, the cost of which, together with a parsonage purchased about the same time, amounted to about $10,000. The building was a frame structure of the prevailing type—auditorium on the second, and lecture-room and Sunday School on the first floor—the whole surmounted by a tall spire. The old church was sold to the African Methodists. In 1800 a new and handsome brick church was erected on the corner of Fifth Avenue and Sanford Street, just one block west of where their first church was located. This church has had a regular succession of pastors, has always maintained a Sabbath School and is in a flourishing condition. It has a membership of over 200, a Sunday School enrollment of about the same number, and an Epworth League of about 50. It also conducts a mission with an enrollment of over 100.

THE AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH was organized in the year 1846, with ten members by Rev. Philip Ward, of Bloomington. William Gray was local class-leader and preacher. Their meetings were at first held from house to house; they then rented a school-house on Walnut Street, where their meetings were held until the 1848, when they transferred to the public-school building on Monson Street between Fourth and Fifth. In 1850 they were obliged to resume meetings from house to house under the leadership of Rev. William Brooks, he being pastor of the circuit including Bloomington, Peoria and Galesburg. William Gray was the only class-leader and steward. In 1853, Rev. William J. Davis was appointed to this charge, and it was under his administration the congregation purchased a small frame church on Chestnut Street, which they occupied until 1866, when the German Methodist, at the corner of Fifth and Monson Streets, was purchased for $2,600. In 1880 this building was removed and a modern edifice was erected on the site, which is still used by the congregation. Divine services are regularly held and the church is in a flourishing condition. It has over 150 members, a Sunday School enrollment of about 100, and an Epworth League of about 25.

THE WESLEY METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, corner of Ann and Eliza Streets, was organized in 1873. It has a membership of 125 or more, a Sunday School of 200, and an Epworth League of about 40 members.

GRACE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH grew out of a mission started by the congregation of Hale Chapel. It was organized in 1896, has a membership of over thirty and a Sunday School of nearly one hundred.

THE AVERYVILLE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH was organized in August, 1893, by Rev. T. W. McVety. The Official Board were William Maxwell, T. J. Sellers, A. A. Phelps, A. M. Sellers, Frank H. Tyle, George Owens and J. E. Anthony. The succeeding pastors have been N. J. Brown, 1895; O. J. Snell, 1897; L. A. Emert, 1899, and W. R. Carr, 1901. The church was organized in the Village Hall, but the congregation has since erected a church building at a cost of $600. It is now entirely free from debt. It maintains a Sunday School numbering 75, of which Mr. George Adams is Superintendent.

A GERMAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL MISSION CHURCH was organized February 3, 1889, with 14 members and the following Official Board: George Godel, Charles Weregemuth, Eido Janssen, Henry Wichman and Fred L. Block. In 1888, while yet a mission, a small house of worship was erected at the corner of Sanger Street and Oakland Avenue. The pastors have been Charles Schuh, 1888-89; C. W. Hertzler, 1889-91; Louis Harwel, 1891-94; Jonathan Gisler, 1894-97; H. J. P. Peterson, 1897-98, and L. E. Kettlekamp, 1898 to the present time. A Sabbath School is maintained with an average attendance of 55, Eido Janssen being the Superintendent.

GERMAN EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION. This church was organized in the year 1843, with 15 members, Bishop John Seybert preaching the first sermon. It does not seem to have had any fixed location until the year 1847, when it erected a small church building costing about $600 on Chestnut between Prairie Street and Warner Avenue. In 1853 it removed to the corner of First and State Streets, where it erected a house of worship costing about $2,500, which it occupied until the year 1873, when the present building was erected at a cost of $5,700.

The denomination to which this church belongs is not, as might be supposed from its name, of foreign origin, but was founded among the German-speaking inhabitants of Pennsylvania nearly a century ago. It originated with one Jacob Allbright, after whom it received the popular designation of the Allbright Church, its real name being "Evangelical Association of North America." In all essential particulars it follows the doctrines and polity of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Bishops and Presiding Elders are elected by the General and Annual Conferences, and hold their offices for four years. The itinerant system of supplying the congregations with pastors is also followed. As is the case with some of the Methodist churches, this church has had so many changes of the pastorate (there having been over thirty of them) that it is deemed unwise to enumerate them here. Rev. George C. Gasser is at present in charge. The church maintains a Sunday School of about 90 in average attendance, and a mission school in South Peoria (now in the city). Annual Conferences were held here in 1861 and 1887, and that of 1902 is also appointed to be held here.

THE FREE METHODIST CHURCH. This church was organized on December 29, 1881, with six members and the following Official Board: W. A. Huston, William Van Gordon, Jonathan Haley and Anna Hayes. It was at first located on Walnut Street in the building formerly occupied by the Calvary Presbyterian Church, then called Olivet Mission. In 1891 a frame church was erected on the bluff at the corner of South Underhill and Windom Streets, where the congregation still worships. The first pastor was Rev. J. D. Marsh from 1881-84. According to the custom of the Methodist churches, frequent changes in the pastorates have taken place, the present incumbent being Rev. William H. Winters. A Sunday School of 37 members is maintained, Mr. M. M. Pierson being the Superintendent.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH. Although, as stated elsewhere, there had been two organizations prior to 1840, both claiming to be the rightful Presbyterian Church (Old School) of Peoria, for reasons already detailed, this church can claim a regular organization dating only from October 31st of that year. On that date it was organized with twenty-four members; Clark D. Powell, Joseph Batchelder and Henry Schnebly being ordained and installed as Ruling Elders, William Weis, deacon, and William Weis, John A. McCoy, James H. Work, Robert Campbell, George Bernheisel, Samuel Shepler and Samuel Smith being chosen as Trustees. Rev. Isaac Kellar, who had been ministering to the people for some time as a missionary, was chosen as stated supply and continued to minister in that capacity until October, 1847. It was during this period their first house of worship was erected.

Rev. Addison Coffey was the first regularly installed pastor, his installation having taken place on October 26, 1848. He was succeeded in regular order by Rev. Robert Johnston, November 16, 1855; Rev. John H. Morrison, April —, 1865; Rev. Jonathan Edwards, D. D., LL. D., September 27, 1871; Rev. Jesse C. Bruce, January 5, 1870; Rev. Thomas A. McCurdy, D. D., September 6, 1890, and Rev. Chauncey T. Edwards, D. D., son of a former pastor, 1890.

From the date of its organization in 1840, until the year 1844, the congregation worshipped in the Court House. In the latter year a new church was erected on the southwesterly end of lot number one in Block Eleven—the same being on the southwesterly side of Fulton Street between Adams and Jefferson Streets. It was substantially built of brick and handsomely finished, its dimensions were forty by fifty feet with a gallery. For that early day it was considered not only a comfortable but an elegant structure. It was only during the past year that it was demolished, and it is to be regretted that its history has not been more fully preserved. It successively passed into the hands of the Universalists and the Jews as a place of worship, but finally was converted into a place of business.

The second church building was erected on the north corner of Main and Madison Streets, and was first occupied in the year 1850. This was a large and very substantially built brick edifice, constructed in the usual style with lecture and Sunday-school room in the basement, and auditorium on the second or main floor. It had a wide portico approached from Main Street by a flight of steps extending the whole width of the building, and adorned with a row of heavy Grecian columns. In 1868, it was enlarged by taking in the portico, removing the steps and placing the main entrance on a level with the street. It was also furnished with a cupola, a bell and an organ, the cost of the whole being $16,000. Besides other interesting events connected with it, this building became historic as the place of holding the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, in the year 1863. It continued to be the place of worship of the congregation until the year 1880, but has since been converted into a place of business. In the year 1889, the congregation changed the location of its place of worship and erected its present elegant brick church at the west corner of Hamilton Boulevard and Crescent Avenue. The cost of this church, including lot, building, organ and furniture, was about $53,000. It is furnished with two bells, one the gift of members of the congregation.

Out of this mother of Presbyterian churches of Peoria have grown the following: In December, 1853, twenty-eight members were dismissed to form the Second Presbyterian Church; and later it contributed largely to the formation of Grace Presbyterian Church.

In January, 1883, a mission Sunday School was organized in Ellis Hall, corner of Main and Eliza-both Streets, afterwards removed to corner of Garfield and Russell Streets, where two lots were purchased and a building erected thereon; subsequently this building was removed to the corner of Barker Avenue and Malvern Street to lots donated by Mrs. Elizabeth Griswold, now deceased. The outgrowth of the work in this latter location resulted in the organization of "Westminster Presbyterian Church." (See post.)

In June, 1892, "The Presbyterian Alliance" of the city revived, at Jackson Corners, the lapsed Sunday School work which had been long carried on in that neighborhood. This enterprise was, almost from the re-organization until it was constituted as Arcadia Avenue Presbyterian Church, maintained by the First Presbyterian Church. (See Arcadia Avenue Church, post.)

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church met in the building on the corner of Main and Madison Streets in May, 1863. This was the first time this body had ever met west of the Alleghany Mountains, and one of the members of the preceding Assembly, when that body had accepted Peoria's invitation, inquired whether the Commissioners should bring their tents along. Upon arrival, however, they were agreeably disappointed, and, before the close of the meeting, were greatly pleased with the splendid hospitality shown them. In the expression of their approbation, the committee on resolutions coined the phrase, "elegantly homed."

This meeting occurred during our Civil War when everything looked dark and gloomy. Many heated discussions and differences of opinion were had among the members of the Assembly in regard to the outlook of our country at that time. The pastor of the First Church, the Rev. Robert Johnston, full of zeal and patriotism, and who was often called upon for war speeches when the soldiers were being recruited, was an active member of this Assembly and exerted himself successfully for the entertainment of the members. The venerable Dr. Morrison, Missionary from India, was Moderator of this Assembly. Dr. George P. Hays, of Baltimore, Maryland, was present as a member and made an eloquent address in Rouse's Hall on the "Signs of the Times"—also the Rev. Dr. Wm. M. Paxton, of Pittsburg, at the same time, in the interest of the "Christian Commission" work, the Society which did so much for the soldiers during the Civil War.

Dwight L. Moody held his first evangelistic services outside of Chicago in this church, in 1862, carrying on revival meetings, followed by noon-day prayer-meetings in the lecture room of the church, which were continued for years.

In October, 1874, Mrs. Sarah J. Rhea, of Lake Forest, the devoted widow of a missionary to Persia who had died in the service, organized the Women's Missionary Society of Peoria Presbytery in the First Church. Mrs. Jane G. Johnston, wife of the former pastor, was elected President and held the office for twenty-five years and up to the time of her death. At the same time her daughter, Miss Julia H. Johnston, was elected Secretary of the Society, and has continued to occupy this position, with growing efficiency, during all these years.

The Synod of Illinois held its sessions in the building on the corner of Main and Madison Streets in October, 1870, and the same body met in the new building on the corner of Crescent Avenue and Hamilton Street in October, 1893. In this building also were held the revival meetings of 1857 and 1858, during which period a great revival swept over the country. Again, in 1866, during the revival meetings conducted by Rev. Edward Payson Hammond, many of the meetings were held in this church, as the result of which more than one hundred were added to the membership. Another noted in-gathering took place during the pastorate of the Rev. Jonathan Edwards, D. D., when upwards of forty were received. The membership now numbers 424, with an average attendance at the Sunday-school of 204.

THE SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH grew out of an amicable division of the membership of the First Church. During a temporary absence of the pastor, Rev. Addison Coffey, the congregation had been supplied by the ministrations of Rev. Robert P. Farris. The time seeming propitious for the organization of a second church in the city, and the services of Mr. Farris having proved quite acceptable to a considerable portion of the members, he was invited to remain and direct his efforts towards the formation of a new church. The prospects having been found favorable, a meeting of the Presbytery of Peoria was called and held in the lecture-room of the First Church on the evening of December 7, 1853, Rev. W. P. Carson officiating as Moderator and the sermon being preached by Rev. William T. Adams, of Washington. A petition signed by twenty-eight church members and twenty-four as members of the proposed congregation, was presented by Mr. John C. Grier. These were organized into a new church with John L. Griswold and John C. Grier as Ruling Elders, and William Stettenius and George Porter as Deacons. At a subsequent date the following named gentlemen were elected the first Board of Trustees: John L. Griswold, Nathaniel B. Curtiss, Henry I. Rugg, William A. Herron, Robert Arthur Smith, William F. Bryan, John C. Grier, Alfred G. Curtenius and John A. McCoy. Services were for a while held in Haskell's Hall, on the second floor of a building located on the south corner of Main Street and Madison Avenue. In the year 1854, two elegant lots were purchased on the west corner of Madison Avenue and Jackson Street, upon which the church now stands. Plans for a frame-building were adopted which embraced a suggestion, at least, of the more modern churches, in that its auditorium and lecture or Sunday-school rooms were to be on the same floor. It was to have a tower surmounted by a spire. With the exception of the lecture-room and spire the building was completed in June, 1855: the first sermon therein was preached by the pastor on Sunday, July 1st, and the church was dedicated on the Sabbath following. The Sunday-school was organized, January 1, 1854, immediately after the organization of the church, John L. Griswold being chosen Superintendent; John A. McCoy, Assistant; David W. Herron, Secretary, and R. J. Swancoat, Librarian. On October 25, 1858, Rev. R. P. Farris resigned the pastorate and went to Saint Louis, where he has, for many years, been engaged in editorial work on a religious paper. He was succeeded, June 8, 1859, by Rev. Samuel Hibben, who continued to fill the pulpit until February 8, 1862, when he resigned and took the position of Chaplain in the Fourth Regiment of Illinois Cavalry, in hope of regaining his health; but failing in that, he returned to his home and died much lamented on June 10, 1862.

The church was then temporarily supplied by different ministers until October 4, 1863, when Rev. William E. McLaren, now Bishop of the Chicago Diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church, became pastor. He was succeeded June 10, 1867, by Rev. Henry V. D. Nevius, D. D., as stated supply until October of the same year, when he became pastor. In February, 1873, Rev. William L. Green commenced his ministrations as stated supply. He was elected pastor on January 28, 1874, and installed October 25, but resigned in February, 1875. He was succeeded by the following pastors: Rev. Lewis O. Thompson, May 1, 1876, to July 1, 1882; Rev. Thomas X. Orr, D. D., October 5, 1883, to December 26, 1893; Rev.

Samuel H. Moore, D. D., June 19, 1895, to October 8, 1899, when he resigned and the pulpit remained vacant until October 21, 1900, when the present pastor, Rev. Arthur M. Little, Ph. D., was installed.

In the year 1870, an Industrial School for girls was commenced, having for its object the supplying of clothing to the destitute children of the Sunday School, and the teaching of the children to make their own garments. This school has been continued in successful operation until the present time, with a membership of about 100. The membership of the church is now about 225, and of the Sunday-school 125 in average attendance, of which Fred F. Blossom is Superintendent and George Bryan, Secretary. The church has also well organized Home and Foreign Missionary Societies and a Ladies' Aid Society.

When first erected, the church was supplied with a Mason & Hamlin church melodeon; it afterwards purchased the organ of the St. Paul's Episcopal Church, which remained in use for several years, located in a small gallery over the vestibule. In the year 1872, a new organ was procured at a cost of $1,800, which occupied a platform in the rear of the pulpit. In 1874, the lecture and Sunday School rooms, as originally planned but somewhat larger, were added, the spire completed, the organ replaced with a larger one and other improvements added at a cost of $7,000.

In the year 1888, this building was removed for the purpose of erecting a new one; the original church building being demolished and the Sunday School addition removed to Monroe Street, where, during the erection of the new church, it was used as a temporary place of worship, and where it still remains as an annex to the High School of the City. The corner-stone of the new building was laid April 30, 1889, the Centennial of Washington's Inauguration, the foundation walls having been laid in the autumn preceding. The church was fully completed and dedicated, December 20, 1880. It is a unique structure, built of split boulders of a variety of colors, trimmed with sandstone, with auditorium in the front and lecture and Sunday School rooms on the main floor in the rear. A dining-room (now used for the Industrial School), kitchen and pastor's study, occupy the second story of a portion of the rear building. The cost of the church building, including grading and sidewalks, was about $53,000.

CALVARY CHURCH. This church has a most interesting history. At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Second Church in the year 1861, and during the pastorate of Rev. Samuel Hibben, steps were taken to organize a Mission Sabbath School, and William Reynolds and Thomas G. McCulloh secured a room in the second story of a building on Washington between Walnut and Bridge Streets. Having given notice in the public schools and through the papers that a Sunday School would be organized there the next Sabbath, they attended at the time and place appointed, to find only seven children, but twelve expectant teachers in attendance. To this humble beginning Calvary Church, now one of the most flourishing in the city, owes its origin. Through persistent efforts to make known the existence of the school, and by rewarding with small coins a number of urchins on the street to come and bring their companions with them, the next Sabbath showed an attendance of thirty-six children. The attendance continued to increase until the spring of 1864, when Mr. Reynolds assumed the entire charge, and the place of meeting was changed to Bergen Hall, where it remained for two years. A lease of a lot on Walnut Street between Washington and Adams Streets for the period of ten years, free of rental, was then secured from Charles Ballance, Esq., and Mr. Reynolds, with the aid of Mr. John Wilson, proceeded to erect thereon a frame building 40x70 feet, with an additional room 25x35 feet, for a primary class, the whole costing about $6,000. The school then grew with wonderful rapidity, and, by the winter of 1865, it numbered 500 scholars and 27 teachers. Lay services were then established every Sabbath evening and frequently during the week. It having become evident that a church must be organized, the Superintendent began to look out for a suitable man for the pastorate and, through friends, was introduced to Rev. John Weston, who was just about to complete his course of studies in the Theological Seminary (now McCormick) of the Northwest. He began his labors in April, 1867, and, on June 24th of that year, "Calvary Mission Church" was organized by a committee of the Presbytery of Peoria. The church was organized with twenty members, but such was its phenomenal growth that, early in the year 1876, it was determined to remove to another location and proceed with the erection of a new house of worship. Lots were secured on the corner of First and Fisher Streets where the church now stands; ground was broken April 17, 1876, and the cornerstone laid June 24th, on the occasion of the ninth anniversary of the organization of the church. Portions of the building were speedily finished for use, but the dedication did not take place until June 29, 1879, when it was dedicated entirely free from debt. This result was brought about by the untiring zeal of the Women's Association connected with the church, the contributions of outside friends, the self-denial of the members, and, last of all, by the gift of one dollar from the guests—1,200 in all—who attended the silver wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds, held in the church in connection with the twelfth anniversary of its organization. The entire structure cost the congregation about $26,000.

The organization of this church for work has been most complete. Beginning with one Ruling Elder, William Reynolds, and with twenty members, it now has a membership of 461 and a Sunday School numbering 436 in average attendance. It stands as a monument of consecrated Christian effort, which was specially exemplified in the life of its first Elder and the only Superintendent of its Sunday-School until the time of his death. (See Biographical Sketch). Its pastors have been Rev. John Weston, 1867-1886; Rev. A. C. McGogney, October 31, 1886; Rev. A. Christy Brown, September 20, 1891; Rev. John Weston (second pastorate) June, 1898, to the present time.

This church being itself the outgrowth of mission work, has, during its whole history, been active in the mission field, having, through an organization of young men, been instrumental in establishing several missions, one of which has grown into a flourishing church. (See Bethel Presbyterian, post.)

GRACE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH has also a very interesting history. On March 1, 1862, Mr. D. W. McWilliams, a prominent railroad man, a member of the Young Men's Christian Association as well as an earnest Sunday School worker, procured the use of a passenger coach which was placed on Water Street, in which he, with other workers, proceeded to organize a Sunday School. At first it had only twenty scholars, but in a few weeks, it had increased so that a second coach became necessary. At the end of two months, by the aid of the Young Men's Christian Association, a lot was secured at the corner of Green and Clay Streets, on which was erected a one-story frame building, 28x40 feet, at a cost of $800. Two years later a primary class-room was added at the cost of $300, donated by Mr. H. G. Marquand, of New York. In 1869 the main building was enlarged and a bible class-room added, the whole costing about $1,200. At this time the school had increased to 400 scholars with 28 teachers. It was known as the Fourth Ward Mission School, the teachers coming from various churches in the city. In 1863, evening services conducted by the teachers and officers of the church were commenced in the main room, and during the same year Rev. Hiram Doane accepted an invitation to temporarily preach to the people. He had officiated but a short time when he was appointed Chaplain of the Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers and, having entered the service, as elsewhere stated he died in the hospital. For the next five years services were conducted by the officers and teachers. On March 1, 1868, the church was duly organized with 15 members, George H. McIlvaine and Theodore Higbee being elected Elders. In the years 1873 and 1874, a church building, on the site of the present church, corner of Madison Avenue and Wayne Street, was erected at the cost of about $10,000, Mr. McIlvaine donating the lot and Mr. McWilliams the sum of $3,000—a part of the old Clay Street building having been attached as a Sunday School apartment. The name was then changed to Grace Mission Church, but subsequently the word "Mission" was dropped, and the church is now "Grace Presbyterian Church." The church building, erected in the summer of 1873, was destroyed by fire, Sabbath, September 28, 1890, at the hour of morning service, and the corner-stone of the present brick structure was laid November 28, 1896—just two months from the time of the fire—and the church was finished at a cost of about $10,000.

Prior to the organization of this church, the Sabbath school, begun in the spring of 1863, had laid the foundation for a church society by most excellent and successful work. After temporary supplies up to September, 1871, Rev. W. W. Farris was installed as the first pastor, and remained until July, 1870. Soon after, Rev. H. S. Beavis was called, and continued until June, 1880. In January, 1881, he was followed by Rev. A. E. Irwin, who completed his labors in 1886. Rev. J. K. Black was called to the pastorate in July of the same year, and remained till the fall of 1891. Rev. Edgar L. Williams began his work in April, 1892, and resigned October, 1895, to go into the evangelistic work. The present pastor, Rev. W. S. P. Cochran, D. D., was installed February, 1896. Mr. D. W. McWilliams was the first Superintendent of the Sabbath School, followed by Mr. George H. McIlvaine, elected December 1, 1866, and continuing Superintendent until the time of his death. At the present time the church is in a state of growing prosperity, having 200 members and a Sunday School numbering 317. On January 1, 1897, this church met with a great loss in the death of George H. McIlvaine, one of its founders, through whose assiduous labors and liberal contributions, seconded by a membership of devoted workers, it was enabled to achieve a marked degree of success.

THE WESTMINSTER CHURCH has grown out of a Mission School originally organized in January, 1853, in Ellis Hall, corner of Main and Elizabeth Streets, by members of the First Church. It was afterwards removed to the corner of Garfield and Russell Streets, where two lots were purchased and a building erected thereon. This building was subsequently moved to the northeast corner of Barker Avenue and Malvern Streets, to two lots donated by Mrs. Elizabeth Griswold in her lifetime. The cost of this first building was about $1,500. The church was then organized on June 2, 1867, with P. W. Petrie, C. Ross Kuhn and Theodore Higbee as Elders, and Eustace H. Smith, Theodore Higbee and William Wilkinson, Trustees. The number of members was then twenty-four. Rev. William Parsons was called to the pastorate and continued to minister to the congregation until March, 1901, when he resigned. The present elegant church edifice, located at the corner of Moss Avenue and Malvern Street, was erected in the years 1899-1900, and dedicated June 4th of the latter year. It is built of brick in the modern style and, with the lot on which it stands, cost $20,000. It occupies a commanding situation on the brow of the bluff overlooking the entire city. It has a membership of 79, and a Sunday School numbering 100 in average attendance, of which Mr. C. Ross Kuhn is Superintendent. It has also established a Mission at Peoria Heights, which is in a prosperous condition.

ARCADIA AVENUE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH is the outgrowth of another Sabbath School established in the year 1862 by workers from the First Church, whose efforts were warmly supplemented by friends in all other denominations in the community. The first meetings were held in an old school-building placed on the lot which is now occupied by a new house of worship. The church was there organized on October 6, 1899, with 23 members. The congregation was supplied with preaching by several ministers until May 9, 1897, when the present pastor, Rev. James Benson, was installed. During the year 1900, a new church edifice was erected on the site of the old one, which had been sold. The corner-stone was laid in November, 1899, and, by March, 1900, the building had so far progressed that the Sunday School room could be occupied and services were held there until the completion of the new building in the month of December of that year. It is a frame building situated at the corner of Arcadia Avenue and Bigelow Street, having an assembly room, Sunday School rooms and auditorium on one floor—the whole costing about $10,000. It was dedicated, December 10, 1900, the following ministers taking part in the exercises: Rev. W. S. P. Cochran, of Grace Church; Rev. Chauncey T. Edwards, D. D., of the First Church; Rev. George A. Pilug, of Ethel Church; Rev. William Parsons, of Westminster Church; Rev. Arthur M. Little, Ph. D., of the Second Church, and Rev. James Benson, the Pastor. The Elders are as follows: Isaac Kellar, William N. Fisher, E. B. Hazen, and George F. Carson; the Trustees, George F. Carson, P. S. Chm, J. C. Poffenbarger, L. Hillis, S. A. Wheeler, H. Kellenbach and C. W. La Porte. The church has a membership of 122, and maintains a Sunday School of 231, of which Mr. George F. Carson is Superintendent.

ETHEL CHURCH is the outgrowth of a Mission School carried on for several years under the auspices of Calvary Church, at the corner of Garden and Apple Streets, where it erected a small frame building at a cost of $1,200. The church was organized by a committee of Presbytery on September 20, 1887, with 59 members. Henry J. Marmein and Irenous F. White being ordained and installed as Elders. Rev. A. Christy Brown was installed first pastor in July, 1890, but resigned the charge to accept a call to Calvary Church in September, 1891. He was succeeded in June, 1894, by Rev. Charles W. Whorrell, and he by Rev. George A. Pilug, the present pastor, in May, 1899. This church now has a commodious house of worship on Antoinette, corner of Alfred Street, erected at a cost of $9,500. It has a membership of 114, and a Sunday School numbering 175.

THE GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH (Presbyterian in government) was organized in May, 1849, by a committee of the Classis of Wisconsin, with thirteen original members, and George Kruse and Harman Borchers, Elders. The church failed to secure the ministrations of a regular pastor until August, 1871, when Rev. John Muller was called, who remained as pastor for nearly twenty-two years. He was succeeded, in August, 1893, by Rev. H. T. Schmidt, who continued as pastor until October, 1895. At this time a division occurred, when a portion of the membership under the leadership of the pastor withdrew and formed the German Congregational Church. The church they remained without a pastor until the present pastor, Rev. Gottlob Zindler, was called in 1896. At an earlier period, a portion of the members had withdrawn to go into a German Presbyterian Church located in the same neighborhood. In 1871, a small frame church was erected on the corner of Persimmon and West Madison Streets (now Reed Avenue), which still continues to be their place of worship. A Sunday School is maintained with an average attendance of 65, the pastor being Superintendent. The church was formerly much stronger than at present because of the withdrawals already mentioned.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH—A small one in a former part of this ward. The church was organized as a Presbyterian Church in December, 1844, and so continued until the year 1847, at which time it dropped its connection with the Presbyterian Church, and took the Congregational form of church government and changed its name to that of the "Main Street Congregational Church." Rev. William H. Starr was the first pastor of the church under its new organization, and ministered unto the people for one year, from October, 1847, to October, 1848. In November, 1848, Rev. Levi Storer became pastor, and so continued until April, 1853, when, to the universal regret of the people of Peoria, his useful life was terminated. During his pastorate, a new and tasteful church edifice of brick was erected on the site of the old Main Street Church, at a cost of $8,000. It was surmounted by a fine spire, which was carried away in the great storm of May 13, 1878, and was never rebuilt in its original form. The tower contained a clock, placed there in the year 1857, the dial plate of which was carried away with the spire, leaving the works and the bell uninjured, but invisible from without. This bell has become historic, from the fact that, during the entire period of the Civil War, whenever a victory was achieved by the Union Army, or any other event of importance to the people had transpired, Mark M. Aiken, the veteran Abolitionist, would repair to the church and send forth its peals in token of the glad tidings; and, so vigorously did he pull the rope, that the bell finally became cracked and hoarse in tone, but not entirely useless. Although invisible, the clock still continued to strike the hours of the day and night, a faithful monitor of the flight of time. In the year 1870, upon the return of the Rev. A. A. Stevens to the pastorate, after an absence of four years, the bell-tower was reconstructed, as it now appears in the printed histories of the church, the bell was sent off to a bell foundry and re-cast, with the following motto, furnished by Rev. Mr. Stevens, impressed upon the metal: "Libertatis et Dei Vindex:" (Of Liberty and God the Defender.) The bell was then again suspended in its original position, and remained there until the erection of the new church, when it was transferred to the magnificent steeple of that edifice. There it still continues to send out upon the Sabbath morning air the sweet tones with which the people of Peoria had become so familiar during the war for the preservation of the Union. During the Spanish War it was again brought into patriotic service as the herald of American victories. Colonel Martin Kingman had personal charge of it, and, with the assistance of the sexton, caused it to be rung, first at the outbreak of the war, next on the occasion of the capture of Manila, and on July 3, 1898, when the news arrived of the destruction of the Spanish fleet off Santiago.

The other little old bell, now in possession of the congregation and preserved as a sacred relic, was the first church-bell that ever called the worshipers to the sanctuary in Peoria. It was first hung in the belfry of the Main Street Presbyterian Church, and great was the joy of the people upon hearing it rung for the first time. It continued to be so used until a short time before the erection of the Main Street Congregational church, when it was sold to Mr. William E. Mason, Superintendent of the Peoria Wagon Road Bridge. It was then hung on top of the swing, and served the double purpose of a signal to boats and a fire-alarm for the city. This was an improvement upon the former method of signaling a fire by the cry of "Fire! Fire!" uttered by the human voice. One time, however, in the spring of 1852, the Steamer Amazonia came up the river in a very dark night. She signaled the bridge-tender, who was asleep, and, receiving no response, the pilot believed the bridge to be open, and, without slackening his speed, crashed into it, tearing away a good portion of the span, and bringing the bell down with it. For some time its whereabouts was unknown, and it was supposed to have gone to the bottom. But one day Mr. Mason heard that a man named Faggett, living near Wesley City, had some time before found a bell on the river bank, and the thought struck him that it was the one he had lost. This proving true, negotiations were opened which resulted in the return of the bell to its old quarters, where it remained, doing the same service, for years afterward. A short time before the death of Mark M. Aiken, he by some means obtained control of it, and presented it to the church, where it is preserved as a hallowed relic.

For some time following Mr. Spencer's death, there were serious dissensions in the church. Three pastors were regularly installed and dismissed within three years and three months after that event. These were Rev. J. W. Marsh, who was pastor from January 2, 1853, to May 1, 1854; Rev. Henry Adams, from September, 1854, to November, 1855; and Rev. J. Steiner, from December, 1855, to July, 1856." The final result was that twenty-two members withdrew, under the leadership of Mr. Adams, and formed another church, under the name of the "Union Congregational Church," with Mr. Adams as its pastor. The church thus formed was, on December 8, 1857, organized as a Presbyterian Church, known as the "Fulton Street Presbyterian Church," and was identified with the "New School" branch of that denomination. Rev. Isaac E. Cary was pastor of this church from December 8, 1857, until August 29, 1860. A plain but substantial house of worship of brick was erected at the corner of Fulton and Monroe Streets, where the Christian church now stands. The pastors succeeding Mr. Cary were: Rev. Wilber McKaig, November 2, 1860, to June 2, 1862; Rev. Samuel Wykoff, November 24, 1862, to October 3, 1864; Rev. Asahel H. Brooks, July 3, 1865, to March 4, 1868; Rev. Horace C. Hovey, January 5, 1869, to April 13, 1873; Rev. Robert Condit, October 27, 1873, to November 10, 1874.

ST. MARY'S CATHEDRAL.

FIRST M. E. CHURCH.

The two branches (Old and New School) of the Presbyterian Church, having, in the year 1870, become united under the name of "The Presbyterian Church in the United States," and, there being already at least four churches of that denomination in the city, and there also being in the Fulton Street Church a large element inclined to the Congregational form of church government, a movement was set on foot which finally resulted in the union of the Fulton Street Church and the Main Street Congregational Church, under the name of the "First Congregational Church of Peoria." This union was accomplished on the 31st day of January, 1875.

Succeeding Rev. J. Steiner—and before the re-union—the following named ministers were pastors of the Main Street Church: Rev. A. A. Stevens, December, 1856, to June, 1866; Rev. G. W. Phinny, June, 1866, to June, 1867; Rev. J. A. Mack, April 1, 1868, to June 8, 1870. On September 21, 1870, after an absence of four years from the pulpit of this church, Rev. A. A. Stevens again became pastor, and so continued until the re-union, and, after that time, until February 1, 1882. It was during his second pastorate that the New School, or Fulton Street Presbyterian Church became united with this church, and, during the same pastorate, the magnificent church building at the corner of Monroe and Hamilton Streets was erected. During the last two years of this pastorate, the congregation provided an associate pastor, in the person of Rev. J. Homer Parker, which relation continued until the resignation of Mr. Stevens, in February, 1882. After an honorable and highly respected retirement of nineteen years, Rev. A. A. Stevens has recently deceased, mourned by the entire Christian community of Peoria. (See Biographical Sketch.)

The elegant church building in which this congregation now worships is the result of determined efforts carried on under great disappointments. The first Board of Trustees after the union consisted of Horace Clark, Martin Kingman, James T. Rogers, Jacob Corwin Hansel, Lucius L. Day, Samuel A. Kinsey, Nathaniel K. Bessley, Leslie Robinson, Moses Pettengill, William H. Chapman and R. M. Blair. At a preliminary meeting, held soon thereafter, of the Deacons and Trustees, the sum of $15,000 was raised for the erection of a new church. The lots whereon the church stands, being 92 feet on Monroe Street by 172 feet on Hamilton, were purchased at a cost of nearly $11,000, which sum was raised by the sale of the two churches the congregation then owned. Plans were procured for a church having a seating capacity of eight hundred to one thousand, to be built of stone—the estimated cost to be $33,000, which amount was subscribed. The building was commenced, and the walls were two feet above ground when the winter of 1875-6 set in. The corner-stone was laid May 2, 1876, by the pastor, Rev. A. A. Stevens, who made a brief address, prayer being offered by Rev. Jonathan Edwards, D. D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church.

When the walls had been raised nearly to the top of the windows, a very serious and unexpected difficulty arose. It was found that the contractor for the stone-work had expended the entire amount which he was to receive for completing the building. The trustees then took the matter into their own hands, becoming personally responsible for the additional sum required. The roof was on before the weather turned cold that year. The original plan was to build the main tower of wood, but new estimates showed that, with little additional cost, it could be built of stone; but, instead of $3,500, as estimated, nearly $12,000 had been expended upon it. In the autumn of 1876, it was discovered that the building in settling had cracked around the tower. This was remedied at a cost of $2,000. After many delays and discouragements, the building was finally completed at a cost of $89,781.19, to which must be added the cost of an organ, $5,086.27, the latter chiefly paid by the ladies and dedicated as the "Stevens Memorial."

The first service in the basement (the main body of the church not being completed) was held on Sunday, June 24, 1877, when the pastor preached an appropriate sermon and dedicated that portion of the building. The main church edifice was dedicated September 6, 1883, at which time the entire indebtedness had been provided for, and was subsequently paid. From that time until the present, this church has enjoyed a great degree of prosperity, the following ministers having succeeded Mr. Stevens in the pastorate: Rev. E. Frank Howe, 1882-1887; Rev. D. K. Nesbitt, 1888-1892; Rev. Caspar Wistar Hiatt, 1893-1897; Rev. W. C. Haskell (acting pastor), 1898; Rev. John Faville, 1899 to the present time.

Out of this church have grown "The Plymouth Church," "The South Peoria Congregational Church," "The North Peoria Church," "The Aversyle Church," "Pilgrim Mission Sunday School" and "Washington Street Mission Sunday School."

The church maintains a Sunday School numbering 280 in attendance, of which Mr. C. C. Miles is Superintendent.

PLYMOUTH CHURCH. In the spring of 1860, the First Congregational Church of Peoria decided to establish a Sunday School at the corner of Fourth and Spencer Streets. It was given the name "Plymouth Mission." Funds were raised at once, and a building was erected, 28x50 feet in size, at a cost of about $2,000. The school was organized, August 29, 1860, with an attendance of 150. Many faithful men and women engaged in this work during the twenty years of its history, previous to the organization of Plymouth Church. The following named persons have been Superintendents of the school: George Alter, Benjamin Foster, Henry Chapman, E. F. Parker, Henry Binnian, Horace Clark, Luke Sweetser, E. C. Foster, and Frank E. Alden. Of these, Benjamin Foster and Luke Sweetser each served for quite a number of years, being re-elected repeatedly, and for about two-thirds of the time of the existence of the school it has been under the superintendency of one or the other of these two brethren. In addition to the Sunday School, prayer-meetings were held, and occasionally there was a preaching service. For most of the time, Rev. A. A. Stevens was pastor. The largest attendance in the history of the school was 233. The largest attendance on any one Sabbath during the year previous to the organization of the church was 180. Many were helped in the Christian life by the work of this mission. At times the question of organizing a church was considered, but not until December, 1888, did the way for action seem to be clear. At a prayer meeting of the First Congregational Church, a committee was appointed to take pledges to support a minister at Plymouth Mission, and to recommend to the church such action as seemed best in order to form a new church. M. Kingman, L. Sweetser, E. F. Parker, G. S. Clark, J. T. Rogers, E. C. Foster and B. T. Pettengill were appointed as this committee. December 10, 1888, the committee reported that the pledges justified a forward movement, and recommended that a committee consisting of three Trustees and two Deacons, be appointed to find a pastor, who should be subject only to the advice and control of a Prudential Committee of five, and that this Prudential Committee should bring about the organization of a church as soon as it seemed best to do so. At a business meeting of the First Church, February 13, 1889, the committee to select a pastor, consisting of O. J. Bailey, J. T. Rogers, L. Sweetser and Horace Clark, made their report, and Rev. C. C. Harrah was called to the pastorate of Plymouth. The following persons were appointed as the Prudential Committee: Horace Clark, O. J. Bailey, E. C. Foster, J. T. Rogers and B. T. Pettengill. The meeting-house was improved so as to make it a neat audiencé room, and regular services were begun April 17, 1889. The church was organized, June 2, 1889, with 96 members. The following named gentlemen were chosen as the first Board of Trustees: James T. Rogers, Luke Sweetser, E. F. Parker, William W. Hammond, George R. Wright and J. W. Ericson. The following named ministers of the Gospel have been successively called to the pastorate: Rev. C. C. Harrah, February 13, 1889; Rev. D. B. Spencer, July 9, 1890; Rev. S. W. Meck, October 3, 1894; Rev. F. G. Smith, March 30, 1898; Rev. J. W. Nelson, December 19, 1900.

In the summer of 1896, the congregation had so prospered as to be able to erect a new brick church on the site of the old one, at a cost of about $14,000. It maintains a Sunday School of over 150 in actual attendance.

UNION CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. On the 20th day of July, 1884, a Union Sunday School was organized in the northern section of the city, and by September 1st of that year a neat frame building had been erected at the corner of Pennsylvania and California Avenues, at a cost of $2,000. The school was so prospered that, on the first day of January, 1890, a church was organized, which, at the first, was a Union Church, but, in 1893, was changed to the Union Congregational Church. The following year the location was changed to the corner of Illinois and Dechman Avenues, where a new church was erected, at a cost of $14,000, and dedicated, December 1, 1894. Leonard F. Houghton and Henry Thrush were the first Elders, and M. C. Blair, P. Ashlands, Mrs. L. F. Houghton, Mrs. Harriet Frye and Mrs. O. P. Walker, the first Board of Trustees. The pastors have been as follows: Rev. E. S. Chandler, May 1, 1890; Rev. D. G. Stouffer, April 1, 1892; Rev. Alexander Monroe, September 1, 1894; and Rev. W. J. Johnson, December 1, 1900.

This church maintains a prosperous Sunday School, numbering 300 in actual attendance. Mr. Leonard F. Houghton has been the Superintendent from the beginning, and it may be safely said, without disparagement of others, that to his zealous efforts and liberal contributions this church owes a large percentage of its prosperity.

THE GERMAN CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. This church was organized December 6, 1805, with a membership of 60, many of whom had formerly belonged to the "German Reformed Church." The following named gentlemen constituted the first Official Board: Richard Iben, Jacob Poppinga, Frederick De Vries, Montge Wiarda. The following have been the pastors: Rev. T. H. Schmidt, 1895-98; Rev. William Fritzemeier, 1898-1901; Rev. William Fred. Essig, February 1, 1901, to the present time. A church edifice, costing $8,000, was erected in the year 1896, at the corner of Reed and Maple Avenues. The church maintains a Sunday School numbering 80 in actual attendance, Mr. Richard Iben being Superintendent.

BAPTIST CHURCHES.

FIRST CHURCH. An account of the founding of this church, down to the time of the erection of its first house of worship, has been given in a former part of this work. It was erected in 1845, and dedicated October 17, 1846. On November 14th, of the same year, Rev. Henry G. Weston was called to the pastorate, which office he continued to fill for a period of twelve years. Under his faithful service the church soon became self-sustaining—it having before then been receiving aid from the American Baptist Home Missionary Society—and, during his entire pastorate, the church continued to prosper. On December 31, 1858, Mr. Weston resigned his pastorate to accept a wider field of usefulness. It is no detraction from other ministers to say that his ministry in Peoria was one of the most useful, and his resignation the most deeply regretted, of any minister who had ever preached the Gospel in Peoria. The following sketch of his life is taken from the Baptist Encyclopedia:

"Henry G. Weston, D. D., LL. D., was born in Lynn, Mass., September 11, 1820. His father was, at that time, one of the firm of True & Weston, publishers of the "Christian Watchman," in Boston. He was baptized in Lynn, in 1834, graduated from Brown University in 1840, and, in the fall of that year, entered Newton Theological Institution; was ordained in Frankfort, Kentucky, in 1843, immediately proceeding to Illinois, where he preached as a missionary at his own charge for three years in Tazewell, Woodford and McLean counties; settled as pastor of the church in Peoria, in 1846, and remained thirteen years; removed to Olive Street Church, New York City, where he remained until 1868, when he accepted a call to the present position as President of Crozier Theological Seminary.

"In connection with the labors incident to these varied and responsible positions, he has been prominently engaged in advancing the general interests of the denomination. He was editor of the Baptist Quarterly from the time of its establishment, and has also served as President of the American Baptist Missionary Union. He has published a valuable treatise on the four Gospels, and, with both pen and voice, has rendered other useful and extended service. He received the degree of A. M., in 1846, from Shurtleff College, and that of D. D., in 1859, from the University of Rochester."

At a banquet given in his honor at the National Hotel, April 23, 1901, by the Men's Social Union of the First Baptist Church, Dr. Weston expressed his deep affection for the church to which he had given the best years of his life, as follows: "During my eighty years of life, I consider God's greatest gift to me to be the love of my friends—that pure, simple, yet lasting and unbroken love that was given me by the people of Peoria fifty years ago. Why did I come? Because I felt it would be mean of me to refuse to give whatever pleasure it might be to those who had invited me back after forty years of absence. If I could go back to the time I was twenty-two years of age, and God should give me the choice of life I would lead, I would put it in God's hands again."

Dr. Weston's visit, at that time, was cut short, and his old flock were deprived of the privilege of hearing him preach; but, a few weeks later, he returned, and then, not only his own people, but a great number of his old neighbors and friends who had not been of his congregation, flocked to hear once more from his lips the message of God's great love to sinful men. And none who heard him on that occasion will ever forget the tenderness with which he urged upon his old congregation to forget past differences, and to come together again and be united in the bonds of Christian love.

After Mr. Weston had left the church, unfortunate divisions occurred, and, on June 10, 1859, about twenty-five members withdrew and organized themselves into a new church, under the name of the Tabernacle Church, but, after four years of separation, this schism was healed and the church became re-united. On September 9, 1878, three members were excluded for non-conformity to a new clause in the church covenant, which required a pledge of total abstinence from intoxicating liquors. Four days later, twenty-four others withdrew, and, uniting with the three excluded, organized the Peoria Baptist Church.

On July 27, 1864, the First Church congregation exchanged their property on Hamilton Street for a lot and church-building at the corner of Madison Avenue and Fayette Street, where the Women's Club Building is now located. (See Universalist Church.) Mr. Isaac Underhill then became the owner of the old church, which, for some years, was used as Cole's Business College. Subsequently, the property was bought by the County of Peoria, and, during the erection of the new Court House, from 1876 to 1878, it was used for the purpose of holding courts, after which it was leased for various business purposes, and finally removed. Its site is now used as a lawn adjoining the jail. The church building at the corner of Madison Avenue and Fayette Street continued to be the place of worship of this congregation until the year 1890, when the present elegant and commodious building, at the corner of Hamilton Boulevard and Glen Oak Avenue, was erected. Its cost was $65,000. The pastors who have ministered to this congregation since the time of Dr. Weston are the following: Rev. D. E. Holmes, 1862-63; Rev. A. Jones, 1864-66; Rev. A. H. Stowell, 1866; Rev. J. D. Page, 1867; Rev. S. A. Kingsbury, 1869; Rev. Alexander McArthur, 1872-74; Rev. C. J. Thompson, 1874-80; Rev. C. E. Heath, 1880-90; Rev. D. D. Odell, 1890-93; Rev. L. Kirtley, 1894-99; Rev. George H. Simmons, 1900 until the present time.

Out of this church have grown, besides the two now extinct, Bethany Baptist Church and Olive Street Mission. It has a large membership, and maintains a Sabbath School of 335 members, of which Mr. P. J. Brownlee is Superintendent. Olive Street Mission has a Sabbath School numbering 105, of which Mr. D. S. Long is Superintendent.

BETHANY BAPTIST CHURCH. This church is the outgrowth of a Mission Sabbath School, organized in 1877, by W. C. Tapping. In the year 1882, a chapel was erected on North Jefferson Street, between Hayward and Abingdon, at a cost of $1,000. The Sunday School was held in that building, but without a pastor, until May 10, 1891, when the church was organized, with 38 members, Joel Bassett and S. D. Putney being chosen Deacons, and H. B. Shively, G. H. Nichols, G. J. Corslime, Trustees; C. E. Shively, Clerk; and Mrs. V. Bassett, Treasurer. Rev. E. O. Lovett served as pastor from the date of organization until December 1, 1895; Rev. R. S. Sargent, from May 11, 1896, to November 1, 1897; Rev. J. W. Bayles, July 10, 1898, to March 4, 1899, and Rev. E. K. Reynolds, May 1, 1899, to the present time. In the year 1892, the church building was removed to its present site, corner of North Madison Avenue and Hayward Street, and was greatly enlarged, at a cost of $7,000. It maintains a Sunday School, at which there is an average attendance of 115.

THE GERMAN BAPTIST CHURCH was organized August 24, 1853, by Rev. John H. Krueger, who had been engaged as a missionary of the Baptist Home Missionary Society, preaching at Peoria, sometimes in the Court House, but oftener, it is said, at his own residence. He was chosen the first pastor, and continued in that office until November 18, 1860, when he was obliged to give up preaching on account of an affection of the throat. The church increasing in numbers, they were given permission to worship in the basement of the First Baptist Church, on Hamilton Street, where they continued until 1862, when a lot was leased on the corner of South Jefferson (now Warner Avenue) and Maple Streets, where they erected a small frame church, with parsonage attached, at a cost of about $700. This they continued to occupy until the year 1875, when they purchased a brick building on Monson Street, between Fourth and Fifth, which had been erected many years before by the Cumberland Presbyterians, which they placed in a good state of repair and added a room for their Sabbath School. This building, with the addition and repairs, cost them about $3,200. In August, 1897, they completed a new church, which they still occupy, at the corner of Fourth and Fisher Streets, the cost being about $3,000.

The succession of pastors has been as follows: Rev. John H. Krueger, August 24, 1852, until November 18, 1860; Rev. C. D. Menger, February 4, 1862, to May 15, 1866; Rev. I. Merz, May 27, 1866, to January 24, 1869; Rev. S. H. Downer, Sebastian Koracs.

April 27, 1869, to September 22, 1878; Rev. H. S. Dentz, October 6, 1878, to October 1, 1881; Rev. J. Albert, May 2, 1882, to November 9, 1886; Rev. F. Frederick, March 26, 1887, to December, 1890; Rev. A. Vogel, July 3, 1891, to November, 1895; Rev. A. Janssen, May 16, 1897, to May, 1901. The church maintains two Sabbath Schools, the first of about 100 members, of which Mr. H. Frick is Superintendent, and the second of 50 members, of which Mr. C. Eilers is Superintendent.

MOUNT ZION CHURCH (AFRICAN). This church was organized in the month of April, 1876, with twelve members. Its first Official Board was composed of Jerry Webb, Benjamin Early and Benjamin Hoeking. In 1879, it located on the corner of Seventh Avenue and State Street, where it erected a neat and commodious house of worship, at a cost of $5,000. It maintains a Sabbath School of fifty in average attendance. Rev. W. F. Hart is the present pastor.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH. The denomination to which this church belongs is variously known as "The Church of Christ," "The Disciples of Christ," "The Christian Church," and "The Campbellite Church," the latter from Alexander Campbell, its founder. It has no written creed or confession of faith, relying wholly upon the Holy Scriptures as the only rule of faith and practice. It accepts and teaches the fundamental doctrines of the Christian religion as held by other Protestant Churches known as Evangelical; believes in and practices immersion as the only true method of administering the sacrament of baptism, and, in church government, has adopted the form in use by other Baptist Churches. In fact, it is classed with the family of Baptists.

The Christian Church in Peoria was organized in the year 1845, by Elder A. J. Kane, of Springfield, with twelve members. Its first pastor (designated in this denomination "Elder") was William Tilford, who served faithfully until his death, which occurred April 3, 1851. For some years, on account of having no definite articles of faith or belief, the church was looked upon with distrust, and was not welcomed with much cordiality into the company of the faithful. A curious circumstance in this connection, was the action of the Young Men's Christian Association, which, according to the constitution of the parent Society, could admit none who were not connected with some evangelical church which had a definite creed or form of belief. It therefore happened that, when the first Young Men's Christian Association was organized in Peoria, it was a question of whether or not the good members of the Christian Church could be admitted. Happily, however, that condition did not long continue.

For ten years the members of this church continued to meet from house to house, but upon extra occasions would secure the use of the Court House, or the hall of one of the Fire Companies. In this manner they struggled along, having the Gospel preached from time to time by Elders W. H. Davenport, John Lindsay, William Brown, Milton King, D. P. Henderson and A. J. Kane. In March, 1853, a re-organization took place, at the house of Mrs. Eliza White, at the corner of Adams and Green Streets, at which time J. P. Brown was set apart to the office of Elder, and Sampson Shockley to that of Deacon. The membership, at that time, was twenty-six. In 1854, at great sacrifice to themselves, the members of this church erected a chapel on Seventh Street, at the head of Franklin, which was dedicated, February 17, 1855, by Elders William Brown and O. A. Burgess, the latter of whom became President of Butler University, at Indianapolis. Either at that time or soon afterwards, the people of Peoria had the great privilege of hearing, in this church, an exposition of their belief from the lips of the celebrated Alexander Campbell, the founder of the denomination. From that period, the church has enjoyed almost uninterrupted prosperity. From time to time its pulpit has been filled by some of the ablest men of the denomination, among whom may be mentioned Elders John Lindsay, who for many years was connected with Eureka College; J. A. Carman, D. R. Howe, John O. Kane, Knowles Shaw, the latter the noted evangelist, who, in 1872, held revival meetings in a tent, which resulted in fifty accessions. During the month of October, 1872, Elder Ira J. Chase became the pastor, and continued to serve in that capacity for some years. By one of those peculiar turns of fortune, which sometimes overtakes ministers as well as laymen, Mr. Chase afterwards became Governor of the State of Indiana. Another circumstance which brought this denomination into prominence, was the fact that President Garfield was a member, and had, in early life, preached the Gospel to its adherents.

In 1875, the church edifice on Seventh Street having become too small, the building at the corner of Monroe and Fulton Streets, which had been erected by the New School Presbyterians, was purchased at the cost of $7,000. This building was occupied until the year 1894, when it was demolished, and a new and elegant brick church erected on the site.

EPISCOPAL CHURCHES.

ST. PAUL'S PARISH (PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL), was organized in the year 1848, Rev. J. S. Chamberlain, minister in charge; Thomas Squires, Senior Warden; William Widenham, Junior Warden; and Washington Cockle, George Stewardson, Henry A. Foster, Ezra G. Sanger, Benjamin L. T. Bourland, William Mitchell and Dr. Rudolphus Rouse, Vestrymen. During the same year, a deed was made to the Parish by Bishop Chase of the lot, corner of Main and Monroe Streets, on which the church now stands, with a condition attached which renders it doubtful whether or not it can be conveyed to any other person. The church seems, therefore, to be anchored at that spot for all time.

On April 1, 1850, the following officers were elected: Alexander G. Tyng and James L. Riggs, Wardens; and John Birket, Rudolphus Rouse, George C. Bestor, Jacob Schaffner, Matthew Griswold, Ezra G. Sanger and Washington Cockle, Vestrymen. During that year, the first church building was begun. It was a small brick edifice fronting on Main Street, and having a small brick tower on each side of the entrance. (See cut in Drown's History.) In the year 1854, to accommodate the increasing number of the parish, the sides were torn out, a short addition erected on the Monroe Street side and a larger one on the opposite side, thus giving it the form of a cross. An additional entrance was made on Main Street and a tower erected. In this form, with its walls covered with ivy, the building presented a very attractive appearance. As thus enlarged, its cost was about $12,000. About the year 1873, plans were procured and arrangements made to erect a much more elegant church, and to this end a temporary building was erected on the corner of North Jefferson and Jackson Streets, and the old one demolished. But at this juncture the division occurred which resulted in the formation of the congregation of the Reformed Episcopal denomination, which rendered it impossible to carry out the proposed plans. The temporary building mentioned was removed to the site of the old church, and continued to be occupied as the house of worship until the present elegant stone building was erected, which has cost $33,000.

Prior to the organization of the Reformed Church, St. Paul's Parish experienced many vicissitudes of fortune, resulting mainly from differences between the High and Low Church elements. Although there was an organization at a very early day, known as St. Jude's Parish, yet it seems to have fallen under the ban of the Bishop, after which only a mission was maintained until the year 1848, when St. Paul's was regularly organized. Bishop Whitehouse was a pronounced High Churchman, while Rev. J. W. Cracraft favored the more popular side. There was, therefore, no little friction between them. Later, but just at what period does not now appear, a new parish, called St. John's Parish, was formed, which erected a building on the corner of South Jefferson and Liberty Streets, afterwards occupied by the Jews, but this parish was short-lived: St. Paul's was much weakened by the withdrawals of the Reform element, occurring, as it did, at a time when they had no house of worship, and was left in poor condition to erect one. But, under the energetic management of the present rector, all differences seem to have been healed, and the parish is now in a prosperous condition.

The succession of rectors has been as follows: 1848, Rev. J. S. Chamberlain; 1850, Rev. John W. Cracraft; 1857, Rev. Henry N. Strong; 1860, Rev. Joseph M. Wait; 1865, Rev. Warren H. Roberts; 1869, Rev. J. W. Coe; 1870, Rev. J. W. Bonham; 1872, Rev. L. Townsend; 1875, Rev. William Bryce Morrow; 1881, Rev. Robert Ritchie; 1889, Rev. Sidney G. Jeffords, the present rector.

Out of this parish have grown St. Andrew's Parish and St. Stephen's Mission, on South Adams Street. The parish sustains a Sabbath School of about 100 in average attendance, superintended by the rector. Four Diocesan Conventions have been held in this church, the dates of which have not been ascertained.

ST. ANDREW'S PARISH is the outgrowth of a pious donation of land made by John Birket many years before his death. On November 7, 1857, Mr. Birket conveyed to Henry J. Whitehouse, Bishop of Illinois, and to his successors in office, certain lots, including those upon which St. Andrew's Church now stands. Some of these lots were donated for parsonage purposes, some for educational purposes, and others for the purpose of a church and burying-ground, for the use and benefit of a congregation in union and communion with the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Illinois, under the constitution and canons of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and of the constitution and canons of the Diocese of Illinois and the authority of the Bishop of the same, in trust to and for the uses and purposes named and limited in the deed. The population in that vicinity being then and, for many years thereafter, very sparse, no immediate use could be made of the lots so donated. Bishop Whitehouse died, and soon thereafter the Diocese of Illinois was subdivided into three, the City of Peoria falling into the Diocese of Quincy, of which Rev. Alexander T. Burgess became Bishop.

John Birket died about the year 1874, and after his death some of his heirs, on various pretexts, laid claim to the lots, and a long controversy arose between them and the church authorities respecting the title. Other complications also arose of a very perplexing nature. That part of the trust relating to the burying-ground could not be executed, for the reason the city had prohibited the burying of dead within its limits. That part relating to education could not be executed, for there was no means of utilizing it for that purpose, and as to the church and parsonage, there was no call for either. By some means, the lots had been placed upon the tax-books, and had been sold for unpaid taxes. In this dilemma, the Bishop, through the advice of counsel, designated St. Paul's Parish as the beneficiary under the Birket deed, and made a deed of the lots to that parish. Amicable proceedings were commenced between the Birket heirs, on one side, and the Bishop and St. Paul's Parish, on the other, to determine their respective rights. This litigation finally resulted in a decree of the Circuit Court of Peoria County, under which the lots were to be sold and the proceeds administered by the court, upon some scheme to be devised, as nearly in conformity with Mr. Birket's intent as possible. The lots were sold by the Master in Chancery for $35,183.25. The three lots where the church now stands, at the corner of North Madison Avenue and Mary Street, were bid in by St. Paul's Parish, or for its benefit, for $6,000. But, it being the intent of the officers of St. Paul's to devote these lots to the purposes of a church, as provided in the Birket deed, the Court relieved them of the purchase and allowed the title, for the time being, to remain as it was. The Court then took charge of the remaining funds, and directed them to be invested in a church and parsonage. A number of members then separated themselves from St. Paul's and organized a new parish, called St. Andrew's. This organization was effected on July 10, 1867, with thirty members; the officers being W. H. Boniface and W. N. Sweeney, Wardens; and L. C. Wheeler, John A. Dickinson, Charles Leveridge and E. E. Kinsley, Vestrymen. Rev. Samuel G. Wells became rector on November 22, 1867, and was succeeded by the present rector, Rev. Webster Hakes, on June 15, 1900.

With the funds arising from the sale of the lots, a very handsome stone church was erected in the fall of 1867, at a cost of $20,000, and a rectory at a cost of $10,000. The parish maintains a Sabbath School of about 125 members in average attendance, Mr. W. H. Boniface being Superintendent. The rapid extension of the city in that direction affords encouragement to hope that this church may be one of great usefulness.

CHRIST CHURCH (REFORMED EPISCOPAL). The contest between the High and Low Church elements in the Protestant Episcopal Church, which led to the separation of one party from the other and the formation of the Reformed Episcopal Church, was waged with vigor in the Diocese of Illinois. The Bishop was uncompromising in his High Church proclivities, while among the laity there was a growing tendency towards a more liberal church government. This difference in sentiment, at one time, grew so strong as to provoke a newspaper controversy, carried on with marked ability on both sides, between the Bishop and Hon. Charles B. Lawrence, of Galeburg, one of the clearest-minded and ablest jurists in the State. In Peoria, especially, after the beginning of the great evangelistic work, there was a strong party in the church who did not agree with the Bishop; and, when the news of the organization of the Reformed Episcopal Church, in New York, on December 2, 1873, had reached them, the movement was regarded with much favor, not only by the Low Church element in that denomination, but by many members of other churches. Among the prominent members of the old church who sympathized with this movement, was Mr. Alexander G. Tyng, who, for many years, had been a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, and co-worker with William Reynolds, George H. Melvaine, D. W. McWilliams, and others in Peoria, and with Dwight L. Moody, B. F. Jacobs and others of Chicago. Mr. Tyng had, for several years, been successfully carrying on a mission Sunday School on Cedar Street, and had been active in co-operation with all evangelistic work in the city. At his invitation, Bishop George D. Cummings, of the Reformed Church, visited Peoria to look over the field, with a view of establishing a church. So inviting was the outlook, that it was determined to proceed at once with the organization. The session of the Second Presbyterian Church, learning of the situation, at once tendered them the use of that church to hold their meeting, and the same was accepted. A meeting was held on December 16, 1873, at which time an organization was effected.

Subscriptions were commenced for the support of a rector, and so liberal was the response that Bishop Cummings was authorized to secure one immediately. At the time of organization, there were about fifty members, which number was very soon increased to 100. The first meeting of the parish was held, January 12, 1874, at which time the following named officers were chosen: Alexander G. Tyng, Senior, and Charles F. Bacon, Junior Warden; Henry B. Hopkins, P. R. K. Brotherson, H. B. Dox, C. A. Jamison, Charles H. Kellogg, John S. Stevens, Walter B. Hotchkiss, B. F. Ellis, R. F. Seabury, Jr., and Walter P. Colburn, Vestrymen. Rev. Mason Gallagher, of Brooklyn, New York, officiated at the first services, which were held on the first Sabbath in January, 1874, and possibly for a short time thereafter. A call was extended to Rev. Joseph D. Wilson, of Pittsburg, on the 4th day of February, 1874, and on the 17th of the same month, he arrived and commenced his labors. It thus happened that, within the space of two months, this new church had been fully organized and supplied with the regular ordinances of religious worship. The lot on which the church now stands was then secured, and, by July of the same year, the present church building was completed, at a cost of $13,000, in addition to which an organ was procured through the efforts of Mrs. Frances B. M. Brotherson, which cost $3,500, to all of which must be added $2,000 for carpets and furniture.

Rev. Joseph D. Wilson was succeeded in the office of rector of this church by Rev. E. B. England, for almost six years; Rev. J. W. Fairly, for about ten years; Rt. Rev. B. B. Ussher, for two years, and, after him, by the present rector, Rev. Henry F. Milligan.

The congregation has also provided a rectory, on Perry Avenue, at a cost of $5,700. It has a Sunday School, with an average attendance of 75. Out of this church has grown Bacon Memorial Mission, and the Elizabeth M. Bacon Orphanage and Chapel, at Lalipur, N. W. P., India. This church was honored with the meeting of the General Council of the Reformed Episcopal Church, from May 27 to June 1, 1885.

BACON MEMORIAL MISSION grew out of a mission Sunday School, organized Thanksgiving Day, November 29, 1888, under the auspices of Christ (Reformed Episcopal) Church, by Rev. J. W. Fairly, the rector, and Alexander G. Tyng, Charles A. Jamison, Mrs. Pamela Williams, Miss Emma Bannister and Weston R. Gales. At the time of organization, Mr. Gales was made Superintendent, and continued to hold that position until his removal from the city, when he was succeeded, September 9, 1891, by Rev. Edward T. Munns, the present Superintendent and acting minister. The meetings were first held in a store building, No. 206 Bridge Street, and, after some time, removed to a store, No. 602 South Adams Street, where they continued to be held until October 9, 1892, at which time the present building, on Chestnut Street, between Adams and Warner Avenue, erected at a cost of $8,000, was occupied. It is named Bacon Memorial Mission in memory of Charles F. Bacon, a highly respected and useful member of Christ Church, whose life was, some years ago, suddenly cut short in the midst of his useful labors. His wife, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Bacon, subsequently went to India as a missionary, and, within a short period, she, too, has been called away, an Orphanage and Chapel at Lalipur, India, having been established through her influence, which now remains to perpetuate her memory.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCHES.

In the pioneer days, the beginnings of the Catholic Churches were very similar to those of other denominations. A traveling priest or missionary would start out to find those of his faith to whom he could administer the ordinances of religion, then pass on to another point and perform the same offices there. In this way, circuits would be established, to which the missionary would return at intervals. Tradition says that, as early as 1839, a Father Reho, an Italian, visited the few Catholics there were then at Peoria and in the surrounding country, and that, finding a number of that faith at Kickapoo, he built a stone church there in the year 1840, several years before any Catholic church had been erected in Peoria. It is said that one of these missionaries, as soon as the last strokes of the bell at the hour of twelve had sounded, and Christmas morn had been ushered in, would say mass at Kickapoo, then come to Peoria and officiate at the rising of the sun, and complete his day's labor at noon by performing the same service at Black Partridge, in Woodford County.

In 1846, the Rev. John A. Drew, pastor of the seventy-five Catholic families then resident in Peoria, built the first Catholic house of worship in the city, on Eaton Street, between Jefferson and Madison Avenues. It was a small one-story brick building, situated on the rear of the lots on which St. Mary's Church was afterwards built. Its end, on which there was a small cross, was towards Eaton Street. After the building of St. Mary's Church, it was used as a school-house until the time of the erection of the Academy. Five years later, Father Montuori, realizing that the church was altogether inadequate to the needs of the parish, which had increased four-fold, set about the erection of a larger building, on the corner of Jefferson Avenue and Eaton Street. This was a church of some note in its day. For some years after its erection, it was said to be the finest church between Chicago and St. Louis; but this claim can hardly be sustained, for the First Presbyterian Church, erected about the same time, on Main and Madison Streets, was not only more substantial, but, excepting a little exterior ornamentation, a better finished and more artistic structure. St. Mary's did, however, present a striking appearance in a new and undeveloped city. Like some other churches in Peoria, it was intended to have a steeple, but only the first section was at first framed. This was enclosed and roofed over to await developments, but it gave the church an unfinished and unsightly appearance. In a few years, say about 1854 or 1855, this defect was remedied by the erection of an elegant spire, having nine points, one in the center surmounted by a gilt cross, the others in two ranks of four each on the four corners. It was painted white, and was, for the time being, the most striking object in the city. But in the great storm of May 13, 1858, it was blown off, and never reconstructed. Instead of it, there was erected a brick tower, from the ground up, surmounted by four small spires on the corners. In this was placed a bell, which aroused the sleepers at six o'clock in the morning, the pious to pray, the wicked to swear. That bell is now in one of the towers of the Cathedral. It has been unremitting in its duties for nearly half a century, and, while its notes have many times fallen upon unattentive ears, it has been a constant reminder to the faithful of their duty to attend regularly upon the ordinances of the sanctuary.

This was the parish church for over forty years, when old St. Mary's Church gave way to the new Cathedral. The opening of the church, on June 4, 1852, and the dedication by Bishop Van de Velde, April 17, 1853, were important events in the early Catholic history of Peoria. On the occasion of this visit of the Bishop, a committee representing the German Catholics, who theretofore had been part of St. Mary's congregation, requested the exclusive use of the new church for the Germans at the eight o'clock mass every Sunday. The old church was offered them instead, and here the first German parish was organized and placed in charge of Father Gipperich, who was transferred from Black Partridge, now called Lourdes. Father Gipperich remained only a short time, but was subsequently recalled to Peoria, and built the first St. Joseph's Church, in 1855, near the corner of First and Spencer Streets. Two years later, he resigned on account of ill health, and died in Louisville, Kentucky. His successor, Father Fortman, died within three weeks after his appointment. In the meantime, the Catholics of Lower Peoria had been gathered into a mission congregation, worshipping in a small frame church, built by Father Coyle. They were attended by the priests of St. Mary's until Father Hurley, resigning the pastorate of St. Mary's Church, became pastor of the newly organized parish of St. Patrick, in 1868.

There were now three parishes in Peoria. The little chapel, erected by Father Gipperich and dedicated under the patronage of St. Joseph, soon became too small for the increasing congregation, and, in 1863, the Rev. Henry Boers, a newly-ordained priest, purchased additional property, enlarged the church, and bought a cemetery of fifteen acres. His successor, the Rev. Father Dieters, appointed in 1867, bought still more ground, again enlarged the church, built a new parochial residence, erected two school-houses, and re-built the convent of the Sisters of Notre Dame, who had charge of three hundred children in the parochial school. At the end of five years of strenuous labor, Father Dieters was succeeded by the Rev. B. Back.

St. Mary's continued to thrive under the line of worthy pastors who came after Father Montuori, among whom were the Rev. Matthew Dillon, who died while pastor, and was buried from this church; Rev. Henry Coyle, who built the first St. Patrick's Church; the Rev. Abram J. Ryan, the Poet Priest of the South, who has now a permanent place in American literature; the Very Rev. Father Hurley, the venerated pastor of St. Patrick's for a quarter of a century; the Rev. John Mackin, for many years afterwards pastor at Elgin, Illinois, and the Rev. J. Halligan, who will always be reverently remembered. During these years, the church was growing vigorously in the city and throughout Central Illinois. On February 12, 1875, in order to effect a more thorough organization, the new Diocese of Peoria was created, of which the Rt. Rev. John Lancaster Spalding was consecrated first Bishop, May 1, 1877. St. Mary's Church became St. Mary's Cathedral. The pastor, the Rev. M. Welby, having decided to return to the Diocese of Chicago, the Rev. B. J. Spalding was appointed to succeed him.

St. Patrick's was now so largely increased in membership that the frame church on Millman Street became too small. A new site was purchased, on the corner of Saratoga and McBean Streets, on which a large brick church was built, and dedicated by Bishop Spalding, September 12, 1880. It was destroyed the following March, but was at once re-built, and re-dedicated by Bishop Spalding, November 21, 1881.

While Father Hurley was building the new St. Patrick's, the Germans, who also had outgrown their old church, undertook the erection of a new building, and, under the direction of Father Back, the present fine church was completed and dedicated in 1880. That same year, a division of the uptown portion of the parish was formed into the new congregation of the Sacred Heart, and placed in charge of the Capuchin Fathers. They erected a church at the corner of Madison Avenue and Fulton Street. A few years later they were replaced by the Franciscan Fathers, who have since held the charge. Three or four Fathers are in residence at the Monastery of the Sacred Heart, from which, besides the parish, they attend the German Church in Pekin and St. Francis Hospital, in Peoria.

In 1881, the year following the founding of the Parish of the Sacred Heart, another division was made in St. Joseph's. The Germans in the extreme southern part of the city were organized in a separate parish, under the patronage of St. Boniface. In a short time, the Rev. F. Van Schwedler, the first pastor, built a church, school and parochial residence at the corner of Antoinette and Louisa Streets. At the resignation of Father Van Schwedler, the Franciscan Fathers, who succeeded him, set about the erection of a larger church, which is one of the most recent and best additions to the church architecture of Peoria.

The members of St. Mary's Parish worshiped in the old church until the opening of the new Cathedral, in 1880. The work of erecting this magnificent pile had been begun several years before by Father B. J. Spalding, who did not live to see the completion of his task. He died March 28, 1887. The work was completed by his successor, the Rev. C. F. O'Neill. The dedication, on May 15, 1889, was a memorable event. Assisting Bishop Spalding in the service were Archbishop Feehan, of Chicago, and Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul; Bishops Ryan, of Alton; Janssens, of Belleville, and Cosgrove, of Davenport. A masterly sermon was preached by Archbishop Hennessey, of Dubuque. Nearly all the priests of the Diocese, together with many others, were present.

Father O'Neill lived but a short time after the dedication. The next pastor, the Rev. M. L. O'Connor, was in charge till his death, in 1896. After the lapse of nearly a year, the present rector, the Rev. Francis J. O'Reilly, was appointed.

Father Back continued his pastorate of the St. Joseph's until 1884, when the Rev. C. Rotter entered upon the duties of that office. For many years Father Rotter labored zealously for the material and spiritual welfare of the people. He built St. Joseph's new parochial school, and founded St. Joseph's Home for the Aged, which now provides for the wants of 110 inmates. At his death, in 1898, the Very Rev. H. Creve was selected to succeed him.

In 1890, that part of St. Patrick's Parish situated in the extreme southwestern part of the city, was found to have increased in numbers so largely as to require a church of their own. Accordingly, the Rev. J. P. Quinn entered upon the work of building up the new parish of St. John's. The substantial brick church and house at the corner of Antoinette and Blaine Streets, erected in the midst of a thriving people, prove how successfully he has labored.

Early the following spring, the Rev. Francis J. O'Reilly gathered together the Catholics of the West Bluff in a temporary church, which had been built in five days. Within a few months, St. Mark's Church was erected on Bradley Avenue, followed, in the course of time, by the parochial residence. Father O'Reilly was appointed rector of St. Mary's Cathedral in 1897, and was succeeded in St. Mark's by the Rev. James Shannon.

No sooner had the two new parishes been firmly established than the saintly Father Hurley, after a quarter of a century of self-sacrificing labor, laid down the burden of life, December 11, 1892. No death in Peoria ever caused profounder or more universal regret. He was succeeded, both as pastor of St. Patrick's and as Vicar-General of the Diocese, by the Rt. Rev. F. J. O'Reilly, whose years of service in the Diocese entitled him to the honor of being selected to assist Bishop Spalding as Auxiliary Bishop of Peoria. His consecration, November, 1900, was the most impressive religious ceremony ever held in the city.

During his four years' pastorate at the Cathedral, Father Francis J. O'Reilly has built St. Peter's Church in Averyville, a mission of St. Mary's, and St. Monica's Church and rectory in East Peoria, which, together with Washington, is now a separate parish in charge of the Rev. H. Fennen. Less than a year hence another parish will have been established on the East Bluff. Within the memory of men yet living, the handful of early settlers have become a multitude. The little upper room, which was their first temple of worship, has developed into eight thoroughly equipped parishes. The Catholic Church has kept even pace with the growth of Peoria.

LUTHERAN CHURCHES.

THE GERMAN EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN (ST. PAUL'S) CHURCH was organized December 1, 1853, with twelve members. It had, in succession, seven pastors prior to the year 1877, when the present pastor, Rev. Frederick B. Bess, was installed, having served in that office for twenty-four years. The first church building was erected in the year 1854, on Sanford Street, but, in 1893, a lot was purchased on the corner of First and Goodwin Streets, and the church moved to that place. In 1883, the church was re-built at a cost of $1,500, and, in 1888, a new frame church was erected on the same site at a cost of $14,500. In 1893, a parsonage, costing $609.50, was erected, and the parsonage now in use was erected in 1894, at a cost of $2,200. In 1883, this church established a mission on the Sand Hill, corner of Easton and Hayes Streets, from which has grown Zion's Lutheran Church, and, in 1893, a mission on Perry Street, out of which has grown the Lutheran Church of the Redeemer, corner of Glendale Avenue and Mary Streets. This church has also been instrumental in founding (in 1878) St. Peter's Lutheran Church in Timber Township, and St. Timothy's Lutheran Church at Castleton, Stark County; also, in 1889, St. Peter's Lutheran Church at Emden, Logan County, Illinois.

St. Paul's Church maintains a Sunday School, at which the average attendance is 250, W. Semmelmann being Superintendent. There is also a day-school and kindergarten connected with the church, the first school-building having been erected in 1863, at a cost of $300, and the present one, erected in 1868, at a cost of $5,200.

The Southern District Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Iowa and other States, of which ecclesiastical organization this church is a member, has held two of its meetings here—one in 1891, the other in 1894.

GERMAN EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN TRINITY CHURCH. This congregation was organized June 17, 1857, by Rev. T. Fred Boeling, with thirteen members. The first Official Board was composed of Messrs. C. Schmidt, Daniel Harms, C. Hagemeier, Harm E. Harms, and E. Tegtmeier. In the following year they erected a small church, costing about $2,000, near the corner of Warner Avenue and Maple Street, where the parochial school is still located. Rev. Fred Boeling was installed the first pastor, June 17, 1858, and continued to serve in that capacity for over two years, and was succeeded by Rev. Paulus Heid, January 17, 1861, who continued to serve the congregation until the year 1878. During this long continued pastorate, the church was greatly prospered, and, in the year 1875, a new church was erected on the opposite side of Maple Street from the old one. This is an elegant frame building, costing the sum of $8,000. The membership in 1880 was 800. Rev. Heid was succeeded by Rev. Gottlieb Traub, who, in turn, was succeeded, January 1, 1892, by the present pastor, Rev. Otto L. Hoenstein. This church has been singularly fortunate in having long pastorates—having had but four pastors in 43 years.

Although one of the most conservative churches in the city, it is imbued with an earnest missionary spirit. In 1900, it was instrumental in organizing St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church in Jubilee Township, and, in 1892, another of the same denomination at the corner of Malone Avenue and Chandler Street, in the city. At the present time the pastor also preaches to the people of his denomination at Morton, in Tazewell County. The church maintains a Sabbath School numbering 125 in average attendance, over which the pastor is Superintendent.

CHRIST EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN. This church was organized as an independent congregation on December 9, 1894, having been a mission of Trinity Church, of the same denomination, since July, 1892. It had thirty-six original members, Rev. Frederick W. Jass being the first pastor; Fritz Krause, George E. Harms, Albert Folkers and Albert Stuff, Elders; J. A. Rass, Secretary; and J. H. Folkers, Treasurer. The pastor having, on March 11, 1894, been installed as second pastor of Trinity Church, was elected pastor of this church at the time of its organization, and has filled that office ever since. In the summer of 1892, the congregation of Trinity Church erected a building for the use of its newly organized mission in the southern part of the city on the corner of Malone Avenue and Chandler Street, at a cost of about $5,000. This building was struck by lightning and totally destroyed by fire ensuing, on the 25th day of June, 1895. Immediately after this misfortune, the congregation erected, on the same site, its second house of worship at a cost of about $8,000, together with a parochial school-building, which cost about $2,000. Regular catechetical instruction is conducted by the pastor every Sunday afternoon, at which time there is an average of ninety persons in attendance. The church is in a prosperous condition.

SWEDISH EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN SALEM CHURCH. This church was organized, August 4, 1883, with thirty-four members and the following officers: Nels A. Nystrom, Aaron V. Venell, P. G. Nelson, James Nelson, Alfred Bergquist and Nels Olson, Deacons, and Edward Nyland, Charles G. Schwerin and Charles Johnson, Trustee, and Aaron V. Venell, Clerk. The church has had the following named pastors: Rev. August Norrbom, January 1, 1887, to October 1, 1890; Rev. E. C. Jessup, June 1, 1891, to February 26, 1893; Rev. Alfred Appell, March 1, 1893, to the present time. The first church building was located on Eaton Street near the Vienna Mills. It was on leased ground, and, about April 1, 1888, it was moved to Glendale Avenue near the corner of Hamilton Street. In the year 1896, this church was sold for $2,800 and an elegant new one of brick and stone was erected on the south corner of Bluff Street and Hamilton Boulevard, at a cost of $10,000, besides the price of the lot, which was $5,000. This church has been greatly prospered. It has now a membership of 430, of whom 265 are adults. It has a Sunday School of 70 in average attendance, Mr. Nels A. Nystrom being Superintendent and Carl J. Appell his Assistant.

The membership of this church is drawn from all quarters of the city, and, the Swedish population being somewhat sparse, there seems to be little opportunity at present of establishing missions of that nationality. The present Deacons are Nels A. Nystrom, Aaron V. Venell, Charles Olson, Clark G. Anderson, August Welander and Herman Celander; the Trustees, James Nelson, Peter Nelson, Oloff Edd, J. A. Magnuson, Charles J. Florine, Oscar Venell, and the Clerk of the church, Herman Celander.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE UNIVERSALIST CHURCH was organized May 6, 1843, its first members being Orin Hamlin, Dennis Blakeley, Aaron Oakford, Moses M. Webb, J. P. Dennis, John King, Caleb Whittemore, Norman Howe and wife, with some others. At first they had no house of worship, their meetings being held in the Court House. Rev. F. J. Briggs seems to have been the first pastor, but at what date he began his labors does not appear—probably not until the year 1848. He was succeeded by Rev. W. B. Lindell for about two years. The society about that time purchased the building which had been erected on Fulton Street by the First Presbyterian Church as a house of worship, which they continued to occupy until the year 1863. Rev. William Rounseville was pastor from about the year 1853 or 1854, until 1858. He was succeeded on June 23, of the latter year, by Rev. D. M. Reed, during whose pastorate the church was re-organized under the name of the "Church of the Redeemer," with 83 members. John King and John W. Place were elected Deacons, R. M. Place, Clerk, and Benjamin Pitcher, Treasurer. The first Trustees were Sidney Pulsifer, Tobias S. Bradley, Andrew J. Hodges, John H. Calhoun and Addison S. Norton.

"In January, 1855, a Unitarian Church was organized under the auspices of Rev. James R. McFarland. They held their meetings for some time over Mr. Joseph Clegg's clothing store, at No. 47 Main Street, but they soon afterwards built a very comfortable house of worship at the corner of Madison and Fayette Streets and held their meetings there for some time." (So says Mr. Ballance.) This church, said to be "very comfortable," was in fact one of the most elegant in the city, although not so large as some of the others. It was built of brick in the Gothic style, with a tall tower, four pointed, in which was a Gothic window, said to be the largest then in the State. The interior was finished in style corresponding with the exterior, and was furnished with a good organ placed in the gallery. It occupied the site on which the "Women's Club" building now stands. It was built under the inspection of Rev. McFarland, but the congregation seemed to dwindle away after his departure, and, about the year 1863, the church edifice was rented to the Universalist congregation. They continued to occupy it until about the year 1865, when the building, having been sold to the First Baptist Church, the Universalists were, for a year or more, left without a place of worship. Rev. D. M. Reed resigned in 1863, soon after which the Fulton Street Church was sold and the Unitarian Church rented. Mr. Reed then again became pastor and remained with the church until about January, 1865, when Rev. H. R. Nye became pastor. When the church was sold to the Baptists he resigned and the pulpit remained vacant for about a year. The Northwestern Conference of Universalists was held in Peoria in the spring of 1866, when it was determined to erect a church building on Main Street. Ground was broken for it May 18th following. Tobias S. Bradley, one of the Trustees and a large contributor, met with an accident which caused his death in March, 1867, before the church was completed. The new church was dedicated, January 1, 1868, and named "The Church of the Messiah," and Rev. Royal H. Pullman installed pastor. A State Convention was held in Peoria in 1870. The following have been pastors: Rev. Pullman, Rev. H.

B. Smith, Rev. J. Murray Bailey, Rev. S. A. Gardner, Rev. G. W. Kent and W. S. Ralph up to the time the United States General Convention of Universalists was held in October, 1885. Soon after, in commemoration of the devotion of Tobias S. Bradley to its interests, the name of the church was changed to "The Bradley Memorial First Universalist Church." Rev. George B. Stocking became pastor, April 5, 1886, and the pastors that have followed have been Rev. R. B. Marsh, Rev. Frank McAlpine, and Rev. T. B. T. Fisher, the present pastor. The church on Main Street having been sold to the Masons, a new church has just been completed on Hamilton Boulevard.

THE APOSTOLIC CHRISTIAN CHURCH. This church, which goes by the name of "Amish," was organized by Johannes Kreenbiel, in the year 1852, with about six members. The first sermon was preached by Joseph Werker, of the State of New York. This denomination is unique and not easily described. It resembles in some respects the Tinkers (Dunkards) and Menonites (Menists), and yet differs from each of them. Those in full membership are required to be very rigid in the observance of the rules of the church; the style of their garments is prescribed by authority, their deportment demure, their marriages wholly under control of the parents and the church, their worship exceedingly simple. The men take no part in political affairs, are non-combatants, and, until recently, would not employ a lawyer to assist them in their business. Both men and women are exceedingly frugal and industrious, the young women forming a very valuable class of helpers in private families. Until 1874, their meetings were held in the houses of the members, but in that year they erected a meeting-house on Green Street at the corner of the alley between Madison and Monroe Streets, which cost them about $1,000. The congregation has grown in numbers and strength in recent years, many well-to-do farmers in the vicinity having become members. They now have a very substantial and commodious house of worship containing several apartments erected on the site of the old church. To all appearances the congregation is in a prosperous condition. Their services are held twice every Sunday, once in the forenoon and once in the afternoon.

THE NEW CHURCH (commonly called Swed-enborgian). The "First Society of the New Jerusalem Church of the City of Peoria," was formed a corporate body in January, 1846, with the following named persons as Trustees: Charles P. King, Elihu N. Powell and Hervey Lightner. The first church building was erected on Jefferson Street near Hamilton (in the rear of the Lightner homestead) before November 23, 1846; for on that date "the first meeting was held in the new Temple, a Sabbath School and Bible Class were organized, and the Rev. J. R. Hibbard, 'Presiding Minister of the Association of Readers and Receivers of the Doctrines of the New Jerusalem in Illinois,' was called to consecrate and institute the new Society in accordance with the rules of the General Convention," which was done January 3, 1847. "The following named persons were on the same day baptized into membership: John Hamlin, Dr. Edward Dickinson and his wife, Catharine I. Dickinson, Frances M. Dickinson, Charles Kettelle, William Durst, Dr. Moses Troyer, and Hervey Lightner, who with the following named persons who had previously been baptized—Wm. L. Tabor, Charlotte Tabor, Alexander Cooper, J. G. Green, Jerusha M. Hibbard, and F. B. L. Campbell—affixed their names to the declaration of Charity and Faith."

These were the fourteen charter members of the Society for which the following named ministers successively officiated as pastors: Rev. John Randolph Hibbard, D. D., Nelson C. Burnham, Thomas S. Storey, Jabez Fox, George H. Marsten, A. J. Bartels, George E. Stearns, George Nelson Smith, George Hardon, J. R. Hibbard (a second time), W. H. Schliffer and Samuel C. Eby.

In 1855, a second house of worship was erected on Hamilton Street between Madison and Jefferson Streets, a plain brick structure capped with stone, costing (including lot) $5,000; and the Illinois Association of the New Jerusalem Church was invited to hold its annual meeting in the new edifice in June of the same year. That body met here several times during a period of thirty-four years—the last time in 1880, during Mr. Eby's pastorate. In 1888 more than $800 were expended in repairing, remodeling the interior and refurnishing the Temple, and services were continued for several years, Rev. Eby ministering.

The annual contribution by members of the society for various religions and benevolent purposes, was given a few years since as $2,500, but for the last decade this item cannot be estimated.

In 1806 this building was condemned by the City Inspector and the furnishings having been, in part, sold to the Presbyterian Church at Pottstown, it was razed in the spring of that year. It seemed a singular coincidence that only its front walls remained standing when the body of the last one of the charter members of the society, Hervey Lightner, was borne past to its last resting place.

The record of the membership of this Peoria Society, during fifty years of its existence, includes many names prominently connected with the various commercial, professional, educational and industrial interests of the city. Among the names of those still living two are widely known; one, that of Hon. Charles C. Bonney, now of Chicago, who was the originator and President of the "World's Parliament of Religions" of 1893; the other, Lloyd Wheaton, now General Wheaton of military fame. Though no regular service has been held since the demolition of its house of worship, a remnant of the society still exists in an organization of which V. H. Van Buskirk is Treasurer; A. E. Bassett, Secretary; M. M. Bassett and Dr. F. S. Davis, Trustees, and the breath of Divine Providence may yet rekindle the smouldering fire, which, in years past, "gave light to them that sat in the darkness" and warmth to hearts chilled with thoughts of death and doubts of immortality.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF CHRIST SCIENTIST. This is one of the latest and most aggressive candidates for recognition as a Christian church. Its doctrines are novel and its form of worship unique. It would be unsafe for any one outside the organization to undertake a delineation of either. The only sure way is to go and see. The congregation in Peoria was organized in December, 1893, with six members. The first Board of Directors consisted of Miss Jennie L. Bryan, Mrs. Mary E. Bailey and Mrs. Harriet A. Peck. Miss Jennie L. Bryan has been First Reader (who seems to stand in place of a preacher) from the date of organization. The growth of the congregation has been phenomenal, having made many inroads upon the membership of existing churches. In the year 1898, with much enthusiasm they erected a house of worship, of elegant design, on the corner of Hamilton Boulevard and Bluff Street, which, with the site, cost about $30,000. They maintain a Sunday School with about 40 in average attendance.

JEWISH CHURCHES.

The very early history of the Jews in Peoria is veiled in obscurity. It is possible that, prior to the year 1847, there may have been some here, but if so their names are not known. In that year, or about that time, came Abraham Frank, A. Rosenblat, Hart P. Ancker, A. Ackerland, Arnold Goodheart and Abraham Salomon—the latter with four sons, Solomon, Frederick, Wolf and Jonas, and his son-in-law, Simon Lyon. These men all engaged in business and all continued to reside in Peoria for many years, except A. Ackerland, who returned to Cincinnati. Subsequent arrivals were as follows: In 1848, Jacob Liebenstein; in 1849, Henry Ullman and Leopold Rosenfeld; in 1851, Abraham Schradzki and Leopold Ballenberg, and, in 1852, Aaron, Harry and David Ullman. These men laid the foundations of Jewish society in Peoria.

In the year 1852 the first Jewish cemetery was purchased and deeded in trust to Leopold Rosenfeld, Hart P. Ancker and Abraham Frank. It was a small plat of ground situated on a spur of the bluff at the intersection of the Pekin road and the C. B. & Q. Railroad. It was detached from the main portion of the bluff by the grading of that road, which circumstance led to its final abandonment. This was the beginning of Jewish organizations in the city. About this time services began to be held during holidays at various halls, which were conducted by members of the society. This continued until about the year 1863, when they purchased from the Universalists the old Presbyterian church situated on Fulton Street between Adams and Jefferson. Regular services were then held under the direction of the following named ministers: Rev. Marx Moses, from 1863 to 1873; Rev. Dr. E. B. M. Brown, from 1873 until 1875; Rev. M. H. Bloch, from 1875 until 1878. The latter was succeeded by Rev. Dr. David Stern. This was the original congregation of Anshai Emith.

About the year 1872, quite a number of Jews from Russia, Hungary and Poland, known as "orthodox Jews," arrived in Peoria, and, not being satisfied with the advanced ideas of the Congregation of Anshai Emith, instituted services of their own in a hall, and, in January, 1873, purchased a cemetery, the Trustees being Israel Bennett, Jacob Conig-sky, Levi Meiers, Lewis

Brin and Aaron Mittenhal. They continued to hold the same until about the second day of October, 1874, when the congregation of Beth Israel was organized, and the Trustees of the cemetery turned it over to them. This cemetery is located on the bluff near Oesterle's, overlooking Pleasant Valley, and is still used by the orthodox party. They had worshipped in halls until about the year 1874, when some of the members of the Anshai Emith Congregation, becoming dissatisfied with the views maintained by Dr. Stern, left that congregation and, together with a large portion of the orthodox party, arranged to procure a temple for themselves. They purchased the church on Seventh Street erected by the Christian (or Campbellite) Congregation, and continued to worship there for some time. Rev. M. Messing was their first pastor, who was succeeded by Rev. Henry Messing and he, in turn, by Rev. F. Fisher.

About the year 1870 the congregation of Anshai Emith purchased the lot with the building thereon, located on the south corner of Jefferson Avenue and Liberty Street, where St. John's Parish of the Protestant Episcopal Church had built a house of worship, and proceeded to erect thereon a temple. It was at that time hoped that both congregations would become united; but all such hopes were for a time disappointed. Rev. David Stern continued to preside over Anshai Emith and Rev. Fisher over Beth Israel. Contentions became so vivid that they entered into the social life of the people. Finally Rev. Fisher left Beth Israel and, about the year 1880, Rev. Edward N. Callisch came as a minister, and through his efforts, ably seconded by members of both congregations, peace was restored, the congregations were united, the temple of Beth Israel was sold and the proceeds turned over to Anshai Emith. In the meantime, while these two reformed congregations were contending with each other, the remnants of the orthodox party who had not joined with the members of the Anshai Emith in organizing Beth Israel, continued to conduct their own worship in halls as best they could.

In the year 1806 the temple of Anshai Emith was destroyed by fire and, for the next two years, various Christian churches were placed at their disposal for worship. But a lot was purchased on the west corner of Monroe and Hancock Streets, where a temple of elegant proportions and built of Lake Superior sandstone, has been erected. The corner-stone was laid on March 2, 1898, and the temple dedicated September 9th of the same year. Rabbi Callisch was the first minister of the United Congregation and served for four years. He was followed by Rev. S. Greenfield and Rev. L. Isenberg, each for two years; Rev. A. Messing for one year, and he by Rev. Charles S. Levi, the present minister. During his ministry the membership has become nearly doubled, while the Sabbath School numbers about ninety. The officers of the congregation at present are Samuel Woolner, President; David Ullman, Vice-President; A. Raffman, Secretary; M. Salzenstein, Treasurer; Jacob Woolner, William F. Wöitner and Jacob Heim, Trustees; William B. Woolner, President, and Milton Newman, Secretary of the Sunday School.

The Congregation Agudas Achim was organized as a strictly orthodox congregation in September, 1897. It has about thirty-five members and 115 additional adherents. They hold regular services twice every day, and on Friday evening and Saturday morning, which are conducted by members of the congregation. They have purchased, at a cost of $3,000, the church building on Monson Street erected many years ago by the Cumberland Presbyterians, and have spent $1,200 in improving the same. They also expect to purchase the cemetery of the old Beth Israel congregation, which they now use.

The first officers of the congregation were Julius Frankel, President; Max J. Cohen, Vice-President; Abraham Jacobson, Secretary, and Jacob Conigisky, Treasurer. The present officers are Nathan Friedman, President; P. Blumenthal, Vice-President; Samuel Lanski, Secretary; Marks Gumbiner, Treasurer.

EXTINCT CHURCHES.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, organized in the year 1851, is now numbered among those that have ceased to exist. It was organized as a church belonging to the denomination known as "The Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church," which was a union of the Scotch Covenanters and Seceders. The congregation was very weak until about the year 1853, when a young Irishman named Samuel Glover was called to the pastorate. He infused life into the church, so that, in the course of a year, measures were taken to erect a house of worship. At the expense of a vast amount of labor and travel by the pastor, means were raised sufficient in amount to justify its commencement, the building was erected and placed under roof in the year 1854, and was dedicated December 23, 1855. The building still stands on the corner of Madison Avenue and Liberty Street, the first story being occupied as the police patrol station, and the second floor by the Odd Fellows. At first it was regarded as having one of the finest auditoriums in the city, and attracted a generous attendance upon the church services, lectures and other entertainments. It was in this church that the composer, William B. Bradbury, gave one of his first public renderings of the then New Cantata of "Esther, the Beautiful Queen." Rev. Glover remained as pastor but a few years, when he was succeeded, about the year 1857, by Rev. John S. McCulloch, who continued in the pastorate until about the second year of the war, when he became Chaplain of the Seventy-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers, was captured at the battle of Sabine Cross Road, was in due time paroled, was called to the pastorate of a church in Harlem, New York, and afterwards to the Presidency of Knoxville College, Tennessee—an institution of learning for freedmen under the auspices of the United Presbyterian Church—where he remained until very recently. He is now a resident of Omaha, Nebraska. During his pastorate the Associate Reformed Church and the Associate Church (both called Seceders) became united under the name of the United Presbyterian Church, a denomination respectable in numbers and having a highly educated ministry. Its distinguishing features are close communion and the exclusive use of scripture psalmody. This congregation was greatly weakened by the war, several of its members and their pastor having gone into the army. After the retirement of Rev. McCulloch from the pastorate, he was succeeded by the Rev. Thomas P. Stevenson, now of the Presbyterian Church of Spring Valley, in Tazewell County. But the church having become weakened by the loss of members, and having overburdened itself with debt in the erection of a house of worship too expensive for its ability to pay, it became unable to support a pastor and soon afterwards became disorganized. The house of worship was sold for debt and now stands as a sad monument of this well-meant endeavor. It first passed into the hands of the "Turners," and has, in recent years, been used by the Salvation Army, and as an armory for some of the military organizations. There are two churches of this denomination in Peoria County, both located in Logan Township. It has a flourishing college at Monmouth.

ADAMS STREET BAPTIST CHURCH. This church was organized as a mission in May, 1857, through the personal efforts of Rev. Henry G. Weston, Pastor of the First Church. The meetings were at first held in a school-house belonging to Miss L. Wright. On December 12, 1854, the church was formally organized, a lot was secured on which, in 1855, a neat frame house of worship, costing $1,000, was erected on Adams Street between Persimmon and Locust Streets. In 1858, the church had 51 members, its Sunday School had 17 teachers and 150 scholars; H. A. Calkins, an accomplished teacher in the public-schools, was Superintendent, and its library contained 200 volumes. This church continued to flourish and to spread a benign influence over that section of the city for many years, but for some unknown reason it has become extinct.

THE PEORIA (PARK PLACE) BAPTIST CHURCH. This church grew out of a schism in the First Church over the temperance question, during a time of great excitement in 1877-78. The congregation of the First Church having amended their articles of faith or covenant, so as to require of its members a pledge of total abstinence from the use of intoxicants, three members were expelled for refusal to comply. Twenty-seven others immediately withdrew and the thirty met on September 11, 1878, and organized a new church on more liberal principles. William Bastow, Sr., James H. Sedgewick, Thomas Petherbridge, William B. Carson, John H. Hall, Charles Robinson and James E. Pillsbury were elected the first Board of Trustees and authorized to purchase a lot on which to erect a house of worship. They selected a lot on Fifth Street, extending to Park Place, on which, with much zeal and enthusiasm, a church with a seating capacity of 300 was erected. A Sunday School of 125 members was organized and the church soon doubled its membership. But after a few years its zeal began to abate, and it is now numbered with the extinct churches.

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH. A church of this denomination was organized on March 3, 1855. Rev. S. T. Stewart was their first pastor. They erected a small brick church on Monson Street between Fourth and Fifth. The church seemed to prosper for a while under the ministrations of Rev. Stewart and one or two successors, having a membership of 45 in 1858, and a Sunday School of 18 teachers and 85 scholars, with a library of 600 volumes. Little is known of its subsequent history. Its church—which is the only remaining relic of its existence—first passed into the hands of the Episcopalians, the worshipers there being known as St. John's Parish, with Rev. John Benson, Rector, after which it was sold to the Jews, by whom it is still occupied.

CHAPTER XIV.

RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Young Men's Christian Associations originated in England about the year 1844. In 1851 they had reached America, and their growth here was phenomenal. The date of the first organization in Peoria is uncertain, but it must have been in the autumn or early winter of the year 1853; for it is known that, during that winter, a course of lectures was delivered here under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association of Peoria. Those lectures were, so far as known to the writer, delivered during the months of February and March, 1854, by the following gentlemen: Professor Jonathan B. Turner, of Jacksonville, and previously connected with Illinois College; Rev. John W. Cracraft, Rector of St. Paul's Parish, Peoria; President Blanchard, of Knox College; Rev. Robert P. Farris, Pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Peoria; Hon. Onslow Peters, Judge of the Circuit Court, Peoria. The Association at this time also maintained a reading room for the use of its members. A similar course of lectures was conducted by the Association during the following year. In what other direction its efforts were expended during those early years of its existence, does not clearly appear.

In the spring of 1858, a great religious awakening swept over the country in which the churches of Peoria became greatly interested. On May 28 of that year a re-organization of the Association took place, soon after which time the following officers were elected: Alexander G. Tyng, President; Thomas G. McCulloh and Henry M. Kellogg, Vice-Presidents; Calvin C. Lines, Recording Secretary; Thomas Chamberlain, Corresponding Secretary; and Larkin B.

Day, Treasurer. The place of meeting was then in Curtiss's (now First National) Bank Building, but during the year it was changed to the lecture room of the First Presbyterian Church, corner of Main and Madison Streets. After the intensity of the revival had worn away, the meetings were continued as noon-day prayer-meetings, in which the members of the Association took a prominent part. These meetings were continued for years afterwards, and became especially interesting during the exciting times of the Civil War.

The officers for 1859-60 were: Alexander G. Tyng, President; Henry M. Kellogg and Thomas Chamberlain, Vice-Presidents; Calvin C. Lines, Recording Secretary; George H. Melvaine, Corresponding Secretary; Larkin B. Day, Treasurer; Henry M. Kellogg, David McKinney, Lucius L. Day, Edward J. Cowell, Executive Committee. The place of meeting continued to be in the First Presbyterian Church. In 1860-61 Alexander G. Tyng was President and Calvin C. Lines, Secretary.

In the latter part of the year 1861, the Young Men's Christian Associations of the country, feeling the need of a closer touch being maintained between the Christians of the land and the soldiers in the field, organized the United States Christian Commission, of which a full account will be found elsewhere in this work. In 1862, the Association at Peoria became affiliated with this work, and, with energy and zeal, carried the Gospel into the camps of the soldiers, attended them on their weary marches, nursed them in sickness, carried them from the battlefield, bound up their wounds, cleansed them from the filth of the march and the deadly conflict, fed them with wholesome food and gave them comfortable quarters in their hospitals. This work was continued with unabated zeal through nearly three years of warfare. But the active efforts of the Association were not expended wholly upon the soldiers, for it appears that during the year 1862, through its efforts, one mission church and school building had been erected, two weekly mission schools and two weekly prayer-meetings had been established.

On February 4, 1862, in order that it might more effectually accomplish its mission, the Association became incorporated with the very small capital of $750, it then having 26 members. William Reynolds was elected President; David McCulloch, Vice-President; Theodore Higbee, Secretary and Treasurer; J. Boyd Headley, George H. McIlvaine, Alexander G. Tyng, Rev. D. E. Holmes, Thomas G. McCulloch and O. G. Howard, Executive Committee, from whom was chosen a war committee who directed the operations of the Association in connection with the Christian Commission in all matters pertaining to the war.

After the close of the war the Association continued to maintain its existence for several years. As late as 1867-68, Mr. Tyng being then President; J. Scandret, Secretary, and William H. Wood, City Missionary, the Association was holding two meetings each week, on Wednesday and Saturday evenings, in a room on Main Street opposite the Post Office. The same officers continued to serve during the following year, and, in 1870-71, George H. McIlvaine was President, and George W. Alter, Secretary, the meetings being held on Saturday evening. The Association then disappeared for some years, during which time it may or may not have had an existence. This meager outline is doubtless capable of being filled out by reference to the chronicles of the time. The most interesting part of its history, however, is that embraced within the period of the Civil War, for which reference is made to another part of this work.

The present Young Men's Christian Association was organized August 18, 1879. Martin Kingman was chosen President for one year, and Henry F. Sayles elected General Secretary, his duty being the general direction of the work. Twenty-three young men signed the Constitution at the second meeting. On September 1, 1879, the chairmen of the various committees were announced and the enterprise fairly started, and on September 15, the room over Irwin & Co.'s store (102 and 104 South Adams Street) was occupied as headquarters for the first time.

Mr. Sayles was succeeded in October, 1879, by William N. Fisher, during whose term, ending in June, 1881, a great amount of detail work was arranged and a paper called the "Bulletin" was published. On September 12, 1881, James M. Rice was elected President, and re-elected the following year, serving until September, 1883. The Association was incorporated December 16, 1882. In October, 1881, L. Wilbur Messer was elected General Secretary, and, under his energetic management, the work expanded greatly. The rooms in the second story, corner of Adams and Fulton Streets, formerly occupied by the Peoria Boat Club, were taken under lease and handsomely furnished. These rooms were occupied until the fall of 1884.

In 1883, Martin Kingman was chosen President for the second time, serving for a year, and was succeeded by Oliver J. Bailey, who has served the Association efficiently and continuously ever since.

The following General Secretaries succeeded Mr. Messer: A. S. Willoughby, W. S. Towner, F. H. Jacobs and Richard Compton.

In the autumn of 1884 the Association removed its quarters to the Cruger property (now 213 South Jefferson Avenue), since occupied by the Creve Coeur Club, and there remained until moving to their elegant and commodious building, 115 North Jefferson Avenue, erected in 1891.

Richard Compton was followed as General Secretary by Mr. Leonard F. Houghton, who devoted six and one-half years of strong and faithful service to the cause. During his administration great betterments in the premises occupied were made, amongst others, a large and convenient hall for gymnasium purposes being added, which was also used for meetings of the Association. During his incumbency a series of evangelistic meetings, under conduct of Mr. C. H. Yatman, culminated in a mass meeting at which a large amount of money was subscribed for the new Association Building. On March 17, 1890, the corner-stone was laid and the building soon carried to completion. Mr. Houghton acted for the Association as Superintendent of its construction.

Mr. W. A. Brubaker succeeded Mr. Houghton as General Secretary, serving until February, 1900. Under his conscientious guidance the work showed great progress. The lecture courses handled by him under Association auspices, were valuable to the intellectual uplift of the city. The membership of the Association was largely increased during these years, and more of the distinctive features of a work "for young men by young men" introduced. In March, 1900, Mr. F. S. Shepard succeeded Mr. Brubaker, and now occupies the place. Under his experienced direction, the work is steadily advancing on good and approved lines.

During the greater part of the time since its re-organization, in 1870, the Association has been greatly strengthened by a Ladies' Auxiliary Society, composed of many of the most prominent ladies of the several churches in the city, through whose efforts the apartments devoted to the use of young men have been made more homelike and attractive, their social and aesthetic tastes improved, and their respect for true womanhood greatly increased. To this society is also due the erection of the tasteful drinking fountain which stands near the main entrance of the building, inviting all who drink to partake also of the "Water of Life" freely.

The Railroad Young Men's Christian Association commenced work December 1, 1900. It is located at 2336 South Washington Street. The lot is 100x300 feet. The building, 40x75 feet (two stories and basement), stands on the Washington Street side and contains twenty-nine sleeping rooms, reading room, amusement room, temporary hospital, lunch counter, dining room, kitchen, correspondence room, bath rooms, barber shop, store rooms, heater rooms, etc. The total cost of the equipment is $17,500, and is mainly the investment of the Peoria & Pekin Union Railway.

Its objects are to furnish to railroad men the best facilities for body, character and soul building, by furnishing to them, at a nominal cost, clean, wholesome food, clean, well warmed and well kept beds, good facilities for bathing, a library and reading room well supplied with periodicals, social evenings, practical talks, Bible classes, Gospel meetings, fellowship and personal influence toward righteousness, the strongest and best attainable. Its membership, composed purely of railroad men, now numbers 201.

This department stands as one of the best illustrations of the high appreciation in which the work of the Young Men's Christian Association is held by the railway world in general, and particularly by the officials, who are directly connected with its organization and maintenance, as, aside from the furnishing of current supplies, an appropriation of $1,800 per year is granted for current expenses.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

By ANNIE E. DOUGHERTY.

The Young Women's Christian Association of Peoria is one of the five city organizations of the State, others being in Aurora, Rockford and Chicago. All other associations in Illinois are merely college organizations with different lines of work.

This Association was organized in November, 1893, under the auspices of the State leaders and some identified with associations in other States. It has grown since then to a membership of 450. It is under the control of a Board of Managers numbering twenty-four from the various city churches. Mrs. George T. Page, who was its first President, is the President; Mrs. J. T. Rogers is the Vice-President; Dr. Emma Lucas is the Treasurer, and Mrs. N. C. Dougherty the Secretary for the Board.

Mrs. Alice A. Parmele is the General Secretary. She has full charge of the rooms at 119 South Jefferson Avenue, where all classes and meetings of various kinds are held, and where lunches are served every day at the noon hour.

The aim of the Association is to stimulate interest in evangelical religion and to improve the intellectual, social and physical condition of all young women in the city and vicinity. It offers to them a homelike resting place—a wholesome lunch at small price, an interesting hour each Sunday afternoon, evening classes with competent instructors, merry evenings of sociability and games, and, as far as possible, a friendly watch and word and a readiness to meet each need.

Its motto is "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

The Board of Managers of the Association are:

Mrs. R. C. Baker,	Dr. Emma Lucas,
Mrs. R. R. Bourland,	Mrs. George Millard,
Mrs. Ella F. Clark,	Mrs. David McCulloch,
Mrs. Jas. P. Darst,	Mrs. Wm. G. Olwin,
Mrs. N. C. Dougherty,	Mrs. George T. Page,
Mrs. Wm. Drysdale,	Mrs. Thos. Petherbridge,
Mrs. A. G. Emerson,	Miss Sophie Reynolds,
Mrs. Jos. F. Hazzard,	Mrs. A. G. Robinson,
Mrs. William A. Hill,	Mrs. J. T. Rogers,
Mrs. W. A. Johnston,	Mrs. Maria Rogers,
Mrs. John E. Keene,	Mrs. Ezra Tobias,

WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

BY LUCIE B. TYNG.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Peoria, Illinois, was organized first as a "White Ribbon Club," under the leadership of J. C. Bontacue, September 12, 1877, in the First Congregational Church. A nominating committee, consisting of Mrs. R. F. Kent, Mrs. William Reynolds, Miss Mary Burdette and Mrs. H. R. Woodruff, reported the names of the following officers, who were unanimously elected:

President, Mrs. Elizabeth G. Hibben.
 Vice-President, Mrs. J. W. Franks.
 Secretary, Mrs. J. W. Powell.
 Treasurer, Mrs. T. D. Gantt.

Vice-Presidents were elected from the following churches:

Calvary Presbyterian,	Mrs. A. Johnson.
First M. E.,	Mrs. I. M. Rue.
St. Joseph (Catholic),	Mrs. M. Old.
Swedenborgian,	Mrs. M. W. Harkness.
Christ Church (R. E.),	Mrs. Alex. G. Tyng.
First Presbyterian,	Mrs. Henry Forsythe.
First Congregational,	Miss Mary Stevens.
First Baptist,	Mrs. R. F. Kent.
Second Presbyterian,	Mrs. Edwin C. Ely.
Hale Chapel (M. E.),	Mrs. Joseph Hazzard.
Universalist,	Mrs. Helen M. Wilson.
Grace Presbyterian,	Miss Hattie Lawrence.
Second Methodist,	Miss M. Hall.

As no other churches were represented, it was decided to leave places open for any who might wish to unite with the Association.

The Executive Committee elected consisted of Mrs. Lucie Farr, Mrs. H. A. Calkins, Mrs. John Floyd, Mrs. William Harris, Mrs. J. A. Wonder, Mrs. Ira Chase and Mrs. Sophie Negley.

This organization continued in force with regular meetings until September 11, 1879, when it was decided to unite as a body, with the "Woman's Christian Temperance Union," which already was organized in our district (Tenth Illinois), and to which we had a cordial and earnest invitation from the State President, Miss Frances E. Willard. This district had within its bounds Miss Mary Allen West, of Galesburg, and several others destined to do a great work, national and world-wide. Our first President, Mrs. E. G. Hibben, retained her office almost continuously until her death, which occurred at the residence of her son, Rev. J. Grier Hibben, in Princeton, New Jersey, August 29, 1898. During two years in which she was absent, having gone abroad with her son, Mrs. Edwin C. Ely was elected to the office of President for one year, Mrs. E. B. Hamblin one year, and Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng for the remainder of her absence. Since the death of Mrs. Hibben, Mrs. Tyng has been chosen President each year. A continuous membership of about 125 has been kept up in the Peoria W. C. T. U. It has adopted many of the departments of national work, but has chiefly been successful in Gospel temperance meetings for men and women. These have been kept up faithfully each week since our first organization. Several evangelist missions have been maintained by the local W. C. T. U.

Peoria County W. C. T. U. was, for many years, a branch of the Tenth Congressional District, which then was composed of Knox, Fulton, Peoria and Stark counties. For about five years now we have, with Fulton, Tazewell, Putnam, Marshall, Mason and Peoria counties, formed the Fourteenth Congressional District. Peoria and Fulton counties are fully organized, Miss Lina Jordan, of Elmwood, being President of Peoria County, and Miss Prudence Berry, of Table Grove, being President of Fulton County. The other counties are connected with the district by having each a Financial Secretary. The membership of the District is about 600, of which Peoria and Fulton counties furnish the largest share.

The District Presidents have been Mrs. Lucinda Davidson, of Lewistown; Mrs. Clara Smith, of Elmwood; and Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, Mrs. D. W. Eaves, Mrs. E. G. Hibben, Mrs. Anna P. Eakin, Mrs. Jennie E. Stouffer and Mrs. Lura H. Boleyn, all of Peoria. Eighteen different departments of work are carried on, and the interest through the county and district does not abate. Public sentiment is influenced and, "though there remaineth much land to be possessed," yet we feel sure that we will not have labored in vain, and that our work for "God, and Home and Native Land," will leave its impress, and future generations will find it "easier to do right and harder to do wrong," because we have helped make straight paths for their feet.

WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN HOME MISSION.

BY LUCIE B. TYNG.

The Woman's Christian Home Mission, was founded in 1875, and is the oldest of the benevolent institutions of the city of Peoria. It is famed for the number and activity of its charities. It has for its object the general and systematic benevolent work of the city, and supports and has under its care the "Home for the Friendless," designed to be a temporary home for women and children in need of such. The beginnings in all departments of its work were very small, but a more earnest and devoted set of women it would be hard to find than those composing the Woman's Christian Home Mission, from the outset to the present day. The city is divided into thirteen districts, each of which is under the care of two visitors, to whom all cases of need in their respective districts are reported, and who investigate and afford relief according to our ability and degree of destitution found to exist.

The Home for the Friendless was at first a small building on Merriman Street; then, through the kindness of Mrs. Lydia Bradley, a Home at 512 Seventh Avenue was furnished. A house and large lot on the corner of Main Street and Flora Avenue was afterwards purchased through the generous aid of many friends of the institution. This was occupied for many years; but the house being old and small, and the location too valuable to justify rebuilding upon it, it was decided to sell the property and purchase a site for a new home at a greater distance from the city. This was happily and successfully effected, and the handsome new Home, at the corner of Knoxville and Thrush Avenues, is the result of much hard work and generous giving, and the realization of our long cherished dreams. The building has been paid for and comfortably equipped at a cost of about $26,000. It has had a succession of competent and faithful matrons; the present incumbent is Miss Cora Dawson. A Board of Managers, who are devoted to its interests, are in immediate supervision of the Home for the Friendless. This Board now consists of Mrs. Flora D. Kellogg, Chairman; with Mrs. E. J. Case, Mrs. Walter Barker, Mrs. C. F. Hitchcock, Mrs. Louisa D. Elder, Mrs. Henry P. Ayres, Mrs. J. B. Greenhut, Mrs. L. H. White, Mrs. William Jack, Mrs. B. F. Ellis, Mrs. James Grimes, Mrs. G. A. Wilson, and Mrs. Dr. Dombrowski.

The officers of the Woman's Christian Home Mission are:

Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, President.
 Mrs. E. S. Willeox, First Vice-President.
 Mrs. A. J. Hodges, Second Vice-President.
 Mrs. E. S. Easton, Third Vice-President.
 Mrs. J. C. Hansel, Secretary.

Mrs. Leslie Robison, Secretary of the Board.
 Miss Julia F. Cockle, Treasurer.

The Finance Committee, consisting of Mrs. J. E. Henseler, Mrs. H. H. Fahnstock, Mrs. Ezra Weis, Mrs. William Sisson, and Mrs. T. J. Pursley, are also ex-officio members of the Board of Managers of the Home for the Friendless.

The Advisory Committee of gentlemen consists of Col. J. D. McClure, Mr. J. C. Proctor, Mr. E. D. Hardin, Dr. I. W. Johnson, Mr. E. S. Willeox, and Mr. J. C. Hansel.

The committee having in charge the building of the Home for the Friendless while in process of construction was composed of Mrs. J. D. McClure, Mrs. E. S. Easton, Mr. J. C. Hansel, Mrs. Leslie Robison, Mr. J. C. Proctor, and Superintendent J. L. Flinn.

The work of the Woman's Christian Home Mission is supported by free-will offerings from the public, by membership fees, and by entertainments, added to the interest from an endowment fund provided by the following persons:

In Memory of—

David Choate Proctor, by Hon. Charles B. Storrs	$1,000
Charles B. Storrs, by Mrs. Marietta Storrs.	1,000
Mrs. Marietta Storrs, by Mrs. D. C. Proctor	1,000
Jonathan Hancock, by Mrs. E. H. Arnett.	1,000
Mrs. Henrietta Lyon, by Mrs. W. B. Lyon.	1,000
Mrs. E. L. Oakford, by herself.....	200
Jennie S. Cunningham, by Mr. Frank O. Cunningham	100
Miss Sarah L. Lines, by herself.....	100
Edward S. Easton, by Mrs. Easton.....	1,000
Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Easton.....	10,000
Henry B. Steward.....	5,000
	$21,400

It is confidently hoped that the endowment fund will be enlarged by gifts and legacies in the future, as the Woman's Christian Home Mission has a large place in the confidence and affection of Peoria people.

BRADLEY HOME FOR AGED WOMEN.

BY HELEN M. WILSON.

In the summer of 1882, the "Women's Christian Home Mission," realizing the need of a Home for Aged Women, deemed it expedient to establish such an institution. Mrs. E. D. Hardin, the worthy and beloved President of the Mission, was heartily in favor of the movement, and gave liberally of her time and means to further the project. Mrs. Charles F. Bacon also felt especially called to the work—already having in her care four or five old ladies left to a sorrowful old age, friendless and without a place to call home. The need of an institution for the care of the aged was indeed great, and Mrs. Bacon resolved that steps should be taken at once to secure a building. The first one hundred dollars to start the enterprise was paid by Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, and this was followed by fifty dollars, each, from Mrs. E. D. Hardin, Mrs. W. F. Bryan, Mrs. A. J. Hodges, Mrs. C. B. Allaire, Mrs. Charles E. Jamison and Mrs. William A. Herron. A building containing twelve rooms was rented, and the "Home for Aged Women" was opened at 823 Main Street, and Mrs. Bacon's five old ladies were its first inmates.

Mrs. James M. Hadley furnished one room, and the equipment of the whole building was the generous gift of numerous friends. The capacity of the Home was soon overtaxed, and, with large rent to pay and ten old ladies to maintain, the most careful and prudent economy was essential. The small beginning and the worthiness of the cause soon attracted the attention of Mrs. Lydia Bradley, a wealthy philanthropist of our city. Her heart went out in pity to these aged homeless women, and having long contemplated such an institution, she kindly and generously offered to relieve the Mission from all further care or responsibility by the erection of a building large, commodious and in every way suitable to the growing needs of the work. This she faithfully performed, and the first meeting of the new Association of the "Bradley Home for Aged Women" was held Thursday afternoon, September 4, 1884, in the beautiful new Home erected by Mrs. Bradley. Mrs. Helen M. Wilson had been previously instructed by Mrs. Bradley to prepare the Constitution and By-Laws, which, after some modification and changes, were adopted.

The Association is incorporated; its object is to provide a suitable home for worthy aged women of the county and city of Peoria. The building is located at 2213 Main Street, with a capacity to entertain twenty-five inmates comfortably. The following officers and directresses constituted its first Board of Management:

Life President—Mrs. Lydia Bradley.

Vice-Presidents—Mrs. Charles F. Bacon, Mrs. W. F. Bryan, Mrs. A. J. Hodges, Mrs. Charles P. King, Mrs. R. B. M. Wilson, Mrs. J. B. Greenhut.

Secretary—Mrs. George A. Wilson.

Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. John W. Foller.

Treasurer—Miss Etta Proctor.

Board of Management—Mrs. Charles F. Bacon, Chairman; Mrs. O. J. Bailey, Mrs. Alex. G. Tyng, Mrs. William Reynolds, Mrs. John W. Hansel, Mrs. William R. Bush, Mrs. Will Bartlett, Mrs. Leslie Robison, Mrs. George M. Gibson, Mrs. David D. Ross, Mrs. R. Wheeler, Mrs. J. D. McClure, Mrs. H. H. Easton, Mrs. M. M. Bassett, Mrs. C. E. Smith, Mrs. David Ullman, Mrs. M. Henebery, Mrs. H. G. Anderson, Mrs. G. R. Cobleigh, Mrs. J. Baggs, Mrs. Charles B. Day, Mrs. Sol Bennett, Mrs. G. W. Avery, Mrs. Thomas Petherbridge, Mrs. M. J. Jones, Mrs. A. G. Emerson, Mrs. A. L. Schimpff, Mrs. M. R. Elliott, Mrs. John S. Miller, Mrs. H. P. Ayers.

Advisory Board—Messrs. G. A. Wilson, John C. Proctor, William A. Herron, O. J. Bailey, John S. Lee, Newton Matthews, E. F. Baldwin, Charles F. Bacon, Charles E. Jamison, G. W. Avery.

No record can be written of the good work accomplished in the last eighteen years of the existence of the Bradley Home. It has indeed been a haven of quiet and rest, and many an aged and homeless one has had cause to bless the generous hearts of its founders for the peace and comfort and joy that has come to them in the evening time of life.

The work is supported by public contributions, and there is no charity more worthy than the Bradley Home for Aged Women.

The following are the officers for the ensuing year: Mrs. Lydia Bradley, Life President; Mrs. Dr. L. B. Martin, Secretary; Mrs. Leslie Robison, Treasurer.

Vice-Presidents and Executive Board—Mrs. E. A. Proctor, Mrs. David Ullman, Mrs. H. G. Anderson, Mrs. Max Ritzwoller, Mrs. Dr. Dombrowski, Mrs. A. L. Schimpff, Mrs. Helen M. Wilson, Mrs. Charles E. Fulks, Mrs. G. W. Avery.

Mrs. Lydia Baggs is Chairman of the Board of Management, which consists of thirty directresses.

GUYER HOME FOR AGED PEOPLE.

"The Mrs. Mary M. Hotchkiss Guyer Memorial Home for Aged People Association" has a history worthy of being incorporated in this chapter.

Jacob Guyer, a Pennsylvanian by birth, came to Peoria in an early day, and, for a while, engaged in farming, but later was connected with various business enterprises in and about the city. Although not wealthy in the modern sense of that term, yet, by patient industry and frugality, he had become possessed of a considerable estate, including some western lands, a farm in Peoria County and some dwelling houses and business property in the city.

When past middle life he was united in marriage to Mary M. Hotchkiss, daughter of Zenas Hotchkiss, an old and highly respected citizen of Peoria. They spent the years of their married life happily together, but, having no children to become heirs to their property, and both being inclined to the furtherance of works of benevolence, their thoughts were directed to the founding of some charitable institution in Peoria. Their intentions finally crystalized in a plan for a home for the benefit of aged people who, on account of reduced circumstances or other vicissitudes of fortune, might not be adequately provided with homes of their own. Before their plans had matured Mrs. Guyer died, and it was to perpetuate her memory by the carrying out of a plan which was near to her heart in life, that this institution was founded.

At the request of Mr. Guyer, an association of ladies, chosen by himself, became incorporated under the name which stands at the head of this article—a name chosen by himself as being the most expressive of what was then in his mind, and which, as one of the conditions upon which his proposed donations should be made, is to be suitably and continuously displayed upon the principal building devoted to its use.

Before turning over his gifts, he required that the corporation should adopt articles of association as to the conditions upon which all grants, donations, gifts, bequests or devises of property or money should be accepted, used and held. Among these were the following: That the Home should be forever located upon his homestead, situated at the corner of Armstrong and Knoxville Avenues; that it should be for the benefit of persons of good character and temperate habits, not less than sixty years of age, residents of the county of Peoria for three years, who, on account of reduced circumstances or other vicissitudes of fortune, should not be adequately provided with homes of their own—but under certain circumstances other deserving aged persons similarly situated might be admitted; that the Trustees, as nearly as might be, should be chosen from the same denominations of Protestant Christians as those he had named in the first Board, and that, so far as practicable, divine services should be held at the Home once on every Sabbath day.

The Board of Trustees consists of fifteen ladies, to hold for three years, but the terms of one-third expire each year.

The Association was incorporated on the 29th day of July, 1889. The first Board of Trustees consisted of the following named ladies: Sarah Proctor Howe, President; Sarah E. Hodges, First Vice-President; Frances E. Fahnestock, Second Vice-President; Lillie Ballance Rice, Secretary; Harriet Hepperly Hotchkiss, Treasurer; with the following additional members: Mary E. Bailey, Lucie B. Tyng, Susan S. Clegg, Eva Bunn Van Tassell, Mary F. McCulloch, Lucy W. Baldwin, Martha B. Reynolds, Flora Day Kellogg, Lucy G. Allaire and Lucy M. Ross.

The Association having been duly organized, Mr. Guyer conveyed to it his homestead, to be held and used as provided for in the articles of association. The Home was opened for the reception of inmates soon after July 29, 1889, from which date it has always had as many as it could conveniently accommodate, the number averaging about ten.

At his death Mr. Guyer, by will, left to the Association the bulk of his estate, the income of which it can now control for the use of the Home. This, with the charges made upon persons received into the Home at the time and according to the terms of admission, affords a sufficient income for their maintenance in a comfortable and respectable manner. The scheme is a commendable one that has proved highly successful in the attainment of the objects intended—the same being to provide those who might be admitted to its benefits a Protestant, but not otherwise sectarian Christian home.

The following named ladies comprise the present Board of Trustees: Frances E. Fahnestock, President; Mary F. McCulloch, First Vice-President; Virginia B. Bash, Second Vice-President; Lucie B. Tyng, Third Vice-President; Isabel Rouse, Secretary; Evelyn Starr, Treasurer; with Sarah E. Hodges, Eva Bunn Van Tassell, Mary E. Bailey, Martha B. Reynolds, Priscilla McHvaine, Emily S. Kingman, Lucy Miller, Mary H. Tichnor and Catharine H. Hill, as associate members.

Meetings of the Board are held on the last Wednesday of every month. Two members are assigned each month as a visiting committee to have oversight of the management of the Home, and to look after the comfort of the inmates. There is also an executive committee of five and a devotional committee of nine members. Twelve years of successful management have demonstrated the soundness of this institution and its capability for great usefulness. It is hoped that other donations may be added to the gifts of Mr. Guyer, and that, in time, the field of usefulness of the Home may be greatly enlarged.

ST. JOSEPH'S HOME FOR THE AGED.

In December, 1892, Rev. Conrad Rotter, who, during his pastorate of St. Joseph's Church, had felt the need of such an institution, founded St. Joseph's Home for the Aged. A modest beginning was made in a nine-room house at the corner of Smith and McReynolds Streets, known as the Tendering homestead. The sum of $6,600 was paid for the house and 225 front feet of ground. Three diocesan Sisters of St. Francis came from the Metamora Orphanage to take charge of the new work, and were ready to receive inmates on December 14th.

During the first year fifteen old people found a home in the institution. So many applications for entrance were received that it was found necessary, within a few months, to build an addition at a cost of $10,000. One year later a third story was added to accommodate the increasing numbers. The present imposing structure was erected in the year 1900. Every convenience for the care and comfort of the aged has been supplied. Such has been the success of the work that, in less than ten years, the little establishment of three Sisters and fifteen old people, has grown into a flourishing home of 115 old people, attended by sixteen Sisters, presided over by Mother Pacifica.

The new building had been in use but a few months when it was foreseen that a further addition would be necessary in the near future. Only lack of means prevents its immediate erection.

The diocesan Sisters of St. Francis, who are ministers of this worthy charity, were established in 1890. Besides St. Joseph's Home, they also conduct the Diocesan Orphanage at Metamora, in Woodford County.

THE HOME OF THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

This institution, occupying about four acres of ground at the corner of Starr and Faraday Streets, was founded in 1891 by the Rt. Rev. J. L. Spalding, Bishop of Peoria, who donated the ground and made a munificent contribution towards the building fund. The purpose of the institution is the rescue and reformation of fallen women and wayward girls, and the protection, preservation and training of destitute and homeless children, especially those in danger from evil surroundings. It is conducted by the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, a religious order of the Catholic Church founded in the seventeenth century.

Any one who applies for admission is received, regardless of creed or circumstances. It suffices that she is an outcast and despised of men, or that, in youthful ignorance, she walks in the ways that lead to ruin. She is received into the Home with gentle kindness, a new name is given her to hide her shame, and she is surrounded with every influence that may guide her towards true womanhood. Except in cases of girls under age or committed to the institution by lawful authority, the inmates are free to leave at any time. With a view to fitting them for an honest livelihood, the girls in the reformatory, as well as those in the training school, are instructed in the various branches of household, laundry and needle-work. Those in the reformatory who are without education are given a thorough course of elementary instruction, and the children attend school from nine to three o'clock.

A long tested, judicious but mild rule governs the conduct of the inmates and regulates the duties of every day. While great care is given to their physical well being, the best efforts of the Sisters are devoted to their religious and moral training. No interference is permitted with the religion of a non-Catholic, but for the sake of order and regularity all are required to attend the religious exercises in the chapel. The institution has no fixed revenue, its main resource being the proceeds from the laundry and needle-work. The entering inmates, in nearly every case, are found to be entirely destitute, frequently even of clothing, and become absolutely dependent upon the Home for their support. Since its establishment 350 women, girls and children have found refuge within its walls. Of this number 100 have been adopted into good homes or placed as domestics, and 150 have returned to friends or relatives.

The order is rigorously exacting in its selection of candidates for membership. Only ladies of stainless character and of good families are eligible, and, under no circumstances, can a former inmate of the Home, no matter how thoroughly reformed, ever become a Sister of the Good Shepherd.

On May 27, 1900, the institution suffered a severe loss by fire, which practically destroyed the entire building. For about a week accommodations were found in the basement of the St. John's Church. During the time of the erection of a new building they were generously given the free use of a large building at the corner of Knoxville and Chambers Avenues. The Home is now crowded, and the erection of a large addition, doubling its present capacity, is contemplated during the coming season.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

The Peoria County Industrial School for Girls and Home of Blessing has grown out of a benevolent work of a few ladies of the city, begun about the month of January, 1877. It was designed for the reformation of fallen women and to afford them a home secure from their former associates, where, under the influence of Christian women, their lives might be reformed. After a few changes, a permanent organization was effected in the month of April, 1878, which became duly incorporated on the 10th day of October, 1879, under the name of "The Woman's Refuge." The incorporators were Margaret B. Weis, Harriet Holcomb, Augusta L. Farr, Catharine L. Truesdale, Adaline S. Higbie and Martha B. Reynolds. The object of the Association as set forth in their charter, was to rescue fallen women from a life of sin and shame, and to provide for them homes where they might be protected and surrounded by Christian influences until their principles should be firmly established, and they should be either restored to their own homes, or some means of pecuniary and honorable livelihood be furnished them. The institution was at first located on Hale Street, where it remained for about two years, when it was removed to No. 613 North Washington Street, and, in December, 1879, to No. 913 Fourth Street. While occupied in this work, it was supported wholly by the gifts of the charitably disposed citizens, and continued in the successful prosecution of its chosen work for a number of years.

In the month of October, 1880, the name of the corporation was changed from "The Women's Refuge" to that of "The Peoria County Home of Blessing for Girls," under which name it purchased the premises now known as the Peoria County Industrial School, located on Richmond Avenue, and proceeded to erect thereon a building costing $10,000 or upwards. When the building was about completed the Association took steps to avail itself of the provisions of a law, approved May 20, 1879, to aid Industrial Schools for Girls, for which purpose a new corporation was formed about the month of May, 1892, entitled "The Peoria County Industrial School for Girls and Home of Blessing," under which title the institution has been conducted ever since.

Having become incorporated under its new name, the former business was soon abandoned on account of its incompatibility with the objects of the new corporation, and since then the only inmates have been the dependent girls committed to its care by the orders of the County Courts of this and neighboring counties of the State.

Although practically but one corporation in aim and design, yet, for the purpose of holding the title to the property purchased in the name of "The Peoria County Home of Blessing for Girls," it has been deemed wise to have two sets of directors and officers, the one corporation nominally paying rent to the other. This scheme has unfortunately resulted in a house becoming divided against itself, with threatened disastrous results.

The corporation now in occupancy of the property cannot, strictly speaking, be called a charitable institution, for it now draws its main support from the counties committing dependent children to its care; yet, in another sense, it is to be regarded as a charity, from the fact that its officers and directors give their time, attention and labor to its management, wholly without compensation, besides which they tax themselves with annual dues to aid in its support. In this view it is a charity of the most approved type. The number of dependent inmates is usually about thirty, who are supported and educated at the expense of the county until such times as good homes for them may be found. The good intentions of the original association have not been wholly abandoned, and it is hoped the time may not be far distant when both branches of the work may be successfully carried on.

CHAPTER XV.

EDUCATION—PEORIA PUBLIC LIBRARY—THE PEORIA SCIENTIFIC ASSOCIATION.

PEORIA PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

BY NEWTON C. DOUGHERTY.

Prior to the organization of the present system the Public Schools of Peoria were of a very indifferent character. There were, in fact, no schools under the control of the city. Although power had been conferred by the original charter to maintain a system of public schools, yet it does not seem to have been exercised. The Township of Peoria had been divided into four districts cornering with each other at the intersection of Main and Adams Streets, in each one of which there was a Board of Directors. District No. 1, embracing the territory southwest of Main Street and below Adams, had a small school house in the Moffatt settlement near Lower Peoria, and had begun the erection of a four-room house on the corner of Adams and Walnut Streets, the foundation walls of which had been laid. District No. 2 had a two-room brick school-house on Monson Street between Fourth and Fifth. That building still stands, but has had a second story added. District No. 3 occupied an old foundry building on Perry Avenue, upper side, between Hamilton and Fayette Streets. District No. 4 had a one-room brick school-house adjoining the jail on North Washington Street, which has been converted into a dwelling. The Second District School had been taught for several years by Ephraim Hinman, who was County School Commissioner. He had one or two assistants. His school was usually crowded. The Third District School house was scarcely sufficient to protect the pupils from the winds and rains. To supply, in some measure, the want of public schools, resort was had to numerous private schools located in the basements of churches or other rooms available for that purpose.

Schools of higher grade had also been established from time to time, which had had fairly good patronage. It is known, too, that in early times those who were able to do so would send their sons and daughters abroad to school, and one instance is known of a young lady having, as early as 1835, been sent to the celebrated academy of Rev. John M. Peck, at Rock Springs.

But all the educational advantages possessed by the people of Peoria proving insufficient for their wants, a number of citizens joined hands to supply themselves with good schools at home. In the year 1850 an Association was formed at Peoria, known as the "Female School Association," of which John Hamlin, Hervey Lightner, John Reynolds, Jacob Gale and Amos P. Bartlett were the first trustees. This Association became incorporated by act of the Legislature of February 16, 1853, under the title of "The Peoria Female Academy." They leased a lot from Mr. Charles Ballance on the lower side of Jefferson between Fulton and Liberty Streets, on which they erected a long one-story frame building, in which their school was commenced. Miss E. Fuller was the first Principal and Miss E. Ackerman her assistant. They were succeeded by the Misses Sarah and Adelaide Matthews, the former of whom became the wife of Alexander McCoy and the latter the wife of George F. Harding, both prominent lawyers. This school was of a very high grade, and became so popular and prosperous that about the year 1855 a lot was purchased on the east corner of Jefferson and Jackson Streets, upon which was erected a fine brick building, in which the school was kept until the year 1850, when it was purchased by the Board of School Inspectors, and this noted "girls' school" passed out of existence.

On the 23d day of March, 1854, another organization was formed on a similar plan, for the purpose of conducting a school for the higher education of boys. This school became popularly known as the "Boys' Stock School," Hon. Onslow Peters being President of the Association; Amos P. Bartlett, Secretary; Dr. Rudolphus Rouse, Peter R. K. Brotherson and John W. Hansel, Directors; Horace G. Anderson, Treasurer; Capt. Thomas Baldwin, William R. Phelps and Henry S. Austin, Trustees. Lots on Sixth Street were purchased and a good substantial brick building erected thereon, which was incorporated into the public school building located on the same lots and long known as the Lincoln School.

The Legislature of 1855 enacted a new school law, and, from that date, educational progress began throughout the State. But lest the adoption of the general system should be defeated, steps had been taken to inaugurate a system especially adapted to the city of Peoria. This measure carried, and on February 15, 1855, the Board of School Inspectors was created by the Legislature and approved by the Governor. The first Board was elected on the first Saturday of April in the same year, and organized the following Monday evening. By the act the Board of School Inspectors was constituted an independent body and given all power and authority, within the limits of the city, over the public schools and general concerns of public instruction; over school-houses and school funds, and all moneys, funds and properties pertaining to schools; and, generally, all the "rights, powers and authority necessary for the proper management of schools and the funds of the city for school purposes, with power to make all such rules, orders and ordinances as may be necessary to carry their power and duties into effect and perfect a good system of public instruction and schools in the city." The Board of School Inspectors was thus made, by this first charter, a co-ordinate department of the city government, and wholly independent of all other departments in everything which related to the educational welfare of the city. The act prohibited any member of the Board, or the Secretary, from receiving any compensation for the performance of his ordinary duties. The treasurer of the Board was to receive compensation for his services, but Mr. John Hamlin, who was the first treasurer of the Board, performed the duties required of him gratuitously.

The first Board of School Inspectors consisted of Amos P. Bartlett, Jesse L. Knowlton,

John W. Hansel, Jonathan K. Cooper, Thomas C. Moore, Alexander McCoy and Alexander G. Tyng. On account of the state of his health and his many other engagements, Mr. Tyng resigned and his place was filled by the appointment of Mr. Benjamin L. T. Bourland. The Board organized by the election of Amos P. Bartlett, President; Hon. Onslow Peters, Secretary; John Hamlin, Treasurer, and Henry B. Hopkins, Superintendent. The city was divided into five districts, in each one of which a school was kept. During the first year the old buildings were occupied and an additional one was rented on the bluff. Having no money at its command, the Board of Inspectors could neither build nor purchase new school-houses, but early in 1856 they were prepared to do either or both. They, therefore, purchased the two private school-houses already mentioned, and proceeded to complete the unfinished building in District No. 1 on the corner of Adams and Walnut Streets, and, by the month of May, 1856, the people found themselves in possession of four fairly good school-houses, the old ones in Districts Nos. 2 and 3 having been abandoned.

The High School was commenced in the upper rooms of the Third District school-house (the Female Academy) on the 5th day of May, 1856, with Prof. Charles E. Hovey as Principal, and Miss Sarah Matthews, assistant. Mr. Hovey was a native of Thetford, Vermont, and a graduate of Dartmouth College. He had been Principal of the High School in Farmington, Massachusetts, and came to Peoria in 1854 to take charge of the Peoria Academy. In 1856 he filled both positions, Superintendent of Schools and Principal of the High School, and continued to do so until he was called to take charge of the State Normal University at Bloomington. He was very active in the formation of the new school system and much of its efficiency, from the very beginning, was due to him.

The Intermediate or Grammar School, as it was then called, was organized in the Third District on the same day as the High School, with Mrs. Hovey and Miss Emma Roy as teachers. On account of the lower room not being ready, the Primary Department was not opened until May 19th, when it began with Miss Brooks as teacher. The Grammar School in the Second District began on May 19th, in the upper room of the "Boys' Stock School," with Mr. Samuel L. Coulter and Miss Chambers, teachers. The primary school in this district began on the same day, with Miss Annie Kilbourne and Mrs. Tilton as teachers. The new school-house in the First District being unfinished, the schools there did not begin until a later date. The school in District No. 4 continued for a time in the old school-house near the jail, and the school in District No. 5 was kept in a rented house. Both of these districts had the privilege of sending scholars to the Grammar Schools in Districts Nos. 2 and 3, when there were any vacant seats.

These schools established by the new Board were graded schools. Under the old system, pupils of all ages and acquirements assembled in the same room and were taught by the same teacher. It mattered not whether the teacher was adapted to the young or the old, he must attempt to teach both. It mattered not whether he needed half an hour or an hour to a class, he could have but a few minutes. But in the new system pupils of like acquirements were placed together. There was a primary school for the beginners, a grammar school for those farther advanced, and a high school for those farthest advanced. The advantages were apparent at once. All saw that there was a greater economy of money, more thoroughness in the school work, and a greater stimulus to diligence and merit upon the part of the pupil. The schools which began with an attendance of 300 had swelled, by the close of the year, to 800.

The want of proper school-houses was one of the greatest difficulties which the new Board had to meet. They determined to adopt the most approved plan of school architecture, and to build houses which would accommodate six or seven hundred pupils. They realized that large school-houses were the most economical and admitted of better classification of the pupils. They secured commodious grounds and prepared plans for the future buildings.

The expenses for the first year were $11,080.49, of which amount $4,124.23 was for teachers' salaries, the balance was for lots, buildings and equipment. Of this $11,080.49, $3,570.00, or about 30 per cent, was contributed by the State. For a few years tuition fees were charged in order to avoid too high a rate of taxation. In the year 1860-61 the expenses of the Peoria schools were $233,303.04, of which amount the State contributed about $10,500, or less than five per cent. Illinois, as a State, is not doing so well to help the public school system in 1891 as she did in 1855.

As we look back over the history of these schools in Peoria, the names of the men who constituted the first Board of Education and the teaching force of that day stand out from the rest into eminence. We may call them, in a phrase which has become common of late, the makers of the system. Other men have developed what they planned, but these men were in a sense creative, and Peoria owes them a debt which she can never repay.

The growth of the public schools kept pace with the growth of the city, so that, in 1860, the expenditure of the Board amounted to $35,446.04, of which sum $28,280.32 was for teachers' salaries. The number of pupils had grown from 800 in 1855-56 to 2,017 in 1865-67.

About this time Nicholas E. Worthington, then the County Superintendent and a member of the State Board of Education, felt that the vocation of a teacher required some degree of special preparation by those who would undertake it, and to this end he secured the establishment of the Peoria County Normal School. The city furnished and cared for the building and the county paid the salaries of the teachers. Samuel H. White, of Chicago, was secured as Principal, and the school opened September, 1858, and continued in operation until June, 1879. It is impossible to overestimate its influence for good upon the schools of the city and the county. Improved scholarship and a higher grade of ability, upon the part of the teachers of county and city, was one of the results. A higher standard in the studies and a greater readiness in their application upon the part of the teachers were required, and the schools took on a new and better life. Mr. White loved teaching for itself. It was the destiny and business of his entire life. He felt its responsibility and ideal beauty. He won the hearts of his pupils and still lives in the Peoria schools through these teachers, and will ever continue so to live.

During the past ten years all the old buildings have given place to new ones which reflect the interest and devotion of the citizens of Peoria in her system of public schools. To-day there are more than nine thousand pupils enrolled in these schools, and two hundred and sixty-seven teachers. To sustain this system more than a quarter of a million dollars are expended annually, and the citizens pay this cheerfully, believing that the future of the city depends upon the excellence of her schools.

BRADLEY POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE.

BY PAUL SELBY.

There is no truer index of the standard of intelligence, liberality and public spirit which pervades a community, than is to be found in the extent and character of its public institutions. This is true alike of its educational and its benevolent institutions: for, while the one elevates the standard of popular intelligence and fits men and women for the successful discharge of the practical duties of life, the other furnishes evidence of that spirit of humanity and benevolence without which there is no true enlightenment. The two go hand in hand, and where the one has obtained a foothold, the other is likely to be found, sooner or later, dispensing its benefits to the unfortunate and the destitute.

In this respect Peoria is fortunate in the possession of an institution adapted to qualifying its pupils of both sexes for a career in the practical arts, as well as giving them an opportunity to acquire a knowledge of the sciences and literature. The "Bradley Polytechnic Institute" is the outgrowth of plans originally entertained some thirty-five years ago, but which have since been in process of development until they have taken shape in the establishment of the most liberally endowed institution of its kind in the West. Its conception, not unlike that of the Leland Stanford University, of California, is traced to the death of a favorite and only child, Laura Bradley, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tobias S. Bradley, and the desire of the parents to establish an institution which should be a monument to her memory. The death of Mr. Bradley, a prominent and successful business man, in 1867, only interrupted the progress of the plans, which have since been carried out with scrupulous fidelity, and on a broader basis than originally contemplated, by Mrs. Lydia Bradley, the bereaved mother and widow.

Mrs. Bradley's plans first took definite form in the desire expressed in her will, executed in 1885, to devote the bulk of her estate, at her death, to the founding and endowment of an institution of the character which has since been realized. Ten years later, with the aid of experts, she began the collection of information in reference to the management of the leading schools of technology and manual training in other States, with the result that her plans were so far modified as to lead to their consummation during her life. The first essential step was taken in this direction on November 13, 1896, in the formal incorporation under the State law of the "Bradley Polytechnic Institute," the charter naming as the first Board of Trustees, President William R. Harper, of the University of Chicago; Judge Leslie D. Puterbaugh, Rudolf Pfeiffer, Zealy M. Holmes, Harry A. Hammond, Albion W. Small (also of the University of Chicago), and Oliver J. Bailey. In the organization of the Board, which took place on November 16th, Mr. Bailey became President, Judge Puterbaugh Vice-President, Mr. Hammond Secretary, and President Harper President of the Faculty. The purpose and scope of the institution is indicated by the following extract from section 2 of the charter:

"The objects for which this corporation is formed are to organize and maintain, forever, a school for the education of young people of both sexes in all the practical and useful arts, sciences and learning usually taught in polytechnic schools, including a department in ethics, in which instruction shall be given in the principles of morality and right living as exemplified in the life and teachings of Jesus Christ; and, so far as the resources of the Institute shall warrant, there shall be added such courses of study and means of instruction in science, literature and art as may be deemed advisable by the Trustees, but the chief aim of the Institute shall be to furnish its students with the means of living independent, industrious and useful lives by the aid of practical knowledge of the useful arts and sciences. * * * Neither in the terms of admission nor in the treatment of students, the selection of officers, agents or instructors, nor in the appointment of Trustees, nor in any matter connected with this Institute, shall there be any distinction made or preference given on account of creed, nationality, politics or party; but, with a view to its greater usefulness, this Institute shall be, and ever remain, non-sectarian, non-political and non-partisan."

At the first meeting of the Board of Trustees Mrs. Bradley presented a deed for ten acres of ground as a site for school buildings and campus, which was soon after enlarged to seventeen acres, fronting on Main Street. At the same time she executed a contract pledging herself to the payment of one-half her net income (estimated at $25,000 per annum) towards the support of the school during her life. It having been determined to open the Institute for the reception of students in the following October, the erection of buildings was promptly commenced. Henry Ives Cobb, present Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, having entered into a contract on January 13, 1897, to furnish plans for the Bradley Hall and Horological Building, at an estimated cost of $110,000. Ground was broken April 16, following, and although the buildings had not reached completion, the work of instruction was begun, as originally contemplated, on October 4, 1897, with a full corps of instructors, headed by Prof. E. O. Sisson as Director. One hundred and five pupils presented themselves on the opening day, this number being increased before the close of the year to nearly 150. The dedicatory and Founder's Day was fixed for October 8th, the principal feature of the ceremony consisting in a dedicatory address by Hon. Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasury, followed by the presentation of the keys of the buildings to the Board of Trustees by Mrs. Bradley, and an address on behalf of the Faculty by President Harper, of the University of Chicago. Other events of interest in connection with the history of the institution include the acceptance of the buildings from the contractors on January 17, 1898, followed by a public reception on March 11th, when they were inspected by a crowd of some 5,000 visitors. The first convocation on graduating day was celebrated on June 24, 1898, Judge C. C. Kohlsaat, of Chicago, delivering the address, and one graduate (a lady) receiving her diploma. The second Founder's Day was observed October 8, 1898, Prof. C. T. Chamberlain, of the University of Chicago, being the orator of the occasion, and taking for his theme the "Moral Nature of Scientific Study."

By the early part of the year 1901 the total expenditures for building purposes and equipment amounted to $220,000, represented in two substantial buildings of beautiful architectural design, and especially well adapted to the purposes for which they were intended. The most important of these—Bradley Hall—in addition to its administration department, faculty offices and school-rooms, contains the manual training and domestic economy departments, with furnishings of the highest practical utility, while for the horological department is claimed "the distinction of having the best building and the best equipment of any watch-making school in the country, indeed in the world." The system of instruction, though modeled upon that of the leading manual training and polytechnic schools of the country—including the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the Chicago Manual Training School and Lewis Institute—presents many original features especially adapted to the class of pupils for whose benefit it is designed. The complete curriculum embraces a six-years' course, of which the first four has been known as the high-school course and the last two as the "college course." These have been divided into three terms of two years each, designated respectively as the "lower academy," "higher academy" and "college courses."

While the Institute is closely affiliated with the University of Chicago, giving its pupils the right of admission to classes of the latter of the same grade without additional examination, this does not give the University any power of control over the school or the estate; the relation being purely social and advisory. The Board of Trustees appointed in 1897 remains unchanged, their terms of office being for life, unless disqualified by incompetence, insolvency or other sufficient cause. Besides two, who, by the terms of the charter, are representatives of the University of Chicago, all the others are required to be residents of Peoria County or vicinity. The Faculty (1901) consisted of fourteen members of whom five were men and nine women. The attendance during the year ranged between four and five hundred pupils. While the founding and maintenance of the Institute has been due to the generous munificence of the individual donor, a number of valuable gifts have been received from outside sources, including the collection of the Peoria Scientific Association, and a bust of Mrs. Bradley executed by a local sculptor, Mr. Fritz Triebel, a tribute of the citizens to the generous founder. Both of these were incidents in connection with the second Convocation Day exercises on June 23, 1899.

A crowning event in the history of the Institute was the conveyance to the same, by Mrs. Bradley, on May 17, 1899, of all her real estate (her homestead only excepted), subject to her life use and management, under conditions which do not permit the alienation or impairment of the endowment by any obligation whatever. This comprises much of the best improved and unimproved property about Peoria, besides valuable farm-lands in this and adjoining counties. A conservative estimate places the value of the endowment at not less than $2,000,000, which is destined to be largely increased by future appreciation in value.

CATHOLIC SCHOOLS.

BY JAMES SHANNON.

SPALDING INSTITUTE.

Within three blocks of St. Mary's Cathedral are situated two Catholic institutions for the higher education of the young: The Academy of the Sacred Heart, a high school for girls, and Spalding Institute, a school of similar grade for boys. The work of the former has been in successful progress for many years; that of the latter is but fairly begun. The Institute is the result of the munificence of the Rt. Rev. J. L. Spalding, Bishop of the Diocese of Peoria, and stands as a monument to his interest in the proper training of the youth of the city. In its establishment has been given a practical application of those thoughts and principles which have characterized the masterly essays of its founder on the subject of education, and there is reason to hope that, in time, it will rank in practice, as do those essays in connection with the theories of mental and moral training.

The Institute was opened for the reception of pupils in September, 1899, with an attendance of nearly sixty boys, taught by three Brothers of Mary under the direction of Brother Gerald. The attendance in 1900 was increased to eighty, and, in 1901, to one hundred. Two additions have been made to the corps of teachers, and more will be made when the work is thoroughly organized. It is designed to give a complete high-school course, with two years of college work.

The building erected at the corner of North Madison Avenue and Jackson Street is an imposing structure, of the Renaissance style of architecture, combining class-rooms, study-halls, gymnasium and other necessary apartments, excellently suited for the purposes of the institution. The auditorium has a seating capacity of 750. The building and grounds represent an expenditure of $75,000.

ACADEMY OF THE SACRED HEART.

This institution was established in 1868, by the Sisters of St. Joseph—the result of an application which had been made by Father Coyle, the priest in charge of St. Mary's parish (then the only Catholic parish in Peoria), for a number of Sisters to establish and conduct a school for the higher education of young ladies. At the time of their arrival the parish was under the pastorate of Rev. Abraham Ryan, who afterward became the poet priest of the South. The work was undertaken by Mother M. Theresa, assisted by six Sisters, the academy first being opened in a house, now No. 205 Madison Avenue, between Hamilton and Fayette Streets. Among the early benefactors of this institution were a number of the early citizens of Peoria, then prominent in business affairs. The building first occupied soon proving too small for the growing demands of the school, a site was secured on Madison Avenue and Bryan Street, where a substantial brick building was erected, but which it has been twice found necessary to enlarge to accommodate the increasing attendance. As it now stands, the building furnishes accommodation for about one hundred boarders, besides the day scholars. The curriculum embraces a thorough course in high-school branches, supplemented by training in music and art. The standing of the school is attested by the many hundreds of young ladies of Peoria who have been its pupils.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

The system of parochial schools, established under the auspices of the Catholic Church in the city of Peoria, has been in operation for more than forty years, and has steadily developed with the growth of the city. The reason for its existence is, to afford moral as well as mental training to the young, in accordance with the views of the church authorities, on the principle that the education of the intellectual faculties alone is necessarily inadequate to the development of complete manhood and complete womanhood. To the accomplishment of this end, so essential to the development of true character, many thousands of the ablest and most devoted members of the church have consecrated their lives. After thorough preparation they are sent out to take charge of the education of the young in the parochial schools, and the manner in which they perform this task furnishes evidence of their fitness for one of the most important avocations that can fall to the lot of man or woman, and their devotion to the interests of humanity. In Peoria, as elsewhere, this labor has borne abundant fruit. At the present time there are about fifty of these carefully trained teachers in charge of fifteen hundred children in the parochial schools of Peoria, in which many of its best citizens have received their preliminary training and been fitted for those duties which they are discharging in public and private life.

ST. JOSEPH'S SCHOOL.—This was the title given to the first Catholic parochial school in Peoria, which was established by St. Joseph's parish in 1858. Four members of the congregation (John Wichmann, Andreas Goebels, Philip Rohmann and Henry Lammers) donated a lot on the corner of First and Spencer Streets, on which a frame building, 16x24 feet, was erected, an extension of the same size being added later. Among the early teachers were Frank Stubenrauch and Peter Elzer. In 1868 a larger and more substantial structure was erected where St. Joseph's Church now stands, and the new school established there placed in charge of four Sisters of Notre Dame, from Milwaukee, under the direction of Sister M. Seraphina, who, before entering the convent, had been Baroness von Pronoth. They were assisted by one lay teacher, who taught the larger boys. A year later a separate building was erected for the boy pupils, and the school having been reorganized and graded under the efficient management of the Sisters, the number of pupils rapidly increased.

When, in 1877, it was determined to erect the present St. Joseph's Church, the two school-houses were removed to the corner of Spencer and Hurlburt Streets. The fine school building now in use at that location was dedicated by Bishop Spalding, October 22, 1880. It is a complete structure, fully equipped with every appliance necessary to a modern educational establishment. Previous to 1893 a small tuition fee was expected from each pupil, but since then tuition has been free. At the present time there are 350 pupils in charge of seven Sisters, all grades, from kindergarten to preparatory high-school branches, being taught.

ST. MARY'S SCHOOL was started as early as 1858, in the old brick church situated in the rear of St. Mary's Church, on the corner of North Jefferson and Eaton (now Bryan) Streets, on the same spot where the brick school-house now stands. The building had been divided into two rooms, which furnished accommodations for upwards of 150 small children. It was at an early period of its history a school for boys, taught by the Christian Brothers, but, about the year 1863, it seems to have been a school for girls, taught by the Sisters of St. Joseph. During the pastorate of Father Mackin, about 1869, the scope of the school was enlarged and the Christian Brothers again placed in charge. It was at this period the school-house still in use was erected and devoted to the education of boys. This arrangement continued for several years, when the school passed into the hands of laymen for a time. Its management, however, was finally resumed by the Sisters of St. Joseph, who have labored faithfully in the field of education in Peoria for forty years.

ST. PATRICK'S SCHOOL was opened in 1869, the year after the establishment of St. Patrick's parish, in a plain two-story frame building at the corner of Saratoga and Johnson Streets. The first teachers were Miss Mary Ryan, now Mrs. John Madigan, and Miss Mary Nailon, now Secretary of the Nailon Brothers Company, two additional teachers being appointed the next year. In 1872 the building was enlarged by the addition of two rooms, and the school passed into the hands of six Sisters of Notre Dame, with an enrollment of 180 pupils. In 1890 the old buildings were replaced by a modern brick structure, containing six large rooms and an assembly hall capable of accommodating 400 pupils. This building is already over-crowded and further enlargement is deemed necessary. The enrollment is 430, employing eight teachers. The course of study embraces the branches taught in the eighth grade grammar schools.

THE SACRED HEART SCHOOL was opened in 1878 in a small frame building on Fulton Street, near Madison. It began with thirty-eight pupils taught by two members of a community who had been exiled from their native land of Germany, and who had established a mother house in the building now occupied by the Cosmopolitan Hotel, on Madison Avenue. Ten years later, having removed to Nebraska, they were succeeded in the Peoria school by the Sisters of St. Francis, who still have charge. A new building was erected in 1896, at a cost of $15,000. It has four classrooms and a fine assembly-hall. The attendance numbers seventy-five.

ST. BONIFACE SCHOOL. Upon taking charge of St. Boniface parish, in 1881, Father von Seawelder erected a building at the rear of his church, in which St. Boniface parochial school has since been conducted by the Sisters of St. Francis. At the beginning there were about eighty pupils taught by two Sisters. At the present time the enrollment is over 250, with five teachers. The growing needs of the school call for a larger building, which will soon be erected.

LUTHERAN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

ST. PAUL'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN SCHOOL.—Of the five or six parochial schools organized under the auspices of the Lutheran Church, the earliest was the St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran School, established in 1854 at the corner of Prairie and Goodwin Streets, with Rev. H. Kopman as teacher. This school was supported largely by the church, although patrons were expected to pay from fifty to seventy-five cents per month for each pupil up to two, the remainder, if a larger number came from the same family, being admitted free. The ordinary branches were taught, a part of each day being devoted to instruction in German and a part in English. In 1902 Wolfgang Semmelmann was in charge as principal, with sixty pupils in the advanced department, while Mrs. Semmelmann was at the head of the kindergarten department with thirty pupils.

THE GERMAN LUTHERAN TRINITY SCHOOL was established, in 1857, at No. 418 Warner Avenue, by Prof. E. Miller. In 1888 E. J. Keimnitz took charge, continuing until the fall of 1901, when he was succeeded by William Buck, with Miss Hedwig Richter as assistant. The school has an attendance of eighty-five pupils.

THE EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHRIST'S SCHOOL was organized at No. 214 Malone Avenue, in 1892. In 1895 the school and church building was destroyed by fire, but rebuilt immediately. Here, as in St. Paul's School, a tuition fee of seventy-five cents per month for each pupil, not exceeding two from the same family, is exacted, tuition for the remainder being free. This school was under charge of Edward Krumsieg in 1902, with Miss Matilda Dierking as assistant, and had a total of ninety-eight pupils.

THE GERMAN LUTHERAN ZION SCHOOL, at No. 300 Easton Avenue, was established, in 1883, by Rev. Frederick B. Bess, Pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran St. Paul's Church, and, in 1902, had an attendance of thirty-five pupils, in charge of Rev. August Decker, who is also Pastor of the Zion Church.

The one or two other Lutheran Schools in the city are not essentially different, in their organization and administration, from those already mentioned. Although instruction is given in German as well as the English language, the courses are based largely upon that in use in the public schools, rendering the admission of the pupils to the latter easy.

There is also a German School connected with the German Reformed Church, at the corner of Reed and Persimmon Streets, which, although not Lutheran in the denominational sense, the Church being Congregational in mode of government, is conducted on the same general principles as to methods, of instruction. This is kept open only during the summer months, and in 1900 had about thirty scholars.

GERMAN FREE SCHOOLS.

BY OLIVER J. ROSKOTEN.

Prior to 1840 the number of people of German birth living in Peoria was small. The increasing immigration of this class, which began about that time, created a demand for schools in which German children could be instructed in their native tongue while becoming acquainted with the language of the country of their adoption. The multiplicity of private schools between 1849 and 1862 precluded success for a time, and, with the exception of two or three parochial schools, established between 1854 and 1858, we find the German schools closing their doors for lack of support.

So far as can be learned, the first German school in Peoria was opened in 1848 or 1849, on Adams Street, between Main and Fulton (where the United States Express office now is), by Mr. Michael Ruppelius, a former Evangelical Lutheran minister, who afterwards became a Notary Public and Justice of the Peace. The late Mr. Christ Zimmerman was for some years his assistant, the school closing in 1857 or 1858.

About the same time J. G. Schulz conducted a rival school on the northwest corner of Washington and Harrison Streets. After running his school with moderate success for some years, he secured a position in the County Recorder's office and dismissed his scholars. Later on he returned to teaching, and it was his school which finally became the predecessor of the German Free School of Peoria, which has been in existence for forty years.

About 1850 a number of German Catholics induced Franz Stubenrauch to open a school which, however, was freely patronized by non-Catholics. (See "Parochial Schools.") This school was first located on South Washington, between Bridge and Walnut Streets, but later removed to

IRVING SCHOOL.

Detweiler's place on the same street, where it remained until closed in 1859.

A fourth school had a precarious existence from 1850 to '58 on the corner of Morgan and North Adams Streets, but was closed by its founder, a Mr. Nachtigall, in the middle of the school year, for want of patronage.

When about all existing German schools had been abandoned, a Mr. Steiboldt opened a private school on Liberty Street on the alley corner later occupied by Engine House No. 3. (It is believed that J. G. Schulz also taught a school at the same place, possibly earlier than Steiboldt). The Steiboldt school was a "school on wheels," so to speak, as it was moved three times within a year—first to the Detweiler building on South Washington Street, between Liberty and Harrison; then to rooms over Green's grocery on Bridge Street, and finally to Fleck's Hall on Water Street, between Bridge and Walnut. Mr. Steiboldt was a man of rare education, a fine linguist, and had thirty to forty pupils. In 1860 he retired in favor of August Kampmeier, who soon transferred the classes to Mr. Schulz, already referred to. Schulz moved his school to Bergan's Hall in the fall of 1861, but managed to hold out until relieved by the German Free School Society in the spring of 1862.

Besides those already mentioned, a German school existed for a few years under the management of a Mrs. Stein on Walnut Street, but this was closed in 1859 or '60.

By this time quite a large number of Germans had settled in the lower part of the city, and, for their accommodation, a Mr. Gehrig, in 1860, opened a school on Washington, below Edmund Street. It was non-sectarian and fairly well supported—was generally known as the "School of the Krim," and was continued until 1867. Other schools of this character may have existed at an early day, but it is now difficult to get at their history.

This brings us to the period of the German Free School. The failure of so many private schools demonstrated that, in order to succeed, a school must have a more powerful backing. Among the Germans then here were many of the highest character, men of liberal education, who had left their old homes dissatisfied with political conditions and willing to make sacrifices for their principles. Devoted to their fatherland, they soon learned to love the land of their adoption better, and they have ranked among Peoria's best and most progressive citizens.

With a view to establishing a school which would be in keeping with the importance of the German element, a mass meeting of this class was held in Bergan's Hall, March 21, 1862. It was called to order by Carl Feinse; Dr. Frederick Brendel was chosen Chairman; Henry Baier, Secretary, and a committee of five—composed of Messrs. Feinse, Adam Lucas, Otto Triebel, Freund and Rosenfeld—appointed to report a plan. At a second meeting held April 1st, following, a constitution was adopted and a Board of thirteen Directors elected, with Carl Feinse, President; H. Baier, Secretary; and Louis Green, Treasurer. Mr. Schulz's outfit was taken over as a nucleus of the new enterprise, and he and Mr. Christ Zimmermann, both experienced educators, engaged as teachers. The school was opened May 1, 1862, in the Bergan building. In a few days the enrollment exceeded 100 pupils, this number increasing by January, 1863, to 172 under three teachers. The next year a lot was bought and a building erected on Second Street, where, forty years later, the school is still conducted. The opening of the new building on November 16, 1863, was a memorable occasion, Mr. Feinse addressing the people in English and Dr. Joseph Studer in German.

For years the school was prosperous, the enrollment at times reaching over 300; then, in common with other schools of its class, it began to decline, but while most of those started elsewhere on the same line have ceased to exist, this is likely to continue for years to come. It is operated under a special charter and is supported by tuition fees of one dollar a month per pupil, supplemented by subscriptions of members of the Association. Its affairs are managed by a Board of thirteen Directors, who report to a general meeting of the Association once a year. The present Board consists of: Dr. O. J. Roskoten, President; F. Kleene, Secretary; J. Schlatter, Treasurer, and the following additional members: F. Lueder, H. Triebel, G. Wys, J. C. Green, F. Trefzger, C. H. Kamman, W. P. Gauss, A. Meyer and John F. Heschong. F. Vonachen, deceased, was also a member of the Board.

An Independent German Library Association was absorbed by the German School Society, and, some years later, its stock of several thousand volumes donated to the Peoria Public Library.

In common with all well educated people, Germans recognize the value of the simultaneous study of two or more languages, and in their school both English and German are taught. It is the aim to lay a good foundation in German, experience proving that German children become Americanized quickly on transfer to the public schools about their twelfth year. Then they reach the high school at the average age of other pupils who have enjoyed the benefit of but one language in their preliminary instruction. The school is non-sectarian; the course of instruction is on parallel lines with that in the public school—the same text-books being used, and there being no intention to antagonize the latter. The present attendance is less than seventy, requiring but two teachers. Its finances are in good condition, receiving the support of many friends, including numerous former pupils now occupying high positions in the financial, commercial and professional world.

The Association opened, if not the first, one of the earliest Kindergartens in the city, which is now in charge of the Ladies' Auxiliary Society, though housed in the same building.

The decline in the number and membership of German schools is traceable, among other causes, chiefly to the following: The enormous decrease of German immigration incident to the expansion and prosperity of the German Empire; the natural Americanization of descendants of the original immigrants; the shifting of the German population away from the central part of the city; the relative growth in number of parochial schools in German city districts, and the improvement in grade and efficiency of the public schools.

BROWN'S PEORIA BUSINESS COLLEGE.

By GEORGE W. BROWN.

In the development of the Private Business and Commercial Schools of this county Peoria has taken a conspicuous part. A commercial school was conducted in Peoria by a Mr. Davis as early as 1854 or 1855, and a number of the older business men of this city, at the present time, were pupils of that school.

Bryant and Stratton established a school here in 1863. Bryant, Stratton & Bell were the owners of the school. Worthington, Warner & Cole opened another school here about the same time. The Bryant & Stratton School was sold to the other firm in 1868. The consolidated school later became the property of Mr. A. J. Cole, who conducted it until 1875, when he sold out to A. S. Parish. Mr. Parish conducted the school until 1888, when it passed into the hands of the present management, Brown's Business College Company, which is the direct successor of all the commercial schools previously conducted here.

Under its present management the school has grown rapidly in its attendance and has been successful in its work. During the past few years the attendance has reached over 400 enrollments per year, including day and evening classes.

A large number of young men and women are annually drawn to this institution from all parts of Illinois and from adjoining States, as well as from the city. The city attendance is always very large. The school has outgrown its quarters three times under its present management, and arrangements are now being made for a new location.

A contract has just been made for the erection of a new and beautiful building, at the corner of Jefferson and Liberty Streets, in which the college will be located, and the new quarters will be ready for use at the opening of the fall term of 1902. The new building will provide much larger accommodations than the school has ever had before, and its equipment and furnishings will be up to the very latest ideas of a modern business school.

Brown's Business College Company owns and operates, at this time, successful schools in thirteen important cities in Illinois, Iowa, and Indiana, and their aggregate enrollment, for the present year, will exceed 3,000 students. Notwithstanding this very large enrollment, these schools are not able to supply the demands that are made upon them for competent bookkeepers, stenographers, cashiers, clerks and other office help.

Principal W. H. H. Garver is in personal charge of the Peoria School, and is assisted by an efficient faculty of teachers. He is also Vice-President of Brown's Business College Company. The other general officers are G. W. Brown, President, Jacksonville, Illinois, and Principal H. M. Owen, Secretary, Decatur, Illinois.

PEORIA PUBLIC LIBRARY.

By ERASTUS S. WILCOX.

The Peoria Public Library traces its genealogy back forty-six years, to the autumn of 1855, when two rival libraries were started here at the same time—the Mercantile Library and the Peoria Library. The Rev. J. R. McFarland was the moving spirit of the first, and the Rev. J. W. Cracraft of the second.

Prominent in the organization of this first Mercantile Library were B. L. T. Bourland, On-low Peters, A. P. Bartlett, A. J. Hodges, D. M. Cummings, G. F. Harding, C. C. Bonney, Dr. J. D. Arnold, Isaac Underhill, Timothy Lynch, Philo Holland, G. W. Fridley and E. B. Elwood; and, in the Peoria Library, A. G. Tyng, George T. Metcalfe, A. G. Curtenius, E. N. Powell, H. B. Hopkins, George C. Bestor, N. B. Curtiss, Jacob Gale, Dr. R. Rouse, Dr. J. C. Frye, Wellington Loucks and J. P. Hotchkiss; the two libraries embracing thus in their organizations nearly all the leading men of the city at that time.

One naturally inquires, why two separate libraries were started here at the same time. It was a question, I am told, between the so-called "liberals" and the "orthodox," incited by the Evil One himself, we might suppose, but mark how—

"There's a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them how we will."

I doubt if the most cunning ingenuity could have contrived a more effective plan for starting a library in a small town, as Peoria then was, than by fanning just such a hot rivalry between opposing theological forces. The whole town was stirred from end to end; everybody took sides and joined in; everybody brought books or money to his favorite library; and, as a consequence, when, a year later, the two libraries were very sensibly consolidated under the name of the Peoria City Library, they had as choice a collection of some 1,500 volumes as probably any young library ever had in a city of our then size.

When I first became a Director in the City Library, in January, 1865, the initiation fee was $2.00, the annual dues were $2.00, and the membership considerably less than 200. It was a good, well-selected library for the time and place. I think I enjoyed access to those few, choice books—some 2,000 of them—as much as I do to our 75,000 now; for you cannot very well master more than 2,000 standard books in ten years.

In the spring of 1865 a new board of younger men seized the reins, and a fresh impetus was given to the library by incorporating it as the Peoria Mercantile Library Association. The charter was obtained by our then member of the Legislature, Alex. McCoy, Esq., and the charter members were Tobias S. Bradley, John L. Griswold, Lewis Howell, D. C. Farrell, Matthew Griswold, Lorin Grant Pratt, H. G. Anderson, Asahel A. Stevens, John Boyd Smith and E. S. Wilcox, only two of whom are still living here.

While the charter was on its passage through the Legislature, meetings were held and a subscription started to raise funds, and, largely through the personal solicitation of L. G. Pratt, Esq., ably seconded by the entire Board, the very handsome sum of $13,262.50 was secured, with $10,000 of which the John L. Griswold property, corner of Main Street and Jefferson Avenue, was bought.

It was a splendid showing for those days, thirty-six years ago. It laid the foundation for all the success which may attend our Public Library in the future. Peoria owes her new Library Building originally to 145 different individuals and firms from among her own hard-working and public-spirited professional and business men, contributing in comparatively small sums, according to their several means. She does not owe it to any one millionaire, eager to seize so rare an opportunity for perpetuating his family name. There is no name carved over our door but the one name which belongs to us all—PEORIA.

After the purchase of the Griswold property, our library had its rooms free of rent, but received very little help from rents of offices in the building, which went toward paying for the new building erected on the same spot in 1868. For an income it was still dependent on the meager sums derived from membership dues and miscellaneous entertainments. Our friends, David McKinney, Eliot Callender, J. C. Hansel, John S. Stevens, John Birks, Dr. I. W. Johnson and E. W. Coy (now of Cincinnati) will not soon forget the hard work we did, running lecture courses, concerts, spelling bees, "Drummer Boy of Shiloh," etc., in order to eke out our small income of four dollars apiece from about 250 subscribers, in the days when that estimable lady, Mrs. Sarah B. Armstrong, constituted our entire library staff. It is enough to say, that it was our experience here in this Peoria Library, of the utter inadequacy of a subscription library to provide for the literary wants of the people, that first suggested the idea of supporting public libraries, like public schools, by public taxation, and which resulted in placing on the statute-book of our State in 1872, our present Free Library Law—the first comprehensive and vitalizing law of the kind in any State of our Union. Under this law, in 1880, Col. John Warner, then Mayor of our city, started our present Public Library by nominating the first Board of Directors.

The first Librarian in our Public Library was Mr. Fred J. Soldan. He began without a book on his shelves, in a bare room over a store on Adams Street. He planned and brought into good running order all the multifarious details so necessary to the smooth working of the modern Public Library, and, at his untimely death in 1891, left a well selected and well organized library of 40,000 volumes and a well trained corps of assistants. He was succeeded by the present Librarian.

April 19, 1881, the German Library gave its fine collection of 1,900 volumes to the Public Library, and, in the spring of 1882, the Mercantile Library Association turned over, as a gift to the Public Library, its entire collection of some 12,000 volumes, and leased its rooms to the same for a term of years.

Early in 1894 the over-crowded condition of the library had become so pressingly noticeable, that an agitation was begun to purchase another site and erect a new building exclusively for library purposes. The conditions were favorable. The Mercantile Library Association owned valuable property which, with the growth of the city and by careful management, had risen in value from $10,000 to $75,000, less a debt of $11,000 to $12,000, which yet remained to be extinguished, and the Public Library owned 50,000 books. There was no good reason why the two should not now unite in the common object of giving Peoria a great library to be proud of, provided some method could be devised for effecting the union satisfactorily to all parties.

A proposition to this effect was made by the Directors of the Mercantile Library to the City Council, and was met with immediate and hearty approval by Mayor Miles and the entire Council.

This proposition was, that if the city would buy the lots, the Mercantile Library Association would sell its property, corner of Main and Jefferson Streets, and devote the proceeds to the erecting of a building.

In June, 1894, the Directors of the Public Library, supported by the action of the City Council, purchased for $10,000, three lots on Monroe Street, nearly opposite the Government building, 168 feet front by 171 feet deep, and on December 24, 1894, the Directors of the Mercantile Library sold their property at the corner of Main and Jefferson Streets, for $75,000. On July 10, 1895, the contract for the erection of the new library building was let.

The building is 78 feet front, 135 feet deep, three stories high, the stack-room five stories, and will accommodate some 200,000 volumes. The total cost of the building, not including the land, for which the city paid $10,000, nor counting such improvements as paving, etc.—that is, the cost of the building proper—was $67,856.34, and this amount was paid entirely by the Peoria Mercantile Library Association from the proceeds of the sale of their property.

The Library was finally closed for removal on January 25, 1897, and the entire collection of 60,000 volumes was transferred a distance of three blocks and put in order in the new building, in six days by two men, seven high school boys and one team, at a total cost of $221.91, or less than three-eighths of a cent per volume.

The building is on Monroe Street, nearly opposite the postoffice, half way between Main and Hamilton Streets. It was not placed on a corner lot for the reason that corner lots cost much more than inside lots, and a public edifice on a corner would require at least two architecturally finished fronts instead of one. This would have involved an additional cost in land and building of not less than $20,000, which, in their circumstances, the committee felt bound to take into consideration.

But there was another weighty reason, besides that of economy, for choosing the site they did. Business men do not plan and locate their workshops and warehouses with a view to an imposing architectural effect on strangers visiting the city, but rather with the more practical object of best serving their purpose as workshops and warehouses. Now, a library is pre-eminently, and more so than most public buildings, a warehouse and a workshop.

As a warehouse, its function is to store books conveniently and safely; as a workshop, it is a place for quiet reading and study; and for both purposes it requires, above all things, protection from the noise and dust of street traffic. These objects are better secured on an inside lot than on a corner lot; and if, as in our case, ample space for light and air is provided on both sides of the building, it would seem that, for Peoria at least, no better choice of location could have been made.

The annual report for the fiscal year ending May 31, 1901, shows a membership of 7,519; number of volumes in the library in active circulation, 72,133 (with duplicates and pamphlets, over 78,000), and number of volumes issued during the year, 174,945.

The library service consists of one librarian and seven assistants, one evening attendant, an engineer and a janitress.

The bindery attached to the library employs one foreman and four assistants the year through.

THE PEORIA SCIENTIFIC ASSOCIATION.

BY HENRY P. DAY.

The Peoria Scientific Association was organized in the spring of 1875, and a constitution and by-laws were adopted, in which its object was declared to be "to increase the knowledge of science among its members, and awaken a spirit of scientific investigation among the people." For a quarter of a century this worthy organization pursued its purpose sturdily and steadily, recognized as a powerful factor in the community, an educational force, and accomplishing untold good in the instruction and enlightenment of the people. For ten years a lecture was given once a month. For twelve years next succeeding, thirty lectures were given each winter season. Subsequently the lectures were not so frequent, but generally materialized once a fortnight. Many of the most prominent scientists of the country, as well as men of lesser note and local talent, contributed to the edification of the people under the auspices of the Association. Many of the lectures were copiously illustrated with lantern views or with charts. The entire field of scientific research was very fully covered, and, besides, subjects were occasionally treated which were not technically scientific. Very rarely was there any charge for admission, but collections were usually taken, and the society was also supported by subscriptions from members. Many of the scholarly people of the city belonged to the Association, and took a keen delight in its lectures, participating, also, in the discussions, which invariably followed, all being free to express their views. The lectures were generally reported in the newspapers, often in full, and often in brief to the extent of a column or so, so the culture afforded by them was quite widely disseminated. The audiences were often very large, of both sexes, and all the professions were liberally represented.

Soon after its organization the society instituted a museum, which was gradually augmented by generous contributions, and became so large that spacious quarters were needed to contain it. For a number of years the museum occupied two apartments in the basement of the court house. Later it was moved into two rooms in the upper floor of the new Public Library building. In 1890 it was presented entire to the Bradley Polytechnic Institute, which was very glad to receive it, and which distributed it among its several departments. The collection was both extensive and valuable, and comprised many sections, prominent among them being geological and botanical specimens, Indian relics, animals, woods, etc., etc. Many hundreds of people visited the museum every year.

Two or three years after its organization a summer school of science was held at the then high school in Peoria, under the auspices of the Association, and was well attended. Lectures were given on entomology by Prof. Comstock, of Cornell University, on biology by Dr. Bert Wilder, of Cornell, and on botany by Drs. Wood and Hyatt, of New York State.

The first officers were:

President—W. H. Chapman, M. D.

Vice Presidents—Mrs. Clara P. Bourland,

J. T. Stewart, M. D., Fred. Brendel, M. D.

Secretary—Miss Emma A. Smith.

Corresponding Secretary—S. H. White.

Treasurer—Sidney Pulsifer.

Dr. E. M. Colburn was President several years, as was also Dr. J. T. Stewart. Among the other Presidents were Prof. S. H. White, Dr. O. B. Will and B. L. T. Bourland.

CHAPTER XVI.

MEDICAL PROFESSION—HOSPITALS: BY JAMES T. STEWART, M. D.

When the first cry of pain was heard in the world some kind hand was outstretched to relieve it, some sympathizing heart was near to respond to the call of the sorrowing and suffering. From this early dawn of the prehistoric period to the present time, there have been those who have devoted more or less of their time to the specialty of healing the sick. During all the historic period of the world, in every age and nation, many men have devoted their entire time to the study of disease and its remedies. Since the sciences began to be developed, the most learned and scientific men have made it a life work.

The field is wide as the world. It embraces every science. Just as science is developed, it advances. The practice of medicine is not a science; it never can be a science; it is an art founded upon all the sciences. It never has and never can develop beyond the condition of science in any country, in any age. The beginning, the foundation of the study of scientific medicine, is anatomy—that is, the frame work of the human body—and histology, which is microscopic anatomy. Until science discovered the microscope, this study was impossible. With its aid a flood of light has been let into the mysterious structure and workings of the various parts and organs of the body.

Physiology teaches the functions and uses of the various organs. Many of the most eminent men in the world have devoted their lives to the study of this branch of medicine, and, little by little, they have thrown light upon this very important subject.

Materia medica—that is, the drugs used—and therapeutic—which means their application—depend largely upon the sciences of chemistry and botany. The present condition of materia medica and therapeutics is the result of the labors of very many of the greatest minds in the present and past ages. The mind itself, its connection with and relation to the body, and its influence over disease, has always been and is now receiving a large share of attention from the best talent of the profession. While all physicians recognize the fact of the great influence of the mind over disease, and give their patients the benefit of it, yet they do not see the propriety of depending on it or any other one remedy for the cure of all diseases, to the exclusion of other means.

This is a mere skeleton view of what medicine is, and may lead to some slight idea of the immense labor which has been involved in bringing it to its present degree of development, and its dependence upon and inseparable connection with science.

As to the medical profession of Peoria, I presume it does not differ materially from the profession in other cities. We have some bright stars and some who are not so brilliant, but we think we have a fair average. The early pioneer physicians of Peoria of whom I can learn anything, were Doctors Langworthy, Castle, Livingston, Cross, Peter Bartlett and Mossman.

Dr. Langworthy was probably the first practitioner of medicine in Peoria. After practicing here a few years, he itinerated through the country, and finally located in Bureau County, where he died.

Dr. Cross was from Portsmouth, New Hampshire. He practiced a few years in early days and then returned to New Hampshire, where he lived to old age and died.

Dr. Peter Bartlett was a superior man. He was very highly esteemed, both as a man and a physician. He was a native of Salisbury, New Hampshire, and took his degree of Doctor of Medicine at Dartmouth College. He practiced a quarter of a century in his native town, Salisbury. He then came to Peoria in the year 1836, and soon acquired a large practice which continued until September, 1838, when he died. He was so highly esteemed that his death was regarded as a public calamity.

I can learn nothing of the other gentlemen named, except that they practiced here a short time and left between fifty-five and sixty years ago, except Dr. Mossman, who died here, I think, in 1850.

My personal knowledge of the profession of Peoria dates back to the spring of 1847. Peoria at that time, for a small town, was peculiarly favored with a little galaxy of very superior physicians, four of whom would have made their mark in any city, but they were laboring under the idea of going west and growing up with the country. This was, and is, a great mistake. The older a country and the larger a city the physician of brains settles in, the greater opportunity he has for expansion, of attaining to eminence and accumulating wealth. These physicians were successful here, of course—at least as much so as circumstances permitted. They were Dr. Rudolphus Rouse, Dr. Edward Dickinson, Dr. Joseph C. Frye and Dr. John Murphy.

Dr. Rudolphus Rouse was from Brooklyn, New York, a man of very superior natural ability, well educated, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania. He had a fine physique, was jovial, of a genial disposition and dignified in his manners. He came to Peoria in 1833 and was always a welcome guest in the best society. He was an assistant surgeon in the war of 1812, and was president of the convention that organized the State Medical Society at Springfield, in 1850. His mind was clear, he had a deep insight into disease, was quick to act and ready to meet any emergency, and was sometimes a little heroic in his treatment. He lived to a good old age, and died in 1873, honored and respected by all who knew him.

Dr. Edward Dickinson was born in Hadley, Massachusetts, February 15, 1801, graduated at the University of Pennsylvania, and came to Peoria in 1830. During the same year he married Miss Catharine Jones, of Philadelphia. He was a typical physician, a typical gentleman of the old school, tall and commanding in appearance, even tempered, a pattern of self-control, a man of unbending integrity. He was a man of public spirit and served one term as Probate Justice of the Peace. As a physician he was very skillful, practicing with the same gentleness, ease and grace that he did everything else; but he was a man of strong will and determination and, in the whole range of practice, had few equals and perhaps no superiors. He suffered in his younger days from disease of the lungs, from which he never fully recovered, and finally succumbed to it at the age of 65. He died July 6, 1866.

Dr. Joseph C. Frye was a native of Virginia, studied medicine with the celebrated Dr. Maguire, of Winchester, Virginia; graduated at the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati, and came to Peoria in 1836. He was a man of very fine appearance and manners; was, perhaps, the most popular physician who ever practiced in this city—especially with the ladies—and richly deserved all his popularity. He was the hardest student I ever knew, was an inveterate reader of medical literature and seemed to remember all he read. He had one peculiarity—he could at once turn to the book and page where he had ever read anything of interest; even in his extensive reading of the medical journals he could give the date and readily find any article to which he wished to refer. In practice his resources seemed to be without end. As an all-round practitioner he probably had not his superior in the State. He was not a surgeon; he disliked surgery, and rarely took a surgical case. He lived to the age of 76 and died in 1886.

Dr. John Murphy is a native of Ireland. He graduated in medicine at the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, Belfast, April, 1838; also graduated in surgery at the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, in London, in 1840, coming to Peoria, April 1, 1845. He was a young man of very superior talent and acquirements, and soon made his mark here. No man ever acquired a more commanding influence over this community, both as a physician and a man. A perfect gentleman of the old school, he was a master in medical lore and general literature, a brilliant conversationalist, at home in the higher social circles, and a natural leader in society. He had remarkable skill in diagnosing disease and applying remedies to meet emergencies. In this, I think, he excelled all men who ever practiced in this place. These qualities gave him a wide reputation, which he richly deserved, and, for many years, he conducted a practice that would have broken down any ordinary man, but with all he had an iron constitution and bore up under it. For a long time he was the only surgeon in Peoria, and if he had lived in a large city, where there was much surgery to do, he would have excelled in that branch to the full extent he did in medicine. While he was careful, he was fearless and bold, and never shrank from assuming responsibility. This was a marked trait in his character, and is not only worthy of notice but of all praise. I lay special stress upon this because so many physicians are too cowardly to assist a brother in trouble, and manage to throw difficult cases into other men's hands. He is still living, but aged and infirm, and, after sixty years of active practice, has retired with an ample fortune in the enjoyment of the respect and esteem of all who know him.

These four names rank all others in the medical history of Peoria, up to this time. Between 1847 and 1850 Dr. Elwood Andrew, Dr. William R. Hamilton, Dr. J. D. Arnold and Dr. E. S. Cooper came here.

Dr. Elwood Andrew was a native of Indiana, and graduated at Rush Medical College, Chicago. He was a large, fine appearing man, with pleasing manners, and soon became very popular as a physician. Genial, warm-hearted and liberal, he made many friends, and conducted a large practice until the latter part of 1864, when he met with an accident which caused his death.

Dr. William R. Hamilton also came from Indiana; was a man of good ability, an honorable gentleman, a judicious physician and enjoyed a large practice until the oil excitement in Pennsylvania, about 1850, when he gave up his practice and went into the oil business. Here he was successful and accumulated a handsome fortune, afterwards becoming President of the Rock Island & Peoria Railroad. He is still living, and, in health and prosperity, enjoying the sunset of life.

Dr. John D. Arnold came from the State of New York and was a graduate of the Buffalo Medical College. He was a sprightly, active young man, possessing unbounded energy, and soon obtained a full practice—an exemplification of the old adage, that energy will carry a man through. He also had very considerable ability. He practiced a number of years, and, in the meantime, was Mayor of the city one term of two years, and was elected to the State Senate in the year 1854, where he served for one term. In 1861 President Lincoln appointed him Consul to St. Petersburg, Russia. Previous to this appointment he had begun to fail in health, and the cold winter in that climate was too much for him; he succumbed to it, came home and soon died of consumption.

Dr. E. S. Cooper was rather a remarkable young man. He came from Danville, Illinois; had not graduated, but was a most indefatigable student. He used to dissect rats; then got real subjects and dissected and studied anatomy, until he became one of the best anatomists in Illinois. He was fond of surgery, was a bold and reckless operator, and while he really knew but little about the science, he studied and studied incessantly. He also took up French and became somewhat proficient in that language; then went to Paris and studied medicine and surgery there for a time, when he removed to San Francisco, California, where he made a great reputation in his chosen field. His fame spread all over the State; he made a fortune and built a medical college. He was a man of great vitality, but exhausted it by overwork, and died a number of years ago, while yet a comparatively young man.

In the spring of 1850, Dr. John N. Niglas, Dr. John L. Hamilton, Dr. E. M. Colburn and the writer of this sketch, Dr. J. T. Stewart, began the practice of medicine here.

Dr. Niglas had been a Catholic priest in Vienna, Austria, was a thorough scholar and a polished gentleman. He practiced with varying success until the War of the Rebellion, when he went into the army as Surgeon of the Sixth Illinois Cavalry, returning at the close of the war much crippled and badly broken down with rheumatism. After practicing more or less as he was able, for a few years, he died. Dr. Niglas was one of the best scholars and could pass as good an examination in medicine as any man in Illinois, but, unfortunately, he could never make a practical application of his knowledge so as to make a very successful physician.

Dr. John L. Hamilton was a man quite the opposite of Dr. Niglas. He was a native of Pennsylvania, graduated at Starling Medical College, Columbus, Ohio, and at once began practice. He was a man of strong common sense and good judgment, and while not brilliant, was plodding and persevering. Without extensive erudition, he could make practical use of his knowledge; acquired business slowly but held it. He was sound and judicious in his practice, honest and upright in all his dealings. He did a large business for many years, and was held in high esteem by the medical profession and the citizens of Peoria. While in the midst of his career of usefulness he was stricken down and, after a lingering illness, passed away, August 11, 1893.

Dr. Edwin M. Colburn was a native of New York State, and graduated at one of the New York medical colleges in 1835. He settled in Bloomington, Illinois, in 1838, but came to Peoria in 1850. He was a pleasant, genial, honest and upright gentleman of good ability, and succeeded in establishing himself in a fine practice, which he held until age and infirmity forced him to give it up. While here he changed from the old school to the homeopathic practice—a change which was undoubtedly the result of honest conviction. It made little difference in the volume of his business, for, as he lost on one hand, he gained on the other. He also devoted much time to science and literature, and was President of the Peoria Scientific Association during the last seven years of his life. He died in 1890.

The writer of this sketch, Dr. J. T. Stewart, is a native of Southern Illinois, born in 1824. He had the honor of being a student of Dr. J. C. Frye, and graduated at the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania in the spring of 1850. He has now (1901) rounded out fifty years of practice. He practiced in Peoria until the Civil War broke out. He then went in the army as Surgeon of the Sixty-fourth Regular Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving four years, lacking one month. In General Sherman's campaign in Georgia he was Surgeon-in-Chief of the Fourth Division, Sixteenth Army Corps. While acting in this capacity near Atlanta, Georgia, he was struck with a shell, crushing his hip and breaking the thigh-bone in the neck. This caused him to be laid up for six months, after which he did six months' hospital work in the City of Charleston, South Carolina. At the close of the war he returned home and resumed his practice. He fortunately returned to private practice with some reputation as a surgeon, and, for many years afterwards, did a large share of the surgery of the city and vicinity. He has now given up all heavy surgery and is no longer ambitious to carry on a large practice, but has devoted much time to the study of botany and to general literature. He is now, and has been for seven or eight years, President of the Peoria Scientific Association. While his health is good and he still retains a reasonable degree of vigor, yet he feels that his work is almost done, and he hopes soon to lay it down and be relieved from the care and responsibility of professional labor. [Doctor Stewart died, April 12, 1901.]

A prominent figure in the profession here for many years was Dr. Robert Roskoten. He was a native of Germany, and a graduate of the University of Jena in 1848, coming here in 1850. He was an active, intellectual man and did a large business for a long time. He served with distinction as Brigade Surgeon in the Civil War; was also quite a literary man and, besides many valuable papers, wrote and published a drama, a work of much literary merit, entitled "Carlotta." He was an active Turner and took much interest in organizing and maintaining a German school. He died in 1897, much missed and regretted by the profession and a large class of patrons and the community generally.

Dr. Frederick Brendel came to Peoria about the same time as Dr. Roskoten. He was also a German, having graduated at the Royal College of Erlanger, Bavaria; was a strong-minded, well-educated man who acquired a large German practice, but soon devoted himself almost exclusively to the study of science. He studied and became quite proficient in several branches of science, although botany was his chief study, and is probably the most advanced and the best authority in this branch of science in Illinois. He is still living, is over eighty years old, and is still enthusiastically pursuing his scientific researches.

Dr. Joseph Studer is a native of Switzerland. He studied at Berne and Strasburg, and graduated at the University of Basel, in the City of Basel, in 1853. He came to Peoria in 1857, and has been in active practice ever since. He is a kindly, energetic and talented physician, the pink of honor and integrity. He has made his mark in the profession, has a wide circle of acquaintances and is honored and respected by all who know him.

Dr. Clark D. Rankin was a young man of merit, a native of Pennsylvania and graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, who came here in 1854. He practiced until the Civil War began, then went into the army as Surgeon of the Seventh Illinois Cavalry, and served with credit until his health failed, when he resigned. He subsequently resumed practice in Peoria, but failing health compelled him to give it up, and, in 1868, he died.

Dr. Timothy Babb came in the year 1860, having graduated at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, in 1855. He went into the army as Assistant Surgeon of the Forty-seventh Regular Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in 1861, but resigned in consequence of ill health in 1863. He never fully regained his health, and finally died of consumption in 1869. He had some skill in surgery, was a beautiful operator, and, had he lived, would have made a prominent surgeon.

Dr. John Cary is from England, a graduate of the Royal College at Edinburg, in 1849. He came here in 1850, has been in general practice ever since, and is still engaged in professional work. He is an honest, honorable gentleman of the old school, and highly respected.

Dr. George L. Lucas came here in —, practiced until the Civil War, and then went as Surgeon in the Forty-seventh Regular Illinois Volunteer Infantry. At the close of the war he returned and was engaged in general practice until 1878, when he removed to Idaho, and there practiced until his death, in 1884. He was an honorable, energetic man and made some reputation as a surgeon.

Dr. Joseph T. Skinner came to Peoria in 1865. He was a graduate of Brunswick Medical College, was a bright, active young man, and soon became very popular as a physician. He conducted a large practice until his health failed. After a lingering illness he succumbed to consumption, June 16, 1870, at Cheyenne, Wyoming.

Dr. Israel J. Guth was a promising young man, who came here a short time before the Civil War. He became Assistant Surgeon of the Eighty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and served to the end of the war with credit to himself and to the great satisfaction of his regiment. At the close of the war he resumed his practice, but soon fell a martyr to his profession, dying from blood-poisoning, October 9, 1875.

Dr. J. S. Miller is one of our most active and energetic physicians. He is a native of New Jersey, graduated at the Medical Department, Georgetown University, Washington, D. C., in 1865, and came here in 1870. He is one of the leading physicians of the city and has a large and lucrative practice.

Dr. Samuel O. Loughridge is another of our most prominent physicians, and is now conducting a large and first-class practice. He is a native of Pennsylvania, and graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1866. He graduated again at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, in 1870, and in November, 1872, came to Peoria. He is a very kindly, strong-minded man, and very popular.

Dr. Robert Boal is a remarkable man, and probably the best known physician in Illinois—a walking encyclopedia of State history. He was born near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, in 1806, and graduated at the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, in 1828, of which he is the oldest living graduate. In 1836 he removed to Lacon (then Columbia), Illinois, and engaged in practice there until 1862. He was then appointed Surgeon to the Board of Enrollment for the Fifth Congressional District of Illinois, being stationed in Peoria, where he remained in the service of the Government to the close of the war. He then opened an office and went into the practice of medicine here. While a resident of Lacon he was elected to the State Senate in 1844, and served till 1848. In 1854 he was elected to the House of Representatives and re-elected in 1856. He was an intimate friend of President Lincoln [and one of his most earnest supporters in his contest for the United States Senate, in 1855]. While in practice he was regarded as a master in the profession. He is an even-tempered, genial gentleman. For thirty years he conducted a successful practice here, honored and beloved by the profession and the community at large. But Father Time has admonished him to relinquish the cares and responsibilities of professional life and spend the evening of life in retirement, and he now lives with his daughter, the widow of the Hon. Greenbury L. Fort, of Lacon. He is past 95 years of age, as bright intellectually and as genial as ever.

Dr. Rufus Du Mars was a student of Dr. J. C. Frye, graduated at Louisville Medical College in 1876, then graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1877. He is still in active practice, and is doing a large amount of railroad surgery. He is a faithful, energetic and efficient physician and surgeon.

Dr. Thomas M. McIlvaine is a native of Pennsylvania, who graduated at Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1881, began practicing the same year and has conducted a large practice since. He is an energetic man, a judicious physician and very popular.

Dr. Harrison Steele graduated at Rush Medical College in 1868. He then went to Elmwood, Peoria County, and practiced there until 1874, when he came here, and has been a fixture here ever since. He is mild and gentle, always genial and cheerful. Dr. Steele has been Surgeon of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway for many years. He is prompt in his attention to the sick and wounded, bringing sunshine and hope to the suffering.

Dr. James L. Brown graduated at the Ohio

Medical College, Cincinnati, in 1868, came to Peoria in 1873 and has been in practice here ever since. He is a quiet, unobtrusive man, a judicious and wise physician, and has the confidence of the profession and the public.

Dr. Oliver J. Roskoten, a son of Dr. Robert Roskoten, already mentioned in this article, is a native of Peoria, and graduated at Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1882. He has been in successful practice in his native city ever since. He is an able, careful, scientific physician, and bids fair to make one of the leading members of the profession.

One of our most promising young men of the profession is Dr. Albert Weil, a graduate of Rush Medical College, Chicago, of the class of 1893. He is a man of fine ability, great energy, and is becoming very popular.

Dr. Justin H. Wilkinson was born in Warren County, Ohio, in 1823, graduated in medicine in Louisville, Kentucky, and came to Kickapoo, Peoria County, to practice in 1848. He practiced in that village and in the surrounding country for more than thirty years. He was a most scrupulously honest man, of sterling integrity, most excellent judgment, and conducted a very large practice. In 1885 he came to Peoria, and died here in 1891. Few men were more beloved and more honored than he. His place in the practice has never been filled, and it will be a long time before Kickapoo will have another Wilkinson.

George L. Corcoran was a native of Ireland, and graduated at the University of Glasgow in 1849. He came to Brimfield, Peoria County, in 1851. How and why a man of his education and ability should have drifted into this wild new country and settled in the village of Brimfield, is one of the problems which is hard to solve; but he did it, and practiced there until 1888, when he died. He was a very superior physician and a very good surgeon. If he had located in a city where he could have had opportunities to develop his natural capacity in surgery, he would have made a great success.

A number of others who have been practicing for several years are worthy of notice, but it is impossible, within my limits, to give sketches of them all. Among them are the following names: Drs. William R. Allison, R. W. Baker, Frank E. Baldwin, R. D. Bradley, R. A. Hanna, J. W. Hensley, Alvin Keith, R. A. Kerr, David Magee, M. S. Marex, L. A. McFadden, T. B. Norvel, Howard M. Sedgwick, Emma J. Lucas, L. B. Martin, John P. McMahon, J. C. Roberts, William Skinner, William T. Sloan, L. H. Spaulding, E. B. Studer, Ezra Weis, Marcus Whiting, E. M. Sutton, George Zeller.

SPECIALISTS.

Among the specialists are some physicians of note. Dr. Otho B. Will graduated at Rush Medical College in 1869, came to Peoria in 1882, and has occupied a prominent place in the profession ever since. His specialty is gynecology. He has been President of the State Medical Society, has taken an active part in the Peoria City Medical Society and in various other medical organizations. He is editor of the "Peoria Medical Journal," a very handsome and well conducted journal.

Dr. Paul Dombrowski is a scientific man, a hard student, and has made great proficiency in his specialty. He graduated in 1880 at the Royal University in Berlin, Germany, and came here in 1884. His specialty is eye, ear, nose and throat diseases, and he is at present eye and ear surgeon to St. Francis' and Cottage Hospitals; is also Professor of Optics in the Horological Department of Bradley Polytechnic Institute.

The following physicians make a specialty of the eye, ear, nose and throat: Drs. E. H. Bradley, C. H. Brobst, Hero Kruse, George Limmer, A. Kanne and J. R. Waln. Dr. Frank C. Bourscheidt's specialty is gynecology. Dr. R. G. Allen resides in Washington, Tazewell County, but has had an office in this city for many years. He is a man of merit and a very able physician. Dr. David D. Ross is the oldest specialist in the city. He has done a large business and has been quite successful in his line.

HOMEOPATHY.

The homeopathic school of medicine is very ably represented by Drs. I. W. Johnson, J. W. Coyner, John H. Timken, W. H. Shane, H. T. Kerr, F. S. Davis, J. W. Parker and Mrs. Parker.

Irving W. Johnson graduated at the Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1856, and came to Peoria the same year. He has had a large practice here for years and is a leading member of the profession. He is a man of talent, of excellent judgment and a skilled physician.

Dr. Joseph W. Coyner graduated at Pulte Medical College, Cincinnati, in 1878, and came to Peoria the same year. He, too, is a leading physician and is still carrying on a large and first-class practice. He is a high-toned gentleman, devoted to his profession, and very successful.

The other gentlemen named are all reputable physicians, worthy members of the profession and a credit to the city.

The first homeopathic physician who practiced in this city was a man by the name of Moses Troyer. He came sometime in the forties and practiced here until his death, which, I think, occurred about 1870. He was a very clever old gentleman, and practiced pure Hahnemann homeopathy. Since he began practice great changes have taken place in the homeopathic school, and there is now but little difference between the two schools except in name.

The changes in the medical profession here, as elsewhere, have in the last fifty years been considerable. There has been real progress, but nothing like what most people, especially the younger portion of the community, imagine. In the general practice proper it has been less than in some other departments. I doubt whether we practice better than those old strong men—whom I have sketched in the early part of this paper—did fifty years ago. Some new and valuable drugs have been introduced, but only a few. All the old standard drugs are standard drugs today. Many of them, thanks to the pharmacists, have been more concentrated and put in more palatable form and the dosage reduced. The abuse of calomel and the lancet had ceased before that time. The rapid and wonderful progress in everything is more in the imagination than in fact. One generation thinks it has acquired all the knowledge in the world, and that the generations before it knew nothing. There never was a greater mistake. There has been more improvement in surgery in this place. We have more and better surgeons than we had fifty years ago. The introduction of antiseptics has been a long step in advance. We now have a number of very good operators; but, unfortunately here, as elsewhere, there is a mania for operating, and consequently there is altogether too much operating done. There is either a lack of honesty (which I would not like to charge), or of sound judgment in knowing when to operate and when not to operate. This knowledge, and action based upon it, is an essential requisite of the successful surgeon.

The division of the practice into specialties is a very decided improvement over the old way of doing business. The field of the general practitioner was altogether too wide and embraced more than any one man could master. We now have a large and efficient corps of dentists. Surgery has gone into the hands of those who make it a specialty. Gynecology has drifted to those who make that branch a specialty, and it seems to be in good hands and well conducted.

The oculists and aurists have a monopoly of diseases of the eye and ear, and, in justice to them, I will say that they are well up in the profession and doing grand, good work. Besides these, there are some who devote their time chiefly to diseases of the throat and are skilled in that branch. I would like to name some of these specialists and set forth their special merits, but the limits of this paper will not allow it. I would like also to notice more of the one hundred and twenty-five physicians who are holding forth in Peoria to-day, but I fear I have already gone beyond my proper limit.

HOSPITALS.

We have two very nice and well conducted hospitals. The St. Francis was founded in 1876 by Rev. Mother Francis and her sister, Sister Augustine. Rev. Mother Clara now superintends the institution. Its capacity is one hundred beds. It has a fine corps of Sisters, who are well trained, well qualified and faithful nurses. It has an airy, commanding site on the bluff overlooking the city, is kept scrupulously clean, and has an air of comfort and cheerfulness, which makes it an inviting place for those who are so unfortunate as to be sick or wounded. The corps of physicians are: Drs. Rufus Du Mars, Paul Dombrowski, Joseph Studer, F. C. Bourscheidt, J. T. Stewart, E. B. Studer, Clifford Collins, C. E. Davis, W. T. Sloan and R. L. Baker.

The Cottage Hospital is a non-sectarian institution of fifty beds, founded in 1883. It is located in the center of the city on Second Street. It is easier of access than St. Francis', but has not so commanding a site. It is well equipped in all its apartments and conducted in the best manner. The matron, Miss Eleanor Coolidge, is an active, kindly, genial, business lady, and the nurses are well trained, gentle and kind. While not large, it is a benefit and credit to the city. The medical staff is composed of the following gentlemen: Drs. J. S. Miller, T. M. McIlvaine, O. B. Will, Harrison Steele, R. A. Kerr, E. M. Sutton, Paul Dombrowski, W. R. A. Wilson and R. Hanna.

[Since the foregoing was written great improvements have been made in the hospital accommodations of the city. Additional ground having been purchased adjoining St. Francis' Hospital, a new five-story stone addition has been erected at a cost (with that of the ground) of $125,000. This building is complete in all its details, and more than doubles the capacity of the former building. The building is now (February, 1902) completed and ready for occupancy.

The Cottage Hospital has also been greatly enlarged by the erection of a large four-story stone building equipped with all modern improvements, at a cost of about $100,000. Accommodations for one hundred additional patients have been added. It was opened for use on February 3, 1902.

In addition to these, the authorities of the Methodist Episcopal Churches of this Conference have established, on Glen Oak Avenue, a Deaconess's Hospital. It is not a large building, but is well equipped, well kept and is doing a good work.]

PEORIA SANITARIUM.

This is an Electropathic Institute, established in 1881 by Dr. S. E. Adams, a graduate of the Cleveland Homeopathic College. Dr. Adams made a success of it. He was a man of talent and learning, but his health failed and, after a very lingering illness, he died of consumption in 1897.

Three years previous to his death, Dr. K. J. Welsh, who had been associated with him for some years, took full charge and has continued to conduct the institute to this time. Dr. Welsh is a very able and popular lady, well qualified to discharge the duties of the place. Quite a number of patients can be accommodated with board and lodging. They are supplied with abundance of artesian, mineral, and spring water of the purest kind. The institution has been very popular from the first and still is. Physicians of all schools send patients there when they require electropathic treatment, and, in justice I must say, their treatment has been very successful.

THE PEORIA CITY MEDICAL SOCIETY.

The Peoria City Medical Society was organized in 1848. Its first President was Dr. Rudolphus Rouse; Vice-President, Dr. Edward Dickinson; Secretary, Dr. Elwood Andrew. Drs. Joseph C. Frye, John Murphy, J. D. Arnold and William R. Hamilton were members. This society has been kept alive all these years, and is now in a flourishing condition. Two of the original members of fifty-two years ago are still living.—Dr. John Murphy and William R. Hamilton.

NOTE. The foregoing article was prepared by Dr. Stewart a short time before his death, and is probably the last written by him for publication. Sentences in brackets have been since added.

CHAPTER XVII.

PATRIOTIC ORGANIZATIONS.

GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

By CAPT. RICHARD W. BURT.

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC was organized at Decatur, Illinois, in 1866, by Dr. B. F. Stephenson and others, with General Stephen A. Hurlbut as Commander-in-Chief. General Hurlbut was succeeded by General John A. Logan, since which time twenty-six Commanders have held that honorable position. In 1890, there were in the United States 6,778 Posts, with 276,662 members. In 1894 there were 7,500 Posts, with a membership of 450,000, but the numbers have been rapidly diminishing in recent years. The official report of the organization for June 30, 1901, shows a total of 6,678 Posts, with 269,507 members, of which 568 Posts and 22,132 members were in Illinois.

ITS OBJECTS.

The objects to be accomplished by this organization are as follows:

1. To preserve and strengthen those kind and fraternal feelings which bind together the soldiers, sailors, and marines, who united to suppress the late Rebellion, and to perpetuate the memory and history of the dead.

2. To assist such former comrades in arms as need help and protection, and to extend needful aid to the widows and orphans of those who have fallen.

3. To maintain true allegiance to the United States of America, based upon a paramount respect for and fidelity to the National Constitution and laws, to discountenance whatever tends to weaken loyalty, incites to insurrection, treason or rebellion, or in any manner impair the efficiency or permanency of our free institutions, and to encourage the spread of universal liberty, equal rights and justice to all men.

Its dominant principle is patriotism. Grand in the glorious cause for which its members fought; grand in the valor, the fortitude and the heroism displayed by them through all their vicissitudes of victory or defeat—grand in the results they accomplished—it is rightly named the Grand Army of the Republic.

On one day in the year they meet to commemorate the patriotism and heroic devotion of their deceased comrades, by marching in solemn procession to the city of the dead, there to strew flowers upon their graves—a touching tribute of respect to those who sacrificed their lives that their country might live, and to listen to words commemorative of their achievement, in saving the Union from dismemberment and their countrymen from the disaster of a shattered nationality.

The organization in Peoria County consists of the following Posts: Dan McCook Post, No. 53, Elmwood, chartered June 24, 1879, present membership 50; Col. John Bryner Post, No. 67, Peoria, chartered October 8, 1879, present membership 345; Chillicothe Post, No. 136, chartered August 25, 1882, present membership 31; J. F. French Post, No. 153, Princeville, chartered October, 1879, present membership 28; G. L. Fort Post, No. 177, Brimfield, chartered July 31, 1883, present membership 29; Timber Post, No. 432, Glasford, chartered April 10, 1884, present membership 46; A. J. Smith Post, No. 779, Hanna City, chartered February 5, 1897, present membership 17; total in the county, 546.

Henry W. Foreman,

The Post meets in its hall, Nos. 105 and 107 South Adams Street, on the first and third Thursdays of each month.

The Thirty-fifth Encampment of the Department of Illinois took place at Peoria on the 14th, 15th and 16th days of May, 1901. This was one of the greatest demonstrations ever witnessed in the city. The new Coliseum had been opened to the public and its capacity was now to be tested to its fullest extent. The opening exercises were held on the evening of the 14th, when not less than six thousand persons were present. Not only the Grand Army, but the Women's Relief Corps, the Ladies of the Grand Army, the Daughters of Veterans, the Ladies' Aid Society, and the Sons of Veterans from the entire State, were present. The meeting was called to order by Comrade R. M. Campbell, who was chairman of the Committee of Arrangements. The most distinguished members, together with officers and speakers, Spencer's Band, and the Band of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home, occupied the stage. Mr. Campbell introduced the Department Commander, Hon. Joel M. Longenecker, of Chicago, who took charge of the meeting and called upon the Department Chaplain, Rev. S. W. Thornton, to invoke the Divine blessing. Mayor William F. Bryan then, in a few well chosen words, welcomed the visitors as guests of the city, after which the principal address was delivered by Gen. John C. Black, of Chicago. Great enthusiasm prevailed and, at one crisis of the evening, when the bands struck up the "Star Spangled Banner," the entire audience rose to their feet and sang the chorus, the bands playing in unison with the vast volume of human voices.

On the next day occurred a military and civic demonstration, such as had seldom, if ever, been witnessed on the streets of Peoria. The weather was perfect, and it was estimated that from forty to fifty thousand people witnessed the pageant. The veterans marched with that steady step and perfect alignment with which they had become familiar during the war, setting an example to the more recently recruited companies that followed in their rear. To add to the brilliancy of the display, Gov. Richard Yates, the second of that name, appeared on horse-back, surrounded by a numerous staff, all richly attired in military costume, and heavily bedecked with gold lace, and carrying side arms and other insignia of their rank.

The evening of the second day of the Encampment was devoted to a camp-fire, at which the Governor and his staff were present. The meeting was continued far into the night, and many brilliant reminiscences were related by the war-worn veterans.

The third day was devoted to the election of officers and other business pertaining to the welfare of the Grand Army, after which the Encampment adjourned; its members carrying with them the benedictions of a grateful community.

THE WOMEN'S RELIEF CORPS.

At the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, held at Denver, Colorado, in 1883, it was deemed advisable to create an auxiliary organization among the women, to assist the Grand Army in its work, and to aid in perpetuating the memory of their heroic dead. The Women's Relief Corps was then and there organized. The response of the women of the land was most hearty, and such was the growth of the organization that, in the year 1900, its membership numbered 132,746, of whom nearly 11,000 were in Illinois.

The Bryner Woman's Relief Corps of Peoria was organized August 12, 1884, with nineteen charter members, which number has since increased to about 180, composed mostly of the mothers, wives and daughters of the soldiers, although others are not excluded—and Bryner Corps contains many loyal women not belonging to any of the classes named.

The charitable gifts of this Corps have been large and varied in character, embracing within their scope the Grand Army of the Republic, the Sons of Veterans, the Memorial College, the Soldiers' Orphans' Home at Normal, the Soldiers' Home at Quincy, the Soldiers' Widows' Home at Wilmington, and the furnishing and maintaining of a room in the National Women's Relief Corps Home at Madison, Ohio, besides rendering aid to the needy and to the various charitable organizations in our own city.

One of their special duties is to assist the Grand Army of the Republic in the proper observance of Memorial Day, by strewing flowers upon and properly decorating the graves of deceased soldiers at home, and in sending money to assist in decorating the graves of those who were buried in the South. They have also erected in Springdale Cemetery a stone inscribed to the "Unknown," which, on Memorial Day, is decorated with the choicest of flowers in memory of the thousands whose last resting places are unknown to the bereaved ones who gave their choicest gifts to their country's cause in its hour of need.

The present officers of the Bryner Corps are the following: Mrs. Florence G. Tippett, President; Mrs. Clara Boyd, Senior Vice-President; Miss Edna Walker, Junior Vice-President; Mrs. S. J. Burdick, Secretary; Mrs. S. N. Stephenson, Treasurer; Mrs. Helen F. King, Chaplain;

Mrs. Lizzie Pothoff, Conductor; Mrs. L. H. Reed, Guard; Mrs. Anna Monroe, Assistant Conductor; Mrs. M. Forbes, Assistant Guard; Mrs. S. A. Coleman, Press Correspondent.

LADIES OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

BY HELEN M. WILSON.

GEORGE A. WILSON CIRCLE, No. 49. Dr. George A. Wilson, for whom this Circle was named, entered the army at the outbreak of the war and served until near its conclusion. On May 25, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company G, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Infantry, and, having been for some time pursuing his studies for the medical profession, was assigned to duty as Hospital Steward. On January 7, 1863, upon the organization of the Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, he was appointed First Assistant Surgeon, in which capacity he continued to serve until April 14, 1865, when, after nearly four years of continuous service, he resigned. After the war he was twice elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, and served a term as Collector of Internal Revenue under appointment by President Cleveland. He was a charter member and, for the year 1882, Commander of Bryner Post, G. A. R. After a long illness, he died, April 6, 1900, and was interred by his comrades in Springdale Cemetery with Grand Army honors.

THE LADIES OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC is an organization composed of wives, mothers, daughters and sisters of honorably discharged soldiers, sailors and marines of the War of the Rebellion. The organization consists of a national body with departments in nearly every State of the Union, and with a total membership of about thirty thousand. It is thoroughly independent in its existence and is not auxiliary to any order or association. Its objects are: To unite, in fraternal bond, a representative or representatives from the family of every man whose life was tendered to our country in its hour of need; to keep alive in the hearts of the people, remembrances of the brave and unselfish service given by those men at the times of greatest peril; to perform such works of assistance and charitable action towards soldiers or their families in distress as circumstances may require, and to promote, by every means possible, loyalty to our country and our country's flag.

George A. Wilson Circle was organized, Octo-her 13, 1900, with thirty-six charter members. The following officers were elected to serve the first year:

Mrs. Helen M. Wilson, President; Mrs. Virginia C. McClure, Senior Vice-President; Mrs. Lena Wasson, Junior Vice-President; Mrs. Emma B. Bryner, Secretary; Mrs. Sadie A. Boyd, Treasurer; Mrs. Helen M. Sofield, Chaplain; Mrs. Mary C. Orr, Conductress; Mrs. Jennie Dibble, Guard; Mrs. Sue C. Rogers, Assistant Conductress; Mrs. M. A. Reed, Assistant Guard.

Color Guards—Mrs. Mary C. Orr, Mrs. Sue C. Rogers, Mrs. Maggie A. Reed.

The crowning work of the first year was the endowment of a soldiers' free bed at the Cottage Hospital, for the exclusive use of sick and disabled soldiers or members of soldiers' families.

The Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic now number over one hundred members on the membership roll. The Circle may admit to honorary membership any member of the Grand Army of the Republic, or any honorably discharged soldier, sailor or marine, who fought for the Nation in the War of the Rebellion. They shall receive the obligation for honorary membership, and are entitled to the password and other signs of the Order. The Circle has now an honorary membership of over fifty members.

On December 3, 1901, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Mrs. Virginia C. McClure, President; Mrs. Emma B. Bryner, Senior Vice-President; Mrs. Elizabeth K. Bradley, Junior Vice-President; Mrs. Nellie F. Wilkinson, Treasurer; Mrs. Helen M. Wilson, Secretary; Mrs. Lucie M. Swayze, Chaplain; Mrs. Emma M. Sloan, Conductress; Mrs. Sue C. Rogers, Assistant Conductress.

The meetings are held on the first and third Tuesday in each month at 2:30 P. M. in Grand Army Hall.

DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

BY ESTHER T. ELLIS.

Peoria Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, was organized June 14, 1896. Miss Caroline Rice, who had been appointed Chapter Regent, called together fourteen lineal descendants of Revolutionary soldiers. The name of the Chapter was chosen, and a charter applied for by Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, Mrs. Lydia J. Clarke, Mrs. Kate E. Rousseau, Mrs. Helen S. Lines, Mrs. Alice

R. Tyng, Mrs. Esther T. Ellis, Miss Margaret N. Thompson, Miss Elizabeth Cornelison, Miss Alicia De Reimer, Miss Emma T. Lines, Miss Mary E. Culver, Miss Caroline M. Rice, Miss Jennie L. Bryan, Miss Mary Rouse and Miss Margaret Weirick, and the following officers were appointed: Regent, Miss Caroline M. Rice; Vice-Regent, Mrs. Lydia J. Clarke; Secretary, Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng; Registrar, Miss Jennie L. Bryan; Treasurer, Miss Margaret N. Thompson; Historian, Mrs. Esther T. Ellis.

The object of this organization is to preserve documents, relics and records of the Revolutionary period; to observe patriotic anniversaries and mark historic places, that the events they commemorate may not be forgotten, and in all ways to foster patriotism and love of country. The Chapter contributed fifty dollars towards paying for the Soldiers' monument, designed by Frederic Triebel, and erected in the Court House Square in Peoria; twenty dollars for ice, besides a large box of hospital supplies for the soldiers in the Spanish-American war, and, later, a similar box sent to the Hospital in Manila; twenty-five dollars was also given, in the name of the Chapter, to the fund for building a Memorial Hall in Washington, D. C.; and, to the Peoria High School, it has given an engraved copy of Stuart's picture of George Washington.

Meetings are held on the second Tuesday of each month, at which papers on Revolutionary subjects are presented. The Chapter now has fifty-two members, all working to the same end. In perpetuating the memory of patriots and heroes, we hope to aid in the development of the patriotism which leads to the faithful performance of the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship.

In the second year of our organization Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng was chosen Regent. After serving two years she was succeeded by Mrs. Louisa D. Elder, who was re-elected in April, 1900, and again in 1901, with the following other officers: Vice-Regent, Mrs. Isabella Mansfield; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Mary Beasley; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Frances Wittick; Treasurer, Mrs. Ida McLaughlin; Registrar, Mrs. Carrie Rowcliffe; Historian, Mrs. Esther T. Ellis; Chaplain, Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng.

When the State Conference was held in Peoria, June 7 and 8, 1901, Miss Lyle Mansfield, of Peoria Chapter, was elected to the newly created office of Vice State Regent.

ILLINOIS NATIONAL GUARD.

There are at present in the city of Peoria three military companies, all connected with the National Guard—Company G and Company L, with the Fifth Infantry, and Troop G, with the First Cavalry Regiment.

Company L, of the Fifth Infantry, was organized, July 2, 1889, S. O. Tripp being elected Captain, which rank he held until January 7, 1891. E. H. D. Couch was then elected Captain, and served in that capacity until the end of the Spanish War. At the outbreak of the war, James S. Culver, of Springfield, was Colonel; Frank P. Wills, of Decatur, Lieutenant-Colonel; with John C. Cabanis, of Kimmunity, Fred B. Nichols, of Quincy, and Walter F. Colloday, of Decatur, Majors, and Stuart Brown, of Springfield, Adjutant. Company L was officered as follows: Edward H. D. Couch, Captain; Frank R. Pacey, First Lieutenant, and Robert L. Mitchell, Second Lieutenant.

The President issued his call for troops on April 23, 1898, and, on the 25th of the same month, the Governor received notice that the quota from Illinois would be seven regiments of infantry and one of cavalry. The order was immediately issued through the Adjutant-General for the rendezvous of that number of regiments, including the Fifth Infantry, at the State Capital. On the next day the Governor telegraphed the Secretary of War that the seven regiments of infantry and one of cavalry would be in camp by noon of the 27th. On that day the Governor telegraphed again that the seven regiments of infantry and one of cavalry were mobilized at Springfield, awaiting further orders. The Fifth Regiment of Infantry was the first to be mustered into the service of the United States, which occurred on May 27, 1898. The muster roll of Company L shows 84 officers and men enlisted for duty at Peoria, on April 26, 1898, for the period of two years.

This regiment was assigned for duty in the Porto Rico expedition, but it being discovered that Illinois already had three regiments designated for that service, while Indiana had none, the Fifth was detached and an Indiana regiment was put in its place. The regiment was then encamped at the general rendezvous at Chickamauga, Georgia. For this reason the regiment was not permitted to see any of the actual hostilities of the war. It was, however, sent to Newport News with the expectation of embarking for the scene of active warfare, but the war was soon over and the regiment was mustered out of service at Springfield, October 16, 1898.

Captain Couch was tendered a commission in the volunteer service of the United States, and has been, since then, performing duty in the Philippines. Robert Mitchell was elected Captain in his place, and still retains command of the company. Edward E. Wise was elected First Lieutenant, and William H. Thomas, Second Lieutenant, their commissions bearing date, September 25, 1899. The Armory of the company is in the building at the corner of Washington and Fulton Streets, known as the banking house of Zell, Hotchkiss & Co.

Company G, of the Fifth Regiment, was first organized as a Company of the Sons of Veterans, and existed as such for some time before uniting with the National Guard. Its officers are: Thomas J. Simpson, Captain; Frank S. Keas, First Lieutenant; and Frank W. Williams, Second Lieutenant. Its Armory Hall is at No. 231 South Adams Street.

The First Regiment of Cavalry, of which Edward C. Young, of Chicago, is Colonel, and to which Troop G belongs, consists of eight troops, four of which are located at Chicago, one at Springfield, one at Macomb, one at Bloomington and one at Peoria. It is divided into two squadrons, of which the four troops at Chicago compose the First, and the four others, known as the "Country Troops," compose the Second. This Regiment is the only completely organized and equipped regiment of cavalry in the militia service in the United States. Troop C is at present officered as follows: Captain, Stephen O. Tripp; First Lieutenant, Charles A. Rudel; Second Lieutenant, R. W. Rusterholz. It has its armory at the corner of Washington and Fulton Streets, and drills on Friday nights.

At the outbreak of the Spanish War, Colonel Isaac Taylor organized a "Provisional Regiment," fully officered and ready to respond to a call for active duty. The officers were: Isaac Taylor, Colonel; Martin Kingman, Lieutenant-Colonel; Stephen O. Tripp, Senior Major; B. M. Chipperfield, Junior Major; Solomon F. Flint, Adjutant; H. H. Buchanan, Quartermaster; I. M. Sutton, Surgeon; William J. Strode, Assistant Surgeon; and Wesley C. Haskell, Chaplain. Six companies were from Peoria, one from Lewistown, one from Minonk, one from Havana, two from Canton and one from Galesburg. It drilled faithfully until, on account of the short duration of the war, it became apparent that its services would not be needed, when it was disbanded.

About 150 men were enlisted from this county in the different branches of the service for the Spanish and Philippine wars, some of whom have seen service in Cuba, some in Porto Rico and others in the Philippines.

CHAPTER XVIII.

MASONS—INDEPENDENT ORDER OF ODD FELLOWS.

The Order of "Ancient Free and Accepted Masons"—the oldest social fraternity in Illinois history—had its origin in this State on June 3, 1806, when the first Lodge to be organized in the State was instituted at Kaskaskia, with Gen. John Edgar as Worshipful Master; Michael Jones, Senior Warden; James Galbraith, Junior Warden; William Arundel, Secretary; and Robert Robinson, Senior Deacon. A number of men who were prominent in the history of the State were then, or at a later period became, members of the Order. The first Grand Lodge was organized at Vandalia in 1822, with Gov. Shadrach Bond as first Grand Master, but was reorganized, as it now is, at Jacksonville in 1850.

PEORIA LODGE, NO. 15, A. F. & A. M.

It was during the year last named (September, 1840) that ten Masons residing in the city of Peoria, met for consultation, and made application to the Grand Lodge for dispensation to organize a Lodge in this city. Dispensation was granted under date of January 3, 1842, in which Samuel H. Davis was named as Worshipful Master, with A. O. Garrett as Senior Warden, and John King, Junior Warden. A charter was granted December 24, 1842, in which the Lodge was named "Peoria Lodge, No. 15," and the same brethren designated as officers. The Lodge was prosperous from the beginning, their report for the year ending September 30, 1844, showing a membership of forty-seven. In the list of members were many who were then or afterwards prominent in the social, political and business life of Peoria. One of the members, Thomas J. Pickett, became Grand Master in 1851, and another, J. R. Crandall, attained the office of Deputy Grand Master in 1847. Peoria Lodge has always been known as an earnest and active, yet conservative Lodge, with a strong tendency to adhere strictly to ancient Masonic principles and usages. Its membership, which now numbers 350, includes representatives of all lines of business, trades and professions, and is thoroughly representative of the city. Its present officers are: John H. Dunlap, W. M.; Albert P. Smith, S. W.; C. M. Brown, J. W.; William J. Steube, Secretary; Charles W. Teeter, Treasurer; Horace B. McCaddon, S. D.; Harvey Griggs, J. D.; Charles E. Downing, Tyler.

TEMPLE LODGE, NO. 46, A. F. & A. M.

The first meeting of record of those who afterwards became members of Temple Lodge, No. 46, A. F. & A. M., was held October 20, 1846, when a dispensation was read granting to John C. Heyle, Aldine Wilkey, C. B. Stebbins, John King, George T. Metcalfe, William F. Bryan and Elwood Andrew authority to work in the interest of the order. The same document appointed the following as first officers of the organization: George T. Metcalfe, W. M.; John C. Heyle, S. W.; W. F. Bryan, J. W.; John King, Treasurer; and Elwood Andrew, Secretary. It was decided to hold meetings on the last Wednesday of each month, and a committee was appointed to arrange for renting the use of the hall of Peoria Lodge. At a meeting held September 27, 1847, by adjournment from September 22d, Bro. Crandall was elected Representative to the Grand Lodge, which met that year at Quincy. At the regular meeting of the Lodge held on September 29, 1847, the members proceeded to elect officers for the ensuing year. Although this action was held to be irregular, the members thus chosen were subsequently appointed by the Grand Master in somewhat different order. On October 26, 1847, three applicants for membership were admitted and one initiated the same evening. This action was also found to be illegal, having been taken in advance of the issue of a charter by the Grand Lodge, but was cured by the action of the Grand Master at the meeting of November 27th, following. The Lodge was convened November 10, 1847, and the officers named by the Grand Master formally installed by District Deputy Grand Master J. R. Crandall, as follows: George T. Metcalfe, W. M.; J. C. Heyle, S. W. (by proxy); C. B. Stebbins, J. W. The list of officers was afterwards completed by the installation of J. E. King, Treasurer; Elwood Andrew, Secretary; J. R. Crandall, S. D.; J. P. Dennis, J. D.; W. Widenham, Tyler. The present officers (1902) are: Thaddeus M. Simpson, W. M.; C. D. Clarkson, S. W.; A. L. Gregory, J. W.; Peter Anicker, Treasurer; F. E. Richmond, Secretary; W. D. Hadfield, S. D.; T. M. Younglove, J. D.; J. E. Berry and H. R. Dougherty, Stewards; and Charles E. Downing, Tyler. Charles F. Hitchcock, a Past Master of Temple Lodge, became Grand Master of the Grand Lodge in 1899, serving two years.

PEORIA CHAPTER, NO. 7, R. A. M.

Peoria Chapter, No. 7, Royal Arch Masons, was chartered at Columbus, Ohio, by the Grand Chapter of the United States, September 17, 1847, with Samuel H. Davis, Peter Sweat, William Hale, Augustus O. Garrett, John Slye, Eldrick Smith, John E. Dixon, Nathaniel Chapin, Jonathan Reed, John McDougal, John Comstock and Alexander Rogers as charter members. The first High Priest was Samuel H. Davis. Others who have held the office have been Peter Sweat, John Jewell, W. M. Dodge, Stephen T. Stewart, Peter Hopkins, Isaac G. Reynolds, William Rounseville, Samuel Tart, John C. Yates, H. C. Whitridge, Alonzo P. Johnson, S. O. Spring, John Schofield, George F. Henthorne, Thomas I. Ballantine, David H. Tripp, Arthur M. Otman, James A. Calder and Samuel S. Smith. Cook, Andrew Bowman, N. B. Curtis and John C. Heyle—the charter being issued at Hartford, Connecticut, signed by William Blackstone Hubbard, Grand Master, and Benjamin B. French, Recorder. The first officers, installed December 1, 1856, by Eminent Sir J. V. Z. Blaney, Past Commander, of Chicago, were: Henry L. Gaines, E. C.; Clark B. Stebbins, G.; Isaac Underhill, C. G.; A. O. Garrett, P.; William A. Thrush, S. W.; D. S. Thompson, J. W.; William E. Mason, Treasurer; Lewis Keyon, Recorder. The following are Past Commanders: Charles F. Hitchcock, Alexander R. Thompson, A. P. Johnson, S. O. Spring, George F. Henthorne, Joseph Elder, C. R. Vandevort, S. F. Haskins, J. E. Pillsbury, C. M. Brown, Leroy Page, D. H. Tripp, J. L. Cole, A. M. Otman, Samuel S. Smith. The officers for 1902 are: C. E. Fulk, E. C.; Warren Sutliff, Generalissimo; E. F. Buck, C. G.; F. H. Rockwell, S. W.; J. A. Calder, J. W.; Z. D. Ells, Prelate; C. F. Hitchcock, Treasurer; George F. Henthorne, Recorder; R. M. Orr, Standard Bearer; C. E. Collamer, Sword Bearer; A. P. Smith, Warder; Benjamin Bergquist, Sentinel.

ILLINOIS LODGE, NO. 203, A. F. & A. M.

Illinois Lodge, No. 203, A. F. & A. M., was chartered October 6, 1858, the first officers being Stephen H. Burnett, W. M.; Alfred Freeman, S. W.; and David M. Cummings, J. W. The charter members were: Joseph W. Brooks, Thomas Bryant, S. H. Burnett, Octave Chanute, David M. Cummings, Alfred Freeman, Henry L. Gaines, Jonathan Hancock, Uriel H. Kellogg, Henry Nolte, Joseph W. Parish, W. Howell Robinson, David T. N. Sanderson, A. T. Stewart, Thomas A. Smythe, D. S. Thompson, William Augustus Thrush, Henry M. Van Buskirk and Benjamin P. Van Court. The Past Masters of the Lodge during its history embrace the following: 1858, Stephen H. Burnett; 1859-61, Alfred Freeman; 1862-63, no record; 1864, John Swentzel; 1865, George H. Kettelle; 1866-67, Charles Spaulding; 1868, W. B. Whiffen; 1869, William J. Brown; 1870, J. E. Pillsbury; 1871 and 1873, William Rounseville; 1872, William Kellogg, Jr.; 1874, Samuel W. Ottenheimer; 1875-76, 1878, 1880-83, 1888-91 and 1893, William H. Eastman; 1877, James McMillan; 1879, John S. Miller, M. D.; 1884-86, Claude H. Warren; 1887, James Bennett; 1892, Henry C. Lotze; 1894-95, James M. Cutright; 1896, Harry C. Bestor; 1897, William T. Abbott; 1898, J. A. Calder; 1899-1900, Isaac M. Hornbacker; 1901, Fred B. Tracy. The principal officers in 1902 are: Charles E. Fulks, W. M.; John C. Weis, S. W.; Peter Rhinehart, J. W.; Thomas J. Purshley, Treasurer; Ira A. Fisher, Secretary; Charles E. Downing, Tyler.

SCHILLER LODGE, NO. 335, A. F. & A. M.

In the summer of 1859 a number of Masons of German nativity, affiliated to the several Masonic Lodges already established in the City of Peoria, began discussing among themselves the project of organizing a Lodge working in their mother tongue, being encouraged thereto by the success of German Lodges existing in Chicago and other large cities of the country. Having met with encouragement from their American brethren here, a meeting to which all German Master Masons were invited was held on September 15, 1859, at the hall of Temple Lodge, No. 46, then located in the Gurnee Building, on Fulton between Washington and Water Streets, for the purpose of considering the advisability of organizing a new Lodge of the order in Peoria, whose object should be to unite the German Masons in closer communion, and transact its business and confer degrees in the German language. This meeting was called to order by Bro. John N. Niglas. August Schulz was elected Chairman, and J. N. Niglas, Secretary. Definite action was taken October 2, 1859, when an election of officers was held, which resulted in the choice of Albert Potthoff, W. M.; Henry Ullman, S. W.; August Schulz, J. W.; Abraham Frank, Treasurer; J. N. Niglas, Secretary; and Leopold Wolf, Tyler. Charles E. Gillig and John G. Peck were appointed S. and J. D., respectively. The following brethren were the organizers: Abraham Frank, H. N. Frederick, Louis Furst, Charles E. Gillig, Alex. Jakelfalusy, C. Koenig, Simon Lyon, Julius G. Lueder, Frederick Mounighoff, Friedr.

Muller, John N. Niglas, John G. Peck, Alb. Potthoff, Emil Quinke, Karl F. Rotterman, Moritz Rosenblatt, Aug. Schulz, L. Seligman, Godfrey Stiehl, Henry Ullman, Leop. Wolf, Casper Odewald, Justus B. Fleck. The name chosen for the newly organized Lodge was the "Schiller," in commemoration of the immortal poet of that name so dear to every German heart, and whose soulful verse is an inspiration to every son of the fatherland, wherever he may have been wafted by fortune or have built his hearthstone.

With the recommendation of Peoria Lodge, No. 15, the W. M., Bro. A. Potthoff, applied to the M. W. G. Master, Ira A. W. Buck, for the issue of a dispensation, which was granted, and, on November 11, 1859, the Lodge entered upon its year of probation under this dispensation. October 3, 1860, a charter was granted by the M. W. Grand Lodge, and the No. 335 was applied. From this time on the Lodge has worked under the name of "Schiller Lodge, No. 335, A. F. & A. M.," and has ever maintained a high standard among its sister Lodges. The membership has increased from the original twenty-three to 128. Of course, many have gone to the great mysterious Beyond; others have removed and joined other Lodges, and thus the organization has had its share of losses as well as gains. The principal officers at the present time are: R. L. Pasquay, W. M.; D. Janssen, S. W.; Emil Beichett, J. W.; A. L. Schimpff, Treasurer; J. Schlatter, Secretary; and John Schultz and John D. Heinen, Stewards.

PEORIA COUNCIL, NO. 11, R. & S. M.

The Peoria Council of Royal and Select Masons was organized under dispensation, March 21, 1862, the first officers being: Augustus O. Garrett, Thrice Illustrious Master; Wilber McKaig, Deputy Illustrious Master; W. M. Dodge, Principal Conductor of Work; Jacob Darst, Treasurer; Lewis Keyon, Recorder; Thomas A. H. Smythe, Captain of the Guard. A charter was granted by the Grand Council of the State of Illinois, October 10, 1862, the Council to be organized in accordance therewith to be known as Peoria Council, No. 11, Royal and Select Masons. The following were the first officers installed under the charter, viz.: Augustus O. Garrett, Thrice Illustrious Master; James E. Prescott, Deputy Illustrious Master; W. M. Dodge, Principal Conductor of Work; Thomas

Alfred A. Phelps

A. H. Smythe, Captain of the Guard; Jacob Darst, Treasurer; Lewis Keyon, Recorder. The officers at the present time (1902) are: Chester D. Clarkson, Thrice Illustrious Master; Edwin F. Buck, Deputy Illustrious Master; George F. Henthorne, Conductor of Work; Peter Anicker, Treasurer; C. F. Hitchcock, Recorder; Charles E. Fulks, Captain of Guard; John M. Simpson, Conductor of Council; James Cole, Jr., Steward; B. Bergquist, Sentinel.

ANCIENT ACCEPTED SCOTTISH RITE.

Four separate bodies constitute this branch of the Order, having jurisdiction of the advanced degrees of Masonry, viz.: (1) Grand Lodge of Perfection, which confers degrees from the 4th to the 14th; (2) Council of Princes of Jerusalem, embracing two degrees, the Historical and Traditional Grades; (3) Chapter of Rose Croix, having jurisdiction of two degrees, the Doctrinal and Christian Grades; and (4) Consistory of Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret, which confers the Chivalric and Philosophic Grades from the 10th to 32d. The Order was organized under charter granted to Yates City, Illinois, February 25, 1867; in February, 1869, the first meeting was held in Peoria, and, in 1874, the name was changed to "Peoria Consistory, Valley of Peoria." The present membership of the seven branches (1902) is 423, and their several Boards of officers are as follows: (1) Grand Lodge of Perfection—Johnson L. Cole, T. P. G. M.; J. M. Sawyer, Dep. G. M.; Chester D. Clarkson, Sr. G. W.; H. W. Danforth, Jr. G. W.; James L. Robertson, Gr. Orator; Thomas J. Pursley, Gr. Treasurer; B. F. Cartwright, Gr. Secretary; Charles A. Johnson, M. of C.; James A. Cole, Jr. Capt. of Guard; Gerald Franks, Gr. Hospitaler; Benjamin Bergquist, Gr. Tyler. (2) Council Princes of Jerusalem—Arthur M. Otman, M. E. Sov. Prince G. M.; David H. Tripp, Gr. High Priest D. G. M.; John M. Hartwig, Sr. G. W.; Herman W. Danforth, Jr. G. W.; Thomas J. Pursley, Gr. Treasurer; Benjamin F. Cartwright, Gr. Secretary; George W. Curtiss, Gr. M. of Ceremonies; Charles A. Weiberg, Gr. M. of Entrance; Benjamin Bergquist, Gr. Tyler. (3) Peoria Chapter Rose Croix—George W. Curtiss, M. W. and P. M.; A. M. Otman, M. E. P. Kt. Sr. W.; H. W. Danforth, M. E. P. Kt. Jr. W.; David H. Tripp, Gr. Orator; Thomas J. Pursley, Gr. Treasurer; Benjamin F. Cartwright, Gr. Secretary; Samuel

S. Smith, Gr. Hospitaler; Chester D. Clarkson, Gr. M. of Ceremonies; Fred. W. Soady, Gr. Capt. of Guard; Benjamin Bergquist, Gr. Tyler. (4) Peoria Consistory S. P. of the R. S.—Sylvester O. Spring, Commander in Chief; George W. Curtiss, First Lieut.-Com.; Seth F. Haskins, Second Lieut.-Com.; David H. Tripp, Min. of State and Gr. Orator; Johnson L. Cole, Gr. Chancellor; Thomas J. Pursley, Gr. Treasurer; B. F. Cartwright, Gr. Secretary; James Bennett, Gr. Eng. and Arch.; Samuel S. Smith, Gr. Hospitaler; A. M. Otman, Gr. M. of Ceremonies; Jacob H. Floreth, Gr. Capt. of Guard; Frank G. Godel, Gr. S. B.; B. Bergquist, Gr. Sentinel.

CENTRAL CITY CHAPTER, NO. 42, O. E. S.

The Central City Chapter, No. 42, Order of the Eastern Star, was organized August 19, 1872, by a man named Thompson, the following list embracing the names of the charter members: Willis Y. Francis, Sarah J. Francis, Josephine Francis, S. P. Cumming, Martha A. Cumming, Joseph Hazzard, Addie Hazzard, Charles Robinson, Sena Robinson, D. B. Allen, Sarah Allen, Crosby White, Mary J. White, William Entwistle, Ann Entwistle, Mary A. Entwistle, James Bennett, Mary J. Bennett, George L. Bean, Lute E. Bean, John A. Bush and wife, Ralph Wolfe, Henry S. Ottenheimer, Frank Baily, E. R. Mann, Marion A. Mann, C. H. Rice, Elvira Rice, Charles Brockett and Clara Brockett. The first Board of officers consisted of Martha A. Cumming, Worthy Matron; Willis Y. Francis, Worthy Patron; Josephine Francis, Associate Matron; Marion A. Mann, Secretary; Eliza Mann, Treasurer. At the date of the organization of the Chapter, the Grand Chapter of the Order had not been organized in Illinois; therefore the Peoria organization worked under the jurisdiction of the Grand Chapter of New York. In 1874 the Grand Chapter of Illinois was organized, and in 1876 the Central City Chapter of Peoria transferred its allegiance from the New York Chapter to the new organization in this State. Up to that time it had been known as "No. 120," but on its transfer to the jurisdiction of the Grand Chapter of Illinois, it was given a new charter and assigned the number 42. The Central City Chapter has been honored by having one of its members twice elected to the highest office in the gift of the Grand Chapter, one to the office of Grand Treasurer, and the choice of others to various appointive offices. The Order is designed for the support and protection of the needy among the wives, mothers, widows, daughters and sisters of Master Masons. Its members hold themselves in readiness at all times to assist the fraternity whenever called upon, and the cry of the widow and orphan is never heard in vain. The Board of officers for 1902 consists of Ada Wertz, Worthy Matron; Harvey Griggs, Worthy Patron; Albina Wolgamott, Associate Matron; Helen Baxter, Secretary; Minnie Cartwright, Treasurer.

ELECTA CHAPTER, NO. 175, O. E. S.

Electa Chapter, No. 175, Order of the Eastern Star, was organized under dispensation, April 16 1891, with fourteen charter members, as follows: Mrs. Helen Eastman, Mrs. Arvilla Cole, Joseph M. Cole, Albert Snyder, James A. Hutchinson, Mrs. Allie Hutchinson, D. John Forbes, Mrs. Nettie Hoover, Dr. I. L. Hoover, B. H. Potter, Mrs. Gressa Potter, Henry Grey, Joseph Elder and Mrs. Amelia Elder—six ladies and eight gentlemen. At present (1902) the Chapter has a membership of 212. The officers are: Mrs. Helen Eastman, Worthy Matron; D. J. Forbes, Worthy Patron; Mrs. Nettie Hoover, Associate Matron; Mrs. Ida Snyder, Conductress; Mrs. Julia Tippetts, Associate Conductress; Joseph M. Elder, Secretary; Martha Short, Treasurer; Mrs. Valley Hall, Ada; Mrs. Amelia Elder, Ruth; Miss Hattie Page, Esther; Mrs. Viola M. Louck, Martha; Mrs. Arvilla Cole, Electa; Albert Snyder, Warden; Henry Price, Sentinel; Mrs. Allie Hutchinson, Organist.

MOHAMMED TEMPLE OF THE MYSTIC SHRINE.

The Mohammed Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, was organized August 11, 1893, with the following officers: Sylvester O. Spring, Illustrious Potentate; Seth F. Haskins, Chief Rabban; George F. Henthorne, Assistant Rabban; J. W. Sessions, High Priest and Prophet; H. J. Graham, Oriental Guide; D. H. Tripp, Treasurer; W. W. Wallace, Recorder. The officers for 1902 are as follows: Seth F. Haskins, Illustrious Potentate; Z. D. Ells, Chief Rabban; Louis Zinger, Assistant Rabban; W. I. Slemmons, High Priest and Prophet; D. H. Tripp, Treasurer; C. F. Hitchcock, Recorder; Emil G. Isch, Oriental Guide; Chester

D. Clarkson, First Ceremonial Master; Warren Sutliff, Second Ceremonial Master; Benjamin Bergquist, Sentinel.

MASONIC TEMPLE.

When William Hale laid off his land into additions to Peoria, he donated one block, located between Jackson, Eaton and Perry Streets and Glendale Avenue, as a Masonic Cemetery. This continued to be used for that purpose for many years, and the remains of many of the most prominent citizens were interred therein. But in the course of time it became surrounded with dwelling houses and had to be abandoned as a place of burial. About the year 1872-73 these remains were removed to Springdale Cemetery, the land was divided up into lots and sold, and, with the proceeds, a lot was purchased at the corner of Adams and Liberty Streets, now known as Schradzki's corner, and about 1882 a large business block was erected thereon, called the Masonic Temple. In doing so a large debt was incurred, which ultimately became a burden, and the property was sold about the year 1890.

About the year 1898, Peoria Consistory, A. A. S. R.; Peoria Commandery, No. 3, K. T.; Peoria Chapter, No. 7, R. A. M., and Mohammed Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., purchased the Universalist Church on Main Street, for $20,000, and expended $10,000 in remodeling it for their use as a hall, for which purpose it is now used.

HENRY BROWN LODGE, NO. 22, A. F. & A. M.

Henry Brown Lodge, No. 22, A. F. & A. M., (Colored), was organized in 1877, with thirty charter members, and at the present time (1902) has a membership of thirty-five. The present officers are: Horace F. Johnson, W. M.; Harry F. Donegan, S. W.; Robert Polk, J. W.; Charles N. Turner, Treasurer; Henry Wilson, Secretary; Henry M. Burrell, Tyler; James McKinney, J. D.; Robert H. Davis, S. D.; Andrew Whitesides, S. S.; Granville Thompson, J. S.; Alfred Sommers, Chaplain. The list of Past Worshipful Masters embraces the following names: J. W. Wagner (five years), Walter Campbell, John W. H. Wagoner and Archie Ward (one year each), Joseph Johnson (five years), Henry C. Gibson (three years), Henry M. Bunnell (one year), George S. Hawkins (two years), Horace Payne (four years). The Lodge has had three Secretaries previous to the present incumbent, viz.: John W. H. Wagoner (three years), John W. Wagoner (thirteen years), and Henry C. Gibson (nine years).

LANCASTER LODGE, NO. 106, A. F. & A. M.

Lancaster Lodge, No. 106, A. F. & A. M., is one of the oldest Masonic Lodges in Peoria County, having been organized in the town of Lancaster, Peoria County, August 29, 1851, under dispensation granted by the Grand Lodge of Illinois at Belleville, July 3d, of that year, on the petition of Isaiah R. Dubois, Allen L. Fahnestock, James Styles, Daniel McCook, Eli Taylor, Guy Campbell, Edwin J. Jones, E. W. Resor, A. W. Inman and William Hays. The first officers were Daniel McCook, W. M.; E. J. Jones, S. W.; A. L. Fahnestock, J. W.; John W. Robbins, Secretary; Samuel Reyno, S. D.; James Styles, J. D. Daniel McCook was the father of the celebrated fighting McCook family of Ohio, and was killed during the Morgan raid through that State in 1864. On October 6, 1851, a charter was obtained from the Grand Lodge of Illinois, and at the first election under it, held January 30, 1852, the following officers were elected: E. J. Jones, W. M.; J. W. Robbins, S. W.; Guy Campbell, J. W.; Daniel McCook, Secretary; Isaiah Dubois, Treasurer; Eli Taylor, Tyler. Of the first two sets of officers, Mr. Fahnestock, Mr. Dubois and Mr. Campbell were living in 1901. Mr. Fahnestock was W. M. from January 15, 1853, to June 6, 1862, when he enlisted for service in the War of the Rebellion. An incident in the history of the Lancaster Lodge was the conferring of three degrees by dispensation upon Alexander McD. McCook, the son of the first W. M., then a cadet in West Point Military Academy, who afterwards became a Major-General during the Civil War. Glasford is the present headquarters of Lancaster Lodge, the principal officers being G. M. Saylor, W. M.; J. L. Taylor, S. W.; A. L. Fahnestock, J. W.; J. A. Fahnestock, Secretary.

GEORGE WASHINGTON LODGE, NO. 222, A. F. & A. M.

The first meeting of George Washington Lodge, No. 222, A. F. & A. M., of Chillicothe, Illinois, was held January 12, 1856, under dispensation of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, with William McLean as W. M. On October 7, 1856, a charter was granted by the Grand Lodge, the charter members being William McLean, H. A. Raney, Latham A. Wood, D. B. McMaster, Samuel C. Jack, Nathaniel Chapman and Hiram Goodsell. At the regular meeting, held December 6, 1856, the following officers were elected: William McLean, W. M.; H. A. Raney, S. W.; Cyrus Reed, J. W.; Henry Truitt, Treasurer; J. F. Thomas, Secretary; and E. C. Sprague, Tyler. Other early members of the Lodge were Edward H. Jack, Orrin Booth, Samuel Ayling and S. A. Todd. The list of officers for the present year (1902) is as follows: E. L. Walker, W. M.; John Weaver, S. W.; George McWhorter, J. W.; H. Reed, Treasurer; George P. Lester, Secretary; H. V. Doten, S. D.; R. Humm, J. D.; J. H. Friedrich and H. G. Friedrich, Stewards; A. Jones, Tyler.

HOREB LODGE, NO. 363, A. F. & A. M.

Horeb Lodge, No. 363, A. F. & A. M., was organized at Elmwood, Peoria County, under charter issued October 1, 1861, Ira A. W. Buck officiating as Grand Master. There were twenty-six charter members, including the following: Hugh Armson, C. G. Eggleston, M. R. H. Mase, A. Hull, P. H. Hopkins, N. D. Jay, L. H. Kerr, J. E. Knable, W. H. Kellogg, Benjamin Hillis, J. J. Lowe, John Mortz, Ephraim Marshall, J. E. Riner, Harrison Steele, N. M. Swisher, George W. Smith, Philip Snyder, J. H. Truax, A. N. Wilcox, A. J. Wiley, H. H. Wood and four others. The following were the first officers: L. H. Kerr, W. M.; J. E. Knable, S. W.; and Lewis Corbin, J. W. The officers for 1902 are: M. H. Spence, W. M.; T. C. Radborne, S. W.; E. D. Yerion, J. W.; A. J. Brown, Treasurer; E. A. Wilson, Secretary; J. D. Hawks, S. D.; George Barrett, J. D.; James Brown, S. S.; J. Adams, J. S.; C. C. Gilbert, Chaplain; Z. L. Gilbert, Marshal; W. T. Wooton, Tyler.

ALTA LODGE, NO. 748, A. F. & A. M.

Alta Lodge, No. 748, A. F. & A. M., at Alta, Peoria County, held its first meeting on February 3, 1876, the following brothers being present: Dr. John Gillette, Amos Edwards, N. H. Silliman, John C. Wood, B. C. Vaughn, W. H. Cassity, C. J. Haller and William Stieckler. The Lodge worked under dispensation until October 28, 1876, when, having received its charter, it was organized under the same, its charter members, besides those already named as present at the first meeting, being John Carr, A. Heaverin and J. V. H. Robinson. D. D. Grand Master, W. H. Robinson, assisted by Bro. Charles Cummings, officiated at the organization and in the installation of the following officers, who were elected at the same time: Dr. John Gillette, W. M.; Amos Edwards, S. W.; A. H. Silliman, J. W.; B. C. Vaughn, Secretary; J. C. Wood, Treasurer; W. H. Cassity, S. D.; C. J. Haller, J. D.; William Stickler, Tyler. The Lodge has been prosperous since its organization. At the present time it has fifty-three members. The officers for 1902 are: Sumner N. Smith, W. M.; John F. Koener, S. W.; Charles D. Dickinson, J. W.; A. H. Shaw, Treasurer; Dr. J. J. Tolson, Secretary; J. H. Harwood, S. D.; Lee Heaverin, J. D.; John Wood, S. S.; James Maxwell, J. S.; Frank Watson, Tyler.

PRINCEVILLE LODGE, NO. 360, A. F. & A. M.

Princeville Lodge, A. F. & A. M., was organized August 25, 1860, with Levi Lapham, W. M.; W. S. Bates, S. W.; David Fast, Jr., J. W.; David Fast, Treasurer; George W. Scott, Secretary; Sheldon Rilea, S. D.; A. A. Fast, J. D. Rev. J. S. Millsapps, Charles G. Taylor and M. M. Blanchard petitioned for degrees at the first meeting. On October 1, 1861, the Lodge received its charter from the Grand Lodge and organized as Princeville Lodge, No. 360. The charter members included the names already mentioned as constituting the first officers, with Henry De Bord, Charles G. Taylor, M. M. Blanchard and John L. Blanchard. The officers were installed by Bros. D. D. Irwin and Lewis Keyon, of Peoria. The following have served as Masters of the Lodge: Levi Lapham, William S. Bates, J. L. Blanchard (sixteen years), W. Halter, William Simpson, John Bowman, H. A. Raney, O. B. Slane (five years), P. S. Dusten, A. M. Wilson, J. G. Mendenhall, H. J. Cheeseman (four years), and W. H. Blanchard. In 1896 the Lodge moved into its present quarters, which is the best and largest of its kind in Peoria County. The present officers (1902) are: J. C. Whelpley, W. M.; J. V. Christian, S. W.; S. T. Henry, J. W.; D. Kinnah, Treasurer; J. F. Carman, Secretary; F. J. Wilson, S. D.; W. J. Price, J. D.; W. S. Weaver and M. L. Sniff, Stewards; Bert Brown, Tyler. The present membership is sixty-six.

INDEPENDENT ORDER ODD FELLOWS.

The history of Odd Fellowship in Illinois dates from 1836, "Western Star" Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. F., being instituted at Alton on June 11, of that year. In 1838 the Grand Lodge of Illinois was instituted at the same place, and re-organized at Springfield in 1842. Alton seems to have been the nursery of the Order, as Wildey Encampment, No. 1, was organized at that place the year of the organization of the Grand Lodge, and the first Grand Encampment at Peoria in 1850, with Charles H. Constable Grand Patriarch.

COLUMBIA LODGE NO. 21.

The pioneer Lodge of Independent Order of Odd Fellows in the city of Peoria, had its origin in 1846, when, in compliance with a petition to the Grand Master a dispensation was granted, and, on December 8, of that year, Columbia Lodge No. 21, was instituted under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, by the R. W. D. D. Grand Master, A. R. Robinson, assisted by the D. D. Grand Master of Kentucky, the ceremony taking place in the old Masonic Hall at the corner of Water and Main Streets. The originators of the movement were Messrs. John Payne, Samuel S. Easton, Francis A. McNeil, John Wham, John M. Law and E. S. Anderson, all of whom are now deceased. Following the institution of the Lodge, the following names of applicants for admission to the Order were received and acted upon, viz.: H. A. Foster, Herman E. Blakely, Robert P. Taylor and James L. Fash. The officers of the new Lodge elected and installed were: John M. Law, Noble Grand; John Payne, Vice Grand; H. A. Foster, Secretary; and Samuel S. Easton, Treasurer. The following appointive officers were named: Rev. Francis A. McNeil, Chaplain; H. E. Blakely, Warden; W. A. Flack, Conductor; J. H. Rankin, J. S. N. G.; James L. Fash, R. S. N. G.; Robert P. Taylor, L. S. N. G.; Joseph Clegg, R. S. V. G.; Paul Perrin, L. S. V. G. The first public recognition came in the form of an invitation from the Peoria Bridge Company to assist in laying the cornerstone of the bridge, which was accepted, the ceremony being performed May 3, 1848. On September 5, 1848, the State was divided into seventeen Districts, Columbia Lodge being assigned to the Eighth, which included the counties of Peoria, Stark, Fulton and Tazewell. Past Grand

N C Proctor

Master John M. Law was appointed the first District Deputy, his duty being to visit each Lodge in the District and preside at the installation of officers. The first death occurring among the members of the Lodge was that of Robert Moore, whose funeral ceremonies were properly observed by members of the Order. On May 25, 1852, preliminary steps were taken for the organization of a new Lodge, and, on June 8th, eleven members took withdrawal cards for that purpose, Columbia Lodge donating $30 for the benefit of the new organization. (See "Fort Clark Lodge.") During the year 1865, several members who could not control Columbia Lodge according to their wishes, withdrew with the intention of organizing a new Lodge; but the Grand Master having investigated the subject, decided that the interests of the Order would not be subserved by the institution of a new Lodge, so the scheme fell through. So low in membership was Columbia Lodge at one time that the advisability of surrendering the charter was seriously discussed, until eight members came forward with a donation of $35 apiece to clear off the debt, and the Lodge took a new lease of life. In the course of time it moved from its first quarters at the corner of Main and Water Streets to Adams and Fulton, the present site of the Woolner Building; then to the Dewein Building; next to the R. S. Cox Building at the corner of Adams and Fulton, and in 1893, with the Western Lodge to the Masonic Temple, where it remained until 1899, when these two Lodges took possession of their own property at the corner of Liberty and Madison Streets. The oldest living member of Columbia Lodge is Bro. John A. Bush, who has always taken an active part in the affairs of the Order, and has enjoyed all the honors that could come to any member. His reminiscences of the early days of Odd Fellowship in Peoria are full of interest for members of the Order of the present day. The officers for 1902 are: Harry S. Bovey, N. G.; B. Bohen Mibigan, V. G.; L. C. Hinckle, Recording Secretary; D. G. Clemow, Financial Secretary; E. J. Powers, Treasurer; George B. Oatman, Warden; George Brockett, Conductor; Dr. A. A. Crooks, I. S. G.; C. M. Uphold, O. S. G.

PEORIA ENCAMPMENT, NO. 15.

Peoria Encampment, No. 15, was instituted by special warrant on February 7, 1850, P. C. P.

Burns officiating. The charter members of the organization were: A. R. Gardner, W. H. Davis, John Anderson, H. A. Foster, N. Boilvin, A. B. Fash, H. S. Austin, J. M. Law, James Stewart, Onslow Peters, E. N. Powell, Charles Fisher, H. G. Weston, Horace G. Anderson, George C. Bestor. Of these, Mr. Weston is the sole survivor. Horace G. Anderson died at his home in Peoria, February 16, 1902. The first officers of the Encampment were: J. M. Law, C. P.; Horace G. Anderson, H. P.; E. N. Powell, S. W.; H. A. Foster, Secretary; John Anderson, Treasurer; Charles Fisher, J. W.; George C. Bestor, Guard; A. N. Boilvin, Sentinel. H. G. Anderson was the first Representative to the Grand Encampment. Soon after the original institution of the Encampment it was reorganized under charter of the R. W. Grand Encampment of the State of Illinois. The officers for 1902 are: William H. Spangenberger, C. P.; J. W. Crum, H. P.; F. E. Brackman, S. W.; W. B. Uphold, Secretary; D. G. Clemow, Treasurer; C. M. Uphold, J. W. Charles D. Brainard is present Deputy Grand Patriarch and Representative to the Grand Encampment.

FORT CLARK LODGE, NO. 109.

Fort Clark Lodge, No. 109, the second of the Order to be organized in Peoria, was instituted July 7, 1852, the outgrowth of the pioneer Lodge Columbia, with fourteen charter members, namely: Henry S. Austin, Alexander Bishop, Matthew W. McReynolds, Nathaniel C. Nason, Samuel P. Hazzard, John H. Hall, Edward L. Norton, Lorin G. Pratt, John Warner, Tilman Wagener, Abram Beard, S. L. Moses, Robert P. Hamilton and B. C. Sweeney. During the fifty years of its existence the names of more than 800 different persons have been enrolled on its list of members. Of these, over seventy have died while in membership; 229 have taken cards of withdrawal—most of them transferring their membership to Lodges in other localities to which they had removed; eleven have been expelled for misconduct, and nearly 400 have been stricken from the roll for non-payment of dues. The average number of members in good standing during the entire period has been 120; present membership, 194. In 1861-62, twenty of its members, out of a total of eighty, entered the army of the Union, several of whom gave up their lives for their country. All but five of the twenty were commissioned officers. Among them were Colonels John Bryner, David D. Irons, John N. Cromwell, Addison S. Norton and Abraham H. Ryan, and Captains Charles E. Denison, John H. Hall, Charles H. Deane, Thomas S. Lupton, Stephen S. Tripp and John R. Ziegler. The total revenue of the Lodge during its existence has been about $80,000, of which $26,106 has been expended for relief purposes—in aid of sick and distressed members, for burying the dead, in caring for widows and orphans of members, and other benevolences. At the time of the great Chicago fire, Fort Clark Lodge contributed $400 for the relief of the sufferers by that disaster, the largest amount contributed by any other Lodge in the State being $300. The Lodge occupies the second and third stories of their fine building on the block above the Post Office on Main Street—the lot having been purchased in 1900 for $6,500, and a fine three-story and basement brick building erected thereon at a cost of about $16,000. This building was dedicated with imposing ceremonies on the first day of this new century, with the Grand Master of the State, J. R. Kewley, and the Grand Secretary, J. R. Miller, in charge. The present officers of the Lodge are: H. J. Horne, Noble Grand; C. M. McBride, Vice Grand; George E. Wilde, Recording Secretary; Daniel E. Harker, Financial Secretary; Levi B. Gibson, Treasurer. The Representative to the Grand Lodge is O. B. Champney. Fort Clark has been honored by the Grand Lodge in the election of one of its members (Henry S. Austin) Grand Master (1861-62), and Grand Representative (1854-55), and another member (N. C. Nason) for seventeen years to the office of Grand Secretary.

WESTERN LODGE, NO. 295.

This Lodge was installed, March 27, 1861, by Grand Master H. S. Austin, with sixteen charter members, as follows: Jacob Lorentz, William Miller, M. A. Ruppelius, M. Pfeiffer, Jacob Riehm, Charles S. Soupe, Henry Englebad, John Tajden, Henry A. Bush, F. C. Heinzen, A. Schrader, Charles Breier, Henry Bruse, John Wagoner, Louis Buchholz, Philip Bender. The first officers were: Jacob Lorentz, N. G.; H. A. Bush, V. G.; F. C. Heinzen, Rec. Sec.; William Miller, Per. Sec.; Philip Bender, Treas. The officers at present time (1902) are: T. G. Becker, Noble Grand; John Bohi, Vice Grand; H. Diesenberg, Rec. Sec.; Jacob Maus, Per Sec.; John M.

Hartwig, Treasurer. The Lodge meets every Thursday evening in its Lodge Rooms at the corner of South Madison Avenue and Liberty Streets.

HOPPNUNG ENCAMPMENT, NO. 155.

Hoffnung Encampment, No. 155, I. O. O. F., was instituted May 22, 1874, by Deputy Grand Patriarch N. C. Nason, with six charter members, as follows: Henry A. Bush, Philip Auer, Philip Stiller, Philip Griebel, George Philip Reichardt and William Miller. The first Board of officers consisted of Mr. Auer, Chief Patriarch; Mr. Bush, High Priest; Mr. Stiller, Senior Warden; Mr. Miller, Scribe; Mr. Reichardt, Treasurer; and Rageth Joos, Junior Warden. The following additional members were elected at this meeting: Henry Kriger, Philip Kamerer, A. Siedle, Henry A. Hurst and Charles Rojahn. The present officers are: Grand Patriarch, Herman Diesenberg; High Priest, Charles Esken; Senior Warden, F. G. Becker; Scribe, William L. Wandschneider; Treasurer, Charles Rojahn; Junior Warden, Jacob Maus. The Encampment is in a healthy condition, with a membership of fifty in good standing.

CANTON WILDEY, NO. 4, PATRIARCHS MILITANT.

Canton Wildey was mustered into service in Peoria, December 30, 1885, by Brig.-Gen. John C. Smith, commanding the Division of the Lakes. The charter members were: John Jones, E. M. Clark, John Wagner, Charles D. Brainard, A. F. Gable, A. C. Davis, Henry Detweiller, R. Joos, Jacob Hoffman, O. F. Fogelmark, Nathan Gumbiner, F. H. Borris, Philip Auer, L. H. Sullivan, John A. Bush, L. M. Brockett, Henry Oldridge, George H. Fash, F. N. Hester, W. C. Zigler, Peter Bickett, Louis Hoffman, J. T. Mains, C. W. Cram. The first officers consisted of George H. Fash, Commandant; C. D. Brainard, Lieutenant; F. N. Hester, Ensign; John Jones, Clerk; Philip Auer, Accountant; E. M. Clark, Standard Bearer; Jacob Hoffman, Guard; R. Joos, Sentinel; John Wagner, Picket. The present membership (1902) is twenty-seven. The officers are: Andrew Distler, Comdt.; W. B. Uphold, Lieut.; Herman Diesenberg, Ensign; D. G. Clemow, Clk.; John M. Hartung, Acct.; F. A. Becker, S. B.; John Gauss, G.; Jacob Maus, Sent.; G. A. Max Mahler, Picket. The meetings of the Canton are held in Odd Fellows Hall, at the corner of Madison Avenue and Liberty Street, every Thursday evening.

E. A. Proctor

FRIENDSHIP ENCAMPMENT, NO. 146.

Friendship Encampment, No. 146, I. O. O. F., of Peoria, was instituted June 10, 1891, by J. F. Van Horn, of Rock Island, Grand Patriarch of the State as Instituting Officer, assisted by Grand Scribe J. C. Smith, of Chicago, Past Chief Patriarch John A. Bush, of Peoria, and others. The Encampment started into life with a membership of sixty-two. It has been fairly prosperous and its members much interested in the Patriarchal Order. Its meetings are well attended and enjoyed, as banquets and social lunches are of frequent occurrence. The present officers are: Chief Patriarch, J. R. Dickens; High Priest, H. J. Horne; Senior Warden, J. J. Arnold; Junior Warden, H. C. Herman; Recording Scribe, George E. Wilde; Financial Scribe, Philip Smith; Treasurer, John Brodbeck.

PEORIA REBEKAH LODGE, NO. 113.

In the late 'seventies a few faithful and energetic Odd Fellows, who had received the Rebekah degree in the Subordinate Lodge, feeling the need of a Rebekah organization in Peoria, banded themselves together as "The Benevolent Society of the Daughters of Rebekah," whose united efforts were to relieve the distressed, visit the sick and care for the orphans. They worked under this name until they obtained a charter and were regularly instituted as the "Peoria Rebekah Lodge, No. 113," working under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Illinois, with the following brothers and sisters as charter members: Brother L. M. Brockett, E. B. Bond, J. B. Doolittle, Philip Smith, Nathan Crutchfield, Jacob D. Long, L. R. Bergstrand, J. H. Wagner, J. W. Herkardt, D. C. Frazer, N. C. Nason, Philip Griebel, John G. Lawrence; Sisters E. B. Bond, Hannah Bond, J. R. Crutchfield, Mary Doolittle, M. J. Cragen, E. M. Bergstrand, M. E. Carmichael, J. W. Herkardt, Anna D. Nason, M. Griebel.

On February 9, 1881, Bro. N. C. Nason, Grand Secretary, called the meeting to order, and, acting as instituting officer, installed the following as the first officers of the Lodge: Noble Grand, Brother Philip Smith; Vice Grand, Sister M. J.

From the beginning the organization flourished numerically as well as otherwise, increasing from the charter membership of twenty-three to sixty-seven members during the first year, and in a short time ranked among the first Lodges of its kind in the State. Its members have always figured more or less in the State Assemblies, among whom is Sister Matilda Griebel, who was chosen as the first President of the first Rebekah Convention (now called "Assembly") of this State, held in Chicago. The Degree Staff of No. 113 was the first to exemplify the degree work before the State Assembly.

From the beginning of the institution for the Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home, at Lincoln, Illinois, the Peoria Rebekah Lodge has, in various and effective ways, contributed its mite toward making it a success. Three of its members, viz., Sisters Roxey Bradley, Matilda Griebel and Past Grand Patriarch John A. Bush, served on the first Board of Directors. On March 7, 1894, a number of the members of this Lodge withdrew and formed themselves into another organization known as the Eleanor Rebekah Lodge, No. 335, of Peoria, Illinois (which see).

The Peoria Rebekah Lodge has, at various times, rendered other and financial assistance to the Orphans' Home, and also to the Old Folks' Home, at Mattoon, Illinois, in the way of clothing, money and otherwise, always keeping in view the fundamental principles upon which our forefathers founded the Order—those of Friendship, Love and Truth. It has ever been actively engaged in promoting the welfare of the Order in general, not forgetting to bury the dead, to visit the sick, and comfort the suffering, and to relieve the distressed, and, withal, to wield a wholesome, moral and social influence over its own members and their families, for all of which it has been amply rewarded by the inevitable results of these commendable and divinely instituted undertakings, which, in the very essence of their nature, would predict a substantial increase of membership and weave about the inmost natures of each the subtle and firm web of love and appreciation one for the other, and all for our beloved Order.

The Lodge officers for the year 1902 are as follows: Noble Grand, Mrs. Bertha Guttenfelder; Vice Grand, Miss Augusta Antcliff; Secretary, Mrs. Fannie Anderson; Financial Secretary, Mrs. Ida Potthoff; Treasurer, Mrs. Augusta Antcliff; Warden, Mrs. Crum; Conductor, Mrs. Jacob Liddle; Inside Guard, Mrs. Violet Corbett; Outside Guardian, Mr. Henry Guttenfelder; Right Supporter Noble Grand, Mrs. Mamie Martin; Left Supporter Noble Grand, Mrs. Emma Frederick; Right Supporter Vice Grand, Mrs. Charlotte Oeldrich; Left Supporter Vice Grand, Mrs. Frona Benson; Chaplain, Mrs. E. Scott.

ELEANOR REBEKAH LODGE, NO. 335.

After a series of eight preliminary meetings—the first of which was held on January 30, 1894—for the purpose of considering plans for the organization and maintenance of a second Rebekah Auxiliary of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in the city of Peoria, on April 10, 1894, a new Lodge was brought into existence and christened Eleanor Rebekah Lodge, No. 335. It was named in honor of Mrs. Eleanor Jones, a former member of the Rebekah Auxiliary, ever faithful to the duties and obligations of the Order, and to whom the name implied a life of constant endeavor and service for the benefit of her afflicted associates. She received the Rebekah degree in 1856, five years after its presentation and adoption by the Sovereign Grand Lodge, but some time before the chartered Rebekah Lodges were organized. Sister Jones answered to the summons to the Grand Lodge above, April 30, 1889, but her influence still remains with the Order. Her husband was numbered among the charter members. The impressive ceremonies of instituting the Lodge were conducted by Mrs. Anna E. Moreland, of Mattoon, Illinois, Past President of the Rebekah State Assembly of Illinois, acting as the special deputy of Grand Master Henry A. Stone, assisted by Mrs. Minnie Walkup, of Mattoon, as Grand Secretary, and Mrs. Rosa A. Sands, of Lacon, as Grand Marshal. The Lodge began its career with 117 members. The first officers were: Noble Grand, Mrs. Anna Asp; Vice Grand, Miss Gertrude Dill; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Jennie Morris; Financial Secretary, Mrs. Anna E. Hammatt; Treasurer, Mrs. Helen Davis; Warden, Mrs. Sarah Shurts; Conductor, Mrs. Ada Lyman; Chaplain, Mrs. Roxy A. Bradley; R. S. N. G., John Jones; L. S. N. G., O. N. Asp; Inside Guardian, Mrs. Ella Schultz; Outside Guard, S. D. Lyman; R. S. V. G., Miss Pearl Schultz; L. S. V. G., Miss Cora Green; Trustees, Mrs. Roxy A. Bradley, Mrs. Maggie Green, Mrs. Mary Cotter, Mrs. Helen Davis and Mrs. Mary Smith. Several distinguished members of the Order were present, including Mr. James R. Miller, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge, J. O. O. F., of Illinois, and Mrs. Kate A. Troxell, of Canton, Vice-President of the Rebekah State Assembly. The expense of organization and institution was $105.75, leaving a balance in the treasury of $22.05. Since that time many changes have occurred—some fraught with good for the Order, others, illustrating the truth that "mistakes are but stepping-stones," have taught its members to lay aside personal feelings and go forward, hand in hand, to visit the sick, bury the dead, and protect and educate the orphan. The Lodge has contributed to the building and maintenance of the Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home, at Lincoln, Illinois, and the Old Folks' Home, at Mattoon—those noble monuments of the Order described as the "Morning" and the "Evening Stars" of Odd Fellowship. Aid was also contributed to members of the Order who suffered from the terrible cyclone which visited St. Louis and East St. Louis, a few years ago. During recent years the Lodge has entertained many distinguished members of the Order, whose visits have been fraught with good. A Degree Staff has been organized and is still in existence. The following are the present officers of the Lodge (1902): Minnie Doty, N. G.; Maude E. Schultz, V. G.; Mrs. Annie Pruitt, Secretary; Mrs. Annie E. Hammatt, Financial Secretary; Mrs. Inez Saltz, Treasurer.

CHAPTER XIX.

SOCIAL LIFE—HOMES OF PEORIA—CLUBS—MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

HOMES OF PEORIA.

BY CLARA P. BOURLAND.

If Peoria had a longer history we should find more to say about its homes. A town may have, within the space of a very few years, an individual development that may attract to it national, or even international, notice; it may win or lose or win and lose, in a short time, in a degree sufficient to make its life an important commercial or economic event; but it takes years to form a home character for a town, and years more to change one when formed. So the home history of Peoria scarcely corresponds to the town's importance in the eyes of the business world.

Still it would be unfair to suppose that there is not, and has not always been, an intimate inter-connection of the home and the business life of Peoria. The home owes much to the strong business character of the place, and may count itself fortunate that no boom has ever overtaken it to arrest the normal development of the Peoria home, or to turn it into unnatural channels. The Peoria home is blessed in having little history. It is the normal product of its environment, and owes itself to perfectly healthy social conditions.

The bluffs on either side of the river afford picturesque situations for building, but, for obvious reasons, the early settlers were unable to take advantage of this fact. Of necessity the early homes were built close to the business quarters upon the flat, low land lying between the river and the edge of the bluff.

Growing commerce, increasing trade, and manufacturing interests have gradually obliterated these early dwellings—which were, for the most part, of a very ephemeral character, both as to material and construction—until, to-day, there are few houses that can be called historic remaining. The Thomas Maxwell house, corner of Adams and Jackson Streets; the Charles S. Clarke house, corner of Adams and Eaton Streets; the Asahel Hale, the W. P. Lazell and the John Bryson houses, on High Street, are still standing. Other houses built of brick—originally story-and-a-half structures, having been raised to two full stories, and equipped with modern appliances and conveniences—still hold their own among their more up-to-date neighbors. The Curtenius house, corner of Main and Madison; the John Johnson house, corner of Jefferson and Fayette, and the T. S. Bradley house, on Moss Avenue, are examples of this class.

Almost the first home of any pretension, built upon the bluff, was that of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Underhill. The house was of ample proportions, and commanded a beautiful view of the town and river; it still exists as the nucleus of the St. Francis' Hospital. Traditions of the hospitalities of this home survive all changes, though the warm and generous hearts that found their greatest happiness in gathering their friends by their fireside or around their ample table, have long since turned to dust.

The geographical position of Peoria and the fact that, during a long period in its earlier history, scanty means of communication made the town difficult of access, preserved to it the aspect of a village, long after business enterprise and success might have demanded the equipment of a modern city. The change came gradually, but it has come.

However, with all our latter day evidences of urban concentration of wealth, flats and tenement-houses do not find great favor with Peorians. Thrift, self-respect and individual ownership are indicated in the character of the houses occupied by the majority of the residents of the city. They are of moderate proportions and modest aspirations, adapted to comfortable living rather than unattainable luxury; and their type gives more than a hint of the good sense and self-respect of the average citizen.

The most coveted building spots are naturally on the bluffs that rise east and west from the river, and there our most dignified and our handsomest houses stand. Many of these have been built with a view to the situation, with broad piazzas showing miles of the valley and the river, as well as the fine outline of the opposite hills. At all seasons of the year, the view is fine but it is at its best in the spring and late autumn, when the bareness of the lines is relieved by a varied color scheme.

And, in general, the houses are suited to their environment. They are tasteful without and comfortable within. There is little of the ostentation of wealth but an appreciable atmosphere of good cheer and friendship—in short, a real atmosphere of home.

Attention to the material details of the interior of the home is not confined to one quarter of the town, nor to one class of citizens. Interest in books and pictures and the other better things of the liberal arts, is well rooted and spreading, and is fostered in Peoria, no less by the home interior than by the various institutions specifically designed for their cultivation.

The fact that the always existing interest in, and care for, these things has, of late years, shown a notable awakening and a new growth, offers the brightest hope to those who look into the future.

CLUB LIFE.

By CLARA P. BOURLAND.

The general social life of Peoria finds expression largely through its clubs, which exist in goodly number and variety. These include clubs for men—the Creve Coeur, and the Elks and the new Commercial Club; and clubs for women—the Friday Club, the New Era, the North Peoria Club, the Roman Catholic Woman's League, the Jewish Women's Council, the Teachers' Club, and the Peoria Women's Club, which last antedates most of the organizations.

The Art League consists of both men and women, and the club which is the joy of all hearts and the delight of our eyes as well, is the Country Club, which not only admits men and women to its membership, but, by courtesy, offers to whole families the enjoyment of its quiet and beautiful situation. Every day, from the beginning of spring till the shadows of autumn gather, the Country Club is a beloved resort for gay companies, who, in the exuberance of youth and leisure, transform the hot and dusty summer into a charming holiday. There are golf tournaments for adepts at that fascinating game, and golf teas for both players and lookers-on, not to mention æsthetic breakfasts on the broad porch in the cool of the morning, followed by luncheon and dinner when the sun has passed his meridian. I am sure that no member of the Country Club, man or woman, would exchange one perfect June day, on this wide-horizoned hill-top, for all the card parties and assemblies of the winter.

"For nature never did betray the heart that loved her."

Through the summer months club work is practically abandoned; but, with the coming on of winter, the gregariousness of the race asserts itself, and club meetings, club work, and club interests became large factors in our city life.

The Creve Coeur—though its name may not imply it—appeals to its members and the public generally, through its infinite goodfellowship and good cheer. It was organized about six years ago by business men, as a business men's club—non-political, wholly democratic. Its membership list of 400, or more, reveals the attractions of this organization to many who do not, in a strict sense, represent the business interests of the city. Men of all professions, bachelors and busy heads of families, find at the noon-day luncheon, which is served from twelve till two, and is a feature of the club, the very essence and atmosphere of hospitality at a low price. Added to the excellent cooking is the sauce to good digestion, an informal spirit.

On one day of the year, February 22d, the Creve Coeur Club brings to its members and guests, as after-dinner speakers, men of national reputation for wit, wisdom and eloquence. We are told that the banquet which precedes the oratory is fit for the gods—and we believe it, though we have not been there to see.

A visitor to the spacious and handsomely appointed club rooms of the Elks, now occupying the entire sixth story of the National Hotel, might imagine that this association exists solely, or mainly, for the purpose of making life pleasant to its members; for one finds here books, music, pictures, friendly society and an inviting air of prosperity. This Club, however, is No. 20 of a National Union called the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, whose business it is to protect its members and their families, as well as to promote friendship and social intercourse. Maintaining an adequate reserve fund, it distributes yearly large sums of money in charity. The Peoria Lodge has existed nine years, and numbers 350 members.

In the domain of women's societies the Friday Club takes precedence in age, dating from 1875. Its membership is limited to twenty-five. It is devoted to social and literary interests. A unique feature of this society is an entire absence of officers, members conducting the exercises in turn. The New Era and the North Peoria Club (what a misnomer now!) attempts only literary work. The Roman Catholic Women's League is a prosperous organization, founded in 1893, devoted to philanthropic as well as literary aims. The Jewish Women's Council of forty members meets weekly for the study of Jewish history, theoretical philanthropy and the Bible.

The youngest of all our clubs, "The Teachers'" has, during its three years of vigorous life, accomplished surprising results. Established in a building which should be their own, if it is not, the teachers, besides promoting an intimate acquaintance among themselves, extend their courtesies to many visitors. Supplementing the advantage of its reading-room, this wide-awake club provides lectures on widely different themes by men of national reputation. Only the capacity of the hall limits the number of outsiders invited to share this pleasure. Long life to the Teachers' Club.

The Peoria Women's Club, founded in 1886, upon the broad basis of universal helpfulness, is divided (the more easily to compass its objects) into departments of Home, Education, Art and Literature, Music, Philanthropy and Reform. The thoroughly earnest character of its founders, as well as its rapidly growing membership, suggested, very early in the history of the organization, the problem of an ample and permanent club home. The commodious building, on the corner of Madison Avenue and Fayette Street, stands as the solution of this problem. During the nine years of its existence—it was formally opened in January, 1893—it has demonstrated the wisdom of its building—always. The music hall, which occupies the upper floor, is in favor with musicians—particularly artists who have appeared in the club concert course—for its rare acoustic properties. Concert-goers find it attractive, well-lighted and well-ventilated. Here the regular bi-monthly meetings of the Club are held, and it is rare to find a day in the week when the rooms are not used for study classes or meetings of various kinds. The Department of Education offers classes in current events and travel that are well-sustained. The Department of Arts and Literature conducts classes for the study of history, Browning, Shakespeare and the school of French painting.

The play which is presented yearly by the Committee on Dramatics, reveals much conscientious and critical work, as well as unsuspected dramatic possibilities in its members. By bringing to us famous artists from abroad, and also by the generous exercise of their own talent, the various branches of the Department of Music are steadily developing our musical sense and raising our standard of musical appreciation.

The protective agency for women and children is carried on by the Department of Philanthropy, which also devotes every Friday evening to the encouragement and instruction of a class of boys in those minor morals which tend to good citizenship and enjoyment of the amenities of life.

The Departments of Home and Reform represent a constantly increasing activity, though here, in the nature of things, results come slowly.

Honorable mention belongs to the social committee of the Women's Club, who wisely recognize the fact that "all work and no play" would make club-life dull indeed. The never-failing cup of tea awaits the close of each meeting, and the two elaborate social events of the year,—the president's reception and the annual breakfast—leave with us an abiding sense of social and aesthetic enjoyment.

PEORIA WOMEN'S CLUB.

BY FRANCES C. GRANT.

The organization of the Peoria Women's Club was the successful effort of three devoted members of the old Art Society, Mrs. Clara P. Bourland, Mrs. Annie E. Petherbridge and Mrs. Mary McClure, who met, January 20, 1886, to formulate plans for the planting of an acorn from which a sturdy oak has grown.

A meeting was called for January 27, 1886, and Mrs. Lucia H. Coyner, Mrs. Jane S. Wheeler, Mrs. Lydia A. Kinsey, Mrs. Dr. Anna Adams and Miss Rebecca Lightner were invited to help nominate committees preparatory to transacting necessary business.

Fourteen ladies constituting the new Club met, and the Constitution and By-laws, drafted by Clara P. Bourland, Ellen G. Smith and Alice M. Dodge, were read and accepted, including the following:

"Article I. This Society shall be called the Peoria Women's Club.

"Article II. Its object shall be mutual sympathy and counsel, and united efforts towards the higher civilization of humanity."

The first officers and five directors, elected to transact the business of the Club, were: President, Clara P. Bourland; First Vice-President, Ida B. Knowles; Second Vice-President, Jane S. Wheeler; Recording Secretary, Alice M. Dodge; Treasurer, Abbie T. Blair; Directors; Effie E. Loughridge, Annie E. Petherbridge, Susan E. Brown, Lucia H. Coyner and Dr. Anna Adams. By March 10, 1886, the Club was fully established and in regular working order, Mrs. Bourland reading the first paper, followed by a discussion. On May 12, 1886, through the kind invitation of Miss Elizabeth H. Denison, the Club entered new quarters at the Pettengill Seminary, corner of Perry Avenue and Jackson Street, the first meeting having been held in the Art Rooms on Main Street, corner of Madison Avenue.

The Club rapidly increased in membership, and on October 13, 1890, through the courtesy of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Murtagh, the parlors of the National Hotel were tendered to the Club to meet in regular session every two weeks.

The following spring, February 23, 1891, the erection of a suitable Club building was suggested by Mrs. Bourland, and the ways and means to build a permanent home, the feasibility of a stock company and other important matters were discussed. On March 9, 1891, a motion was made by Mrs. Bourland to proceed to organize a joint stock company for the purpose of purchasing ground and the erection of a desirable building. Everything looked favorable, and the Peoria Women's Club Building Association became a legally organized corporation under the laws of the State of Illinois, July 9, 1890, and the following persons were selected as Directors: Sue Clegg King, Caroline S. Gibson, Gertrude Stone, Amanda S. Freeman, Lucy W. Baldwin, Amely Schoen and Lucie B. Tyng. The Baptist church property, corner of Madison Avenue and Fayette Street, was purchased for $7,500 and held in trust for the stock company. April 13, 1891, articles of incorporation were read and the stock book was ready for subscribers. Much interest was taken in the new project, and the plans for the future seemed to have awakened a responsive chord. The auditorium of the church was used for club purposes until the building was removed to make ready for the erection of the new home, the corner-stone of which was laid, May 22, 1893, with a very interesting program of music and speeches. This commodious brick building, 57x103 feet, including a fine music hall, was completed at a cost of $41,000 and an opening reception held, January 4, 1894, a retrospect of the year showing great reason for congratulation.

On January 8, 1894, the first club meeting was held in the new Club Music Hall, and January 15, the dedicatory exercises were held, representatives from Women's Clubs in Bloomington, Streator, Pekin, Henry and Champaign being present with the members and their friends. The program opened with prayer by Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, First Vice-President, who invoked the divine blessing upon the structure and the organization. Then followed a vocal solo by Mrs. Julia Davis Michigan, an address by Mrs. Clara P. Bourland, and a vocal solo by Mrs. Josephine Francis.

Among the generous gifts to the Club may be mentioned the following: Mantel in parlor, from Mr. William H. Murtagh, in memory of his wife, Caroline E. Murtagh, first honorary and life member of the Club; mantel in dining-room, from Mrs. Melissa M. Clarke, in memory of her daughter, Cara Clarke; Mr. John L. Flynn, $1,000 of the $1,500 charged as superintendent of the building; Callender & Company, $81 entire commission on insurance policy for five years; Mrs. Sarah B. Smith, $100 for bench in hall; Mrs. Annie E. Petherbridge, desk and table in President's room; portrait of Mrs. Clara P. Bourland, by Ellen Kendall Baker, Paris, France; oil-painting, by Mrs. Lucia Coyner; also one by Mrs. Jane A. Guth; Mrs. Mary A. Barker, table in parlor; Mrs. Mary S. Clarke, table in dining-room; Schipper & Block, large rug; Mrs. Sarah P. Howe, oil-painting--the "Rose Fete;" Mrs. Clara H. Greenhut 150 chairs, rug in reception hall and cheval glass in dressing-room; Mr. Howard Knowles, a beautiful hall-clock in memory of his wife, Ida Whiting Knowles; Mrs. Frances Corning, plush stage curtains.

January 20th of each year is known as Founders' Day, appropriate exercises being held and gifts to the Club received.

The building, the second Club House in the State owned by its members, contains a Music Hall, with a seating capacity of five hundred and fifty and a good sized stage, parlor, dining room, President's room, kitchen, china closet, and ladies' and gentlemen's dressing rooms.

The present membership of the Club is four hundred.

For the better attainment of its objects, the Club is divided into departments, representing these different lines of work, namely: Home and Education, Art and Literature, Music and Social Science—each department undertaking special work in its own line.

Classes conducted by competent leaders are open to all members, regular meetings being held once a week—Shakespeare, History, Browning, and French School of Art, conducted by Clara P. Bourland; Travel Class, by Annie E. Petherbridge; Current Events, by Effie E. Loughridge. The Mandolin and Guitar Orchestra are doing a work worthy of special mention, having organized in the fall of 1898, for the purpose of giving Club Musicales and assisting in furnishing musical programs when so desired.

The Peoria Protective Agency for Women and Children was organized and incorporated in March, 1889. Two delegates from each Benevolent Society of the city were invited to act with the Club Agency. Its objects are: (1st) "The punishment of all offenses and crimes whatsoever against woman's purity and virtue;" (2d) "Protection to women from financial or business frauds or injustice, such as withholding of wages due, exaction of exorbitant interest, fraudulent advertisements or any violation of contract;" (3d) "Enforcement of existing laws and the enactment of better ones for the protection of the honor and prosperity of women;" (4th) "Protection of children from wrongs of any nature."

The aims of the Agency are protective and preventive, rather than reformatory. It duplicates the work of no other society, though it desires to co-operate heartily with every organization for the benefit of women. The services of some of the best legal and medical talent in the city, are given to carry on the work of the Agency in such cases as require their assistance.

The Agency is under the direction of a board of twelve members, six of whom are chosen from the Peoria Women's Club, and six from the various organizations of women in the city engaged in charitable or benevolent work. Each year they have in view new achievements, entertain new aspirations and enjoy the reward of determined and faithful endeavor. In wisdom, refinement and love of the beautiful, and, better still, stretching a helping hand to those who need raising to higher thought—teaching by daily living the beauty and joy of truth and duty—the Women's Club have, from year to year, been accomplishing much for the benefit of their sex and the good of society.

Musicales, Annual Reception, Founder's Day Social, Class Luncheons, all ending with the June Club Breakfast, are among the social features of the club life. Each year a course of four or five concerts and lectures are given for public entertainment.

The present officers are: Clara P. Bourland, President; Clara H. Greenhut, First Vice-President; Sarah D. Easton, Second Vice-President; Sophronia A. Black, Recording Secretary; Isabella C. Ayres, Assistant Recording Secretary; Maud A. Davis, Corresponding Secretary; May L. C. Robinson, Treasurer.

The Club motto is: "To help another from what one has, or is, is the most noble deed."

THE COUNTRY CLUB.

The Country Club of Peoria was incorporated June 26, 1897, its object being the encouragement of athletic exercises, recreation and social enjoyment. Its management is vested in a Board of eleven Directors, elected in two divisions of five and six in number on alternate years, each division serving respectively two years. Its membership is at present limited to one hundred and thirty-five. The annual meeting is held on the last Thursday in June. Women as well as men are admitted to full membership. The first Board of Directors consisted of Walter P. Colburn, Franklin T. Corning, Sumner R. Clarke, Frederick H. Smith, R. W. Kempshall, J. B. Greenhut, Nathaniel Griswold, R. D. Clarke, Clifford M. Anthony, H. Frederick Steele, and Jacob Wachenheimer, and the first officers were Franklin T. Corning, President; Walter P. Colburn, Vice-President; R. D. Clarke, Secretary, and Frederick H. Smith, Treasurer.

The grounds upon which the Club House is situated consist of about twenty-seven acres located near Peoria Heights, from which a magnificent view is obtained of the Illinois River and the adjacent country for a distance of thirty miles. It may safely be said that no finer landscape than this can be seen in the State of Illinois. The Club House was formerly the residence of Mrs. Caroline S. Gibson, from whom the grounds have been leased for a period of four years. Adjoining these grounds are the Golf-links, consisting of about forty acres, also leased from owners represented by Mr. Constantine.

CREVE COEUR CLUB.

Creve Coeur Club of Peoria, so named from the celebrated fort erected by La Salle in the spring of 1680, near the site of the present City of Peoria, was organized, April 5, 1894, by the following named gentlemen, who were also the incorporators: Theodore Kuhl, Elwood A. Cole, Joseph E. Callender, Frank B. Newell, Horace Clarke, Jr., Frank H. Gift, H. G. Rouse, Charles R. Warren and Charles E. Wheelock. Its object is to promote the business interests of the City of Peoria and the social enjoyment of the members of the Club. Its management is vested in a Board of nine Directors elected annually. The membership consists of three classes: (1) Resident—any person residing in the city of Peoria; (2) Non-residents—any person residing not less than five miles from the city but not eligible to office or to the Board of Directors; (3) Honorary—any person not a resident of Peoria County, but not entitled to vote or to hold office. The annual meeting, at which time officers and directors are elected, is held on the second Tuesday in April.

The officers for the first year were Theodore Kuhl, President; Charles R. Warner, Vice-President; Joseph E. Callender, Secretary; Frederick F. Blossom, Treasurer. Those for 1901-02 are C. S. Jones, President; Peter Casey, Vice-President; G. G. Luthy, Secretary; Frederick F. Blossom, Treasurer.

The building occupied by the Club is located at 213 South Jefferson Street, a commodious structure, two stories in height, with an annex attached containing billiard and pool-tables, and another annex containing a bowling alley. The membership, now numbering about 500, comprises business and professional men; it is strictly non-partisan and non-political, quite cosmopolitan and democratic in character.

WOMEN TEACHERS' CLUB.

BY ELLA BESEMAN.

The subject of a Teachers' Club had often been suggested by Superintendent Dougherty and casually discussed by the teachers, but there was no enthusiasm on the subject until 1896, when a large number of the teachers attended the meeting of the National Educational Association at Buffalo. It was their reception at the Chapter House—the home of the Buffalo Teachers' Club—and the account of the pleasant meetings held there by the members, which awakened the desire to have a similar organization in Peoria.

A meeting was accordingly called in September, 1897, and, after some discussion, it was decided to form an association called the "Women Teachers' Club of Peoria." Miss Kate Rutherford was elected President and a constitution was adopted. As all of the members had average executive ability, it was decided to elect officers for only one year, and to allow no re-elections, in order that as many different members as possible might be called into service each year. The purpose of the Club, as given in the constitution, is: "To promote the welfare of the public schools; to improve the character of the work done in the schools; to cultivate a spirit of sympathy, good will and sociability among the teachers; to develop the ability and resources of the individual members; to create in the community at large a deeper sense of the dignity of the teachers' profession, and the importance of the interests which they represent."

The Club received such hearty support from the Superintendent and School Board that its financial success was assured from the first. The School Board rooms in the Masonic Temple were let to the Club for a nominal rent, and, when the lease of these expired, the School Board kindly repaired and furnished the old land-mark once known as the "Third Ward School." This is now the permanent home of the Club. A number of patrons have donated pictures or made other additions to the furnishing, and the School Board has made provision for a pedagogical library. There is a good supply of china, linen and silver, so that the teachers can entertain with the pleasure and comfort of a well-appointed home.

The Club Calendar provides for a monthly business meeting, at which some of the members are expected to furnish entertainment when the business is finished; for a monthly afternoon reception under the auspices of the different schools, and for a number of evening lectures followed by receptions.

Some excellent lecturers have appeared upon the Club platform. Among these are Bishop Spalding, N. C. Dougherty, Chas. W. Seymour, Dr. Louis Soldan, President Nicholas Murray Butler, Mr. Richardson, Prof. F. W. Starr, Prof. Katharine Sharp, Mrs. Ella F. Young, Mrs. Kedzie, Miss Rose Colby and G. Stanley Hall.

Considerable dramatic and musical talent has been discovered among the members, and much originality has been displayed in planning entertainments. The club-rooms are in constant use. A number of classes in different subjects meet after school, individual members or schools give dinners, parties or receptions, and some teachers occasionally entertain their eighth-year classes here.

Near the close of its fifth year, it is safe to say that the Club has been successful in all the objects stated in the Constitution, but particularly so in creating a feeling of good will and sympathy between its members and the community at large. Many of the leading citizens are as warmly interested in the Club as the members are themselves. If this Club fulfills the promise of its infancy, it will become an ever-increasing power for good.

NORTH PEORIA WOMEN'S CLUB.

BY FRANCES M. O. SCHNEBLY.

The North Peoria Women's Club was organized in September, 1868, under the name and style of the "Nineteenth Century Literary Club," for the purpose of making a systematic study of the authors of the nineteenth century. The officers of this association of women were then as follows: Frances M. O. Schnebly, President; Nellie H. Dickson, Vice-President, and Alice A. Poffenbarger, Secretary. There were twelve charter members who worked industriously, hand in hand, holding the meetings fortnightly at the homes of the members.

During the ensuing year there were constant applications for admittance to the Club, and the members increased so materially that it was necessary to limit the membership on account of the lack of accommodations, as there was then no available general meeting place.

At the beginning of the second year the membership list increased to forty—the prescribed limit—and, with the desire for broader culture and individual development, the vast fields of literature, music and art were explored, the Club undertook responsibilities in the way of contributing funds to charities and interested itself in philanthropic, economic and social affairs. The name was then changed to "The North Peoria Women's Club." During the last year the club has held its meetings in the Sunday-school rooms of the new Arcadia Avenue Presbyterian Church. The officers at present are: Frances M. O. Schnebly, President; Annie Giles Keithley, Vice-President; Alice A. Poffenbarger, Secretary and Treasurer; Betty B. Bartlett, Referee.

Executive Committee: Irene H. Hanna, Belle Allison Sumner, Annie Giles Keithley.

The Club has made great progress during the last year, the interest in the work being manifested by the promptitude of its members, the regularity of the attendance, the willingness with which they meet financial responsibilities, and the loyalty with which they protect its interests.

NEW ERA CLUB.

BY ADA M. FULLER.

The New Era Women's Club was organized, November 2, 1892, with twelve charter members. The officers are elected at the regular business meeting on the last Wednesday in May. For the present year they are:

President, Mrs. Mary W. Hensley; Vice-President, Mrs. Sarah A. Sheen; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Maud B. Nixon; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Ada M. Fuller; Treasurer, Mrs. Maud B. Thelig.

The Presidents since organization have been: 1892—Mrs. M. L. White; 1893-94—Mrs. Ada M. Fuller; 1895-96—Mrs. Eva Evans; 1897-98—Mrs. Carrie S. Parker; 1899-1900—Mrs. Mary W. Hensley.

The meetings are held every other Wednesday afternoon during the club year, at the homes of its members.

Each person connected with the Club has a paper or oral topic assigned her. This program of the year's work is arranged by the Executive Committee, and the members are supplied with printed copies. It has at present a membership of thirty.

The Club was formerly connected with the National Federation, but withdrew. At present it is connected with the State and District Federation.

The only philanthropic work it does as a club, is to aid in sustaining one of the city kindergarten schools. It is represented on that Board by Mary S. Whitten, Sarah A. Sheen and Jennie W. Morgan.

As "all work and no play" is not advisable, there is a social side to the Club. In January the members give a banquet in honor of their husbands. At the close of the club year in June they all enjoy an outing.

THE PEORIA ART LEAGUE.

By EVA EVANS.

The Peoria Art League, as a distinctive organization, came into existence in 1894. Previous to this it had been known as "The Sketch Club," which was established in the winter of 1890-91. It was composed entirely of men, whose sympathetic tastes and desire for a congenial "art atmosphere" led them to unite and meet each week in the studio of L. A. Loomis, the pioneer artist of Peoria. Here some very commendable work was accomplished, and several whose names are well known as illustrators of merit here received their earliest inspiration. Among these may be mentioned Grant Wright and Carl Pehl. Its charter members were fourteen in number, namely: Grant Wright, Carl Pehl, A. B. Marston, L. A. Loomis, Walter Laird, Hedley W. Waycott, Jesse Watson, Albert Chilcott, Frank Goss, Orie Snyder, Fred Klein, Robert Slack, William Kerr, and Robert Weller. But progression, which is the law of art as it is of life, caused them to seek more commodious quarters and expand in other ways. A club room, with a modest equipment of casts and other properties, was taken on Main Street. A constitution and by-laws of ampler scope were adopted under the name of the "Peoria Art League." Women were now admitted and Miss Emily and Nona White, Mrs. J. W. Anderson, Mrs. Bourscheidt, Mrs. Lucie H. Coyner, Miss Ellis, Mrs. Mitchell, Mrs. Farr, Miss Watson, as well as Mr. Selvin, became charter members of the new organization in conjunction with the members of the old "Sketch Club." Dr. Melvaine, who had mainly been instrumental in bringing about the new order of affairs, was elected first President, a position which he has held continuously ever since. Miss Nona White was elected the first Secretary. Mr. Farr, formerly of the "Peoria Herald," was the first honorary member elected, and among the most recent members to attain prominence may be mentioned Margaret West Kinney, well known as an artist of ability. The Peoria Art League has now become a factor in the aesthetic development of the city. Its aims and object as stated in its first prospectus are: "The advancement of all art affairs; the bringing together of artists, and lovers of art in all its branches; the establishment of a school of fine arts; and the maintenance of an art gallery in the city of Peoria." A loan exhibition was held in 1895, and such well known artists as Vanderpoel Roecker, C. F. Brown, and many others were represented. The first color exhibit of the League members was held November 1-15, 1894. It consisted of 168 sketches, the greater number of which were painted in the open air, only a few showing the labor and finish of the studio; but they were sufficient to demonstrate the aims and efforts of the exhibitors in the cultivation of the general artistic taste and the promotion of local art interests. Since then an exhibition by local members has been given annually, and pyrography, photography, and china-painting, as well as work in oil and water colors, have been ably represented.

In the early existence of the Club, Messrs. S. C. Peyraud and H. G. Maratta were secured as instructors, and the former has ever since, at intervals, sustained this relation. At the time the Peoria Library Building was erected, largely through the efforts of Dr. Thomas Melvaine, and most especially through the kindness and liberality of the Library Association, commodious quarters were secured in that building. Here has been generously fitted up an exhibition gallery, 50x70 feet in dimensions, with an excellent sky-light, and a work room of even greater capacity. These are at the disposal of the League until such time as the Library Association shall have need of them for other purposes. It is the hope of the League soon to establish a permanent exhibit for the benefit of the public in these rooms, and to this end the co-operation of all lovers of art is desired.

The list of officers at present is as follows:

President—Dr. Thomas Melvaine.

Vice-President—Mr. W. S. Carter.

Secretary and Treasurer—Mrs. Winslow Evans.

Assistant Secretary—Miss Cora Van Eps.

Board of Directors—Mrs. J. W. Anderson, Mr. Grant Hood, Mr. Hedley W. Waycott.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

BY CLARA H. REES.

In all that has heretofore been written of Peoria, her institutions, her wealth, commerce and general prosperity, little has been said of her music or musicians. Yet nothing enters more deeply into the social or religious life of a people than the cultivation and practice of this delightful art.

Improvement in their church music was one of the first objects to engage the attention of the church-going people of Peoria. Soon after the organization of the Main Street (afterward Congregational) church, a choir was formed which adopted, as the first singing book, "Mason's Sacred Harp." About the same time there came into extensive use in the Western States another book called "The Missouri Harmony," but at what time it was introduced in Peoria is not known. Both these used the patent, or what were usually known as the "buckwheat," notes. Four characters were used—one round, one square, one triangular, and one diamond-shaped. Later works constructed upon the same plan introduced three more, so that each note of the scale was represented by a character of its own. But this patented way of teaching music lasted only a few years. In the winter of 1836-37 the Main Street church substituted "The Boston Academy's Collection of Church Music." From that time on the country began to be flooded with new publications, each one claiming to be superior to all its predecessors. In the year 1838, Mr. A. G. Little introduced into the Main Street church the first musical instruments used in public worship in Peoria. They consisted of an "elbow melodeon" and a bass-viol. The elbow melodeon, of which Mr. Little's brother was the manufacturer, was an instrument constructed somewhat upon the plan of an accordion, only larger and having a register as full as that of the more modern melodeon, but the keys were round and were pushed down endwise. The instrument was placed upon a table or other support and the pumping was done with one elbow, while both hands were used to manipulate the keys. How long this arrangement lasted has not been ascertained, but it is known that, even after the erection of their new church in 1852, they had not progressed beyond the use of one violin, one flute and one bass-viol.

The first piano-forte was brought to Peoria in 1837 by Lewis Bigelow, Esq., who resided on Liberty Street between Washington and Water. He had several accomplished daughters for whose use it was purchased. Its cost was $400, a large sum for those days. In 1839, Mrs. Jane D. Lindsay, who also had several daughters, brought the second. Her daughter, Mrs. Margaret Weis, with her husband, was for many years connected with the choir of the First Presbyterian church. One of her sons, Mr. J. C. Lindsay, is still a resident of Peoria.

Some of the steamboats had brass-bands on board on their trips to Peoria, which may have furnished the citizens entertainment on special occasions, but the first band instruments brought here were purchased in Boston in 1840. They consisted of a trombone, a clarinet, a "bass bugle," a "tenor bugle," a fife and drum. A band was organized consisting of the following prominent citizens: John Comstock, the well-known capitalist, now residing on Adams Street; Jonathan K. Cooper, Charles P. King, Chester Hamlin, Charles Holland, Ralph Hamlin, Charles W. McClallen and William Mitchell. In consequence of several of its members having joined the famous California expedition, organized in Peoria in 1849, the band became disorganized.

In 1845, "The Peoria Musical Association" was organized by Charles W. McClallen, Chester Hamlin, Ralph Hamlin, Jonathan K. Cooper, M. M. Webb and Amos P. Bartlett, who, in February of that year, obtained a charter from the Legislature. Its purpose was the improvement of its members in the science of music. It had power to purchase and hold property, both real and personal. It is possible this was the origin of the brass-band already noticed, as several persons belonged to both organizations, and it may be the instruments above mentioned were purchased out of its general fund. The next season it obtained the use of the Court House for two evenings each week—it may be surmised, one for the practice of vocal, the other for instrumental music.

Many Germans were now coming to Peoria who brought their musical tastes, talents and habits with them. On March 1, 1850, a German Singing Society was formed called the "Liederkrantz." It is said that, in 1855, the name was changed to the "Peoria Glee Club," and three years later to the "Concordia." On May 29, 1854, another society was organized called "The Sangerbund," but that name does not appear to have adhered to it very long. The names Liederkrantz and Concordia have remained, with an occasional "Maennerchor" and "Harmonie," but it is somewhat difficult to keep up the continuity of each society, if such it has had.

A noted society was formed in 1855, with the purpose in view of elevating the character of the church music. Its leaders and organizers were T. M. Higgins, a music dealer on South Adams Street; Samuel W. Stone, a miller recently from Pekin; Edward A. Van Meter, a teacher of music, together with many members of the several choirs of the city. One of the Protestant ministers was made President and all the others Vice-Presidents, but the real managers were those already named. It met once a week in the Baptist church on Hamilton Street. They practiced and gave concerts in several cantatas, in which the leading parts were carried by Miss Eunice Hall, soprano; Miss Sarah Weis (now Mrs. T. L. Currie), alto; Mr. Stone and Mr. Currie, tenor; and Mr. Higgins, bass. Miss Hall is said to have had a voice which, for volume and culture, has not been excelled in Peoria. Having drilled for a year or two, they invited Prof. William B. Bradbury, a noted composer of sacred music, to hold a musical convention at Peoria, which invitation was accepted. The convention was held in Haskell's Hall on the corner of Main and Madison Streets. It continued for about ten days, and attracted a large attendance of amateur musicians from Peoria and the surrounding country. The drill consisted largely in mastering the Cantata of "Esther, the Beautiful Queen," a composition of Mr. Bradbury's, then entirely new and probably then produced in public for the first time. It was given in a concert held in the United Presbyterian church (still standing) on the corner of Liberty and Madison Streets.

It is somewhat difficult to tell when the next instrumental band was formed after that already mentioned. As the Germans were nearly all educated in this art, it was not difficult for them to pick up a band at almost any time. It is known that there were some such bands in Peoria prior to the breaking out of the Civil War, and there were two or three in existence at that time, one of which, the Cecilian Band (composed of Irishmen), accompanied to their rendezvous at Springfield the first company of volunteers that went into the army from this city. In 1863 there was organized a band which, under different names, such as "Peoria Light Guard Band" and "Spencer's Band," has continued until the present time. It was organized to furnish music for the Lincoln campaign of 1864, and has been the leading band in Peoria ever since. Dr. William Magee was its first conductor and, since then, it has been directed successively by Daniel M. Spencer, Herman Munroe and Amand Moll. During the war Mr. L. H. Wiley was chief cornetist in the band of the Seventy-seventh Regiment, and became so proficient in the use of his instrument that, upon his return, his performances attracted universal attention and admiration. He soon afterwards became connected, as chief cornetist, with Spencer's Band and imparted to it a widespread reputation. Mr. Wiley has gained a reputation all over the country as a cornetist. He was selected as one of the soloists at the Columbian Exposition, and has taken a prominent part in political campaigns. He has done much to further the musical interests of Peoria by bringing here some of the great artists, as well as by his activity among local musicians.

The Cecilian Band continued its existence for many years and was probably superseded by St. Mary's Band, which was organized as early as 1873. Other early bands were Gruber's Cornet Band, about 1871; Liberty Cornet Band and Peoria Cornet Band in 1873; Smaile's Military Brass Band, 1875; and Trautvetter's National Guard Band in 1879—all of which have ceased to exist or now go under other names.

In the year 1877 the "Peoria Choral Union" was organized for the cultivation of vocal music of high grade. Dr. N. K. Beasley was President; Dr. M. H. Hewett, Secretary; Charles H. Kellogg, Treasurer; and S. L. Fish, Conductor. Upon the retirement of Mr. Fish, Mr. Charles F. Bacon succeeded as Conductor. In the first four years of its existence it produced at its concerts "Mozart's Twelfth Mass," "The Creation," "Dudley Buck's Forty-sixth Psalm," and the cantatas, "The Haymakers," "Erl King's Daughter," "Trial by Jury," "Esther, the Beautiful Queen," and "The Doctor of Alcantara." It then had a membership of about one hundred; C. H. Kellogg was President; Dr. M. H. Hewett, Vice-President; Fred L. Tucker, Financial Secretary; Ida Stowell, Recording Secretary; George C. Clark, Treasurer, and Eugene H. Plowe, Conductor. Mr. Plowe continued as Conductor so long as the society continued to exist, which was until 1901. For the last ten or fifteen years it has been known as "The Peoria Chorus," and has done much good work in oratorio—"The Messiah," "Elijah," "St. Paul," "The Holy City."

Other oratorios and cantatas have been most successfully given by this chorus, assisted by distinguished soloists from abroad.

A quartette consisting of Mrs. Frank Field, soprano; Mrs. Charles F. Bacon, alto; Mr. Charles F. Bacon, tenor, and Mr. Charles D. Kellogg, bass, was formed in 1875, and did most excellent work, especially in church music. Long after the quartette disbanded, Mr. Kellogg and Mr. Bacon, both fine musicians, were musical leaders in Peoria, and both were the promoters of many successful musical enterprises during the many years they resided here.

In 1877, Peoria boasted an exceptionally fine male quartette, of whose work the city was justly proud. The organization was known as the Chanson Quartette, and its members were Mr. John F. Rouse, first tenor; Mr. George C. Coffin, second tenor; Mr. E. H. Plowe, first bass, and Mr. William Mack. A year later, Mr. Mack left Peoria and his place was filled by Dr. M. H. Hewett. These gentlemen were all good soloists, and their quartette singing was most artistic.

Miss Genevieve Clark (now Mrs. Genevieve Clark Wilson of Chicago) made Peoria her home in 1890-91, and had a large class here. She was also prominent in church choirs. Mrs. Wilson is a soprano who has made an enviable reputation for herself in Chicago.

Miss Kate Jordan was Peoria's leading soprano singer early in the eighties. She was a successful teacher and very prominent in choir work. Miss Jordan married Dr. M. H. Hewett, also a prominent Peoria musician.

Mrs. Julia Davis Mihigan came to Peoria in 1888, and at once took her place as our best soprano soloist. She has been prominent in choir and concert work since then, and still holds her position as the leading soprano of Peoria.

Miss Josephine Schroeder, then of the Chicago Church Choir Company, came to Peoria in 1885, as contralto soloist in the Universalist church. A few years later she married John H. Francis, Jr., and has since made Peoria her home.

Mr. C. S. Burdick has been a musical leader of late years, and his beautiful baritone voice gives rare pleasure to his hearers.

Miss Anna Hansel occupied a prominent position in Peoria musical circles between 1888 and 1892, and her deep contralto voice was most effective, especially in concerted work. Miss Hansel died in Chicago in 1897.

Miss Lillian Adelle Smith is well known as a soprano singer and teacher of voice in Peoria, where she has been established for several years.

With the advent of Mr. Harry J. Graham, who came to Peoria from Evansville, Indiana, in 1885, a new school of music was introduced into Peoria churches, and the impress of his dramatic and forceful interpretations is still noticeable in our church and concert music. Mr. Graham's voice is a baritone of great power, and his removal from the city, in 1897, was a distinct loss to musical Peoria.

The Dudley Buck Quartette was organized in 1889 and, though it existed but one year, will always be remembered by those who heard its truly good work. Its members were Mrs. Julia Davis Mihigan, soprano; Miss Anna Hansel, alto; Mr. H. F. Velde, tenor, and Mr. H. J. Graham, basso and director.

Another most successful musical combination (formed in 1900) is the Grier Quartette—so called in honor of Mr. T. A. Grier, whose loyal interest in music, in general, and these musicians, in particular, certainly entitled him to the compliment. The personnel of the Grier Quartette—still prominent in church and concert programmes in Peoria—is as follows: Mrs. Julia Davis Mihigan, soprano; Mrs. Josephine Schroeder Francis, alto; Mr. H. F. Velde, tenor, and Mr. Charles S. Burdick, basso.

Prominent among the teachers of vocal music and voice culture at the present time are Eugene H. Plowe, Miss Lillian Adelle Smith, E. Warren K. Howe (now temporarily absent in Europe), Mrs. Bernard Donnelly, Miss Clara Rees, Miss Bernice B. Ellis and Miss Emma H. Dawdy. Among the best known singers of the past few years, besides those already named, have been L. Ph. Wolf, John F. Rouse, W. H. Wait, Mrs. Frederick Kellogg, Edward D. McCulloch, Edgar C. Foster, Henry F. Velde, Frederick A. Bracken, Miss Clara Duff (now Mrs. F. P. Frazer), Miss Hattie Earnest (now Mrs. B. M. Davidson, of Boston), Miss Eva Bent (now Mrs. J. S. Starr), Mrs. E. J. Graves, Mrs. Lulu Rulaak Younger, E. C. Heidrich and Miss Emma Martin. Of the younger class of singers who give promise of great proficiency, are Miss Ina Cassell, Mr. Earl Cassell, Miss Iola Powell, Ward Harrison, Miss Winifred Jones, Harry Haskins and Miss Sophia Voris.

Probably no musician has ever so influenced the development of music in Peoria as has Mr. Frank M. Reinhart. He came here in 1862 and until 1880 was actively engaged in professional work. Skillful alike in piano and violin work, no musical enterprise of any importance was considered complete without his aid and co-operation and, to-day, he is no less an authority on all musical subjects, though entirely retired from professional life. Mr. Reinhart has composed a great deal for piano and is an adept at arranging for brass band. For years he was the leading organist in Peoria, and his ability as an organizer is exceptional. In 1885 Mr. Reinhart married Miss Annie Kidder, a former pupil scarcely less musical than her husband. A constant reader and an earnest theorist, Mr. Reinhart has made invaluable his advice and counsel, which are eagerly sought by numberless students and musicians.

Mr. Henry Paling, who came here during the year 1862. Mr. Frederick Mann (1866) and Miss Minnie Stowell are also deserving of mention as having been prominent teachers of the piano. Mr. A. K. Virgil established a Conservatory of Music in Peoria in 1879, and was very successful during his stay of three years in the city.

In 1888 the Peoria Conservatory of Music was opened by Mr. E. H. Plowe, assisted by his brothers, Mr. Harold and Mr. Jay Plowe. This is now the only Conservatory of Music in Peoria, though the Convent of the Sacred Heart (Roman Catholic) has a musical department. The Conservatory is located in the building of the Young Men's Christian Association.

August Weber and W. H. Powers were also prominent teachers of the piano for many years. Prominent among the teachers of instrumental music of later years have been Eugene H. Plowe, Carl Christensen, Mrs. E. D. McCulloch (formerly Emily Allen), Miss Catherine Hart, Emil Hiland, Mrs. C. M. Brown (formerly Netta Cole), Mrs. H. F. Velde (formerly Zoa Anderson), Miss Frances G. Weller, Mrs. Emma Wilkins Gutmann, Burt Houston and Miss Fannie Martin.

The first pipe-organ was placed in the old St. Paul's Episcopal church probably soon after its erection. This was the only one in Peoria for several years. In the meantime the melodeon, a newly invented instrument, was introduced into several of the leading churches and was supposed, for a time, to have superseded the use of the pipe-organ. In July, 1854, the Messrs. Higgins Brothers established a music-store on Main Street opposite the Congregational church, where they introduced the sale of the Mason & Hamlin Melodeon, which they said had been pronounced by many of the most distinguished musicians unsurpassed in quality, power, sweetness of tone, promptness of action and style of finish—recommendations which were then fully warranted—but these instruments were in a few years superseded by the Cabinet Organ.

The next pipe-organs were those placed in the Unitarian and St. Mary's (Catholic) churches, about the time the former was built; but which one was the earliest is not known. As churches grew in number and wealth, the reed instruments were gradually superseded by the pipe organ. In the First Congregational church there is an elegant one, dedicated as a memorial to Rev. A. A. Stevens, who for many years was its pastor.

Among the organists of earlier days may be mentioned F. M. Reinhart, Miss Grace Baily (afterwards Mrs. John Muckle), George F. Bacon, Albert M. Scott, Mrs. John Cockle (now Mrs. Dr. Ely, of Chicago), C. Morris Campbell and Anton Kampmeier. The leading organists at present are Carl Christensen, Mrs. E. D. McCulloch, Miss Clara Rees, Gerald B. Franks, Mrs. Lucia E. Jacquin, Mrs. H. F. Velde, Mrs. W. J. Slemmens and Mrs. Albert T. Johnson.

The piano-forte was introduced into the churches, especially in Sunday School and chapel work, about the year 1876, the first being put into the Sunday School of the Second Presbyterian church.

The most noted musician who has gone out from Peoria was Emma Abbott, who spent the first years of her life in this city, and is affectionately remembered here by many friends and acquaintances of her youthful days. Although claimed as a daughter by so many other cities, yet it has been asserted with much confidence that Miss Abbott was born in Peoria, and Peorians watched her short but remarkably successful career with the greatest pride and interest. She commenced her public career by giving amateur concerts in this city and its vicinity. Her father was a music teacher, doing his work principally in the country. He took part in the Philharmonic Convention conducted by William B. Bradbury. He has left his name permanently connected with a little village plat named "Fon du Lac," now constituting part of the village of "East Peoria."

But few distinguished musicians appeared in concert or opera in Peoria prior to the erection of Rouse's Hall in 1857-58. Once in a while a company, such as the Hutchinsons, or a star, like

John C. Proctor

Adelina Patti, who sang here in concert at the age of twelve years, would give an entertainment in the Court House. Dr. Rouse during his lifetime, and after his death, his two sons, Henry and John, were most enterprising in bringing to Peoria many of the most distinguished artists, among whom may be mentioned Adelina and Carlotta Patti, Christine Nilsson, Parepa Rosa with her husband, Carl, the violinist, Louis M. Gottschalk, Ole Bull, Wilhelmj, and many others. Christine Nilsson was so delighted with the beauty of Peoria that she purchased, as a prospective place of residence, a half-block of ground at the corner of Knoxville and Illinois Avenues, of which she retained the possession for several years.

Since the building of the Grand Opera House, it has been the more fashionable resort for the lovers of music, and there concerts and operatic performances have been frequent.

Music Hall, in the Women's Club building, has recently become quite popular as a place for musical entertainments, especially of concert and the lighter orchestral kinds.

Among the most prominent dealers in musical instruments and merchandise have been E. J. Robbins and Higgins Brothers, commencing about 1854; Joseph R. Brown, 1859; Henry Nolte, 1860; August Weber, 1861; Nolte & Bacon (George F.), 1867; Brown, Cramer & Co., 1871; Woodruff & Powers, 1872; P. A. Cramer and W. C. Strickler, 1875; Adair & Utley, 1876; Powers Brothers and E. A. Van Meter, 1877; and, at a later date, Wookey & Co., Brown, Page & Hillman and Mark Ament, the predecessors of "The Brown, Page & Hillman Company," and the "Mark Ament Company," who now control the largest trade in the city in this line of merchandise.

PLACES OF AMUSEMENT.

In the early days of Peoria, places of amusement were scarce. The log-cabin did not afford much room for the dance, yet we are told that was a popular amusement among the first settlers. When hotels came in vogue each was provided with a ball-room, which served many purposes besides that of dancing, even to the holding of divine worship. As Peoria was at an early day supplied with two good hotels, "The Planters' House" and the "Clinton," each having a spacious ball-room, the lovers of the Terpsichorean art were thereafter well provided for.

As early as the winter of 1837-38 we find a theatre advertised, but no mention is made, nor do the old residents seem to remember at what place it was held—possibly the Court House. The performances were in marked contrast with those of the present day. On Saturday, February 17, it was announced that, on that evening, a performance would take place for Mr. Child's benefit, when there would be presented five different entertainments; tickets, 75 cents each; children with their parents, 50 cents each; doors open at half past six, and performances to commence at seven precisely.

About the same time there was a Jockey Club organized with Isaac Underhill as President. Their racing was done on the lower prairie; the place being now occupied by a well built portion of the city. Mr. Underhill seems to have been anxious to gratify the people with such amusements as they desired, for we find he had a hotel at his Rome farm, which was supplied with a ball-room at which he was a frequent visitor.

Those not addicted to horse-racing, dancing or theatre-going, found other and, to them, more rational methods of employing their leisure time. On the Tue-day evening following Mr. Child's benefit, the Peoria Lyceum was to hold its next meeting at the Main Street Presbyterian church, at which time there was to be discussed the momentous question (not yet settled), "Ought the Legislature of this State to enact laws to prohibit the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits as a drink?" Affirmative—Dr. Cross, Onslow Peters, J. McClay Smith; Negative—William Frisby, Charles Ballance, Lewis Bigelow. Other questions to be discussed at future meetings related to increasing the number of colleges in the State, extending sympathy to Canadian patriots, corporal punishment in schools and a property qualification for voters.

On the Tuesday evening following that of the Lyceum, the Peoria Temperance Society was to hold a meeting at the Court House, at which time Elihu N. Powell was to deliver a lecture on State license. Apropos of this notice, it was further stated that, on the 27th of the same month, there was to be held a temperance anniversary throughout the world, to which attention was called by Rev. Flavel Bascom of Tazewell County, with a request that the executive committee of the (Tazewell) County Temperance Society, and others interested, should make preparations.

Information is also given that the ladies formed at least one-third of the audiences at the Lyceum meetings whenever the weather was not too inclement, and that their presence greatly improved the quality of the speeches. In this connection it may be observed that the members of the Lyceum whose names have been handed down, in addition to those already mentioned, (such as George T. Metcalfe, N. H. Purple, Samuel H. Davis, S. H. McCrory, Horace P. Johnson, Rev. J. Spaulding and H. W. Reynolds), may have been comparatively young men, and probably some of them not yet married; for the same paper in which these notices appear, also contains the announcement of the marriage of Elishu N. Powell to Hannah P. Ellis, on Thursday evening of the same week. So, instead of taking a bridal trip to New York or Washington City, he spent the first week of his honey-moon in preparing a lecture on State license, while, within a few weeks thereafter, he was to speak in opposition to a property qualification for voters. The presence of ladies at their meetings doubtless served as a stimulus to greater exertions on the part of these young aspirants to fame.

No public hall is known to have existed in Peoria prior to 1850. William H. Haskell, a noted auctioneer and dealer in everything that could be bought or sold, erected a hall early in that decade at the south corner of Main and Madison Streets, where Kuhl's Grocery now stands. The first floor was occupied by B. F. Ellis as "Everybody's Grocery." The second floor, which was reached from Madison Street, by an open stairway in the rear, was fitted up as a hall for meetings of all kinds. Churches having no houses of worship used it on the Sabbath, singing and other societies during the week days. It was known as Haskell's Hall and, for a time, was much used.

In 1852 Justus B. Fleck erected a business house on Water Street between Bridge and Walnut, with a hall on the second floor. This hall was long used by the Germans for dramatic and operatic performances. It is claimed for it that it was the first theatre in Peoria. Besides the attractions furnished by traveling companies, the Germans had amateur performances conducted by a society of their own, which afterwards developed into a German Dramatic Society and occupied Germania Hall, erected by the Salomon Brothers, on Water Street between Harrison and Bridge.

About the year 1854 Henry S. Austin erected a business block on the south corner of Adams and Fulton Streets where the Woolner block now is, in the upper story of which was a hall known at first as Austin's, but afterwards as Boetger's Hall. Here theatrical performances in the English language were presented. John Huntley, formerly an actor and a man of fine presence and affability, conducted a theatre here for one or two winters, at which Sallie St. Claire and Maggie Mitchell, both in young womanhood, were drawing stars. This hall, after maintaining a wide popularity for some years, passed into the hands of the publishers of the "Transcript" and was converted into a printing office and book-bindingery.

About the same time the Peoria Turn-Verein erected a frame building on the lower side of Washington Street below Chestnut, being one of the first to occupy that portion of the street. This was used for their gymnasium and for general theatrical and musical performances. After occupying it for about eight years, they sold it and bought the school building located on the corner of Adams and Walnut Streets, afterwards occupied by Pfeiffer's Hall, and now by the "New Peoria House."

During the same period a number of other halls, located in the second and third stories of business blocks, came into use for various purposes, such as meeting places for Masonic lodges, Odd-Fellows, Military Companies and Temperance Societies, some of which are still in use, but others have passed out of existence.

In 1858, Dr. Rudolphus Rouse erected his well-known and popular hall on Main Street adjoining his dwelling. Between it and the alley in its rear stood another building used for business purposes, but such were the demands for room that the hall was afterwards extended so as to take in the whole space above the first floor. It would be impossible to enumerate all the uses to which this hall has been put, for the list would include everything from a State Convention or a religious revival meeting to a velocipede tournament, or a competitive poultry show.

During its earliest years it was made brilliant by many dancing parties, festivals, exhibitions of tableaux vivants and other entertainments of a social nature. Here Dio Lewis organized and conducted a large class in light gymnastics, which continued to be a popular amusement for a considerable length of time. Here also such reformers as John B. Gough, Anna Dickinson, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Susan B. Anthony and Frances E. Willard, delighted their audiences with their eloquence, and here the most distinguished statesmen of the land, the most noted dramatists and the most gifted musicians of the world have occasionally held forth to the admiration of the people of Peoria and the surrounding country. Here also have transpired some of the most important events in political life, not only to Peoria County but also to the State at large.

Almost contemporaneous with the erection of Rouse's Hall, was that of Parmely's Hall on North Adams Street adjoining the Peoria House. Orson C. Parmely was a great lover of horses. He had, for a number of years, been manager at Peoria of the great stage lines of Frink & Walker, after which he went into the livery business and erected immense stables for that purpose where the Palace Stables now are. On the third floor of this establishment he located his hall, a much larger one than Rouse's but not so well equipped. It was for a time quite popular for all classes of entertainments, but particularly well adapted for large audiences, such as political gatherings, war-meetings, and the like: but, in consequence of its surroundings, it lost its popularity and eventually burned down, never to be restored in the form of a public hall.

About the year 1873 there was erected on the upper side of Adams Street between Fayette and Jackson, a wooden building one story high, with ornamental front, for the accommodation of an immense Saengerfest to be held in the city that year. It was plainly seated and would hold an immense audience. After the Saengerfest it became known as the "Academy of Music," and continued to be used for musical purposes for some time. It, too, was used for political purposes, and at one time a series of religious meetings were held there. Being of frail construction it finally fell into disrepair, and in a few years was demolished.

These halls served the public for ball-rooms, concert halls, opera houses, theaters and convention halls, and often for the holding of religious meetings, until the erection of the Grand Opera House in 1881-2. This elegant structure, now about twenty years old, is the outgrowth of the enterprising spirit of a few business men who believed that Peoria had attained to that population, enterprise and degree of culture which demanded an opera house of the highest order. A corporation was, therefore, formed with a capital of $40,000, divided between Eliot Callender, Richard A. Culter, Bernard Cremer, J. S. Flinn, John Schofield, Jacob B. Barnes and Eugene F. Baldwin. Lots on Hamilton Street opposite the Court House were purchased, and the erection of the building was at once commenced. It was completed and opened to the public on September 4, 1882. It is needless to describe its construction or to extol its merits, for it is known to all as one of the most complete of its kind in the country.

"The Pavilion," at "Glen Oak Park," and the "Club House" of the "Country Club," are, at the present time, the most popular places of resort for the elite of the city during the summer months; the "Grand Opera House," "The Women's Club Building," "The National" and "The Fey Hotel," the most popular for their respective purposes during the winter.

CHAPTER XX.

BIOGRAPHICAL. (EDITORIAL)

JOSHUA AIKEN.

Among the first settlers in Peoria stands prominent the name of Joshua Aiken. He was born in Londonderry, New Hampshire, where his father, Captain James Aiken, a native of Paisley, Scotland, settled in 1719; he and his three brothers taking up the tract of country known as "Aikens' Range." Joshua Aiken was a pushing business man. When he first came West he made a farm of about a thousand acres on Horseshoe Bottom. In 1833 he bought the Hamlin & Sharp mill, the first mill ever erected on the Kickapoo River. He renovated the mill and brought it to a high standard, so that it made good merchantable flour. His mill was frequented by customers from sixty to seventy miles around Peoria. He bought wheat for money and sometimes exchanged flour for it, so that the settlers went home with bread and some cash and lumber, in exchange for the grain. Joshua Aiken saw at once the great need of capital in a new country, and, in order to supply it to some extent, went East and formed a partnership with the late George P. Shipman, of New York. At that time he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, known as the Munson & Sanford tract, upon which Munson & Sanford's Addition to Peoria is laid out. In those days more money was paid out for wheat at Aiken's mill than at Peoria, or Fort Clark, as it was then called. The money used by Mr. Aiken was chiefly the Quinnebaug Bank money of Connecticut. The traders in Peoria raised the cry that the money was not good, that it was not money that would go at the Land Office. But in a short time a circular was issued by the Secretary of the Treasury making the Quinnebaug money receivable at the Land Office, which greatly relieved the early settlers. On his land, located near the Aiken & Little mill, was laid out the village of Peoria Mills, now extinct.

In 1839, Mr. Aiken purchased a controlling interest in the tract of land known as the Sac and Fox Reservation, south of Burlington, Iowa, and between the Des Moines and Mississippi Rivers. This tract contained a hundred and one shares, of which he owned seventy-six. He applied to the Des Moines Circuit Court for a deed of partition. The late Francis L. Key, of Washington City, was his attorney. The question of the titles by the deed of partition became permanently settled. In 1840, Mr. Aiken held a public sale of lots at Keokuk and Melrose, the purchasers taking their titles under the above deed. While attending to this business at Commerce (now Nauvoo), Hancock County, Mr. Aiken died on the 20th of November, 1840, aged sixty-nine years. His brother, Jonathan Aiken, died on the homestead west of Peoria, in May, 1842.

Messrs. Joshua Aiken, Enoch Cross, Aaron Russell, and Moses Pettengill were the originators of the Main Street Congregational Church. Mr. Aiken was a liberal supporter of every good enterprise for the advancement of morality, civilization and human freedom.

His widow, Jane Aiken, died in Derry, New Hampshire, October 6, 1872.

MARK MORRILL AIKEN.

When, ten years ago (May 11, 1892), Mark M. Aiken, or "Uncle Mark," as he was known to everybody, passed away, Peoria lost one of her most unique, most widely known and best beloved characters. He was descended from Edward Aiken who, about the year 1722, came from the North of Ireland to the Scotch-Irish settlement at Londonderry, New Hampshire. He had three sons, Nathaniel, James and William. Of Nathaniel were born five sons, Edward, John, James, Thomas and William. The latter settled at Deering, New Hampshire, where he married Betsy Woodburn, whose parents were the maternal grandparents of the famous Horace Greeley of the New York Tribune. William and Betsy Aiken had a son, Nathaniel, who married Susan Morrill. They had five children, of whom Mark Morrill was the eldest. He was born at Deerfield, New Hampshire, June 21, 1808. He received a common-school education in the same class with the noted divine, Parker Pillsbury. When in his sixteenth year he began to look about for something to do. He had an uncle in New York City who was in the habit of making a visit to his relatives in New Hampshire every summer, and who, taking a fancy to Mark, invited him to accompany him to New York, at the same time promising to find him employment. Mark took him at his word, and being reputed to be a good scholar, he procured from the selectmen of the town a certificate of his qualifications and their opinion of his character. Armed with these he, with his uncle, on the 17th of March, 1824, called upon Messrs. J. & J. Harper, afterwards the famous house of Harper Brothers, and made known his wants. They read his certificate, laughed at it and then set him to work reading a book on political economy. This was his examination and it proved satisfactory. They took him on trial, he went to board with John Harper and remained in their employ until 1830, when his health failed. They then fitted him out with a lot of books and sent him to Charleston, South Carolina, where he sold the books, and, after traveling as far west as Detroit, Michigan, returned to New York.

In 1832, Mr. Aiken purchased a job office at No. 54 Liberty Street, New York, where he found Horace Greeley. As they were remotely related, they formed a sort of partnership, Greeley canvassing for jobs and Aiken doing the work and paying him a commission. The next year he sold the office to Greeley and a man by the name of S. D. Childs, who had married Aiken's eldest sister. He then took a lot of copies of a medical work by A. Sidney Doane, a professor in the New York Medical College, and started West. In September he went to Philadelphia, thence over the mountains to Pittsburg, thence down the river to Cincinnati and St. Louis, disposing of most of his books at the latter place. While running the job office he had printed a catalogue for the Western Land Company, which was operating in the Military Tract in Illinois. He had also become possessed of one or two land-patents in payment for his work, and so he concluded to run up the river and see about it. Dr. Berrian, an Episcopal clergyman of New York, had land which he thought was located at Peoria, and Mark was entrusted with a plat of it to deliver to his agent, a man by the name of Howard. Taking the steamer "Champion," he landed at Fort Clark, or Peoria, on October 28, 1833. Here he found a relative in Joshua Aiken, who was then running the first mill built on the Kickapoo. He spent the next year in trading on the Illinois River and in shipping flour to Ottawa and Cairo. When the land came into market he went to Quincy to attend the sales and made some purchases which he held for many years.

In 1836, Mr. Aiken formed a partnership in the land business with George C. Bestor, which continued until February, 1840. The business of this firm extended over the entire Military Tract. During this period they made a careful abstract of all the land titles in the Military Tract which had been recorded in Madison and Pike Counties, the records of those counties not having as yet been transcribed. It was the custom of these land dealers to keep abstracts of title of the territory in which they operated, and their offices sometimes contained more volumes than many of the Recorders' offices. In the prosecution of this business, Mr. Aiken traveled over the entire Military Tract, and so retentive was his memory that he could readily tell the location of the residences of many of the "old settlers," and could describe the quality of any land he had visited. He became a standing authority on almost all questions relating to the early history of the country. In the course of his business he became possessed of some valuable land on the bluff near the city, which is now highly improved, also some valuable coal land which he retained until the time of his death.

From education and conviction, Mr. Aiken was always an anti-slavery man, and what he saw in the South only deepened his convictions of the evil of slavery. From the death of Elijah P. Lovejoy, on the 7th of November, 1837, he boldly avowed his sentiments, when the name of an abolitionist was one of contumely and reproach. He acted with the Abolition party until the Republican party was formed, after which he voted with that party, with one exception, which was when his old partner in business, Horace Greeley, was running for President. His courage in denouncing slavery won for him the respect of his opponents, and when the War of the Rebellion broke out, he was styled "The Apostle of Liberty," a term he ever afterwards carried. It was he who rang the old "Liberty Bell" on the occasion of every Union victory in the slave-holders' war. He was foremost in works of charity and in helping the unfortunate. He gave one-half of the lot, and Asahel Hale the other half, to the Trustees of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, which stood opposite the site of the present City Hall.

Mr. Aiken lived to see all the reforms for which he contended in early years successfully carried out. He was deservedly popular, and in Peoria a man need present no better credentials than the recommendation of "Uncle" Mark M. Aiken.

He never married, but for years before his death lived almost alone, keeping "bachelor's hall." He was of medium stature, robust in form, round shouldered, bald-headed, of cheerful countenance and kindly disposition. Full of wit and humor, well stocked with anecdotes and reminiscences, he was the life of any company with whom he met. He was generous almost to a fault, especially to the poor and those needing help.

In religion he was a Protestant but not tied to any particular church, being at one time found united with the Methodists, at another with the Presbyterians and at another with the Congregationalists. Although not conspicuous in church work, his faith was sincere and he chose to make it known in works of charity and benevolence, in relieving the needy and in making others happy. Unique in character, droll in humor, always doing deeds of kindness, he became the friend of everybody, and everybody was his friend. Let his memory ever remain green in the hearts of Peorians.

CHARLES BALLANCE.
